- Publication of Judgment alone. - A fair and accurate report of the judgment in an action, published bona fide, and without malice, is privileged, although not accompanied by any report of the evidence given at the trial. Defendants published in the form of a pamphlet a report of the judgment delivered in a former action which plaintiff had brought against them. The pamphlet contained no separate report of the evidence given at the trial and there were passages in the judgment reflecting on plaintiff's character. In an action for libel in respect of such publication the jury found that the pamphlet was a fair, accurate, and honest report of the judgment, and was published bona fide and without malice:—Held, that it was not necessary to ask the jury whether the pamphlet was a fairreport of the trial, that the right questions had been left to the jury, and that the defendants were entitled to judgment on the findings. Macdonyall v. Knight, 55 L. J., Q. B. 464; 17 Q. B. D. 636; 55 L. T. 274; 34 W. R. 727; 51 J. P. 38—C. A.

A fair and accurate report of the judgment in an action, published bona fide and without malice, is privileged, although not accompanied by any report of the evidence given at the trial. Macdougall v. Knight (17 Q. B. D. 636) discussed

The rule of law is, that the publication, without malice, of an accurate report of what has been said or done in a judicial proceeding in a court of justice, is a privileged publication, although what is said or done would, but for the privilege, be libellous against an individual, and actionable at his suit, and this is true although. what is published purports to be and is a report, not of the whole judicial proceeding, but only of a separate part of it, if the report of that part is an accurate report thereof and published without malice—per Lord Esher, M.R. Ib.

By Lord Halsbury, L.C. —If the report of a judge's judgment or summing-up to a jury did not in fact give reasonable opportunities to the reader to form his own judgment as to what conclusions should be drawn from the evidence given, the publication of such partial, and in that respect inaccurate, representations of the evidence might be the subject of an action for great criminal escapes, and, by a miscarriage of libel to which the supposed privilege in what justice, a scandal is brought on its administration, was said by a judge would be no answer. There account of the matters upon which he is adjudicating as to bring it within the privilege. If it be so, it must be proved to be so by evidence, and certainly not inferred as a presumption of and certainty of interier as a presumption of a law. Macdongall v. Knight, 58 L. J., Q. B. 537; 14 App. Cas. 194; 60 L. T. 762; 38 W. R. 44; 53 J. P. 691—H. L. (E. The decision of the Court of Appeal affirmed, not for the reasons given by that court, but because the findings of the jury disposed of all the questions which were properly raised at the trial, the points argued in the divisional court. in the Court of Appeal, and in this House not having been properly raised at the trial. Ib.

The publication of a public record, e.g. a judgment of a court of justice is not, per sc, actionable; and in an action for publishing it, the question, whether it was published with express malice, ought, under the plea of no libel, to be submitted to the jury. Cosgrave v. Trade Auxiliary Co., Ir. R. 8 C. L. 349. The rule that the publication of a fair and correct report of proceedings taking place in a court of justice is privileged, extends to the record of a judgment entered upon a warrant of attorney. But the publication must be correct, and without influence or comment. MNally, v. Oldham, 16 Ir. C. L. R. 298; 8 L. T. 604.

County Court Judgment—Publication of Extract from Register of Judgments—Trade Protection Association.]—The defendant published in a trade protection journal, under the heading "Extracts from the Register of County Courts Judgments," a statement that a county court judgment had been obtained against the plaintiff for a certain amount on a certain day, but immediately under the heading was appended a note to the effect that judgments contained in the list might have been satisfied. The indement had in fact been obtained against the plaintiff, who had satisfied it by payment a few days subsequently; but such satisfaction had not been entered upon the register. In an action for libel, the plaintiff was non-suited :-Held. that the statement was published on a privileged occasion, and that in the absence of cyidence of express malice on the part of the defendant, the Q. Erroneous Statement of Judgment in former Action.]—The plaintiff, who traded as R. H. & Co., and the defendants, who traded as R. H. & Sons, were rival manufacturers of sail-cloth. The plaintiff had formerly been a partner in the defendant's firm. In 1885 the defendants brought an action against the plaintiff, claiming (inter alia) an injunction to restrain him from representing his firm to be the original firm of R. H. & Sons. At the trial the action was dismissed without costs as to that issue, and with costs as to the other issues; the judge being satisfied by made any such representation, but that on two or three occasions one of his agents, without his knowledge or concurrence, had represented that the then defendants' firm was the original firm. The then defendant repudiated this as soon as he knew it, and at the trial he offered by his counsel to give an undertaking that he would never whether a judge's judgment does or does not was inserted in the judgment with the defengive such a complete and substantially accurate dant's assent. In 1886 the present defendants distributed a printed circular, which stated that they were the original firm, and after giving the "Caution," proceeded: "By the judgment the defendant was ordered to undertake not to represent that his firm is, or that the plaintiff's firm is not the original firm of R. H. & Sons. Messrs. R. H. & Sous, finding that serious misrepresentations were in circulation to their prejudice, felt themselves compelled to bring the above action": -Held, that the circular contained an untrue statement of the effect of the judgment in the former action; that it was a libel injurious to the plaintiff's trade; that it was not privileged; that the defendants had published it maliciously; and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction, with the costs of the action. But there being no evidence of damage to the plaintiff, except his own affidavit that the publication of the circular was calculated to injure him, and had injured him, in his business, which he said had greatly fallen off since the issue of it; and the plaintiff not having brought the action till three months after he knew of the publication of the circular, only 5*L* damages were awarded to him. Hayward & Co. v. Hayward & Sons, 56 L. > - Publication of Extracts from Documents open to the Public-Affidavit registered with Deed of Inspectorship-Trade Protection Journal.]—The information contained in an affidavit as to the assets and liabilities of a debtor filed with a deed of inspectorship under the provisions of s. 6 of the Decds of Arrangement Act, 1887, is not the subject of privilege in an action for libel, and if a person publishes for his own profit the office copy supplied to him under the provisions of s. 11, and such information as supplied to him is inaccurate, he publishes it at his own risk, and is liable in damages. Semble per Wright J. (1) whether a person is entitled to publish the con-tents of such an affidavit at all, whether the contents be accurate or not. (2) Whether a person may publish for his own profit merely extracts of information to which the public have a statutory right of access. Reis v. Perry, 64 L. J., Q. B. 566; 15 R. 427; 43 W. R. 648.

Proceedings before Magistrates-Preliminary make such a representation : this undertaking Investigation.]-The rule that the publication place in a public court of justice is privileged office, in the course of a preliminary inquiry, extends to proceedings taking place publicly openly and publicly conducted before a justice, before a magistrate on the preliminary investigation of a criminal charge, terminating in the discharge by the magistrate of the party charged. Lewis v. Lery, El. Bl. & El. 537; 27 L. J., Q. B. 282; 4 Jur. (N.s.) 970; 6 W. R. 629.

A declaration set out, in three separate counts, reports of three separate days' proceedings respectively (on two adjournments) before a magistrate, the report of the first day stating that the plaintiff was charged with perjury, and an adjournment, but reserving the report; the report of the second day also stating an adjournment in language intimating that there would be a report of the proceedings of the day to which the adjournment was; and the third stating the discharge of the parties charged; and the jury found generally that the reports were fair and correct:—Held that the reports of the first two meetings did not lose the privilege by reason of the proceedings there reported not being final. Ib.

One of the reports commenced, "Wilful and corrupt perjury":-Held, that after the verdict of the jury, this must be taken as a description of the nature of the charge, not as an imputation by the publisher of the perjury in fact. Ib.

One of the reports stated that the evidence before the magistrate entirely negatived the story of the plaintiff, which story was the statement of the plaintiff in which the imputed perjury was contained :- Held, not to be privileged; and a plea, justifying this report on the ground that it was a fair and correct report of the proceedings which had taken place, held bad after Ib.

The rule that the publication of a fair and correct report of proceedings taking place in a public court of justice is privileged extends to proceedings taking place publicly before a magistrate, though such proceedings consist of an exparte application for a criminal summous terminating in the refusal by the magistrate to proceed with the charge on the ground that on the facts stated he had no jurisdiction. Usill v. Hales, 47 L. J., C. P. 323; 3 C. P. D. 319; 38 L. T. 65; 26 W. R. 371; 14 Cox, C. C. 61.

Three men who had been employed by a civil engineer in the construction of a railway, applied to a magistrate in open court for criminal process against him under the Masters and Servants Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 141), alleging that as they had not been paid their wages. while he had been paid, they considered he had been guilty of a criminal offence in withholding their money. The magistrate refused the summons, considering that he had no jurisdiction. The men afterwards published a report of the proceedings, which the jury found was a fair and correct report of what occurred:—Held, that the report was privileged. Ib.
In an action for libel there is no distinction between a mere ex parte investigation before a magistrate, and the regular proceedings in a court of law; and therefore a defendant cannot set up in answer to it any privilege, on the ground that the libel complained of was a report of a mere preliminary investigation before a magistrate, such distinction being abolished. Pinere v. Goodlake, 15 L. T. 676.

It is no justification of an action for a libel in a newspaper that the matter complained of is a

of a fair and correct report of proceedings taking | proceedings which took place at a public policeupon a criminal charge against the plaintiff, although published with no scandalous, defamatory, naworthy, or unlawful motive, but merely as public news. It seems, however, that it is lawful to publish in a newspaper the result of what a justice may think fit to do, upon a matter of criminal charge previous to trial, if the publication contains no statement of the evidence, nor any comments upon the case. Duncan v. Thwaites, 5 D. & R. 447: 3 B. & C. 556: 3 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 3.

Where justices specially summoned for the purpose sit in their council chamber to hear an application for the issue of a summons on a criminal charge, a fair report of what takes place on such proceedings is privileged, although no evidence is given on oath, and although such proceeding does not result in a final decision but leads to a further inquiry. Kimber v. Press Association, 62 L. J., Q. B. 152; [1893] I Q. B. 65; 4 R. 95; 67 L. T. 515; 41 W. R. 17; 57 J. P. 247

- Report of Observation of Magistrate's Clerk. ]-If a party who has summoned another before a magistrate, draws up a report of what took place on the investigation, it is his duty to give an impartial statement, without any colouring or exaggeration, putting in all that is in fayour of the party accused, as well as that which is against him; and in such report he has no right to insert an observation, to the prejudice of the party, made by the magistrate's clerk; and if he does insert such observation, he is liable, on that ground alone, to an action for libel; and in such a case it is what the judge says that is to be looked at, and not what any other person said who was present at the time. Delegal v. Highley, 8 Car. & P. 444.

Matter outside Jurisdiction of Magistrate. - Where, to a declaration for a libel in a newspaper, the defendant pleaded first, that the ibellow matter was a true and correct account of a statement made by A. and B. before a magistrate; and secondly, that the facts therein stated were true; and the jury found for the defendant on the first plea, and for the plaintiff on the second :- Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto on the first plea, on the following grounds: 1. The statement, though correct, did not relate to a matter of which the magistrate had cognisance; 2. The defendant had printed and published that which would not have been actionable as oral slander, and consequently was not protected by giving the names of the anthors at the time of publication. M'Gregor v. Thwaites, 4 D. & R. 695; 3 B. & C. 24; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 217; 27 R. R. 274.

Coroner's Court, -In an action for a libel contained in a report of a coroner's inquest, evidence of the correctness of the report is admissible under the general issue in mitigation of damages; but no evidence of the truth or falschood of facts stated at the inquest is admissible, as it must be strictly confined to what took place there. East

v. Chapman, M. & M. 46; 2 Car. & P. 570.

In an action for libel, the plaintiff alleged that, being a relieving officer of a certain union, true, fair, just, and correct report and account of and having been examined as a witness at an

the chief secretary for the Lord Lieutenaut of Ireland, stating that the Rev. Mr. C. had said in relation to the plaintiff's evidence at the inquest, that part of it was "nothing short of perjury"; and alleged as innuendoes that the defendant thereby imputed to the plaintiff wilful and corrupt perjury, the giving of false evidence, and swearing falsely. The defendant pleaded, 1st, that at an inquisition held by him as coroner the plaintiff was examined as a witness, and that at the close of the plaintiff's evidence Mr. C., a Roman Catholic clergyman, stated in open court that part of the plaintiff's testimony was "very little short of perjary"; that the defendant transmitted to the chief secretary for the Lord Lientenant of Ireland a true report in writing of the inquisition, which was the alleged libel; and that he so wrote and published the words complained of on a privileged occasion, bona fide and without malice, believing the same to be true. Secondly, that, at the time of the writing and publishing of the alleged libel, the plaintiff was a relieving officer, and the defendant a ratepayer rated for the relief of the poor in a certain union; that the inquest was held touching the death of one of the destitute poor who had been in receipt of outdoor relief in the union : and that in the course of the inquest, evidence was given relating to the administration of outdoor relief by the plaintiff and other relieving officers in the union; that the plaintiff disapproved of the nature of the relief administered, as such matters appeared in the course of the inquest and evidence, and was desirous of having a different and, in his opinion, a better mode of relief adopted, and for that purpose of having a public or other proper inquiry held as to the nature and mode of administering such relief; that the clergyman referred to in the preceding defence had made the statement therein mentioned with respect to evidence given by the plaintiff as to the administration of outdoor relief by him as relieving officer; and that, as such a ratepayer, and being interested in the administration of such relief, the defendant communicated the alleged defamatory matter (being the statement made by the said clergyman) to the chief secretary of the Lord Lieutenant as such secretary, and as being a member of parliament, on a privileged occasion, without malice, and believing the same to be true :- Held, upon demurrer, that both pleas were bad; that the first could not be sustained as a plea relying upon a fair report of judicial proceedings, inasmuch as the alleged libel was the communication of an unsworn defaniatory statement made by a bystander, and forming no part of the proceedings at the inquest, and that neither defence showed that the quest, and that her her the communication was made had any interest in receiving it, which could render the communication privileged. Lynam v. Gowing, 6 L. R., Ir. 259, Privilege does not extend to Obscene Matter. -A police magistrate had ordered the destruction of copies of a pamphlet, which S. kept at his shop for sale, as obscene books, under 20 & 21 shop for sate, as onscene books, under 20 & 21 or the newspaper without any communication Vict. c. 83, s. 1. This pamphlet was a substantially correct report of the trial of one M. speech only:—Held, first, that the defendant on an indictment for a misdemeanour in selling was not privileged, as it appeared on the defencean obscene work called the "Confessional Un-masked"; but it set out that work in full, whereas a fair one, the speeches of the other guardians.

inquest held by the defendant as coroner, the at the trial it was taken as read, and passages in defendant made a communication in writing to it only referred to :- Held, that the pamphlet, being of such a character that it would necessarily tend to the depravation of the public morals, was an obscene book within 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, even although the object of those publishing it was to suppress a system they thought immoral and pernicious. Steele v. Brannan, 41 L. J., M. C. 85; L. R. 7 C. P. 261; 26 L. T. 509; 20 W. R. 607

Held, also, that the privilege given by the law to reports of judicial proceedings does not extend to reports which contain matters of an obscene and demoralising character, and that the case was therefore within 20 & 21 Viet, c. 83, and the decision of the magistrate correct. Ib.

The privilege given by law to reports of judicial proceedings does not extend to reports which contain matters of an obscene and demoralising character, and a magistrate may, under 20 & 21 Viet. c. 83, order the destruction, of copies of obscene books. Ib.

Newspaper Reports of Meetings. 1-Sec 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, s. 2.

Parliamentary Proceedings. ]-Faithful and fair reports of the proceedings in parliament, although disparaging to the character of indivi-duals, are privileged communications; in the same manner as similar reports of proceedings in courts of justice. Wason v. Walter, S. B. & S. 671; 38 L. J., Q. B. 34; L. R. 4 Q. B. 73; 19 L. T. 409; 17 W. R. 169.

Fair and legitimate criticism in newspapers on the conduct or motives of individuals, as disclosed by such reports, is also privileged. Ib.

The publication of a particular speech in parliament, for the purpose or with the effect of in-juring an individual, is unlawful, unless bon's fide published by a member for the information of his constituents. Ib.

Meeting of Guardians of Poor. ]-The administration of the poor laws, both by the government department and by the local authorities, including the conduct of the medical officer, is matter of public interest; but the publication of a report of proceedings at a meeting of poor-law guardians at which ex parte charges of misconduct against the medical officer of the union were made, is not privileged by the occasion. Purcell v. Sawler, 25 W. R. 362—C. A.

Action for libel published by the defendant in a newspaper. The defendant pleaded that he was a guardian of the poor, and at a meeting of the board of guardians a discussion arose in reference to the plaintiff, and that speeches were made by several of the guardians and by the plaintiff on his own behalf, and that the defendant spoke in discharge of a public duty without malice; also that in order to assist the newspaper reporter he handed to him a correct report of his own speech, and that the proprietorof the newspaper without any communication or of the plaintiff himself not having been given; secondly, that if the privileged occasion failed, the denial of malice did not constitute a defence, and, as to the second defence, that the defendant was responsible for the fair publication of the proceedings when he gave a report of his own speech for publication. Pierce v. Ellis, 6 Ir. C. L. R. 55.

Parish Vestry. - Though a publication of the report of a trial in a court of justice, in the course of which a libel is read, would be privileged : a publication of the proceedings of a parish vestry, at which a libel is read, is not so privileged. Papham v. Pickburn, 7 H. & N. 891; 31 L. J., Ex, 133; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 179; 5 L. T. 846; 10 W. R. 324.

- Report of Medical Officer. If a report made by a medical officer of health to a vestry board, in pursuance of the Metropolis Management Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), contains libellous ment act (13 & 19 vic. 6, 120), contains inclinions matter, a newspaper proprietor is not privileged in publishing it, though without any comment. Popham v. Pickhura, 7 H. & N. 891; 31 L. J., Ex. 133; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 179; 5 L. T. 846; 10 W. R. 324.

Publication of Minutes of General Council of Medical Education.]—By the Medical Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90), the General Council of Medical Education and Registration were established, one of their duties being to keep a register of medical practitioners. By s. 29, "if any registered medical practitioner shall after due inquiry be judged by the general council to have been guilty of infamous conduct in any professional respect, the general council may, if they see fit, direct the registrar to erase the name of such medical practitioner from the register" Held, that the publication of the minutes of the conneil, containing a report of their proceedings, comprising a statement that the name of a specified medical practitioner has been removed from the register on the ground that, in the opinion of the council, he has been guilty of infamous conduct in a professional respect, is, if the report be accurate, and published bona fide and without malice, privileged, and the medical practitioner cannot maintain an action of libel against the council in respect of the publication. Allbutt v. Medical Council, 58 L. J., Q. B. 606; 23 Q. B. D. 400; 61 L. T., 585; 37 W. R. 771; 54 J. P. 36—C. A.

Public Meeting.]—The publication of matter defamatory of an individual is not privileged, because the libel is contained in a fair report in a newspaper of what passed at a public meeting. Davison v. Duncan, 7 El. & Bl. 229; 26 L. J., Q. B, 104; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 613; 5 W. R. 253.

- Comment on Conduct of Persons at. 1conduct of persons at a public meeting held for the purpose of promoting the election of a candidate for a seat in parliament may be made the subject of fair and bona fide discussion by a writer in a public newspaper, and unfavourable comments made upon such conduct in the course of such discussion are privileged. Davies v. Duwan, 43 L. appeared that the appellants had in their newspaper falsely charged the respondent, a public officer, with specific acts of misconduct in the execution of the duties of his office, had vouched for the truth of those charges, and on the assump-tion of their truth, commented on his proceedings in highly offensive and injurious language:— Held, that they were liable. The privilege which covers fair and accurate reports of proceedings in parliament and in courts of justice does not extend to fair and accurate reports of statements made to the editors of newspapers. Duris v. Shepstone, 55 L. Reply to Assailant through Press. ]-A person whose character and conduct have been attacked through the press is privileged in addressing his defence through the same channel, provided he does so bona fide for the purpose of vindicating himself, or of informing the public upon matters which they are concerned to know. Laughton v. Sodor and Man (Bishop), 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 318; 42 L. J., P. C. (11; L. R. 4 P. C. 495; 28 L. T. 377; 21 W. R. 204.

When a party publishes in a newspaper statements reflecting on the conduct or character of another, the aggrieved party is entitled to have recourse to the public press for his defence and vindication; and if, in so doing, he reflects on the conduct of character of his assailant, it is for the jury to say whether he did so honestly in self-defence, or was actuated by malice towards the party who originally assailed him. O'Donoghue v. Hussey, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 124—Ex. Ch.

If the occasion is privileged, and the objection is, that the publication goes too far, and contains matter exceeding the privilege, the question whether it does so or not, is not a question for the court to decide on demurrer, but one for the consideration of the jury on the plea of privilege,

It is a reasonable mode of defence for a person. whose conduct and character have been assailed in a newspaper, to state publicly that his assailant was known to be a person in the habit of making misstatements. Ib.

, In an action for writing to editor of a news-paper a letter imputing to the plaintiff untruthrulness, inability to discharge his debts, and other conduct discreditable to his position as a poor-law gnardian, the defendant pleaded that, being medical officer of a dispensary in the poor-law union of which the plaintiff was guardian, and having, as such officer, caused the seizure of unsound meat and the prosecution of a person by whom it was exposed for sale, he incurred costs in defending an action brought against him for having instituted the prosecution, and that at a meeting of the guardians the plaintiff for the purpose of having his statements published stated that the defendant had acted wrongly with reference to the seizure of the meat, and that his costs ought not to be paid, and that the defendant, in order to prevent credit being given thereto by the public, and in self-defence wrote the alleged libel, believing it to be true and without malice:—Held, that the plea failed to show that the alleged libel was a privileged communication. Williams v. Decumont, 10 Bing. 260; 3 M. & Scott, 705; 3 L. J., C. F. 31.

A company, incorporated under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, may maintain an action for libel against a shareholder in the company. Metropolitian Saloon Omnibus Co. v. Huwkins, 4 H. & N. 87; 28 L. J., Ex. 201; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 226; 7 W. R. 255.

Partners may Sue Jointly.]—Partners may join in an action for slander, or for a libel spoken or published of them in the way of their trade. Forster v. Laussen, 11 Moore, 360; 3 Bing. 451; 4 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 148.

A. and B. may join in an action for a libel, containing imputations injurious to a trade carried on by them jointly as partners. Le Fanu v. Malcomson, 1 H. L. Cas. 637.

Certain words were found by the jury to be defamatory of the plaintifts as co-proprietors of a newspaper:—Held, that the action could be brought by the two co-proprietors; that no special damage need be alleged; and that the jury might give general damages for the libel. Russelt V. Webster, 28 W. R. 59.

And Separately.]—Where works imputing insolvency in trade are spoken of one of the partners in a firm, such individual partner may maintain an action of slander, and record damages for the injury done to lim; and it is not necessarily to be considered as an injury to the partnership, for which a joint action only can be maintained. Harrison v. Berington, 8 Car. & P. 708.

To an action by A. for words imputing insolvency in the way of his trade, which he carried on in partnership with B. and C.; the declaration stating, by way of special damage, that S. had withdrawn his account from A. aud his co-partners; a plea that A. carried on his trade jointly with B. and C., and not otherwise, and that all the damage accraced to B. and to jointly with A., and not to A. alone, is III. Holiason v. Marchant, 7 Q. B. 918; 15 L. J., Q. B. 135; 10 Jun. 156.

Husband and Wife jointly. —A declaration, by husband and wife, for muliciously speaking and publishing of the fennale the words alleged as follows: —"I can prove that J. D.'s wiff chemole) had connection with a man named L. two years ago, but I would rather have the tongue cut out of my mouth than separate man and wife." Special damage, that she was thereby injured in her character and reputation, and became alienated from, and deprived of, the companiouship, and ceased to receive the hospitality, of divers friends, and was deprived of, the companiouship, and ceased to receive the hospitality of divers friends, and especially of her husband, and lost, and was deprived to, or be friendly with her: —Held, that he wife was properly joined in the action. Dartes v. Solomon, 41 L. J., Q. B. 10; L. R. 7 Q. B. 112; 25 L. T. 799; 20 W. R. 167.

An action by husband and wife for words not uttered in his presence, but repeated to him by the wife, impating to her a want of chastity, will not lie against the author of the slauder, the special damage being the husband's refusal to live with the wife in consequence of the imputation upon her. Perkins v. Scott, 1 H. & C. 153; 31 L. J., Ex. 331; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 598; 6 L. T. 394; 10 W. R. 562

An action does not lie at the suit of husband and wife for words slandering the wife in a trade carried on by her, it not being alleged that she was divorced a mensa et thoro, or had a separate maintenance. Saville v. Savan, 1 N. & M. 254; 4 B. & Ad. 514; 2 L. J., K. B. 52.

Wife deserted by Husband, ]—A wife who has been deserted by her husband, and has obtained an order under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, 8, 21, for the protection of her money and property from her nusband and his creditors, may maintain an action for a libel without joining her husband. Runsidea v. Brearley, 44 L. J., Q. B. 46; L. R. 10 Q. B. 147; 28 L. T. 24; 23 W. R. 294.

Two Plaintiffs for Different Slanders—Misjoinder.)—By Ord. XVI., v. 1, "all persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly severally, or in the alternative." Two plaintiffs joined in an action for slander, and delivered a statement of claim alleging several different slanders, some of one plaintiff, and some of the other :—Held, that the plaintiffs were improperly would proceed, and that so much of the state-ment of claim as related to the other plaintiff must be struck out. Booth v. Briscoe (2 Q. B. D. 496) and Gart v. Rowney (17 Q. B. D. 625), discussed. Sandes v. Wildsmith, 62 L. J., Q. B. 404; [1893] 1 O. B. 771: 69 L. T. 387.

b. To be Sued.

Joint Stock Company. ]—A joint-stock company is liable to an action for a libel. Lawless v. Anglo-Egyption Cotton and Oil Co., 10 B. & S. 222f; 38 L. J., Q. B. 129; L. R. 4 Q. B. 262; 17 W. R. 498.

Railway Company, ]—An action against a rail-way company, being a corporation aggregate, for a malicious libel is sustainable, for a corporation aggregate may well, in its corporate capacity, cause the publication of a defamatory statement under such circumstances as would imply malice in hav sufficient to support the action. Whit-field v. 8, E. Ry., El, Bl. & El. 115; 27 L. J., Q. B. 229; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 688; 6 W. R. 545.

2. Pleadings.

a. Claim.

i. Defamatory Matter.

What must be set out.]—Since 15 & 16 Viet-c. 76, s. 61, a declaration for libel or for slander need not state any colloquium, but may set out the words complained of, and put any construc-tion upon them by innuendo. Hemmings v. Gasson, El. Bl. & El. 346; 27 L. J., Q. B. 252; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 834; 6 W. R. 601.

Whether the words were spoken with such meaning is for the jury. Ib.

Words must be applicable to Plaintiff. ]-Where the words written or spoken are not in themselves applicable to the individual plaintiff, no introductory averment or immendo can give such an application. Solomon v. Lawson, 8 Q. B. 823; 15 L. J., Q. B. 253; 10 Jur. 796.

Actual Words must be set out Verbatim.]— Where a declaration for libel sets out a publication which refers to a previous publication; but which, unless by reference to the language of the previous publication, contains no libel, such previous publication must be considered as incorporated in the publication complained of, and must appear in the declaration to be set out verbatim, and not merely in substance. Ib.

In an action for a libel in a review, it is sufficient to set out the contents of an index (referring to an article in the body of the review), which is of itself a libel; and no reference need be made to the article itself, if the index contains, per se, prima facie libellous matter. Buckinghum v. Murray, 2 Car. & P. 46; 31 R. R. 653.

A declaration stating that the defendant published a libel containing false and scandalous matter of and concerning the plaintiff, "in substance as follows," and setting out the libellous matter with immendoes, is bad in arrest of judgment, as the law requires the very words of the libel to be set out in the declaration, in order that the court may see whether it is a libel or not. Wright v. Clements, 3 B. & A. 503; 22 R. R. 465.

joined, and that they must elect which plaintiff the plaintiff, about to be sold by auction, were stolen property, whereby purchasers were de-terred from bidding, and the sale was defeated, is bad in arrest of judgment, for not setting out the bad in arrest of judgment, for not setting out the words verbatim. Gatabale v. Mathers, I. M. & W. 495; 2 Gale, 64; 5 D. P. C. 69; 1 Tyr. & G. 694; 5 L. J., Ex. 274. S. P., Cook v. Cher, 3 M. & S. 110; Harris v. Warre, 48 L. J. C. P. 310; 4 C. P. D. 125; 40 L. T. 429; 27 W. R. 461.

A declaration for words "that the plaintiff had set fire to his own barley-stack," averring that the stack was insured, and was burnt without his own default, and that the defendant spoke the words of the plaintiff and the fire, is bad on demurrer. West v. Smith, 4 D. P. C. 703. S. P., Rigby v. Heron, 1 Jur. 558.

- Part of Sentence sufficient. I is no objection, that a part only of one sentence in a letter is inserted in a count for libel, if it appears that enough is set out to comprise the substance of the charge made by the defendant against the plaintiff. Rutherford v. Erans, 6 Bing, 451; 4 M. & P. 163; 4 Car. & P. 74; 8 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 86: 31 R. R. 465.

 Separate Passages to be distinguished. -If separate passages of a libel are set out in one count, they should be described as separate and distinct parts. Tubart v. Tipper, 1 Camp. 352; 10 R. R. 698.

- Words Spoken in two Discourses. Where a declaration sets out words alleged to have been uttered, some in one discourse, and the remainder in a second discourse, and there are in form but two counts, each containing only the words alleged to have been uttered in one dis-course, the declaration will be treated as containing only two counts, though each of such two counts contains separate allegations of the uttering of different words in the particular discourse. Griffiths v. Lewis, 8 Q. B. 841; 15 L. J., Q. B. 249; 10 Jur. 711.

As to one Count explaining another. ]-If a declaration against the publisher of a newspaper contains several counts, charging different libels, which have appeared at different times in several distinct numbers of the paper; each of these counts is to be taken as distinct and separate from the rest; and if the matter of which one of them complains is not libellous on the face of it, the other counts cannot be referred to to explain its meaning, or to show that it was such in reality. Hughes v. Roeres, 4 M. & W. 204; 1 H. & H. 197: 2 Jur. 809.

Words must show Cause of Action.] declaration, stating that the defendant published of the plaintiff a false and malicious libel, purporting thereby that the plaintiff's beer was of a bad quality, and deficient in measure, whereby he was injured in his credit and business, is bad on general demurrer. Wood v. Brown, 1 Marsh. 522; 6 Taunt. 169; 16 R. R. 597.

But where a declaration contained several counts, stating the words constituting such slander, and the fifth alleged that "the defendant wrongfully, and without any reasonable or probable cause, imposed the crime of felony upon the plaintiff":--Held, on a motion in arrest of judgment, that such count was sufficient after verdict. Blizard v. Kelly, 3 D. & R. 519; A declaration for words imputing that tulips of 2 B. & C. 283; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 6.

Allegation of Criminal Offence sufficient.]— Which imputing that the plaintiff has been guilty of a criminal offence will support an action for slander, without special damage; and it is not necessary to allege in the statement of claim that they impute an indictable offence. Webb v. Heacam, 53 L. J., Q. B. 544; 11 Q. B. D. 609; 49 L. T. 201; 47 J. P. 488.

Allegation of Malicious, Injurious, and Unlawful Advertisement good. —The allegation that the defendant published a malicious, injurious, and unlawful advertisement, seems good without the word "false." Rove. v. Rovek, 1 M. & S. 304.

When Written or Spoken in a Foreign Language.]—In an action for a libel written in a foreign language, the plaintiff must set forth the libel in the original; and if he only sets out a translation of it, the court will arrest the judgment. Zenobio v. Axtell, 6 Term Rep. 162; 3 R. R. 142.

R. R. 142.

A declaration stated, that the defendant said of the plaintiff, "He is a thief, a swindler, and a forger." The defendant pleaded not guilty. The words were proved to have been spoken in the Welsh language, but were of the same meaning as the English words stated in the declaration. The judge allowed the declaration to be amended by inserting the Welsh words. Jenkins v. Phillips, 9 Car. & P. 766; 5 Jur. 252.

In such a case the amendment ought actually to be made by translating the English words in the declaration into Welsh words of the same meaning, and inserting those words in the declaration. It.

Where slanderous words are uttered in a foreign language, the declaration should aver that the persons in whose presence they were spoken understood the language. Amann v. Dannn, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 597; 29 L. J., C. P. 313; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 47.

Ameanment of Claim.]—A declaration alleged that the defendant wrote and published of the plaintiff that "a receipt was obtained from the defendant by fraudulent means, and that the plaintiff was cognisant of such fraud." The judge at the trial allowed the techantion to be amended, by introducing a letter alleged to contain the libel, with the words "meaning thereby" immediately before the libel charged in the declaration:—Held, that the amendment was properly made. Saunders v. Bate. 1 H. & N. 402.

ii. Publication.

Publication. —The publication of a libel must be stated in a declaration, but it may be collected from the whole of it, and need not be set forth in any technical form of words. Baldwin v. Elphinston, 2 W. Bl. 1037.

Though, in an action of libel, prefatory averages may be necessary to explain the matter alleged to be libellous, it is enough to state in the declaration, that the publication was of and concerning the plaintiff, without also stating that is was of and concerning such matter. O'Brien. V. Clement, 4. D. & L. 563; 16 M. & W. 159; 16 L. J., Ex. 76, 77. S. P., Clock v. Ward, 4 M. & P. 99; 6 Bing, 409; 8 L. J., (cs.) C. P. 126.

iii. Innuendoes,

Necessary when Words not Defamatory per so,—Since 15 & 16 Yiet. c. 76, s. 61, it is not sufficient to aver that words used, which are not in themselves actionable, were used for the purpose of creating an impression unfavourable to the plaintiff, or meant that he ought to be regarded with suspicion of being guilty of something wrong or blameable, but the declaration must attach to the words used some specific meaning which is in itself actionable. Chev. Cooper, 9 L. 7. 329; 12 W. R. 75.

Where the words laid are not per se defamatory in their ordinary sense, or have no meaning at all in ordinary acceptation, there must be an immendo in order to admit evidence that in a peculiar sense they are defamatory. Rawlings v. Norbury, 1 F. & F. 341.

When Unnecessary, ]—If the words spoken are capable of imputing an indictable offence, they are actionable without attaching any immende; and if an immende is attached, it is sufficient to say, "thereby meaning that the plaintiff had been guilty of an indictable offence," without specifying what particular indictable offence is meant. Kindahaw x, Br Cullugh, Ir, R. I. C. L. I.

When written or printed matter in itself imports a libel on the plaintiff, no statement of extrinsic circumstances, by way of inducement, is necessary, and an immendo improperly enlarging the sense will be rejected as surplusage. Harvey v. Fronch, 2 Tyr. 585; 1 C. & M. 11; 2 M. & Scott, 501; 1 L. J., Rx. 281—Ex. (1).

Prefatory Averments cannot be substituted for.]—The immendoes not declaring that the words were spoken with the intention of imputing to the plaintiff a felony, and not importing to enlarge the meaning of those words.—Held, that the prefatory averments which only precised to give the motives of the defendant could not be substituted for those immendoes whereby the plaintiff undertook to give the meaning of the words spoken. Simmons v. Mitchell, 50 L. J., P. O. II; 6 App. Cas. 156; 43 L. T. 710; 29 W. R. 401; 45 J. P. 28T—P. C.

Must be sufficiently Alleged.]—In an action for slander the statement of claim alleged that the defendant falsely and multiclously spoke and published the following of the plaintiff: "Did he (meaning the plaintiff) have a fire twice!" (meaning thereby that the plaintiff lad upon two occasions set his business premises on fire or caused them to be set on fire). "He (meaning the plaintiff) has had two fives and is a dangerous man to have on your premises." (meaning thereby that the plaintiff had upon two occasions witfully set on fire his business premises, or caused them to be set on fire, and was likely to do so again):—Held, that the plaintiff must be nonsuited on the ground that the inhumod owas hisufficiently alleged to give a good cause of action. Juvebs v. Schenditz, 62 L. T. 121.

Must be supported by the Defamatory Words.]
—An innuendo unconnected with a prefatory averment cannot enlarge the sense of a libel.
Goldstein v. Fuss (in error), 2 Y. & J. 146; 4
Bing. 489; 1 M. & P. 402; 29 R. R. 610.

The following written words, "He is so inflated with 3001, made in my service, God only knows whether honestly or otherwise," &c.:-

without any preliminary averment, warranted an [ innuendo that the plaintiff had conducted himself in a dishonest manner in the defendant's service. Clegg v. Laffer, 3 M. & Scott, 727; 10 Bing, 250; 3 L. J., C. P. 56.

A first count was on the following words: "We are requested to state that the honorary secretary of the Tichborne Defence Fund is not and never was a captain in the Royal Artillery, as he has been erroneously described." Innuendo, that the plaintiff was an impostor, and had falsely and fraudulently represented himself to be a captain in the Royal Artillery. Second count : "the gentleman in question was a paycount: "the gentieman in question was a pay-master in the Royal Artillery, and as such received in due course the honorary rank of captain in the army, which is so stated in his commission. His name appears under the head of paymasters on half-pay in this month's Army List. He is certainly not entitled to hold a command as an artillery officer." Immendo, that the plaintiff was an impostor, and had falsely and maliciously represented himself to be a captain in the artillery. At the trial it appeared that the plaintiff had been a paymaster in the Royal Artillery, that he held a commission as honorary captain in the army, and was addressed and generally known as eaptain. He became honorary secretary to a fund, and in respect of his connection therewith, and his name being attached with the addition "Captain, R.A." to certain advertisements, the alleged libels were published in the defendant's newspaper. On these facts the plaintiff was nonsuited :- Held, that the nonsnit was right; as the words alleged to be libellous did not primâ facie support the innuendoes, there was no evidence to go to the jury of circumstances rendering the statements charged capable of bearing the meaning imputed to them. H. Goodlake, 43 L. J., C. P. 54; 29 L. T. 472.

H. & Sons occasionally received, in payment from their enstomers, cheques on various branches of a bank, which the bank cashed for the convenience of H. & Sons at a particular branch, Having had a dispute with the manager of that branch, H. & Sons sent a printed circular to a large number of their customers (who knew nothing of the dispute)—"H. & Sons hereby give notice that they will not receive in payment cheques drawn on any of the branches of the Capi-tal and Counties Bank," The circular became known to other persons; there was a run on the bank, and loss inflicted. The bank having brought an action against H. & Sous for libel, with an innnendo that the circular imputed insolveney :- Held (Lord Penzance dissenting), that in their natural meaning the words were not libellous; that the inference suggested by the innuendo was not the inference which reasonable persons would draw; that the onus lay on the bank to shew that the circular had a libellous tendency; that the evidence, consisting of the circumstances attendevidence, consisting of the electronistances accom-ing the publication, failed to shew it; that there was no case to go to the jury; and that the defendants were entitled to judgment. Capital and Counties Bunk v. Henty, 52 L. J., Q. B. 232; 7 App. Cas. 741; 47 L. T. 662; 31 W.R. 157; 47

A declaration stating that the plaintiff was an asphalte manufacturer, and employed by the Board of Ordnance to relay the entrance to their office with new asphalte; and that the defendant, work, "The old materials have been relaid by you (the plaintiff) in the asphalte work executed you (tue paintin) in the asphalte work excepted in the front of the Ordnance Office, and I have seen the work done, "(meaning that the plaintiff had been guilty of dishonesty in his trade by laying down again the old materials which had been before used at the entrance of the Ordnance Office instead of new asphalte, according to his contract) is good, and the innuendo not too large, as it put no new sense on the words, but mage, as it put no new sense off the words, but only pointed at the intention of the plaintiff. Baboneeu v. Farrell, 15 C. B. 360; 3 C. L. R. 42; 24 L. J., C. P. 9; 1 Jun. (N.S.) 114; 3 W, R. 11.

In an action for a libel in a Dublin newspaper, the first count, after the usual prefatory averments, proceeded thus: "What possessed Lord H. (meaning the Lord-Lientenant of Ireland), if he knew anything about the country, or was not under the spell of vile and treacherous influence, to make his first visit, and that carefully puffed to Long's, the coachmaker (meaning the plaintiff), the other day. If mere trade was his (meaning the Lord-Lientenant's) object, he had several respectable houses open to him (meaning that the house and place of business of the plaintiff was not respectable, and that the visit was paid thereto for political purposes)":—Held, that the inneeded did not enlarge the sense of these words, which were fully capable of the meaning given to them. Barrett v. Long, 3 H. L. Cas. 395.

Another count repeated the same words, and accompanied them with the following innuendo (meaning that the house of business of the plaintiff was not a respectable house in the trade, and that the plaintiff himself was of such a character that he would not be visited in the way of his trade and business, except from some political party or other improper motive) :--Held, that the words were capable of the meaning thus attributed to them; but that if the innuendo was more extensive than the words, it might be rejected as repugnant and void; and that the words, being libellous, were actionable without its aid. Ib.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff was in the employ of one Glass, and that he was at work in his master's barn threshing corn, and that the defendant, to cause it to be suspected that the plaintiff had been guilty of felony, in a eertain discourse concerning the plaintiff said, "I saw one John Gay coming across Master Glass's barn with some barley; and Gay said he was going to feed pheasants with it, and said that where he had that he could have more, and that he had it at Farmer Glass's barn" (meaning the barn where the plaintiff was at work; and that the barley, so alleged to have been in the possession of Gay, was the property of Glass, and that the plaintiff had stolen the same from Glass and had given it to Gay):—Held, that the in-nuendo was too large, and that the declaration was insufficient. Wheeler v. Haynes, 1 P. & D. 55; 9 A. & E. 286; 1 W. W. & H. 645; 8 L. J., Q. B. 3.

A count stated as inducement that the plaintiff was a livery-stable keeper, and by that trade and business acquired profit; that T. P. had become business adding that it is a bank to prove a debt justly due under his commission; and that the defendant spoke these words of and concerning him in his trade—"You (meaning the plaintiff) are a regular prover under bankwell knowing the premises, falsely said of the rupties" (meaning that the plaintiff was accusplaintiff in his trade, and in reference to the tomed to prove fictitious debts under commissions of bankrupt) :-Held, first, that the words after he became mentally incompetent to perdid not impute a charge against the plaintiff in the way of his trade and business; and secondly, that the innuendo imputing a crime punishable by law was badly pleaded as enlarging the natural meaning of the words used, without resting on any introductory averment of a colloquium respecting the proof of fictitious debts. Alexander v. Angle, 1 Tyr. 9: 1 C. & J. 143. S. C., nom. Angle v. Alexander, 7 Bing. 119; 4 M. & P. 870.

A count set forth the following passage of a letter from the defendant to P.:—"I have reason to suppose that many of the flowers of which I have been robbed are growing upon your pre-mises" (thereby meaning that the plaintiff had been guilty of larceny, and had stolen from the defendant certain plants, roots, and flowers of the defendant, and had unlawfully disposed of them to P., and unlawfully placed them in P.'s garden). The previous part of the letter stated that the plaintiff, whom P. had taken into his employ as a gardener, had been in the defen-dant's service in the same capacity, and had been discharged for dishonesty :- Held, that the innuendo was not too large, and that the count was good. Williams v. Gardiner, 1 M. & W. 245; 1 Tyr. & G. 578; 5 L. J., Ex. 280—Ex. Ch. A count laid the words as follows:—"You have robbed me of one shilling tan money: and the innnendo explained the meaning to be, that the plaintiff had frandulently taken and applied to his own use one shilling received by him for the defendant, being the produce of the sale of some tan sold by the plaintiff for and as servant to the defendant; but the facts stated in this innuendo were not alleged by any independent averment :- Held, that the innuendo was bad, as introducing new facts; and that, without the immendo, the count did not charge words actionable in themselves. Day v. Rabinson, 4 N. & M. 884; 1 A. & E. 554; 3 L. J., Ex. 381—

Ex. Ch. Where a declaration alleged that the defendant said of the plaintiff that he had set fire to his own premises, innueudo, that he had been guilty of wilfully setting fire to the premises which, whilst in his occupation, had been destroved by fire :- Held, that the court could not after verdict presume that the jury had found that the defendant meant to impute to the plaintiff that he had done it unlawfully or felouiously, as well as wilfully. Sweetepple v. Jesse, 2 N. & M. 36; 5 B. & Ad, 27; 2 L. J., K. B. 181.

May apply Words used generally to Individual.]-Though defamatory matter may appear only to apply to a class of individuals, yet if the descriptions in such matter are capable, by innuendo, to be shewn directly applicable to any one individual of that class, an action may be maintained by such individual in respect of the publication of such matter. Le Fann v. Malcomson, 1 H. L. Cas. 637.

In such a case the immendo does not extend the sense of the defamatory matter, but merely points out the particular individual to whom the matter, in itself defamatory, does in fact apply. Ib.

A count alleged the libel as follows : "There is strong reason for believing that a considerable sum of money was transferred from Mr. T.'s name, in the books of the Bank of England, by power of the defendant may not deny generally in his attorney obtained from him by undue influence, statement of defence that the "defendant wrote form any act requiring reason and understanding" :- Held, that although the libellous words pointed at no particular person, yet, as they imputed, in substance, that some one had been guilty of the offence, the plaintiff might, by innuendo, apply them to himself, and that it was a question of evidence, whether they applied to him. Merywether v. Turner, 19 L. J., C. P. 10-Ex. Ch. Affirming, 7 C. B. 251; 15 Jur. 683.

If set out Count can be Read with or without," —Since 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 61, a count in libel or in slander setting out the words with an innuendo may be read as two counts, one with the innueudo and the other without it, and proof of either is sufficient. Wathin v. Hall, 9 B. & S. 279; 37 L. J., Q. B. 125; L. R. 3 Q. B. 396; 18 L. T. 561; 16 W. R. 857.

Cannot be Abandoned and another suggested.] If a count, for words actionable perse, contains an immendo attributing to the words a meaning of which they are capable, and the jury finds (upon distinct issues)—that the publication is a libel, and that the words do not bear the defamatory sense alleged,-the innuendo cannot berejected to enable the plaintiff to gain the verdiet upon another construction of the words. Magnire v. Know, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 408.

If a good innuendo in a declaration, ascribing a particular meaning to alleged slauderous words, was not supported in evidence, the plaintiff could not reject it at the trial, and resort to another meaning. Williams v. Stott, 1 C. & M. 675; 3. Tyr. 688; 2 L. J., Ex. 303; 3 L. J., Ex. 110.

No Innuendo-Libel not in Terms relating to-Plaintiff ]—A declaration alleged that the defen-dant published of and concerning the plaintiff, the following matter, without alleging that the matter was of and concerning the plaintiff; it then set out the libel, which did not appear on the face of it to relate to the plaintiff, and there was no immendo to connect it with him :-Held, that it was bad even after verdiet. Clement v. Fisher, 7 B. & C. 459; 1 M. & Ry. 281; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 39.

iv. Mutter in aggracution of Damages,

A paragraph in a statement of claim in an action for a libel published in a newspaper stated that the defendant knew that the words published would be, and the same in fact were, repeated and published in other editions of the same newspaper :- Held, that evidence of the facts stated in this paragraph would be admissible at the trial, and therefore the paragraph was properly pleaded and ought not to be struck Whitney v. Moignard, 59 L. J., Q. B. 324; 24 Q. B. D. 630.

b. Defence.

i. Generally.

Drunkenness no Defence. - Actions against words spoken during drunkenness not relieved against. Kendrick v. Hopkins, Cary, 93. Qui peccat ebrius, luat sobrius. Ib. Qui peccat ebrius, huat sobrius.

General Denial that Libel was Falsely and Maliciously Published. |- In an action for libel he relies, either to shew instification or privilege. Belt v. Lunes, 51 L. J., Q. B. 359.

Different Words admitted to have been Spoken -Struck out as Embarrassing. -The defendant having spoken the words alleged, and set out other words which he admitted having spoken, and which he alleged were true and were spoken on a privileged occasion :- Held, that this pleading was embarrassing, and ought to be struck out. Rassum v. Budge, 62 L. J., Q. B. 312; [1893] 1 O. B. 571: 5 R. 336: 68 L. T. 717: 41 W. R. 377: 57 J. P. 361.

Information received from Another-Belief in Truth-Disclosure of Author-No Defence. -A man who receives information which, if true, is injurious to the character of another, is not justified in publishing that information to the prejudice of that other merely because he believes it to be true. Batterill v. Whytchead, 41 L. T. 588.

In an action for a libel, it is no plea that the defendant had the libellous statement from another, and upon publication disclosed the author's name. De Crespigny v. Wellesley, 5 Bing, 392; 2 M. & P. 695; 7 L. J. (0.8.) C. P. 100 : 30 R. R. 665.

It is not an answer to an action for oral slander. for a defendant to shew that he heard it from another, and named the person at the time, with-out shewing that he believed it to be true, and that he spoke the words on a justifiable occasion. M. Pherson v. Daniels, 10 B. & C. 263; 5 M. & Ry. 251; 8 L. J. (0.8.) K. B. 14.

It is no justification that the libellous matter was previously published by a third person, and that the defendant, at the time of his publication, disclosed the name of that person, and believed all the statements contained in the libel to be true. Tidman v. Ainslie, 10 Ex. 63.

If a defendant, at the time of speaking the slander, gave up the name of the person from whom he heard it, this is no justification ; but if he did this, and at the trial proves that he did in fact hear the slander from that person, it will go in mitigation of damages. Bennett v. Bennett, 6 Car. & P. 586.

It is no justification to an action of slander to plead that such a one told the slander to the defendant. Davis v. Lewis, 7 Term Rep. 17: 4

But if the person repeating the slander at the same time mentions the name of the person from whom he heard it, that may be pleaded in justification to an action brought against the former. Ib.

Newspaper Copying from another-Bad Plea.] -To a declaration for a libel published in a newspaper, which reflected on the plaintiff in his character of an attorney, the defendant pleaded that the libel was first published in a newspaper called "The Hampshire Journal," by G. H. M. and W. H.; and that, at the time of publication by the defendant, it was also stated in such publication that such libellous matter was copied from that newspaper; and that pursuant to 38 Geo. 3, c. 78, G. H. M. and W. H. had made an affidavit that they were the publishers of "The Hampshire Journal," and had not ceased to be so at the time of the publication of the libel :- Held, that this 4 Jur. (N.S.) 970; 6 W. R. 629.

or published the same falsely, or maliciously, as | plea was bad, as it did not state that the persons alleged," but must set out the facts upon which from whose paper the libel was copied were the from whose paper the libel was copied were the original authors. Lewis v. Walter, 4 B. & Ald. 605; 23 R. R. 415.

> Letter in Newspaper commenting on Previous Letter. - In an action for a libel contained in two letters published in a newspaper, a plea that the second letter (which in itself contained a distinct substantive libel) was a fair comment upon the facts stated in the first letter, is a bad plea. Walker v. Brogden, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 65; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 671; 12 L. T. 495; 13 W. R.

> That two Counts alleged same Libel. |--- Where the first and second counts alleged the composing and publishing of two libels, and the defendant in his pleas of justification stated that "the libels so set forth were one and the same supposed libel, and not other and different supposed libels": Held, that such pleas were bad, because it was impossible to say with truth that the two libels alleged to have been severally composed and severally published were one and the same libel. Edmonds v. Walter, 3 Stark. 7; 2 Chit.

> Action by Husband and Wife - Plea that Plaintiff not Husband and Wife good, ]—To an action of slander by the plaintiff and his wife, a plea that the plaintiff, Maria, was not the wife prea that the phillith, Maria, was not the wife of the plaintiff George, is a good plea in bar. Chantler v. Lindsey, 4 D. & L. 339; 16 M. & W. 82; 16 L. J., Ex. 16.

Plea of Not Guilty. ]-In an action for libel the plea of not guilty puts the malice in issue, Houre v. Silverbook, 9 C. B. 20: 19 L. J., C. P. 215. So under not guilty you may disprove the fact of publication, or shew that it is not of an injurions character, or that it was published on some justifiable occasion. O'Brien v. O'lement, 3 D. & L. 678; 15 M. & W. 485; 15 L. J., Ex. 285; 10 Jur. 395.

For words not actionable per se, not guilty puts in issue the special damage alleged, as well as the attering the words. Wilby v. Elston, 7 D. & L. 143; 8 C. B. 142; 18 L. J., C. P. 320; 13 Jur. 706.

In an action for a libel, the defendant at first pleaded not guilty, but afterwards pleaded, to the further maintenance of the action, that the plaintiff had recovered damages against another person for the same grievances. New assignment, that the action was brought for other and different grievances. Plea to new assignment, not guilty:-Held, that this did not admit the innuendoes; and that, by pleading not guilty to the new assignment, the defendant had raised precisely the same issue as if the libel had been set out in the declaration, and the defendant had pleaded not guilty to it. Brunswick (Duke) v, Pepper, 2 Car, & K. 683.

În an action of libel, a plea setting out facts to shew that the alleged libel was a fair comment will not be allowed with not guilty. Lucan (Earl) v. Smith. 1 H. & N. 481: 26 L. J., Ex. 94: 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1170; 5 W. R. 138,

It is a good defence to an action for a libel that it consists of a fair, correct, and impartial report of a trial in a court of justice; and such defence is admissible under not guilty. Lowis v. Lovy, El. Bl. & El. 537; 27 L. J., Q. B. 282; — Privilege.]—Privileged communication is a defence that may be set up under the plea of not guilty. Lillie v. Price, 1 N. & P. 16: 5 D. P. C. 432; 5 A. & E. 645; 2 H. & W. 381; 6 L. J. K. B. 7.

Plea that Words did not bear Meaning alleged.]—A declaration averred, that the defendant used the word "black-sheep" for the purpose of expressing and meaning, and it was understood by the persons to whom the libel was addressed as expressing and meaning, a person notorious by reason of bad character, and of stained and sullied reputation; yet the defendant, intending to cause it to be believed that the plaintiff had conducted himself dishonestly and improperly, published of the plaintiff the libellous matter following:—"Black-sheep" (meaning that the plaintiff was a black-sheep, in the sense and meaning in which the word was used by the defendant). The declaration then set forth a statement of facts respecting the plaintiff; no part was in itself libellous. The defendant plended, as to the publishing of the following part of the libel, that is to say, black-sheep, that the defendant did not use that word for the purpose of expressing or meaning, nor was it understood as expressing or meaning, a person notorious by reason of bad character, or of stained and sullied reputation :- Held, first, that the plea was well pleaded as to that part only of the libel; secondly, that it was rightly pleaded as to the publishing of that part of the libel, and not to the inducement in the declaration as to that part; and, thirdly, that it was not bad as amounting to not guilty; the averment in the declaration as to the word "black-sheep," being properly matter of inducement, which it was necessary to traverse specially. M'Gregor v. Gregory, 11 M. & W. 287; 2 D. (N.S.) 769; 12 L. J., Ex. 204.

Privilege—How Pleaded.]—In an action of slander a plea of privileged communication must allege that the derendant made the communication on a lawful occasion, believing it to be true, and without malice; or at least bona fide. Smith v. Thomas, 2 Scott, 546; 4 D. P. C. 333; 2 Bing. (Xo.) 372; 1 Hodges, 353; 5 L. J., C. F. 52.

Traverse of Special Damage only.]—A plea in bar, which merely denies that the plaintiff has sustained special damage is bad, where the words are actionable in themselves. Ib.

ii. Justification.

Plea must be Specific.]—A general plea of justification in an action of libel, where the libel complained of consists of a general charge against the plaintiff, is bad, maless the defendant, in his particulars, states specifically the facts upon which he relies in support of the charge. Abenduer, Labenderer, 68 L. J., Q. B. 89; 1383 2 Q. B. 188; 4 R. 464; 69 L. T. 172; 41 W. 5. 675; 57 J. P. 711–C. A.

A justification may be allowed, in a general form, where the charge is not matter indictable, the detendant rendering particulars of the charges intended to be justified. Behrens v. Allen, 8 Jur. (x.8.) 118. S. F., Early v. Smith, 12 Iv. C. L. R., ADD. XXV.

The practice is, in actions of libel, to allow -Privileged communication is pleas of justification in a general form with a be set up under the plea of liberal allowance of particulars. Gourley v. v. Price, 1 N. & P. 16; 5 Plimsoll, 42 L. J., C. P. 121; L. R. 8 C. P. 362; A. & E. 645; 2 H. & W. 381; 28 L. T. 593; 21 W. R. 683.

In an action for a libel substantially charging the plaintiff, a shipowner, with sending ships to sea over-insured, over-loaded, and under-manned, and with an habitual disregard for human life in the conduct of his business, a judge at chambers allowed the defendant to plead general pleas of justification, "that the several words and matters concerning the plaintiff were true in substance and in fact," subject to particulars. The court sustained the order, holding it to be a more convenient course than setting out the sevence matters of justification upon the record. 12.

A general plea of justification of a libel contained in an attorney's bill of costs, that it is true, without stating the facts, ought not to be allowed. Bruton v. Downes, 1 F. & F. 668.

A justification merely in the words of the libel, where it was general in its terms, was not sufficient; it ought to have stated the particulars, $\mathcal{J}Anson v. Stuart, 1$ Term Rep. 748; 1 R. R. 392.

A justification of a charge of a person being a swindler must state the particular instances of fraud by which the defendant meant to support it. It.

A libel charged an attorney with general misconduct, viz. gross negligence, falsehood, prevariention, and excessive bills of costs, in the business he had conducted for the defendant: a plea in justification, repeating the same general charges, without specifying the particular acts of misconduct, was insufficient. Holmesv. Cuteshy, 1 Taunt, 543.

To a declaration for words, imputing to the plantiff, a pawnbroker, that he had committed the unfair and dishonourable practice of duffing, that is, of replenishing or doing-up goods, being in his hands in a damaged or worn-out condition, and pledging them with other pawubockers, the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff did replenish and do up divers goods, being in his hands in a damaged or worn-out condition, and pledge them with divers other pawnbrokers.—Hell, bad, on special demurrer, as not being sufficiently specific. Hiskinbulham v. Leach, 10 M. & W. 361; 2 D. (Xs.3) 270; 11 L. J., Ex. 341.

To more Libels than One.]—But where the first and second counts alleged the composing and publishing of two libels, and the defendant, in his pleas of justification, stated that "the libels so set forth were one and the same supposed libel, and not other and different supposed libel, and not other and different supposed libel, and not other and different supposed libel and supposed proposed and severally only the supposed and severally published were one and the same libel. Edmands v. Watler, 2 Chit. 201; 3 Static. 7.

To a declaration containing three counts for three distinct libels, the court refused to allow a defendant to plead one general plea of justification. Honess v. Stubbs, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 555; 29 L. J., C. P. 220; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 682; 8 W. R. 188.

Embarrassing Pleastruckout.]—To a declaration setting out part of a newspaper article accusing the plaintiff of base and ungrateful conduct, the defendant pleaded pleas alleging that words in the article charging the plaintiff with bribery were omitted from the declaration. The pleas set out the whole of the newspaper prejudice, embarrass, and delay the fair trial of the action. Bremridge v. Latimer, 10 L. T. 816; 12 W. R. 878.

Comment must be Justified as well as Fact. ]-Where matter complained of as libellous consists of a statement of facts, and a comment thereon, which comment is not a necessary inference from the facts, a plea of justification is bad, unless it justifies the comment as well as the facts, and it is for the jury to say whether the evidence justifies the comment as well as the facts. Cooper v. Lawson, 1 P. & D. 15; 8 A, & E, 746; 1 W. W. & H. 601; 8 L. J., Q. B. 9; 2 Jur. 919.

Of Statement that Plaintiff had been Convicted.]—Action for publishing the following libel—"The North Eastern Railway Company. Caution. J. A. (the plaintiff) was charged before the magistrate at D. for riding in a train from L. for which his ticket was not available, and refusing to pay the proper fare. He was convicted in the penalty of 9l. 1s. 10d., including costs, or three weeks' imprisonment." A plea costs, or three weeks' imprisonment." A plea alleged a summary conviction adjudging the plaintiff to forfeit 11., and 81. 1s. 10d. costs, and on non-payment and in default of distress, the plaintiff to be imprisoned for three weeks, which conviction at the time of the doing of what was complained of, was in full force. The replication set out the conviction, by which the period of alternative imprisonment was fourteen days. Rejoinder, that the conviction was described with substantial accuracy and truth, as well in the libel as in the plea:—Held, first, that the difference between the conviction and the statement of it published did not make the latter in law libellous. Alexander v. North Eastern Ry., 6 B. & S. 240; 34 L. J., Q. B. 152; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 619; 13 W. R. 651.

Held, secondly, that it was a question for a jury whether the statement of the conviction was substantially true. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the plea was good, with an allegation that the conviction was in force at the time of pleading. Ib.

To a declaration for printing and publishing of the plaintiff that he was charged at a petty sessions with having travelled on a railway without first paying his fare, and was convicted of the offence in a penalty and costs amounting to 11. 2s., "meaning thereby that the plaintiff had attempted to defraud the company, a plea that he was so charged and convicted as in the declaration mentioned, without expressly justifying the innuendo, is a good plea, as the only offence of which the court has cognisance is that created of when the court has cognisance is that createst by the Railway Clauses Act, s. 103, for travelling without previously paying the fare "with intent to avoid payment thereof." Biggs v. G. E. Ry., 18 L. T. 482; 16 W. R. 908.

A party was convicted before the lord mayor of travelling on a railway from London Bridge to Caunon Street without a ticket, and sentenced to a fine of 1s. with costs, or in default three days' imprisonment. The railway company published placards, stating that he had been so con-victed and fined, and describing the alternative article which charged the plaintiff with bribery pleaded the truth of the statements contained and other improper conduct, and justified the in the placards:—Held, first, that the question whole article so set out :—Held, that these pleas for the jury in such a case is, whether the com-were rightly struck out, as being calculated to pany's account of the conviction is substantially correct. Gwynn v. S. E. Ry., 18 L. T. 738

Held, secondly, that the party was at liberty with a view to the assessment of damages, to enter into all the circumstances which led to the conviction, although such evidence tended to shew that the conviction was erroneous. Ib.

Of Statement that Plaintiff improperly detained the Defendant's Goods.]—A declaration alleged that the plaintiff advertised his goods for sale, and that the defendant published of him and of his sale a notice reciting the advertisement, and stating that he unlawfully detained certain goods of the defendant, which he, the defendant, was informed the plaintiff also intended disposing of, and giving notice that the same were the defendant's property, and any person purchasing would be held responsible; thereby meaning to cause it to be believed that no person could safely purchase any goods at the sale, by means of which persons were prevented from attending, and the sale failed altogether. A plea that the plaintiff did unlawfully detain certain goods of the defendant, who was informed and believed that the plaintiff did intend to dis-pose of the same at the advertised sale, and thereupon the defendant published the words for the purpose of warning all persons from purchasing the goods so unlawfully detained by the plaintiff, and not otherwise, is an answer to the action. Carr v. Duckett, 5 H. & N. 783; 29 L. J., Ex. 468.

Of Charge of being Confederate Swindlers. —A libellous paragraph published of the plaintiff stated that he was a confederate of blacklegs, that he had sought admission into a yacht club, that he gave an entertainment in the expectation of being elected, but was black-balled and the next morning bolted, and some of the tradesmen of the town had to lament the fashionable character of his entertainment. A plea of justification, after alleging facts to shew that the plaintiff was the confederate of persons who had been guilty of cheating at eards, and the facts of his giving an entertainment, and of being black-balled, as mentioned in the libel, stating, that on the following morning he quitted the town and neighbourhood, leaving divers of the tradesmen to whom he owed money unpaid, is bad, inasmuch as such quitting might be innocent, and without any intention to defraud. O'Brien v. Bryant, 16 M. & W. 168; 4 D. & L. 341; 16 L. J., Ex. 77.

Of Allegation of Baseness.]—A declaration alleged that the plaintiff was cashier to Q., and that the defendant in a letter addressed to Q., falsely and maliciously wrote and published of the plaintiff the words, "I conceive there is nothing too base for him to be guilty of." A plea, that the plaintiff signed and delivered to the defendant an I O U, and afterwards, on having sight thereof, falsely and fraudulently asserted that the signature was not his, and the plea averring that the libel was written and published solely in reference to this transaction, is a sufficient justification, as the libel must be understood with reference to the subject-matter. as being "imprisonment with hard labour." He Tighe v. Cooper, 7 El. & Bl. 630; 26 L. J., Q. B. sued the company for libel. The company 215; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 716.

Of Allegation of Incompetence of Schoolmaster. ]-A declaration alleged that the defendant published the following libellous matter of a schoolmaster :- During the last seven years no boys have received instruction at the school. The decay of this school seems mainly attributable to the violent conduct of the master. His treatment of two boys on two separate occasions subjected his modes of punishment to investigation before the magistrates, one boy having been subsequently confined to his bed, under surgical advice for a fortnight." A plea of justification as to part, that for seven years no boys had received instruction at the school, and that on divers days and times the master violently chastised certain scholars, and on one occasion so ill-treated a scholar, that his mode of punishment was investigated before a magistrate, is bad, for not shewing that the decay of the school was attributable to the violent conduct of the master. Smith v. Parker, 13 M. & W. 459; 2 D. & L. 394. 14 L. J., Ex. 52.

Of Allegation of Incompetence in Apothecary. -In a libel, a count charged the defendant with saying of the plaintiff, "He killed my child; it was the saline draught that did it," with an innuendo, that the plaintiff had been feloniously guilty of killing the child; not alleging that the plaintiff was an apothecary, and that at the time he attended the child in its sickness. A plea instifying that the plaintiff injudiciously, in-discreetly and improperly administered the medicine, and that the death of the child was accelerated thereby, is bad; for, as the count did not lay the special damage, that the defendant was an apothecary, the gist of the charge was the manslaughter, and the plea only answered a charge of mala praxis. Edsult v. Russell, 4 Man. & G. 1090; 5 Scott (N.R.) 801; 12 L. J., C. P. 4; 6 Jur. 996.

In another count it was alleged, that the plaintiff was an apothecary, and charged the defendant with having said, "he (the plaintiff) has given my child too much mercury and poisoned it." A plea, that the plaintiff did give the child too much mercury, is bad, for the defendant did not confess and avoid, but extracted a particular and an insufficient part of the charge, and justified that part only. Ib.

Of Allegation of Incompetence in Workman. -To impute to a person actually employed to execute certain work that he has no experience in the work in which he is so employed is a libel upon that person in the way of his profession or calling, and it is no justification to say that such person cannot show any experience in work of the kind which in the opinion of the person making the imputation was requisite. Botterill v. Whytchead, 41 L. T. 588,

Of Allegation of Unseaworthiness.]-To an action for a libel asserting that the plaintiff's vessel (which was advertised to convey passengers and freight to India) was unseaworthy, and had been sold to the Jews to take out convicts; a plea, justifying the charge of unseaworthiness, is bad, inasmuch as it leaves unanswered a material bat, dashned as t leaves manuscred a material part of the charge. Ingram v. Lucson, 6 Scott, 775; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 66; 7 D. P. C. 125; 1 Arn. 387; 8 L. J., C. P. 1; 3 Jur. 73.

lished a libel, that the plaintiff, a proctor, had circumstances revolting to the ordinary notions been suspended three times, per quod his neighbours were led to think that he had been guilty of extortion. Plea, that he had been suspended once for extortion is ill, as it does not justify the whole charge. Clarkson v. Lawson, 6 Bing. 266; 3 M. & P. 605; 8 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 36.

Afterwards held that the libellous matter was thus divisible, and that the plea was an auswer as to part. Clarkson v. Lawson, 6 Bing. 587; 4 M. & P. 356; 8 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 193; 31 R. R.

A defendant published an account of the proceedings under a commission of hunaey, which the plaintiff had attended as a witness, and stated that the plaintiff's testimony, "being unsupported by that of any other person, failed to have any effect on the jury." "The object was to set aside a will." "Mr. Jervis commented with cutting severity on the testimony of Mr. O. (the plaintiff):—Held, that the whole taken together was a libel, and that a plen justifying only the words, "Mr. Jervis commented with only the words, arr. Jervis commented with cutting severity on the testimony of Mr. O.," was ill. Roberts v. Brown, 10 Bing, 519; 4 M. & Scott, 407; 3 L. J., C. P. 168.

Where a libel contains several distinct charges, a defendant may justify a part only; but if the part not justified contain libellous matter, he is liable in damages for that which is so left uncovered by the justification. Clarke v. Taylor, 3 Scott, 95; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 654; 2 Hodges, 65;

Where a libel is justified in part, the test totry if the justification is complete, is to read the part which is not justified by itself, without reference to the other parts; and if it does not clearly amount to a libel, the justification is complete. If the part which is not justified contains ambiguous statements, the court will not draw any libellous inference from them, if the plaintiff has not done so in his declaration.

To an action for libelling the plaintiffs, in their business of sellers of medicines, by publishing that the defendants had crushed the hygeist system of wholesale poisoning pursued by the scamps and rascals, the defendants pleaded and proved the conviction of two of the vendors of proved the converted of cools are venants in the plaintiffs' pills for manslangiter:—Held, that the plea was sufficient, and sufficiently proved, though it did not justify the words scamps and reascals," and though one of the victims died notwithstanding he had taken fewer pills than the vendors recommended, it appearing that a larger number would only have accelerated his death :- Held, also, that it was not necessary for the defendants to shew that they had completely crushed the system. Morison v. Harmer, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 759; 4 Scott, 524; 3 Hodges, 108.

- Charge of Murder-Additional Circumstances Libellous and not Justified. ]-In an action for a libel, charging a person with a legal crime, e.g. murder, with circumstances of aggra-vation, if the additional circumstances would be in themselves libellous they must be justified, as well as the bare legal offence. Helsham v. Bluck-wood, 11 C. B. 111; 20 L. J., C. P. 187; 15 Jur.

A declaration for a libel imputing to an officer in the army that he had been guilty of murder, in killing his opponent in a duel, and that the Of Part of Libel only. - A defendant pub- duel was supposed to have been fought under of honour, is not answered by a plea, alleging apology and payment into court cannot be merely that the plaintiff killed his antagonist, pleaded with not guilty to the same part of the and was tried for murder, and acquitted; the declaration. O'Brien's Clement, 15 M. & W. 435; defendant was bound to justify also the matter 2 D. & L. 676; 15 L. J., Ex. 285. of aggravation, Ib.

iii. Payment into Court and Apology.

Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. XXII.

Payment into Court under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 75-Without Denial of Liability-Verdict for Less than Sum Paid in. ]-In an action for libel the defendants pleaded that the libel was published without malice or gross negligence, published an apology and paid 50L into court. The jury were not informed of the payment into court, and found a verdiet for the plaintiff with one farthing damages:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the 50%, in court, as Ord, XXII, r. 22, made no alteration in the practice where money is paid into court without a denial of liability. Dunn v. Devon and Exeter Newspaper Co., 63 L. J., Q. B. 342; [1895] 1 Q. B. 211, n.; 10 R. 167; 70 L. T.

Payment into Court with Denial of Part of Innuendo-Part to which Payment applies to be Stated. ] - The defendants in an action for libel admitted part of the immuendo and denied the other part, and pleaded Lord Campbell's act, with a payment into court without stating in respect of what part payment was made: - Held, that the defence ought to state to which part the payment was intended to apply. Muckay v. Munchester Press Co., 54 J. P. 22

Justification of Part of Libel—Payment into Court as to Remainder—Embarrassing.]—In an action of libel the defendant by his defence admitted the publication of the words but denied the innuendoes, and pleaded that to the extent of the facts thereinafter stated the words were true in substance and in fact. The defence then set out seriatim a number of facts, and finally contained an admission that the words were not wholly justified by the facts thereinbefore menand the defendant paid 40s. into court in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim :-Held, that this defence was bad, and, unless amended, must be struck out as contrary to Ord. XXII. r. 1, and also as being embarrassing, inasmuch as it left in doubt what the defendant justified and what he did not. Flewing v. Dollar, 58 L. J., Q. B. 548; 23 Q. B. D. 388; 61 L. T. 230: 37 W. R. 684.

Payment into Court and Apology may be pleaded with Justification.]—The defendant, in an action for a libel published in a newspaper, admitted the publication of the alleged libel, but pleaded that, with the exception of certain innuendoes alleged in the statement of claim, the libel was true. In the alternative he pleaded the insertion of a full apology in the newspaper, and payment into court of 40s. :-Held, that the offering of an apology and payment into court and of a justification could be pleaded together. Hawksley v. Bradshaw, 49 L. J., Q. B. 333; 5 Q. B. D. 302; 42 L. T. 285; 28 W. R. 557—C. A.

Nor with Denial of Innuendo. ]-To an action for libel in a newspaper an apology and payment into court under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, cannot be pleaded together with a traverse of the defamatory sense imputed. Barry v. M. Grath, 17 W. R.

Sufficiency of Replication.]—The replication under s. 2 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, need not deny all the facts stated in the plea, but the plaintiff may traverse as much of it as he thinks necessary. Chadwick v. Herapath, 4 D. & L. 653; 3 C. B. 885; 16 L. J., C. P. 104.

Action not to Proceed if Money Paid in is Withdrawn. ]—The plaintiff in an action for libel contained in a newspaper, is not entitled to draw out money lodged in court with defence of an apology under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 2, and to procced with the action for the purpose of recovering greater damages. Harris v. Arnott, 24 L. R. Ir.

Sufficiency of Apology. ]-A libel having been published in a newspaper among its ordinary news, and in its usual type, an apology inserted in a subsequent number of the paper, under a general head of "Notices to Correspondents," which was in a type smaller than the rest of the paper, is not a full apology within the statute. Latinev N. Smith, 3 H. & N. 735; 28 L. J., Ex. 33; 4 Jur. (x.s.) 1064; 7 W. R. 13.

When an apology is pleaded, it is for the jury to say whether the apology is reasonably sufficient. Risk Allah Beyv. Johnstone, 18 L. T. 620. A defendant is not bound to insert an apology dictated by the plaintiff, but if he inserts one which an impartial person would consider reasonably satisfactory under all the circumstances of the case, he will be protected. Ib.

Publication of Apology.]—The prosecutors in a trade-mark case offered no evidence against the offender, and he was acquitted, he giving a letter of apology, with authority to the prosecutors to make such use of it as they might think neces-The prosecutors published this letter by advertisements, and continued to do so for nearly two months :- Held, that the arrangement as to the apology was not void as made under duress, and that the proseentors could not be restrained from continuing to publish the letter. Fisher v. Apollinaris Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 500; L. R. 10 Ch. 297; 32 L. T. 628; 23 W. R. 460.

iv. Other Pleas.

Plea of Accord and Satisfaction. - An agreement that mutual apologies shall appear in the several newspapers of the plaintiff and the defendant, performed by the latter, is a valid plea of accord and satisfaction to an action for a libel. Boosey v. Wood, 3 H. & C. 484; 34 L. J., Ex. 65; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 181; 11 L. T. 639; 13 W. R. 317.

Plea of former Judgment. |-To an action for But not with Plea of Not Guilty.]—In an words imputing to the plaintiff, in the way of action for a libel in a newspaper, a plea of his trade, that he was dishonest and a cheat, the defendant pleaded a judgment recovered in a been charged was in fact true. former action. Upon the trial of the issue upon nul tiel record, the record when produced shewed that the former action had been brought for calling the plaintiff a thief simply, and not in the way of his trade :—Held, no bar. Wadsworth v. Bentley, 1 B. C. C. 203; 2 C. L. R. 127; 23 L. J., Q. B. 3; 17 Jur. 1077; 2 W. R. 56.

Plea of Agreement to waive Action. ]-In an action for words imputing a crime, an agreement on the part of the plaintiff, to waive his action for words spoken, in consideration that the defendant will destroy certain documents in his possession, or which might afterwards come into his possession, imputing the same crime to the plaintiff, is (when executed by the burning of the papers in his possession) a bar to the action. Lane v. Applegate, 1 Stark. 97; 18 R. R. 750.

3. PARTICULARS.

By Plaintiff-Names of Persons to whom Slander uttered. ]—The plaintiff in an action of slander may be ordered, before defence has been delivered, to give particulars of the names of the persons to whom the alleged slander was uttered. Roselle v. Buchanan, 55 L. J., Q. B. 376; 16

Q. B. D. 656; 34 W. R. 488.

In an action for slander, where the statement of claim alleged that one T., at the request and by the direction of the defendant, uttered the slander complained of, the plaintiff was ordered to give particulars of the names of the persons to whom, and of the place at which, such slander was uttered. Bradbury v. Chaper, 53 L. J., Q. B. 558; 12 Q. B. D. 94; 32 W. R. 32; 48

Of Publication. |- In an action for libel brought by a director of a company against a committee of shareholders in the company for statements contained in a report drawn up and alleged to be maliciously published by them, the defendants had obtained, after the close of the pleadings, an order for particulars of the occasion of any publication by them to persons other than shareholders :- Held, that the defendants were not entitled to such particulars, since the publication complained of clearly included publication to others than shareholders, though not expressly so stated, and sufficiently complied with the requirements of Ord, XIX, r. 4 as to pleading. Roselle v. Buchanan (16 Q. B. D. 656) distinguished, as applicable only to actions of slander. Gourand v. Fitzgerald, 37 W. R. 265-

By Defendant—Defence that Libels true in Substance and in Fact. — The defendant published articles alleging that the plaintiff, who was Governor of Mauritius, had been charged by members of the council with sending to the Colonial Office garbled reports of their speeches. The articles were also alleged by the plaintiff to impute that he had in fact transmitted such garbled accounts. An action for libel having been brought, the defendant pleaded that the alleged libels were true in substance and in fact:—Held, that plaintiff was entitled to further and better particulars, it not being clear whether the defence meant that what was charged against the plaintiff had been truly of the suit, all further proceedings were stayed. reported or that what was reported to have Wilmot v. Maccabe, 4 Sim. 263.

To a declaration alleging that the defendant falsely and maliciously wrote to and told persons who had bought certain machines of the plaintiffs, that the machines were infringements of his patents, the defendant having pleaded not guilty, the court ordered him to deliver particulars, shewing in what parts the plaintiffs' machines were an infringement of his patents, and pointing out, by reference to the page and line of his specifications, which part of the inventions therein described he alleged to have been infringed. Wren v. Wield, 38 L. J., Q. B. 88; L. R. 4 Q. B. 213; 20 L. T. 277.

A defendant pleaded that the defamatory matter in the declaration complained of was and is true in substance and in fact. The court ordered him to give particulars of the facts and matters he relied on to justify the libel, or, in default, that the plea should be struck out.

Jones v. Bewicke, L. R. 5 C. P. 32.

____ Justification—Review of Book. ] — In the review of a book, of which the plaintiff was the author, the defendants published the following passage: "Not to put too fine a point upon it. the author, by his own confession, is a most bare-faced liar." The defendants pleaded that, so far as the alleged libel was a matter of fact, it was true, and, so far as it was a matter of criticism, it was published bona fide:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an order on the defendants to deliver particulars pointing out and referring to the particular passages in the book on which the reviewer relied in support of his statement. Devereux v. Clarke, 60 L. J., Q. B. 773; [1891] 2 Q. B. 582.

4. DISCOVERY AND INTERROGATORIES.

Bill for Discovery-Names of Proprietors of Newspaper.]-A person complaining of a libel in a newspaper may file a bill against the printer and publisher to ascertain the names of the proprietors, for the purpose of bringing his action against the proprietors alone. Dixon v. Enoch, 41 L. J., Ch. 231; L. R. 13 Eq. 394; 26 L, T. 127; 20 W. R. 359.

A demurrer to a bill alleging that certain newspapers contained articles or paragraphs, and other matter, libelling the plaintiff; that the defendant was the printer and publisher of the newspapers; and that the plaintiff had instructed his solicitor to bring an action for damages against the proprietors of the news-papers, and seeking for the discovery of their papers, and seeking for the discovery of their names under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 19, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 24, was overruled. *Disco*n v. Enach, L. R. 13 Eq. 394; 26 L. T. 127; 20 W. R. 359.

- Discontinuance of Action.]-Defendant brought an action, for a libel, against the plaintiffs; the plaintiffs pleaded a justification, and filed a bill for discovery, and a commission to examine witnesses abroad, in support of their plea. The defendant pleaded to the bill, that he had discontinued the action :—Plea overruled, as defendant might commence another action; but upon defendant afterwards undertaking not to bring any other action, and to pay the costs Inspection of Libel.]—In an action of slander, with an indictable offence. Baker v. Lane, 3 inputing to the plaintiff that he was the writer H. & C. 54; 34 L. J., Ex. 57; 11 Jur. (x. s.) 117; of a scandalous letter reflecting on the defen- 11 L. T. 638; 13 W. R. 293. dant, the latter in one of his pleas set forth the letter and justified the words spoken. The court permitted the plaintiff to inspect the letter with witnesses, in order that he might be prepared at the trial to shew that it was not in his handwriting. Curtis v. Curtis, 3 M. & Scott, 819.

In an action for libel, the court allowed the defendant to inspect and take facsimile copies by photograph or otherwise, of the documents referred to in the declaration. Davey v. Pemberton, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 628: 8 Jur. (N.S.) 891.

A letter written in answer to inquiries about the character of a servant is privileged in this sense only, that although it contains defamatory statements, it will not support an action for libel unless malice is shewn; but it is not privileged in the sense of being privileged from production, such privilege being confined to communications with the legal advisers of the party. Webb v. East, 40 L. J., Ex. 250; 5 Ex. D. 108; 41 L. T. 715; 28 W. R. 336; 44 J. P. 200.

Inspection of Plaintiff's Books to support Justification. ]-A shareholder in a joint-stock company is not entitled to an inspection of their books for the purpose of proving a plea of justification in an action against him for libel, imputing insolvency to the company. Metropolitan Saloon Omnibus Co. v. Hawkins, 4 H. & N. 146; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 201.

Right to Discovery-Limited to Allegations in Particulars. —Where, in a libel action, the defendant justifies and gives particulars of his justification, he is not entitled to discovery of anything more than the matters relating to those particulars, and an application for a general inspection of the documents disclosed by the plaintiff's affidavit of documents will be refused. Yorkshire Provident Life Assurance Co. v. Gilbert, 64 L. J., Q. B. 578; [1895] 2 Q. B. 148; 14 R. 411; 72 L. T. 445.

Interrogatories-When allowed by Plaintiff. 7 Interrogatories will not be allowed to be administered to a defendant in an action of slander. except under peculiar circumstances. Stern v. Sevastopulo, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 737; 32 L. J., C. P. 268; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 317; 8 L. T. 538; 11 W. R. 862.

In an action of slander, it being shewn that the defendant, at a certain place, in the presence of certain persons, had made imputations against the plaintiff to the effect that he had committed forgery, but that the persons present refused to give him any further particulars, the court allowed interrogatories to be put to the defendant as to the precise words which he had used.

Athinson v. Fosbroke, 35 L. J., Q. B. 182; L. R. 1 Q. B. 628; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 810; 14 L. T. 553; 14 W. R. 832. See also Wood v. Jones, post, col. 635.

— Tending to Criminate.]—The Court will not permit a plaintiff to exhibit interrogatories to the defendant, the answers to which, if in the affirmative, would tend to shew that he composed or published the libel imputing a criminal offence to the plaintiff, and would therefore criminate him. Tupling v. Ward, 6 H. & N. 749; 30 L. J., Ex. 222; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 314; 4 L. T. 20; 9 W. R. 483.

Interrogatories will not be allowed in an action of libel if they tend to charge the defendant of high standing at Birmingham. In interro-

The defendant in his answer objected toanswer interrogatories on the ground that to do so "might tend to criminate" him :—Held, a so "might tend to criminate" him:—Held, a sufficient answer. Lamb v. Munster, 52 L. J., Q. B. 46; 47 L. T. 442; 31 W. R. 117.

In an action for libel the court refused toallow interrogatories to be administered to the defendant, the express object being to make the defendant criminate himself if he answered them in the affirmative. Edmunds v. Greenwood, 38 L. J., C. P. 115; L. R. 4 C. P. 70; 19 L. T. 428; 17 W. R. 142.

- As to Authorship of Libel.-In libel after defence denying the writing or publication, the court in the exercise of its discretion, and on the common affidavit allowed the plaintiff to deliver to the defendant interrogatories as to the author-ship and publication of the libel, which in the opinion of the court, was not one which would justify the institution of criminal proceedings. M'Loughlin v. Dwyer, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 170.

In an action against the publisher of a news-paper for a libel contained in a letter from a correspondent and in a leading article thereon. the defence was that the alleged libel consisted of an accurate report of certain public proceedings and fair comment thereon :- Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to interrogate the defendant as to the names of the persons on whose information the reports were based, or the name of the correspondent who wrote the letter, or as to the original manuscript of the letter. Hennessy v. Wright, 36 W. R. 879—C. A.

- As to Circulation of a Newspaper. ]-In an action for libel against the "Times" the plaintiff interrogated as to the number of copies sold. The defendants refused to state any num-ber, while admitting it was large:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a further and better answer. Parnell v. Walter (24 Q. B. D. 441), followed, but questioned. Rumney v. Walter, 61 L. J., Q. B. 149; 65 L. T. 757; 40 W. R. 174.

In an action for libel against a newspaper which is well-known in the locality in which the action. is to be tried, an interrogatory asking the number of copies printed and circulated of the issue containing the libel is irrelevant and will not be allowed. Parnell v. Watter (59 L. J., Q. B. 125; 24 Q. B. D. 441) overruled. Whittaker v. Scar-borwugh Post Newspaper (h., 65 L. J., Q. B. 561; [1896] 2 Q. B. 148; 74 L. T. 753; 44 W. R. 657

Semble, in the case of an obscure newspaper of small circulation the interrogatory is relevant. Ib.

By Defendant-Names of Persons informing Plaintiff of Libel ]—In an action for libel the defendant pleaded that the libel was true. The substance of the libel was that the plaintiff had fabricated a story to the effect that a certain circular letter purporting to be signed by the defendant had been sent round to the defendant's competitors in business. The plaintiff had in speeches and letters stated that he had seen a copy of the alleged letter, that two of such letters were in existence in the possession respectively of a firm of bankers and a firm of manufacturers at Birmingham, and that his informant in the matter was a solicitor gatories administered by the defendant the plaintiff was asked to state the name and address of his informant, in whose hands he had seen the copy of the letter, and the names and addresses of the persons to whom the letter had been sent, and in whose possession the two letters existed; but he refused to do so on the ground that he intended to call those persons as his witnesses at the trial :- Held, that the defendant was entitled to discovery of the names and addresses of such persons as being a sub-stantial part of facts material to the case upon the issue on the plea of justification. Marriott v. Chamberlain, 55 L. J., Q. B. 448; 17 Q. B. D. 154; 54 L. T. 714; 34 W. R. 783—C. A.

- To enable Defendant to give Particulars.] - Au order having been made for the delivery by the defendant of particulars of the several matters he intended to rely on under his pleas of justification, stating the substance of each case, with the dates of the several matters relied on, or, in default, that the pleas should be struck out; the court refused to allow him to administer interrogatories to the plaintiff for the purpose of enabling him to comply with the order, in the absence of an affidavit disclosing circumstances to warrant a departure from the general rule. Gourley v. Plimsvll, L. R. 8 C. P. 362; 42 L. J., C. P. 121; 29 L. T. 130; 21 W. R. 683.

- Of Persons whose Patronage Plaintiff has -In slander, with special damage particulars refused of the persons to whom the words were spoken, but interrogatories of the persons whose patrouage the plaintiff was supposed to have lost, were allowed. Wood v. Jones, 1 F. & F. 301.

Going to Mitigation of Damages no Plea of Justification.] — In an action for libel, although the defendant does not plead justification, interrogatorics by the defendant going to mitigation of damages are admissible, after service of notice upon the plaintiff that evidence to such effect is intended to be given under the provisions of Ord. XXXVI. r. 37. Scaife v. Kemp, 61 L. J., Q. B. 515: [1892] 2 Q. B. 319; 66 L. T. 589.

____ Sufficiency of Answer.] In an action for libel the defendant, in answer to an interrogatory asking if she had not written a letter containing certain statements (setting out the alleged libel), and if not those statements, any and what state-ments, replied, "To the best of my recollection and belief I never wrote a letter containing the statements set out, or any of those exact statements. I did write a letter, but on what exact date I cannot say. I kept no copy, and have no copy of the letter, and I am unable to recollect with exactness what the statements contained therein were" :--Held, that the answer was a fair and sufficient answer, and that the defendant could not be called upon from recollection to state, before trial, what was her recollection of the words she used. Dalrymple v. Leslie, 51 L. J., Q. B. 61; 8-Q. B. D. 5; 45 L. T. 478; 30 W. R. 105.

In an action for libel in which the defendant traversed the publication; denied that the words were published of the plaintiff or in the defamatory sense alleged, and pleaded fair comment; the plaintiff exhibited interrogatories, asking whether the defendant published the libel in two Irish papers specified in the interrogatories, and whether the words were not published of the

(No. 4) as to whether he did not publish the words complained of "in the London Times newspaper, or some other and what newspaper?"
"When did such publication take place?" The defendant answered all the interregatories in the one answer as follows:—"That in bona fide comment on the conduct and language of the plaintiff, and in reference to matters of public interest, I caused to be printed and published of and concerning the plaintiff and others in the several newspapers in the said interrogatories mentioned the words in such interrogatories referred to, honestly believing the same to be true and without malice" ;-Held, that execut as to the fourth interrogatory, the answer was sufficient and was not objectionable, on the ground of its qualified form, but that a further answer should be given to No. 4, giving the date of the alleged publication. Malone v. Fitzgerald,

6. OTHER PROCEEDINGS BEFORE TRIAL

Consolidation of Actions. ]-See Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64), s. 5.

Actions against different Defendants for same Libel—Time for making Order. ]—An order under s. 5 of the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, for the consolidation of several actions against different defendants in respect of the same or substantially the same libel may be made before the defences in the actions have been delivered. Stone v. Press Association, 66 L. J., Q. B. 662; [1897] 2 Q. B. 159; 77 L. T. 41; 45 W. R. 641—

Staying Multiplicity of Actions, -- Where a plaintiff brought seven actions for seven different publications of the same libel against the defendant, the court ordered proceedings to be stayed in all the actions except one, until that one had been tried. Jones v. Pritchard, 6 D. & L. 520 : 18 L. J., Q. B. 104. See also PRACTICE.

Effect of Demurrer. ]-A demurrer to a declaration in slander does not admit the particular words spoken to have been spoken with the intent attributed to them by the innuendo. Wheeler v. Haynes, 1 P. & D. 55; 9 A. & E. 286, n.; 1 W. W. & H. 645; 8 L. J., Q. B. 3.

It is an erroneous notion that by demurring to a plea of justification the plaintiff necessarily admits the truth of the libellous matter for that which is well pleaded is alone admitted by such demurrer. Jones v. Stevens, 11 Price, 235; 25 R. R. 714.

Defence-Amendment of Defence by adding Plea to Damages-General Reputation of Plaintiff. ]-The plaintiff, a professional jockey, sought to recover damages for a libel which stated that he was in the habit of pulling horses belonging to a certain stable. The defendant pleaded a justification, but sought leave to amend his defence by stating that the defendant was commonly reputed to have been in the habit of so unfairly and dishonestly riding horses (generally and not of a particular stable) as to prevent their plaintiff. The defendant was also interrogaed | winning races :-Held, that the amendment could not be allowed, since it was a plea to damages only. Rules 4 and 15 of Ord. XIX. apply to such facts as are material to the canse of action or defence, and not to damages. Wood v. Durhum (Eurl), 57 L. J., Q. B. 547; 21 Q. B. D. 501; 59 L. T. 142; 37 W. R. 222.

Defence of Servant by Master—Corporation.]—A corporation can act in any ordinary matter of hoshess in the manner in which an individual conducting the same kind of business can act, and there is therefore nothing illegal or ultravires in an association incorporated by royal charter defending their servant in an action for libel in respect of matter published by the servant, if the matter complained of was published in the usual course of their business, and such an application of their frunds is not forbidden by their charter. Broay v. Royal British Narses Association, 66 L. J., Ch. 587; [1897] 2 Ch. 272; 76 L. T. 735; 40 W. R. 86—C. A.

a. Evidence.

i. Generally.

Admissions in Libel.]—Statements made in a libel have the effect of dispensing with proof by the plaintiff, of facts so stated, if they become necessary to support his case. Jones v. Stocens, 11 Price, 235, 25 R. R. 714.

It is not necessary to give evidence to prove the truth of averments in the declaration which accord with statements in the publication. Bagnally. Underwood, 11 Price, 621; 25 R. R. 766.

In a declaration for a libel published concerning the plaintiff as envoy of the state of Chili, it was alleged, by way of inducement, that the plaintiff was the envoy appointed by the state of Chili.—Held, that the libel on the face of it sufficiently admitted Chill to be a state, and the plaintiff to be cuvoy of that state. "Victorial Victorial Victoria Victorial Victorial Victorial Victorial Victorial Victoria Victoria Victorial Victorial V

A declaration commenced by reciting, that the plantiff was and still is a suggeon, practising and carrying on his profession as a surgeon and member of the Royal College of Surgeons, which college has the power of expelling persons guilty of unprofessional conduct. The declaration stated that the libel was published of and concerning the plaintiff, and of and concerning the group of the profession, and of and concerning the college and its power. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not a surgeon, practising or carrying on his profession as a surgeon and member of the Royal College of Surgeons, having the power of expelling persons guilty of unprofessional conduct.—Held, that the power of expulsion, as alleged in the declaration, was material and traversed by the plea; and that a statement of the existence of that power in another part of the libel was not sufficient as evidence of such power. Wabley v. Heatey, 4 Ex. 33; 18 L. J. R. 426.

Evidence of Facts not Pleaded Inadmissible.]
—Evidence is rightly rejected, where the particular facts and circumstances sought to be proved are not stated or referred to in the state ment of defence. Scott v. Simpson. 51 L. J., Q. B. 380; 8 Q. B. D. 491; 46 L. T. 412; 30 W. R. 541; 46 J. P. 408.

ii. Publication.

Libellous Letter — Must be Addressed to Third Person.]—A libel in a private letter must be proved to have been addressed to a third person, not to the party himself. Phillips v. Jansen, 2 Esp. 624.

The transmission of a letter by the defendant to his correspondent abroad is a sufficient publication by the defendant. Ward v. Smith, 6 Bing, 749; 4 M. & P. 595; 4 Car. & P. 302; 8 L. J. (0.8.) C. P. 294.

— To Wife of Libeller.]—In an action for the the fact that the defendant has disclosed the libel to his wife is not evidence of publication. Wennhak v. Morgan, 57 L. J., Q. B. 241; 20 Q. B. D. 635; 59 L. T. 28; 36 W. R. 697; 52 J. P. 470.

To Wife of Person Libelled.]—But sending the libel in a letter addressed to the wife of the person libelled is a sufficient publication. Wesman v. Ash. 18 C. B. 886; 1 C. L. R. 592; 22 L.J., C. P. 190; 17 Jur. 579; 1 W. R. 452.

By Governor of Province to his Attorney-General,]—The delivery of a pamphlet by the governor of a distant province to his attorneygeneral, not for any public purpose, but in order that he might peruse it, is such a publication as will make him responsible in an action if the pamphlet is a libel. Wpadr v. Gove, 1601t, 299.

Knowledge of Writer that Letter would be Opened by Third Party.]—In an action for a libel contained in a letter written by the defendant to the plaintiff, proof that the defendant knew that letters sent to the plaintiff were as all yopened by his clerk, is evidence to go to a jury of the defendant's intention that the letter should be read by a third person, which would amount to a publication. Delaevale v. Theesew, 2 Stark, 63.

— Action against Limited Company—Dictation of Letter by Manager to Shorthand-Writer—Delivery to Clerk to Copy)—The manager of a limited company dictated a letter to a shorthand clerk, who type-wrote it and handed it to another clerk, who press-copied it. It was then sent by post addressed to the firm of which the person to whom it was written was a member, and opened and read by the clerks of the firm —Held, in an action for libel, that, assuming the letter to be defamatory, there was publication both to the clerks of the defendant company and to the clerks of the laintiff, and that, not-withstanding that a company can only act by agents, the occasion of the communication to the clerks of the company was not privileged. Pullman v. Hill & Co., 60 L. J., Q. B. 299°, [1891] 1 Q. B. 524; 64 L. T. 691; 39 W.R. 263—C. A. But see Busenies V. Gobbet, sun, col. 584.

Reading Letter Alond before other Persons.]
—If a man reads a libel on another to himself and then reads it alond before other persons, that makes him a libeller. The defendant received an anonymous letter whits at a meeting of a lodge of which both he and the plaintiff were members. The defendant read the letter to himself and then by leave of the chairman read it to the members present. The jury found that the letter contained defamatory matter reflecting on the plaintiff:—Held, a publication of the libel. Korzeter v. Typrell, 67 J. P. 532—C. A.

Postmark on Letter-How far Evidence. A letter, written by the defendant, and containing a libel, was dated in Essex, and addressed to a person in Scotland. It was proved to have been in the Colchester post-office, and, after being marked there, to have been forwarded to London, on its way to Scotland. It was produced at the trial with proper post-marks, and with the seal broken, but not by the party to whom it was addressed :- Held, sufficient prima facie evidence of a publication in Essex, and that it had reached its address in Scotland, Warren v. Warren, 4 Tyr. 850; 1 C. M. & R. 250; 3 L. J., Ex. 294.

If a letter containing a libel has the post-mark on it, this is prima facie evidence of its having been published. Shipley v. Todhunter, 7 Car. & P.

Postcard, ]-The transmission by post of an uncovered postcard containing matter libellous of the person to whom it is addressed is an actionable publication of the libel; and it is no defence to an action for the libel that the writer had an interest in the making, and the person addressed a corresponding interest in receiving the communication, that it was made bona fide believing the contents to be true, without malice and in the bona fide belief that the mode of communication was reasonable. Robinson v. Jones, 4 L. R., Ir. 391.

Libel in Handwriting of Agent - Proof of Knowledge of Principal Necessary. - In an action for a libel contained in a letter, proof that it was written by the defendant's daughter, who was authorised to make out his bills, and write his general letters of business, is not sufficient, unless it can be shown that such libel was written with the knowledge of, or by the procurement of, the defendant. Harding v. Greening, 1 Moore, 477; Holt, 531; 8 Taunt. 42.

Request to Publish Defamatory Statements.] -P. was chairman of, and E. was present at, a meeting of a board of guardians on an occasion when there was a discussion concerning the plaintiff's conduct, in the course of which defamatory statements concerning him were made. Reporters for the local press attended the meeting in the ordinary discharge of their duty. E., during the proceedings, said "he hoped the local press would take notice of this very scandalons case," and requested the chairman to give an outline of it. The chairman complied, and in the course of his statement said, "I am glad gentlemen of the press are in the room, and I hope they will take notice of it." E, added, " And so do I The chairman further expressed a hope that publicity would be given to the matter. A correct but condeused summary of the proceedings, containing matter defamatory of the plaintiff, was afterwards inserted in two local newspapers. An action for libel was thereupon brought against E. and P. The declaration charged them with publishing the reports in question, which were set out verbatim. The judge directed a vertication to be entered for them, being of opinion that there was no evidence of the publication by them of the libels complained of:—Held, a misdirection. Parkes v. Prescott, 38 L. J., Ex. 105; L. R. 4 Ex. 169; 20 L. T. 537; 17 W. R. 773—Ex. Ch.

Where a man makes a request to another to in outline, and the agent publishes that matter, adhering to the sense and substance of it, although the language is to some extent his own, the man making the request is liable as the publisher. Ib. There is a great difference between the authority which will make a man liable criminally for the acts of his agent, and that which will make him liable civilly. A principal is not civilly liable unless the agent's authority is by the agent duly pursued, but the principal may be criminally liable though the agent has deviated very widely from his authority. Ib.

Shewing Caricature by Request.]-A person who, having a copy of a libellous caricature, shows it to another, on being requested so to do, is not thereby liable to an action for maliciously publishing. Smith v. Wood, 3 Camp. 323: 14 R. R. 752.

Handwriting of Defendant.]—If the manuscript of a libel is proved to be in the handwriting of the defendant, and it is also proved to have been printed and published, this is evidence to go to the jury that it was published by the defendant, although there is no evidence given to shew that the printing and publication were by his direction. Reg. v. Lovett, 9 Car. & P. 462.

A libellous paper, in the handwriting of the defendant, found in the house of the editor of a newspaper in which the libel complained of appeared, is admissible against the defendant, notwithstanding several parts of it have been erased, and are omitted in the newspaper, provided the passages erased do not qualify the libel. Tarpley v. Blabey, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 437. If A. sends a manuscript to the printer of a periodical publication, and does not restrain the printing and publishing of it, and it is printed and published in that publication, A. is the publisher and liable to an action. Burdett v. Abbott, 5 Dow, 165, 201; 14 East, 1. See Bond v.

Donalas, 7 Car. & P. 626. In an action for a libel contained in an article against church-rates, written by the defendant, and published in the T. S. newspaper, the MS. in the handwriting of the defendant addressed "To the editor of the T. S.," and sent to the T. S. office, is evidence to shew that the defendant intended the article to be published in that newspaper. The plaintiff may also, for the same purpose, give in evidence handbills on the same subject, published by the defendant about the same time; and, to shew that the libel was published with an intent to injure the plaintiff, evidence may be given that one of the handbills was carried backwards and forwards before his door. Bond v. Donglas, 7 Car. & P. 626.

In an action of libel, the plaintiff, in order to prove the publication of the libel, tendered secondary evidence of the contents of a letter written by the defendant. On the part of the defendant, a document was produced as the original :-Held, that the judge was at that stage of the cause bound to hear the evidence on both sides, and to decide whether the document offered was the original or not; and that, if it was, the secondary evidence was inadmissible.

24 L. J., Ex. 284; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 894; 3 W. R. 577.

Authorship of Libel proved by other Docupublish defamatory matter, a statement of which ments, I—It was proved that in September the he gives him for the purpose, whether in full or defendant sent a letter to the plaintiff, containing several passages of a libellous letter published in in it. Brunswick (Duke) v. Harmer, 3 Car. & the following November in a newspaper :-Held, K. 10. that, in an action for the publication in the responded office, and of a newspaper corresponding with might be read in evidence to shew the animus of that therein mentioned, is sufficient proof of the defendant. Tarpley v. Blabey, 2 Bing, (x.c.) publication in an action or in an indictment 437; 2 Scott, 642; 1 Hodges, 414; 5 L. J., against the proprietor for a likel. Magne v. C. P. 83.

In an action of libel, charging the defendant with having in a letter published a libel upon the plaintiff, to which the defendant pleaded defendant's name was spelt in a peculiar manner are admissible, as evidence that the libel in question, which contained the defendant's name, spelt with the same peculiarity, was written by the plaintiff. Brookes v. Tickborne, 5 Ex. 929; libel, evidence that the plaintiff had, many years

In order to prove that the defendant had published a libel, which was contained in a printed pamphlet, a witness was called, who stated in substance that the defendant gave her a copy of the pamphlet : that she lent it several times to persons, expecting that they would return it to her; that the persons to whom she had lent it had returned her the same, or a copy, but that she could not swear it was the very same, though she had no reason to doubt it :- Held, that there was evidence for the jury that the pamphlet returned to the witness was the same given to her by the defendant. Fryer v. Gathercole, 4 Ex. 262; 18 L. J., Ex. 389; 13 to in the letter-press part of the libellous article.

In an action for a libel contained in a song, which had been published by singing in the streets, a witness who had sung it was called, but the identical copy from which he had sung it could not be produced; notice to produce the original having been given, proof that a copy produced was similar to that which had been sung; that the manuscript had been delivered sing; that the mainteeripe had been dealyers, by H., one of the defendants, to M., the other, to print: that M. accordingly printed 1,000 copies, and sent 300 of them to H.; and that several were delivered by him to the witness :-Held, sufficient evidence from which a jury might infer a joint publication by both defendants. v. Hudson, 7 A. & E. 283, n.; 1 H. & W. 680; 5 L. J., K. B. 95.

In Newspapers-Proof of Proprietorship. In an action for a libel in a newspaper, a certified copy of the stamp-office declaration was put in, which stated the title of the newspaper to be "The Leicester Herald and Midland Counties Advertiser," and the intended place of publica-tion to be "No. 23, Charles Street, in the parish of St. Margaret, in the borough of Leicester, The newspaper containing the libel had the same title, but the place of publication in the imprint at the end of it was, "at the corner of Charles Street and Hadfield Street, in the parish of St. Margaret, in the borough of Leicester" :- Held, that this sufficiently shewed the identity of the newspaper, so as to allow it to be given in evidence under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 8. Baker v. Wilhinson, Car. & M. 399.

If J. H. and M. S. are registered at the stampoffice as the sole proprietors of a newspaper "that is to say, J. H. as legal owner, as mortgagee, and M. S. as owner of the equity of redemption,"

Fletcher, 4 M. & Ry. 311; 9 B. & C. 382; 7 L.J. (0.s.) K. B. 269.

In an action for a libel in a newspaper, it is sufficient proof of the publication to prove that the painting of which the canada peakers in the first publish the libel in the defendant accounted for the stamp that operation; letters, not otherwise evidence in the cause, written by the plaintiff, and in which the days, written by the plaintiff, and in which the

> against the proprietor of a newspaper for a after the libel was printed, sent a person to the newspaper office to buy a copy of the newspaper in which it appeared, and to whom a copy was accordingly sold at the office, is sufficient evidence of publication. Brunswick (Duke) v. Harmer, 14 Q. B. 185; 19 L. J., Q. B. 20; 14 Jur. 110

> Liability of Printer and Editor.]-If the printer and the editor of a magazine are sued for a libellous article contained in it, they are both liable for a libellous lithographic print which is contained in the work, though it was not printed by the printer, provided that the print is referred Watts v. Fraser, 7 Car. & P. 369.

- Liability of Vendor - Knowledge Contents.]-The vendor of a newspaper in the ordinary course of his business, though he is prima facie liable for a libel contained in it, is not liable, if he can prove that he did not know that it contained a libel; that his ignorance was not due to any negligence on his own part; and that he did not know, and had no ground for supposing, that the newspaper was likely to contain libellous matter. If he can prove those facts he is not a publisher of the libel. But whether such a person can escape liability for the libel if he knows, or onght to know, that the newspaper is likely to contain libellous matter, quæve. Emmens v. Pottle, 55 L. J., Q. B. 51; 16 Q. B. D. 35±; 53 L. T. 808; 34 W. R. 116; 50 J. P. 228-C. A.

If the publication of a libel consists in merely selling a few copies of a periodical, in which it is contained, one question for the jury is, did the parties know what it was they were selling? Chubb v. Flannigun, 6 Car. & P. 431.

On the trial of an action against the publisher of a monthly periodical for a libel contained in it, articles published from month to month alluding to the action, and attacking the plaintiff, are receivable as evidence quo animo the libel was published, and as shewing that the publisher considered it as applying to the plaintiff. Chubb v. Westley, 6 Car. & P. 436.

A porter who, in the course of business, delivers parcels containing libellous handbills, is not liable in an action for libel, if shewn to be ignorant of the contents of the parcel. Day v. Breum, 2 M. & Rob. 54.

Contents Bill of Newspaper in Window this is sufficient to fix J. H. as a proprietor of of Third Party.]—In an action for a libel in a the newspaper in an action for a libel contained newspaper, the plaintiff cannot give evidence of the contents of a placard pasted in the winstates what will appear in the defendant's news-paper respecting the plaintiff, and that which it foretold does appear accordingly. Raikes v. Richards, 2 Car. & P. 562.

iii. Defamatory Words and Innuendocs.

Actual Words Alleged must be Proved. |-- It is necessary to prove the actual words alleged or enough of them to sustain the action, and it will not be sufficient to prove the speaking of other words of similar meaning, and involving the same charge. M. Connell v. M. Kenna, 10 Ir. C. L. R. 511. S. P., Armitage v. Dunster, 4 Dougl. 291.

The witness must prove the words used, and cannot be allowed to state the impression produced upon his mind by the whole of the conversation. Harrison v. Berington. 8 Car. & P.

It is sufficient to prove part only of a sentence laid in a count in slander, if that part is of itself intelligible and actionable, and the remainder is not a qualification of the part proved. Orpwood v. Barkes, 4 Bing. 461; 12 Moore, 492; 5 L. J. (0.8.) C. P. 167; 29 R. R. 559.

Though all the actionable words laid in any one count are not proved, yet, if some are, the plaintiff will be entitled to a verdict. Compagnon

v. Martin, 2 W. Bl. 790.

Words spoken at different times may be given in evidence on one count. Churlter v. Barret, Peake, 32.

The words alleged in a declaration were, "The plaintiff's wife is a great thief, and ought to have been transported seven years ago"; the words proved were, "She is a bad one, and ought to have been transported seven years ago " :- Held. that the words proved did not support the declaration. Hancock v. Winter, 2 Marsh, 502; 7 Taunt, 205.

The defamatory words set out in a declaration on a libel must be proved as laid, and it is a variance if the words as alleged are materially regulatified by evidence of words not contained in the declaration, although such words as qualified are still libellous. Rainy v. Brawo, L. R. 4 P. C. 287; 27 L. T. 249; 20 W. R.

The defendant, after the publication of a libel, and before the action was brought, destroyed the letter containing the libellous words :- Held, that, as the defamatory writing was not in existence, secondary evidence of the contents of the letter by witnesses who heard it read was admissible, but that the actual words used as laid in the declaration must be proved, and not the substance or impression the witnesses received of the words, as otherwise the witnesses, and not the court or jury, would be made the judges of what was a libel. Ib.

Before declaration, the plaintiff gave notice of his intention to move for a rule for the production of the letter containing the words of the libel as set out in the declaration. An affidavit in answer by the defendant, stated that he, the defendant, had destroyed the letter, but made no objection to the terms of the alleged libel set out in the plaintiff's affidavit:—Held, that the plaintiff's affidavit being merely for the purpose of the production of the letter, was not admissible to prove the words of the libel. Ib.

An allegation of slanderons words, accomdow of a third person, although the placard panied with an assertion of a fact as the foundation of the words, is not supported by evidence of the words, accompanied with an assertion of the speaker's belief only of the fact. Cook v. Stokes, 1 M. & Rob. 237.

Where the whole of the words laid in any one count constitutes the slanderous charge, the whole must be proved. But, where there are distinct slanderous allegations in any count, proof of any of them is sufficient. Flower v. Pedley, 2 Esp.

If a letter, set out as inducement, is alleged to contain "the words and matter following," ' and when the letter is read, it is found to contain all that is stated in the declaration and something more, this is no variance. Bourke v. Warren, 2 Car. & P. 307.

Extract-Whole Publication to be Read. ]defendant has a right to have the whole of the publication read from which the passages charged are extracts. Cooke v. Hughes, R. & M. 112; 27 R. R. 733.

In an action for a libel contained in a newspaper, the defendant has a right to have read, as part of the plaintiff's case, another part of the same newspaper referred to in the libel complained of. Thornton v. Stephen, 2 M. & Rob,

Criticism on Book-Book to be put in. |-- In an action by an author for an alleged libel in a criticism on his book, there being nothing in the libel which did not relate to the book, and the only question being whether the criticism was fair; the book must be put in by the party who desires to comment upon it. Strains v. Francis, 4 F. & F. 939.

Where Spoken in a different Manner to that alleged. |-A count for slanderous words spoken affirmatively, is not supported by proof that they were spoken by way of interrogatory. Burns v. Holloway, 8 Term Rep. 150.

Slanderons words, charged as addressed to the plaintiff in the second person, are not supported by evidence of words spoken of him in the third person, though so spoken in his presence. Stannard v. Harper, 5 M. & Rv. 295.

Words Spoken in a particular Sense. ]-If the words used have been spoken in a sense different from their ordinary meaning, facts should be given in evidence to show that they may have been used in a particular sense. After that has been done a bystander may be asked, what did you understand by the expression used? But without such a foundation being laid the question is not allowable. Daines v. Hartley, 3 Ex. 200; 18 L. J., Ex. 81; 12 Jur. 1093.

In a libel the writer suggested the propriety of the plaintiff "withdrawing into his own natural and sinister obscurity," the word "natural" being printed in Italies :- Held, that the plaintiff could not ask a witness what he understood by the word "matural" thus printed, but that the jury might look at the paper, and form their opinion as to the meaning. Brunswick (Duke) v. Harmer, 3 Car. & K. 10.

Other parts of Newspaper to show in what Sense Words used .]-The defendant published in a newspaper, of which he was the editor and passages in the same newspaper, besides those containing the libels complained of, were shown to the witnesses. The defendant having obtained that the advertisement was not a libel. Keyzor a conditional order for a new trial:—Held, by v. Newcomb, 1 F. & F. 559. May, C.J., that other passages of the same newspaper might be adduced in evidence to illustrate the meaning of the passages charged to be libellous:—Held, by O'Brien, J., that other publications by the defendant, whether contemporaneous, or precedent, or subsequent, were not admissible in evidence on the question of the sense of the libel unless directly referred to and in that way virtually made part of the libel complained of; and that they were only admissible to prove malice or deliberation, or upon the question of damages. Belton v. O'Brien, 16 L. R. Ir. 97.

Secondary Sense-Evidence to support.] Where words, which are not slanderons in their primary sense, are taken in a secondary sense distinct from their primary sense, there must be evidence of facts which would reasonably make then defamatory in their secondary sense, Ruel v. Tatnell, 43 L. T. 507; 29 W. R.

Proof of Innuendo.]—The plaintiff alleged in his statement of claim that the defendant falsely and maliciously spoke and published of the plaintiff the words, "His shop is in the market," meaning thereby that the plaintiff was going away, and was guilty of fraudulent conduct in his business, inasmuch as he had received subscriptions from members of a certain club, well knowing that they would be unable to obtain any benefit therefrom:—Held, that the words, not being in themselves defamatory, and there being no evidence to wholly support the innuendo, the defendant was entitled to judgment.

— On Failure to Prove Innuendo another cannot be adopted.]—In an action of slauder, where the plaintiff, in his statement of claim, annexes a meaning to the words complained of, and fails to sustain such meaning, he cannot discard that and adopt another. Ih.

When Court will Amend. ]-The court will not amend if it is of opinion that by the words, as proved, the defendant did not mean to imply a slanderous charge. Campield v. Bird, 3 Car. & K.

When there is a variance between the declaration and proof, the proper time to apply to amend the declaration is at the conclusion of the plaintiff's case. Rainy v. Bravo, L. R. 4 P. C. 287; 27 L. T. 249; 20 W. R. 873.

iv. Justification.

Generally.]—Evidence, shewing the occasion of writing a document, which, if bona fide, is not a libel, because a privileged official communication, is admissible under the general issue, to shew that the writer believed the facts stated therein to be true, although no justification is pleaded. Fairman v. Ives, 1 D. & R. 252; 5 B. & Ald. 642; 1 Chit. 85; 24 B. R. 514.

In an action by an optician against a newspublisher, several libels of the plaintiff, who paper proprietor for inserting an advertisement brought an action thereon. At the trial other alluding to him as a licensed hawker and quack in spectacle secrets, evidence that this was true is admissible under the general issue, as shewing > Libel True in every Particular. - A plea, stating the libellous matter complained of true in substance and effect," means that it is true in every material particular; and if the defendant does not prove such statement to be true, the plea is not proved, although he proves facts of the same description. Weaver v. Lloyd, 4 D. & R. 230: 2 B. & C. 678; 1 Car. & P. 295; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 122; 26 R. R. 515.

> A plea in an action for a libel contained three material allegations, as to one of which, the jury in the course of the summing up expressed themselves satisfied that the proof failed. The judge told them, that, to warrant a finding in favour of the defendant, they must be satisfied that all three of the allegations were substantially made out. The jury, after two hours' deliberation, returned a verdict for the defendant upon that plea. The court refused to set it aside. Napier v. Daniel, 3 Scott, 417; 2 Hodges, 187; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 77; 6 L. J., C. P. 62,

Where the defendant charged the plaintiff with having, on a certain occasion, acted from motives of spite and lucre, and pleaded a justification, which failed as to the latter feature of the charge :- Held, that the libel being entire, the defendant was not entitled to a verdict on the plea as it stood, or to any part of it. Cory v. Bond, 2 F. & F. 241.

Action for a libel; plea justifying, as true, part of the libel, which comprised several libellous allegations. On the trial the judge asked the jury to find separately as to the truth of the several allegations justified. The jury found that some of the allegations were not true, and that others forming an important part of the libel were true. A verdict was entered for the plaintiff. A judge made an order that the Master should not allow the plaintiff the costs of the witnesses called only to disprove that part of the plea which was found to be true. On a motion to reseind this order :-Held, by Lord Campbell, C.J., Patteson and Coleridge, JJ., that the order was improper, the issue being indivisible. Erle, J., dissentiente. Biddulph v. Chamberlayne, 17 Q. B. 351.

Of Charge of Forgery.]—In an action for a libel, to support a plea of justification, stating that the plaintiff had forged and uttered, knowing it to be forged, a bill of exchange, and to justify a verdict for the defendant, the same evidence must be given as would be necessary to convict the plaintiff, if he was on trial for those offences : but if the evidence falls short of satisfying the jury that the strict legal offence was committed, they may take the facts proved into their consideration, in estimating the damages, Chalmers v. Shackell, 6 Car. & P. 475.

Of Charge of Bigamy. ]-A plea to a libel, in which the defendant justifies on the ground that which the detendant justines on the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of bigamy, requires the same strictness of proof as is required on the trial of an indictment for bigamy. Wilmett v. Harmer, 8 Car. & P. 695,

If. in justifying a libel that the plaintiff was guilty of polygamy in marrying three wives who inquiry, where the words complained of are were all living at the same time, the defendant spoken upon a justifiable occasion. Hooper v. pleads that the plaintiff was guilty of polygamy 2 Pracecti, 2 Scott, 672; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 457; 5 in marrying three persons named who were all L. J., C. P. 177. living at the same time; it is sufficient proof of the marriages to shew the actual marriages as to two, and reputation and cohabitation as to the third; because, if by the term "polygamy" the offence of bigamy is meant, the substance of the issue is made out by proof of the two marriages; and if by the term "polygamy" the mere fact of these marriages is meant, as distinct from the crime of bigamy, evidence of reputation and of cohabitation is receivable. Ib.

Of Charge of Theft — Whether Goods are Servant's Perquisites.]—In an action by a dis-charged servant against his master for slander, imputing robbery, he pleaded that the servant had robbed him in giving away pieces of bread: -Held, that if they were such as the servant might fairly suppose the master would not object to his disposing of, the jury should find for the servant. Roberts v. Richards, 3 F. & F.

Of Charge against Solicitor of disclosing Confidential Communications. ]-In an action for a libel, a plea justifying a charge of having disclosed confidential communications made to the plaintiff as an attorney, may be supported by proof of the disclosure of communications made to him by his clients, which are not of that strictly privileged character which would prevent his examination as a witness. Moore v. Terrell, I N. & M. 559: 4 B. & Ad. 871.

Of the words "Libellous Journalist"-Proof of Judgment against Plaintiff in Action for Libel. —A libel upon the plaintiff contained charges of misconduct in relation to his office of coroner on an inquest, and concluded in these terms: "There can be no court of justice unpolluted which this 'libellous journalist' (meaning the plaintiff), this violent agritator and sham ing one plantarian, this violent eignator and satant humanitarian, is allowed to disgrace with his presidentship." The defendant, in justification of the words, "libellons journalist," pleaded, that the plaintiff, on the 20th March, 1828, being the proprietor of a public journal, intending to injure C. in his profession, published of him a scandalous libel, setting it out. The proof was, that in 1828, an action had been brought by C. against the plaintiff in respect of the libel, published by him as proprietor of a medical newspaper, in which action 100% damages had been recovered :-Held, that the words "libellous journalist" imputed to the plaintiff habitual libelling and moral misconduct, and that the judge did not misdirect the jury, in stating, that the question was, whether the libel on C. was a scandalous and malicious libel, and that the defendant ought to have produced other evidence than that of the record of that action, for the purpose of proving that it was a scandalous and malicious libel. Wakley v. Cooke, 4 Ex. 511; 19 L. J., Ex. 91.

> v. Privilege. See ante, col. 571, et sen.

> > vi. Malice.

Generally, -In an action of slander the existence of express malice is only a matter for prevent him giving a second character, and then Express malice may be proved if evidence that the imputation is in part false, even where the communication is of such a nature as to raise a primâ facie presumption of absence of malice. Blagg v. Sturt, 10 Q. B. 899; 16 L. J., Q. B. 39; 11 Jur. 1011—Ex. Ch.

Defendant's Evidence of Bona Fides—Letter containing Foundation of Charges.]—In an action for libel, a letter written to the defendant, containing a statement of the facts, upon which he founded his charges, is receivable on his behalf, to shew the bona fides with which he acted. Blackburn v. Blackburn, I M. & P. 33, 63; 4 Bing. 395; 3 Car. & P. 146; 29 R. R. 583; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 13.

To rebut Privilege.]—Where the words are spoken on a privileged occasion, the plaintiff will be nonsuited, unless evidence of express malice is given. Caulfield v. Whitworth, 18 L. T. 527; 16 W. R. 936.

A communication being shewn to be privi-leged, it lies on the plaintiff to prove malice in fact ; in order to entitle him to have the question of malice left to the jury, he need not shew circumstances necessarily leading to the conclusion that malice existed, or such as are inconsistent with its non-existence, but they must be such asraise a probability of malice, and be more consistent with its existence than with its nonexistence. Somerville v. Hawkins, 10 C. B. 583;

20 L. J., C. P. 181; 15 Jur. 450.

In an action for defamation, no distinction can be drawn between one class of privileged communication and another. The same considerations apply to all cases of privilege, whether the communication be made in answer to inquiries with reference to character, or from a sense of legal, moral, or social duty. Where the occasion is privileged, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to shew that the defendant was the plantal to shew that the defendant was acting from some other motive than a sense of duty. Clarke v. Molymeuz (3 Q. B. D. 237) followed. Jenare v. Debnege, 60 L. J., P. C. 11; [1891] A. C. 73; 63 L. T. 814; 39 W. R. 388; 55 J. P. 500—P. C.

Defamatory words carry with them prima facie evidence of malice, which may be rebutted by evidence of the occasion upon which they were spoken; if that occasion is such as to render them privileged, and if nothing further appearsfrom the evidence given in support of the plain-tiffs case, the judge ought to direct a nonsnit; but if any additional evidence is given from which the jury may infer that the defendant did not honestly believe the imputations to be true, or that he was actuated by some sinister motive and not by an honest desire to discharge hisduty, the judge is bound to leave the case to the jury, who are to say whether the defendant spoke the words under the influence of a sinister motive or not. Jackson v. Hopperton, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 829; 10 L. T. 529; 12 W. R. 913.

Although a master be not in general bound toprove the truth of a character given by him to a person applying for the character of his servant, yet if he officiously state any trivial misconduct of the servant to a former master in order to himself upon application for a character give the | been made, that is of itself sufficient prima facie servant a bad character, the truth of which he is not able to prove, the jury may from these circumstances infer malice against the master in an action against him by the servant, Rogers v. Clifton, 3 Bos. & P. 587.

— Words in Excess of Occasion.]—In an action for libel, if the libel is published on a privileged occasion, and there is no evidence of malice, the defendant is entitled to judgment. Per Curiam: When the Judge has ruled that the libel was published on a privileged occasion, there can be no liability for such publication unless the jury expressly find that it was published maliciously. A finding by the jury that the statement exceeded the privileged occasion is not equivalent to a finding of actual malice, and is immaterial. Nevill v. Fine Arts and General Insurance Co., 64 L. J., Q. B. 681; [1895] 2 Q. B. 156; 14 R. 587; 72 L. T. 525; 59 J. P. 371— C. A.

In an action for libel, where the Judge rules that the occasion is privileged, nothing short of evidence of malice will displace the privilege. X. C., 66 L. J., Q. B. 195 : [1897] A. C. 68; 75 L. T. 606; 61 J. P. 500—H. L. (E.)

When the occasion is privileged, merc intemperance of language, though forming evidence of malice, will not operate, if malice is negatived, to take away the privilege. Cowles v. Potts, 34 L. J., Q. B. 247; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 946; 13 W. R.

The plaintiff, a printer at Maidstone, had been employed by the defendant, the deputy clerk of the peace for the county, to print the register of electors for the county, the expense of which is defrayed from the county rate, and allowed by the justices at quarter sessions. In 1854, the defendant employed another printer, who agreed to do the work at a lower rate than that which the plaintiff required, and he wrote a letter to the fluance committee, appointed to superintend such expenses, in the conclusion of which he imputed improper motives to the plaintiff in the demand which he had made, and accused him of an "attempt to extort a considerable sum of money from the county by misrepresentation."
In an action for libel:—Held, that the occasion of writing the letter prima facie rebutted the presumption of malice, but that it was a question for the jury whether the sentence complained of for the fury whether the sentence companies of as exceeding the privilege was evidence of malice. Choke v. Wildes, 5 El. & Bl. 329; 3 C. L. R. 1090; 24 L. J., Q. B. 367; 1 Jur. (N.s.) 610; 3 W. R.

When a letter containing defamatory words is written upon a privileged occasion, surrounding circumstances are to be considered in determining whether the words used are so much too violent for the occasion as to rebut the presumption of the absence of malice arising from the privilege of the occasion; and if from surrounding circumstances it appears that the words are capable of two constructions, one of which is compatible with the absence of maliee, then the presumption of the absence of malice which existed in the first instance from the privilege of the occasion should be allowed to prevail throughout. Spill v. Maule, 38 L. J., Ex. 188; L. R. 4 Ex. 232; 20 L. T. 675; 17 W. R. 805—Ex. Ch.

evidence of express malice. Palmer v. Hummerston, 1 Cab. & E. 36.

Proof that the words are false, without evidence that they are false to the defendant's knowledge, will not entitle the plaintiff to have the question of malicc left to the jury. Cautfield v. Whitworth, 18 L. T. 527; 16 W. R. 936.

At the trial of an action for slander, the plaintiff's witnesses proved that the slanderous statements were untrue in fact, but also that they were the natural and reasonable inferences from what took place and they professed to describe; and that the defendant was present at the occurrence to which the slanderous statements referred. The judge ruled that the occasion was privileged; but that the plaintiff must have a verdict unless the defendant proved that the statements were made without malice:-Held. a right direction; the presence of the defendant being some evidence that the statements were made with a knowledge that they were untrue. Hartwell v. Vessey, 3 L. T. 275.

Where an underwriter, in discussing with an agent of the assured, a claim on his part as for a total loss, made a statement purporting to be founded on a letter of the assured which he professed to have seen, implying a design to make such claim dishonestly, no such letter having been written:—Held, that the occasion was privileged, but whether the communication was so would depend on the motive with which it was made, and whether there was a mere mistake or a statement wilfully false. Hancock v. Case, 2 F. & F. 711.

Previous Dispute.]—In an action for words, which are prima facie privileged, evidence tending to make out an admission by the defendance of the provide of the provider of the dant subsequently to the speaking of the words of a dispute existing between him and the plaintiff before the speaking of the words about a sum of money claimed to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff, is admissible to shew express malice. Simpson v. Robinson, 12 Q. B. 511; 18 L. J., Q. B. 73; 13 Jur. 187.

Conduct of Defendant at Trial.]-Where a justification of the truth of the words had been pleaded, and the plaintiff, during the trial, offered to accept an apology and a verdict for nominal damages, if the defendant would withdraw the plea of justification, which the defendant refused to do, though he did not attempt to prove it :—Held, that this conduct on the part of the defendant was also proper to be left to the jury, with reference to the question of malice, as well as that of damages. Ib.

Other Slanderous Words. ]-Other slanderous words may be given in evidence to shew the animus of the defendant. Camfield v. Bird, 5 Car, & K. 56.

Non-actionable Words spoken to Another Person.]-In an action for words spoken to A. concerning the plaintiff, evidence of words (not in themselves actionable) spoken to B. may be received to shew the malice of the defendant. Mead v. Daubigny, Peake, 125,

What is Evidence of Malice—Wilfully False allowed to Justify.]—Where words were given evidence has been given evidence by the plaintiff, in order to prove a maishowing an utterly untrue statement to have closs intent by the defendant, which were not Words not in Declaration-Defendant stated in the declaration:-Held, that the defendant might prove the truth of such words. Warne v. Chadwell, 2 Stark. 457; 20 R. R.

Publications previous to Libel. -In an action for libel, the defendant pleaded the general issue, and also a plea, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, denying actual malice, and stating an apology. On the trial the plaintiff, in order to prove malice, tendered in evidence other publications of the defendant, going back above six years before the publication complained of :—Held, that these publications were admissible. Barrett v. Long, 3 H. L. Cas, 395.

Writ of Inquiry in former Suit. ]-A writ of inquiry issued in a former suit against the defendant for speaking similar slanderons words, may be received in evidence to prove malice. Jackson v. Adams, 1 Hodges, 78; 4 L. J., C. P. 194.

 Statements made subsequent to Libel. When a libel or slander is prima facie a privileged communication, it is open to the plaintiff to put in evidence statements made by the defendant subsequently to the libel, as tending to shew malice in the defendant at the time of publication of such libel. The judge ought especially, if there is a considerable interval between such statements and the publication, to direct the jury to consider whether such subsequent statements might not refer to something which happened subsequently to the libel, so as not to shew malice in the defendant at the time of the publication of the libel charged. Hemmings v. Gusson, El. Bl. & El. 346; 27 L. J., Q. B. 252; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 834; 6 W. R. 601.

The plaintiff may give evidence of anything that the defendant afterwards said, that goes to shew malice in him, provided that it cannot be the subject of another action. Defries v. Davies, 7 Car. & P. 112.

Where a plaintiff, having proved the words laid in the declaration, offered evidence of other actionable words spoken by the defendant afterwards :-Held, that although special damage not laid in the declaration cannot be given in evidence, yet evidence may be given of any words, as well as any act of the defendant, to shew quo aninio he spoke the words which are the subject of the action. But the judge should direct the jury to give damages only for the words which are the subject of the action. Rustell v. Marquister, 1 Camp. 49, n.

If a letter contains matter libellons in itself and requiring no explanation, although the letter is not a privileged communication, letters subsequently written and actionable in themselves may be given in evidence to shew the malice which dictated the first letter. Pearson v. Le Maitre, 5 Man. & G. 700; 6 Scott (N.R.) 607; 12 L. J., C. P. 253 ; 7 Jur. 748.

Where an action was brought on a libel contained in a letter, which might have been held for a privileged communication, the plaintiff, anticipating the answer of the defendant, gave the evidence other letters containing the same libel, written on occasions not privileged:— Held, that he might well do this. Ib.

- Subsequent Publications of Libel. ]-In evidence may be given, for the purpose of shewing malice, that the defendant went to the editor of another newspaper, and procured the insertion of the libel in that paper, stating that he had got it inserted in one already; and the circumstance of there being a count in the declaration charging the second insertion as a distinct publication, will not make any difference as to the admissibility of the evidence. Delegal v. Highley, 8 Car. & P. 444.

In an action for a libel in a weekly periodical publication, a witness was allowed to prove a purchase of a copy after the action brought as well as before, for although not evidence for the purpose of aggravation, it was to shew that the paper was deliberately circulated. Plunkett v. Cobbett, 2 Selw. N. P. 1042; 5 Esp. 136.

A subsequent publication brought out even after issue joined, may be evidence to shew the motives of the party. Macleod v. Walley, 3

Car. & P. 311.

On the trial of an action for libel published in a newspaper, the plaintiff was allowed to give in evidence a second paragraph, subsequently published in the same paper, in which the libellous charge was re-asserted, for the purpose of shewing the defendant's intention, Adhins, 2 Scott (N.R.) 11; 1 Man. & G. 807.

Action against Publisher of Newspaper— Personal Malice of Writer of Libel.]—In an action for libel against the publisher of a magazine, evidence of the writer's personal malice against the plaintiff is inadmissible. Robertson v. Wylde, 2 M. & Rob. 101.

Charge of Incompetence-Evidence of Competence on other occasions.]-In an action for libel charging the plaintiff with want of com-petence and skill, as a surgeon, in particular work done for the defendant, evidence is not admissible (to shew malice) that the plaintiff has on other occasions acted competently and skilfully in such capacity. Brine v. Buzulgette, 3 Ex. 692; 18 L. J., Ex. 348.

Charge of Malicious Prosecution-Evidence of Statements of Witnesses before Magistrates. -In an action for a libel, charging the plaintiff with a false and malicious prosecution, in which the defendant pleads that the statements in the alleged libel are true, evidence is not receivable of statements made by witnesses examined before the magistrates on behalf of the prosecution, in order to shew quo animo the prosecution was conducted. Newton v. Rowe, 1 Car. & K.

Charge of Perjury—Evidence of subsequent Indictment Ignored.]—In an action for words imputing perjury, to shew the quo animo, the plaintiff may give in evidence an indictment subsequently preferred by the defendant against him, which was ignored. Tute v. Humphrey, 2 Camp. 73 n.

Plea of Justification.]—The mere pleading a justification is no evidence of malice. Laulfield v. Whitworth, 18 L. T. 527; 16 W. R. 936.

Where Malice must be Implied. ]-The defenan action for libel, after the plaintiff has proved the plaintiff's relations, and charged him with the publication of the libel in one newspaper. making the communication was rather to com- had in fact prevailed in the plaintiff's neigh-promise the felony than to promote inquiry, or bourhood, and were the common topic of conpromise the felony than to promote inquiry, or to enable the relations to redeem the plaintiff's character :- Held, that this was not a privileged communication, that malice must be implied, and that the existence of it was not a fact to be left to the consideration of a jury. Hooper v. Truscott. 2 Bing. (N.C.) 457; 2 Scott, 672; 5 L. J., C. P. 177.

Disproof of Malice by Defendant-Truth of Facts not Pleaded. ]—The defendant spoke to with irregularity in her conduct as a servant girl. in consequence of which the plaintiff lost her place: the only plea was not guilty:—Held, that the defendant might disprove malice in the various methods by which it is usually disproved, yet that he was estopped from giving evidence of the truth of the facts as rebutting the malice, because he had not pleaded that the facts were true. Rum-sey v. Webb, Car. & M. 104; 11 L. J., C. P. 129.

Phough in such case the absence of the proof of special damage (that the plaintiff thereby lost her place) cannot affect the verdict, yet the jury may consider it in assessing damages. Ih.

> vii. Damages. See post, col. 667, et sea.

viii. Other Matters.

Of Previous Slander for which Damages recovered. - Previous slander, from which damages have been recovered, may be given in evidence. Summons v. Blake, 1 M. & Rob. 477.

Of Subsequent Slander.]—Where the words are unambiguous, subsequent words of the same import are inadmissible. Peurce v. Ornsby, 1 M. & Rob. 455. S. P., Symmons v. Bluke, 1 M. & Rob. 477.

Of Libels not relating to same Subject. ]-Other libels published by the plaintiff of the defendant, not relating precisely to the same subject, cannot be received in evidence, either in bar of the action or in mitigation of damages. Man v. Brown, 4 D. & R. 670; 3 B. & C. 113; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 212.

A plaintiff cannot give in evidence other libels A plantific cannot give in evidence order mode published concerning him by the defendant, unless they directly refer to the libel set out in the declaration. Finnerty v. Tipper, 2 Camp.

Of Rumour. ]-In an action for slander, imputing to the plaintiff unnatural practices, the defendant, having pleaded not guilty, a witness for the plaintiff was asked, on cross-examination, "Have you heard from other persons that the plaintiff is addicted to the practices of that kind?"—Held, that the question was not allowable, because it was not confined to rumours existing before the words were spoken by the defendant. Thompson v. Nyc, 16 Q. B. 175; 20 L. J., Q. B. 85; 15 Jur. 285.

Where a defendant, at the time of uttering the words, referred to certain reports, current against the plaintiff, which he stated he had reason to believe were true :- Held, that, on not guilty, the defendant might prove, by cross-examination versation before the words were uttered by the defendant. Richards v. Richards, 2 M. & Rob.

- Of Character of the Plaintiff. -In an action of slander for imputing felouv, with a count for maliciously charging the plaintiff with theft before a justice, to which the defendant pleaded the general issue, and also a justificapleaded the general issue, and also a Jassinear tion of the slander, averring that the charge of felony was true; evidence of general good character is not admissible for the plaintiff. Cornwall v. Richardson, R. & M. 305; 27 R. R.

Semble, where a slander imputes the commission by the plaintiff of a particular offence, evidence of an antecedent general reputation of his general bad character, or of his having some vicious habit, leading to the particular act, is admissible. Bell v. Parke, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 413.

But this rule does not let in evidence of a general reputation, that he was guilty of the par-general reputation, that he was gainly of the par-ticular offence charged by the slander. Ib. Evidence of rumours shown to have been originated by the defendant is not admissible.

Charge of Keeping Gaming House-Evidence of Character of House. —In an action for a libel which imputed that the plaintiff's house was opened as a gaming-house, under the leadership of a woman of notorious character, the plaintiff alleged in his declaration that his house was a club-house, and that divers persons paid annual subscriptions. The payment of subscriptions was denied by one of the pleas, and evidence was given that a book was kept for subscribers' names, and that two gentlemen wrote their names in this book; but no evidence was given of the payment of any subscription :- Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury in support of the allegation in the declaration. Guy v. Gregory, 9 Car. & P. 584.

- Evidence of Character of Wife of Plaintiff. |-The defendant pleaded several pleas, but none of them at all referring to the plaintiff's wife:—Held, that the plaintiff could not go into evidence, to shew that his wife was a respectable person, as on these pleadings she must be taken to be so. Ib.

Evidence of Profession—Solicitor—Book of Admissions.]—In an action for a libel on the plaintiff, tending to injure his credit and reputation in his profession and business of an attorney, and published of him in his profession and business; the book of admissions produced by the proper officer, as well as proof that the plaintiff practised as an attorney, is sufficient evidence of his being an attorney. Jones v. Stevens, 11 Price. 235; 25 R. R. 714.

Charge of being "Papal Rebel"-Limit of Cross-examination of Plaintiff. ]-A tidewaiter in the customs brought an action against the publisher of a newspaper for a libel, imputing to him that he was a papal rebel, a traitor, and an idolator; that he was a member of an association for the conversion of England to the Roman Catholic faith, and had enlisted himself in the service of a foreign potentate, and was bound of the plaintiff's witnesses, that such reports never to decline from the purpose of annihilating all religious beliefs other than the Roman Catholic innuendoes, and if they are not, he is bound to religion and popery. At the trial he stated that he was a Roman Catholic, and had subscribed money to an association for the conversion of England to the Roman Catholic faith, but had done no other act to become a member of it :-Held, first, that he could not be asked, on crossexamination, whether his name was not written in a certain book of the association, no notice having been given to produce the book. Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N, 1; 25 L. J., Ex. 227; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 4 W. R. 463.

Held, secondly (the plaintiff having admitted that he held himself bound by the canons and decrees of the Church of Rome), that he could not be asked whether he considered himself bound by the notes and comments of the Rheims Testament, since that was an inquiry into his

Held, thirdly (the plaintiff having given in evidence a paragraph in a subsequent newspaper containing similar imputations against plaintiff), that the defendant was not entitled to have read, as part of the plaintiff's case, a paragraph in that newspaper on the subject of "Papal prosecutions," but having no reference to the other paragraph. Ib.

Statute of Limitations.]—A count, in an action for a libel, was in respect of a newspaper published more than seventeen years before action. The Statute of Limitations being pleaded: Held, that the plea was negatived by proof that a single copy had been purchased from the defendant for the plaintiff by the plaintiff's agent within the six years. Brunswick (Duke) v. Harmer, 14 Q. B. 185; 19 L. J., Q. B. 20; 14 Jur. 110.

Other counts were, in respect of other libels, alleged to impute to the plaintiff the libellous matter charged in the first count, which was set out by way of inducement in each count. The libels themselves, in those other counts, did not refer to that in the first count. The Statute of Limitations was pleaded to so much of these counts as related to the matter in the first count : -Held, that the plea was negatived as to those

b. Functions of Judge and Jury.

Duty of Judge-Question whether Words capable of Defamatory Meaning.]—It is for the judge to decide whether a publication is capable of the meaning ascribed to it by an innuendo, and for the jury to decide whether such meaning is truly ascribed to it. Blugg v. Sturt, 10 Q. B. 899; 16 L. J., Q. B. 39; 11 Jnr. 1011—Ex. Ch.

The judge is not bound to state to the jury, as matter of law, whether the publication com-plained of is a libel or not; but the proper course is for him to define what is a libel in point of law, and to leave it to the jury to say whether definition; and as incidental to that, whether plaintiff. Parmiter v. Coupland, 6 M. & W. 105; 9 L. J., Ex. 202; 4 Jur. 701.

Words incapable of Defamatory Meaning Nonsuit. |- In an action for libel it is the duty of the judge to determine, upon the evidence ably conveyed by the words used to persons of adduced at the trial, whether the words comordinary understanding, but what was the plained of are reasonably capable of the dedefendant's intention in using those words, famatory meaning ascribed to them by the O'Brien v. Salisbury (Marquis), 54 J. P. 215.

withdraw the case from the jury and to direct either a nonsnit or a verdict for the defendant. Hunt v. Goodlake, 48 L. J., C. P. 54; 29 L. T. 472

Where a plaintiff brings an action for slander and the words relied on do not in any sense bear a defamatory meaning, the judge is justified in withdrawing the case from the jury, but in no other case can the defamatory meaning of the words be treated as a matter of law. v. Salisbury (Marquis), 54 J. P. 215.

Fox's Act.]—Fox's Act applies only to proceedings by way of criminal information or indictment for libel, and has nothing whatever to do with civil actions based upon the libel. Thomas v. Williams, 49 L. J., Ch. 605; 14 Ch. D. 864; 43 L. T. 91; 28 W. R. 983.

Questions for Jury.]—In cases of libel the meaning of the words used, the fairness of a report, and the meaning of comments added by Jepanen, are questions entirely for a jury to decide, and should not be hastily withdrawn from a jury. Street v. Licensed Victuallers' Society, 22 W. R. 558. a reporter, are questions entirely for a jury to Whether Words in Fact Defamatory.]-Where the manager of a newspaper brings an action in respect of an alleged libel upon himself contained in words concerning that newspaper, it is for the jury to say (i.) whether the words, in the particular instance, bore the defamatory sense alleged, or were merely used extravagantly and without conveying any grave imputation; (ii) whether they applied to the plaintiff. Australian Novespaper Co. v. Bennett, 63 L. J., P. C. 105; [1894] A. C. 284; 6 R. 484; 70 L. T. 597; 58 J. P. 604—P. C.

In an action of libel for having written letters to the plaintiff's employers, in consequence of which the plaintiff was dismissed from his employment, the judge directed a nonsuit on the ground that the letters were only cautions, and not libellons :- Held, that the nonsnit was wrong, as the question whether the letters were libellous or not ought to have been left to the jury. Hart v. Wall, 46 L. J., C. P. 227: 2 C. P. D. 146; 25 W. R. 373. See also O'Donoghue v. Hussey, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 124—Ex. Ch.

Where words of suspicion admit fairly, and in their natural sense, of two meanings, the one being an imputation of suspicion only, the other of guilt, the sense in which they were uttered should be left to the jury. Simmons v. Mitchell, 50 L. J., P. C. 11; 6 App. Cas. 156; 48 L. T. 710; 29 W. R. 401; 45 J. P. 237—P. C.

Jury to Decide on Reasonable Sense of Words-Intention of Defendant immaterial. ]-Wherever an alleged libel is capable both of a harmless and an injurious meaning, it will be a the publication in question falls within that question for the jury to decide which meaning the readers would on the occasion in question it is calculated to injure the character of the have reasonably given to it, and for this purpose surrounding circumstances may be taken into consideration. Churchill v. Gedney, 53 J. P. 471.

It would be misdirection on the part of a judge if he told the jury in an action for slander, that the question was not what was the sense reasonQuestion whether Tendency of Matter In- nonsuit; but wherever there is evidence, either jurious to Plaintiff, I-If the language of the intrinsic or extrinsic, of malice to answer the proper question for the jury is, not whether the intention of the publisher is to injure the plaintiff, but whether the tendency of the matter is injurious to him. Fisher v. Clement, 10 B. & C. 472: 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 176.

Where the tendency of an alleged libel is to injure the plaintiff, it is the duty of the judge to state to the jury that the publication is a libel, without leaving it to them to consider whether it was the intention of the defendant to injure the plaintiff. Harris v. Wilson, 4 M. & Ry. 605; 9 B. & C. 643; 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 302.

In an action for libel, the declaration stated that the plaintiff and M. had been duly convicted of conspiring to extort money from C., and received judgment; but that the defendant published that the counsel who moved for judgment had stated plaintiff to be the writer of a letter which was in fact written by M. Issne was joined on a plea of not guilty. Plaintiff, at the trial proved the publication and the indictment and sentence, the letter being set out in the indictment as an overt act of the conspiracy, and called the counsel as a witness, who deposed that he had in fact made the statement :- Held. that on this evidence, it was properly left to the jury whether the publication was a libel, and the jury having found a verdict of not guilty, that this was not contrary to the evidence. Stockdule v. Tarte, 4 Ad, & E, 1016.

Judge may state his own Opinion as to Libel. In an action for libel, it is no misdirection that the judge, in addition to leaving the proper questions to the jury, stated his own opinion as to the libelious nature of the publication. Durby v. Ouwdey, 1 H. & N. 1; 25 L. J., Ex. 227; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 4 W. R. 463.

On the trial of an issue of not guilty in an action for libel, it is no misdirection if the judge leaves to the jury the question whether or not the publication is libellous, without stating his opinion as to the particular publication, or defining what generally constitutes a libel. Baylis v. Lawrence, 11 A. & E. 920; 3 P. & D. 526; 9 L. J., Q. B. 196; 4 Jur. 652.

Defence of Privilege appearing on Plaintiff's Case—Duty of Judge.]—The burden of shewing that an alleged libel is a fair report of a judicial proceeding lies on the defendant; but it is sufficient if this clearly appears from the plaintiff's evidence. Where the plaintiff's contention is that the report is rendered unfair by certain omissions, if the judge thinks such omissions to be immaterial, he may decline to leave the case to the jury, and order verdiet and judgment to to the jury, and order vertice and judgment to be entered for the defendant. Kimber v. Press Association, 62 L. J., Q. B. 152; [1893] 1 Q. B. 65; 4 R. 95; 67 L. T. 515; 41 W. R. 17; 57 J. P. 247.

Judge to Rule whether Occasion creates Privilege.]-It is a question of law to be determined by the judge, whether the occasion of publishing defamatory matter is such as to repel the inference of malice, so as to constitute a privileged communication; and if at the close of the plaintiff's case he is of opinion that the communication is privileged, and there is no evidence, intrinsic their bills; and I came to town in consequence or extrinsic, of malice in fact, the judge ought to of it myself":—Held, that, as in actions of libel is ambiguous, and it is doubtful whether it immunity derived from the occasion of the publiimputes any injurious matter to the plaintiff, the cation, that question must be determined by the Cook v. Wildes, 5 El. & Bl. 329; 3 C. L. R. 1090; 24 L. J., O. B. 367; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 610; 3 W. R. 458, Action by an assistant master of the government school at St. Helena against the commanding officer, a member of the executive government in that island, for a libel contained in a letter written by him to the colonial secretary of the island, stating that the plaintiff was drunk and disorderly at a certain time and place. At the trial the letter was not given in evidence, or the publication proved, but the judge told the jury that they had to find whether it was a privileged communication or not, and directed them to decide whether or not the defendant had taken sufficient care to ascertain the truth of the statement made to the colonial secretary, and upon this it would be for him to decide whether his communication was a privileged one or not. The jury found for the plaintiff with damages, and the judge, a few days afterwards, gave judgment concurring with the verdict :- Held, that the proceedings were altogether irregular, and judgment arrested, the judge having misdirected the jury, first, in leaving it to them to determine whether the alleged libel was contained in an official document and a privileged communication; and secondly, in not leaving it to them to say whether the letter, if published, was bona fide; and if so found, then it was for him to determine whether, under all the circumstances, it was not a privileged communication. Stave v. Griffith, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 18; L. B. 2 P. C. 420; 20 L. T. 197.

Question of Malice for Jury.]-In an action for words imputing felony to the plaintiff, the eircumstances and occasion of speaking them should be submitted to the consideration of the jury, to whom it belongs to determine whether the defendant acted without malice and bona fide. Padmere v. Lawrence, 3 P. & D. 209; 11 A. & E. 380; 9 L. J., Q. B. 137; 4 Jur. 458.

In an action for slauder in giving a character of a servant, although the occasion primâ facie justifies the communication of matter which yould otherwise be actionable, yet if, at the close of the plaintiff's case, there is any evidence which would warrant the jury in inferring actual or express malice, the judge cannot withdraw the case from them. Jackson v. Hopperton, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 829; 10 L. T. 529; 12 W. R.

In an action for a libel, where the judge has decided that the occasion of publication was justifiable, so as to render the alleged libel a privileged communication, the plaintiff, without offering any fresh evidence, is entitled to have the libel itself submitted to the jury, in order that they may say whether it does not on the face of it shew express malice. Gilpin v. Fowler, Ex. 615; 23 L. J., Ex. 152; 18 Jur. 292; 2 W. R. 272-Ex. Ch.

Where, in an action for slandering the plaintiffs as bankers, it was proved that W. said to the defendant, "I hear that you say that the plain-tiffs' bank at M. is stopped; is it true?" and the defendant answered, "Yes, it is. I was told so. It was reported at C., and nobody would take slander there are two sorts of malice, one in law the defendant on that issue, in a case in which the jury to say, first, whether the defendant understood W. as asking for information, and whether he had uttered the words merely by way of honest advice to regulate W.'s conduct; and if they were of that opinion, secondly, whether, in ancy were of that opinion, secondar, whether, in so doing, he was guilty of any malice in fact. Bromage v. Prosser, 6 D. & R. 296; 4 B. & C. 247; 1 Car. & P. 475; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 203; as by B. al. 28 R. R. 241.

A., having undertaken to build a honse for B., employed C., a carpenter, to do some of the woodwork, for which A, had given an estimate. The bill sent in having exceeded the estimate, B. applied to D, to recommend him a surveyor to measure the work, npon which D, told B, that he had seen C. take away some of the quarterings; B, informed A, of it, who came to D, and asked him did he say so: to which D, answered, "Yes, I saw the man employed by you take from B.'s house two long pieces of quartering; I hallooed to the man." In an action of slander by C. against D. the judge left it to the jury to say, whether the words imputed felony : and, if they thought they did, told them that still the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, unless he shewed express malice, or the jury believed from the circumstances that the defendant was actuated by malicions motives :- Held, that the direction was right. Kine v. Sewell, 3 M. & W. 297; 7 L. J., Ex. 92.

A jury was directed to find whether a libel was a privileged communication, and if so, whether it was attended with express malice, and they found for the plaintiff, with damages, but that the defendant was not actuated by express malice:—Held that the verdict was right, and that the plaintiff was entitled to retain his damages. Blackburn v. Blackburn, 4 Bing, 395; 1 M. & P. 33, 63; 3 Car. & P. 146; 6 L. J. (0.8.) C. P. 13; 29 R. R. 583,

8. PRACTICE AFTER VERDICT.

Staying Proceedings — Plaintiff after trial convicted of Felony imputed,]—Where a verdict has been found with damages in an action for words imputing felony, the court will not stay the proceedings or grant a new trial, on the ground that since the trial the plaintiff has been convicted and attainted of the same felony: a fortiori, where the defendant has been examined as a witness upon the trial of the indictment, Symmons v. Blake, 2 C. M. & R. 416; 4 D. P. C. 263; 1 Gale, 182,

Action against Manager of Newspaper-Damages previously recovered against other Managers of same Paper. |-If A. and B., having recovered in separate actions for libels against different parties engaged in the management and publication of the same newspaper, commence fresh actions against the same parties, each suing that party against whom the other has recovered, the court will not interfere in a summary way to set aside the latter proceedings. Martin v. Kennedy, 2 Bos. & P. 69.

Setting Verdict for Defendant aside-Publication of Libel and Application to Plaintiff not Disputed.]-In an action for libel, although the circumstances, the publication is a libel, on the general issue, yet if they find a verdict for Ir. 55.

and the other in fact, it ought to have been left to | no question is made as to the fact of publication, nor as to its application to the plaintiff, the court can set aside the verdict. Hukowell v. Ingram, 2 C. L. R. 1397.

> Arrest of Judgment-No Libel on record. -After verdict for a plaintiff on the issue of not guilty, the court will arrest the judgment if no libel on the plaintiff appears on the record. Hearne v. Stowell, 12 A. & E. 719; 4 P. & D. 696; 11 L. J., Q. B. 25; 6 Jur. 458.

> Charge of Bribery not specifying to whom Money given. —Indement arrested in an action for defamatory words respecting a bribe, because the charge did not specify to whom the money was given. Purdy v. Stacey, 5 Burr.

> Entire Damages on Two Counts in Slander—Second Count not Actionable, --Where there were two counts in slander, and entire damages, judgment was arrested, because the words in the latter count were not actionable. Onslow v. Horne, 3 Wils. 177; 2 W. Bl. 750.

New Trial-Not Granted on Question of Fact. -A declaration stated, that on a certain night a gentleman was hocussed and robbed in a publichouse kept by the plaintiff : innuendo that a person had been feloniously drugged and robbed in the public-house of the plaintiff, and thereby intending to cause it to be believed that the public-house of the plaintiff was the resort of, and frequented by felons, thieves and depraved and bad characters, The jury having returned a verdict for the defendant, notwithstanding that witnesses called for the plaintiff stated, that they had ceased to frequent the plaintiff's house in consequence of the publication, and that they understood the libel as an imputation upon the plaintiff, and upon the character and conduct of his house, the court refused to grant a rule for a new trial, Broome v. Gosdon, 1 C. B. 728, —— Inadequate Damages.]—A new trial will be granted for inadequacy of damages in an action for slander where the smallness of the amount shews that the jury has made a compromise, and instead of deciding the issues submitted to them, has agreed to find for the plaintiff for nominal damages only. Falrey v. Stanford, 44 L. J., Q. B. 7; L. R. 10 Q. B. 54; 31 L. T. 677; 28-W. R. 162.

In an action for slander a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the damages are inadequate, unless there has been a mistake in point of law on the part of the judge, or a mistake in the calculation of figures or misconduct by the jury. Forsdike v. Stone, L. R. 3 C. P. 607: 37 L. J., C. P. 301.

- Excessive Damages. ]-Where the plaintiff has obtained a verdict in an action for libel the court will not grant a new trial on the ground of excessive damages, unless they think that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the damages are so large that no jury could reasonably have given them. Pracel v. Graham, 59 L. J., Q. B. 230; 24 Q. B. D. 53; 38 W. R. 103. Where there was no reasonable proportion between the damages and the circumstances of the judge is to leave it to the jury whether under the case, the verdict was set aside on the ground. Proceedings on Recognizances of Newspaper Proprietors,—An application under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 73, to enforce the recognizances taken under 60 Geo. 3 & 1 Geo. 4, c. 9, must state distinctly that the defendant in the action for libel was either the editor, conductor or proprietor of the newspaper; and an allegation that he was the primer and publisher was instifficient. Branswick (Duke), Exparte, 3 Ex. 829; 18 L. J., Ex. 304

Writs of execution having been sued out, without affect on a judgment against the publisher of a newspaper for libel, the count allowed a scire facias to issue on the recognizance of the starters taken under 90 (6e.3 & 1 (foc. 4, c. 9, and 11 (foc. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 78, the attorney general's flat having been first obtained. Browswick (Duke), Ex parts, 6 Ex, 22; 21 L. J., Ex. 13.

Upon an application for leave to proceed against sureties upon their recognizance or board to the Crown under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 73, s. 3, the court acts judicially, not ministerially, and may refuse the application if, upon the facts before them, they are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to proceed against the sureties. James v. Irana; Chaplin, In re, 2 H. & C. 270; 32 L. J., 5x. 25+; 9 Jur. (x.s.) 728; 8 L. 7, 672; 11 W. R. 1079.

Costs.]—The jury having found that the apology was not sufficient, but that the money mad into court was sufficient to cover the damage, the judge directed a verificit for the plaintiff, with L. damages.—Held, that the plaintiff was deprived of costs by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, 8.2. 'Immediately afterwards.")—In an action for shander the judge certificile for costs under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 2, ten days after the trial and during the assizes for another county:—Held, that the certificate must be set aside, not having been given "immediately afterwards" within the meaning of the section. Foradhev. Stone, 37 L. J., C. P. 301; 3 L. R., C. P. 607; 18 L. T. 722; 16 W. R. 476.

for libel and slander the jury found a verdiet for the plaintiff with 6d. damages on each count. who tried the case for a certificate for costs, but did not state under what statute he made the application. The judge thought that the application referred only to the slander counts under s. 126 of the Common Law Procedure Act (Ireland), 1858, and said that he would look into the matter, and give a certificate if he could. At the rime the judge did not remember 31 & 32 Vict. c. 69, by s. 1 of which, where in actions for libel the jury give damages under 40s., the plaintiff shall not be entitled to more costs than damages unless the judge before whom such verdict shall be obtained shall immediately afterwards certify on the back of the record that the libel was wilful and malicious. The judge did not sit again for five days. The plaintiff then applied for a certificate for costs under 31 & 32 Viet, c. 69, and the judge certified that the libel was wilful and malicious :- Held, that the certificate was good notwithstanding the delay.

Mayee v. Moyers, 18 W. R. 842.

- In Actions of Slander-Effect of 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 6.]-In an action of slander imputing felony to the plaintiff, the jury gave a verdict for 1s., and the judge certified, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 2, that the slander was wilful and malicions, and under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, s. 5, that there was sufficient reason for bringing the action in the superior court :- Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to costs: for that by 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 6, which was unrepealed, he, having obtained a verdict for less than 40s., was was only entitled to as much costs as damages; and the subsequent statutes were in the negative. and, therefore, only enabled the judge or court to certify for or allow such costs as the plaintiff was entitled to before the statutes passed.

In considering whether to certify for costs upon a verdict being found for a plaintiff in an action for shander, the judge, although he disapproves himself of the action having been brought, will give effect to an indication by the jury of a contrary opinion, and will treat a verdict for 40s, as such an indication. Costs — Witnesses proving Truth.]—In an action for a libel, the defendant pleaded not guilty, and a justification. The publication being prima facie privileged, the plaintiff called witnesses to prove that the facts therein stated were false. The defendant called other witnesses to prove that the set there is the vice of some of these witnesses was not known to the defendant when he published the libel, but the facts charged were alleged to have taken place in a town where the plaintiff and the defendant of the province of some of the facts of t facts, as they were material to answer the case of malice shown by the plaintiff's witnesses who spoke to the falsehood of the facts, the jury being at liberty, from the circumstances, to infer the knowledge of the truth or falsehood on the part of the defendant, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the costs of any of his witnesses called to prove the falsehood of the charges. Harrison v. Buch, 5 El. & Bl. 344; 25 L. J., O. B. 99; 2 Jur. (X.S.) 90; 4 W. R. 199

9. RESTRAINING LIBEL BY INJUNCTION.

Court of Common Law—On Trial of Action for Libel—Matter injurious to Trade.)—The court has power to issue an injunction to restmin a defendant from publishing of the plaintiff, to the injury of his trade, matter which a jury has found to be libelious. Scarby v. Eusterbrook, 3 C. P. D. 339; 27 W. R. 188.

Semble, that this power may be exercised by the judge who tries the cause. Ib.

Court of Equity.]—A court of equity will not interfere by injunction to prevent the publication of a libel. Clark v. Erceman, 11 Beav. 112; 17 L. J., Ch. 142; 12 Jur. 149.

Whether a libel be public or private, the only method is to proceed at law; the court of equity has no cognisance unless it is a contempt by being an abuse of the proceedings. Anon., 2

Atk. 469.

B. & Co. obtained a patent, entitling them, as the inventors of a new mode of preparing thread, to use the term "glacé," or "patent glacé." They ascertained that the defendants were selling thread by the name of "patent glace"; and after a correspondence between the parties, B. & Co. thereupon filed a bill to re-strain them from using the term. The court directed a motion for an injunction to stand over, with liberty to the plaintiffs to bring an action. The plaintiffs published a report of the proceedings on the hearing of the motion, which report stated that it was established in evidence that the plaintiffs were the first to use the word in question. The defendants moved to restrain the publication of the report, on the ground that it was untrue, the fact being that evidence was not gone into on the motion, and that it would have the effect of obstructing justice and pre-judicing their case. Upon the hearing of the motion, the court considered that the publication. though unfair, was not a libel, and not such as would obstruct the course of justice, and refused the motion. Brook v. Erans, 29 L. J., Ch. 616; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1025; 8 W. R. 688. And see Coleman v. West Hartlepool Ry., 8 W. R. 734.

The court will punish, as for a contempt, those who make the publication of its proceedings the vehicle of a libel; but although it has the power of restraining the publication of its proceedings pending litigation, it will not restrain the publication of every unfair report purporting to represent what takes place in open court.

Ib.

— Libel Injurious to Property.]—A court of equity has jurisdiction to restrain the publication of any document tending to the destruction of property, whether consisting of money or of professional reputation by which property is acquired. Dixon v. Holden, L. B. 7 Eq. 488; 20 L. 7. 387; 17 W. B. 482.

The publication of a notice stating that the plaintiff was a partner in a bankrupt firm was restrained. Ib.

The court of chancery has no jurisdiction to restrain the publication of a libel as such, even if it is injurious to property. Prudential Assurance Co. v. Knott, 44 L. J. Ch. 192; L. R. 10 Ch. 142; 31 L. T. 866; 23 W. R. 249.

The prosecutors in a trade mark case offered no evidence against the offender, and he was acquitted, he giving a letter of apology, with authority to the prosecutors to make such use of it as they might think necessary. The prosecutors published this letter by advertisements, and continued to do so for nearly two months:—Held, that the arrangement as to the apology was not void as made under duress, and that the prosecutors could not be restrained from continuing to publish the letter, Fisher v. Apollinaris Co., 44 L. J., Ch. 500; L. R. 10 Ch. 297; 32 L. F. 628; 32 W. R. 460.

— Libel Injurious to Trade.]—Upon the motion for an injunction to restrain the issuing of an advertisement containing false representations enleutated to injure the plaintiff's trade, the court was of opinion that, netwithstanding the decision in Productial Assertance 6. v. Enast (appra). It is not power by the Judicature Act, s. 25, subs. 8, to restrain the publication of such an advertisement, but declined to do so upon an interlocutory application. Therefore, it is a substantial to the Edward Co. V. Massen, 46 L. J., Ch. 718; 8 6 km. D.

The court has no jurisdiction to restrain by injunction the publication of a libel injunction to trade. Thumas v. Williams, 49 L. J., Ch. 605; 14 Ch. D. 864; 43 L. T. 91; 28 W. R.

The Court of Chancery refused an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing to publish statements that the skates about to be introduced by the plaintiffs were an infringement of the defendants' patent. Humersmith Skating Rink Co., T. Dublin Skating Rink Co., Ir. R. 10 Eq. 255.

There is no jurisdiction to restrain a publication, whether libellous or not, merely because it may tend to injure property. Ib.

 Imputation on Solvency of Trader—Oral and Written Statements.]—B. was employed to manage one of L.'s branch offices for the sale of machines, and resided on the premises. dismissed by L., and on leaving gave the postmaster directions to forward to his private residence all letters addressed to him at L.'s branch office. He admitted that among the letters so forwarded to him were two which related to L.'s business, and that he did not hand them to L., but returned them to the senders. After his dismissal he went about among the customers, making oral statements reflecting on the solvency of L., and advised some of them not to pay L. for machines which had been supplied through himself. L. brought an action to restrain B. from making statements to the customers or any other person or persons that L. was about to stop payment, or was in difficulties or insolvent, and from in any manner slandering L. or injuring his reputation or business, and from giving notice to the post-office to forward to B.'s residence letters addressed to him at L.'s office, and also asking that he might be ordered to withdraw the notice already given to the post-office :- Held, that the court has jurisdiction to restrain a among the shareholders, a circular containing person from making slanderous statements calcu- very strong reflections on the mode in which the lated to injure the business of another person, and that this jurisdiction extends to oral as well as written statements, though it requires to be exercised with great caution as regards oral statements; and that in the present case an injunction ought to be granted. Hermann Loog v. Bean, 53 L. J., Ch. 1128; 26 Ch. D. 306; 51 L. T. 442; 32 W. R. 994; 48 J. P. 708-C. A.

- Describing Ship as "Class Suspended." -An association formed to supply, through an annual published registry, information, as to irou ships, to members and subscribers, and reserving the right to make periodical surveys of ships registered, objected to certain alterations made in a ship of its highest classification, inserted the words "class suspended" opposite her name in their list, and refused either to omit those words or to withdraw her name from the list :-Held, that there being no proof of malice, falsehood, or unfair dealing, the association was entitled to publish bona fide opinion, although it was in-jurious to the property of the shipowners, and a motion by the shipowners, to restrain publication of the words "class suspended," and to compet the withdrawal of the ship from the list, was referred by the ship from the list, was referred by the ship from the list. fused with costs. Clover v. Royden, 43 L. J., Ch. 665; L. R. 17 Eq. 190; 22 W. R. 254.

Rival Works-Advertisement to mislead Public. -- Where there are two rival works, the court will restrain the proprietor of one of them from advertising it in terms calculated to induce the public to believe that it is the other work, but will not restrain him from publishing an advertisement tending to disparage that other work. Seeley v. Fisher, 11 Sim. 581; 10 L. J. Ch.

To restrain Publication of Letters.]-A. brought an action against B., the editor of a newspaper, for stating in his paper that the plaintiff was the author of a certain libellous article which had appeared in the paper. To this action B. pleaded, by way of justification, that the matter from which the article had been drawn up had been furnished by the plaintiff in the action coming on for trial, the defendant. Upon the action coming on for trial, the defendant submitted to a verdict of 40s, in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant afterwards showed some of the letters to third persons. Upon a motion before answer, to dissolve an injunction which the plaintiff had obtained to restrain the publication and production of the letters, the court refused the application, more especially as upon the motion for the injunction the plaintiff had produced an affidavit to the effect that the verdict was taken under an arrangement that the letters should be given up, which affidavit was not sufficiently contradicted on the motion to dissolve. Palin v. Gathercole, 1 Coll. 965.

Interlocutory Injunction.]—The High Court has jurisdiction to grant an interlocutory injunction restraining the publication of a libel. Bonnard v. Perryman, 60 L. J., Ch. 617; [1891] 2 Ch. 269; 65 L. T. 506; 39 W. R. 435.

company had been brought out, and on the conduct of the promoters and directors, and proposing a meeting of shareholders to take steps toprotect their interests. The company commenced an action to restrain the further publication, and applied for an interlocutory injunction, which was granted by Vice-Chancellor Bacon :- Held, on appeal, that the court hasjurisdiction to interfere on interlocutory application to restrain the publication of a libel. Quartz Hill Consolidated Gold Mining Co. v. Beall, 51 L. J., Ch. 874; 20 Ch. D. 501; 46 L. T. 746; 30 W. R. 583-C. A.

But held, that this jurisdiction is to be exercised with great caution, and will not in general be exercised unless the applicant satisfies the court that the statements in the document complained of are untrue. Ib.

Held, further, that still more caution is requisite where the document in question is prima facie a privileged communication, so as not to be actionable unless express malice is proved, the question of malice being one which cannot conveniently be tried on an interlocutory application. Ib.

In the present case the court not being satisfied on the evidence that the statements in the document were false or malicious, the order foran injunction was discharged. Ib.

Statement as to Solvency of Friendly Society. ]—An interlocutory injunction was granted to restrain the circulation of an untrue statement as to the financial position of a friendly society. Hill v. Hart-Davis, 51 L. J., Ch. 845; 21 Ch. D. 798; 47 L. T. 82; 31 W. R. 22.

- Trade Libel-When Granted. ]-Since the passing of the Judicature Acts the court has jurisdiction to restrain by interlocutory injunction the publication of a trade libel, but as, if it grants such an injunction, it must pronounce the publication to be libellons before it has been found so by a jury, the jurisdiction is to be exercised only in the clearest cases, where any jury would say that the matter complained of was libellous, and where if they found otherwise their verdict would be set aside as unreasonable. Liverpool Household Stores Association v. Smith, 57 L. J., Ch. 85; 37 Ch. D. 170; 57 L. T. 770; 58 L. T. 204; 36 W. R. 485—C. A.

The question as to granting injunctions torestrain publication in a newspaper of reports and correspondence containing unfavourable statements as to the position and solvency of a joint stock company, considered. Injunction to restrain the publication of future articles reflecting unfavourably on a company, refused on the ground of the difficulty of granting an injunction which would not include matters that might turn out not to be libellous; and because if the injunction was granted in terms to restrain what was libellous the question of libel or no libel would have to be tried in a very unsatisfactory way on motion to commit. Ib.

Exhibition of Portrait Model of Man tried for and acquitted of Murder. ]—An interlocutory injunction restraining the publication of a libel until the trial of the action will not be granted where there are conflicting affidavits as to whether the plaintiff has or has not consented to such publication. Circumstances under which an interlocutory injunction in actions of libel should be granted considered. Monson v. Tussaud, 63 L. J., Q. B. 454: [1894] 1 Q. B. 671; 9 R. 177; 70 L. T. 335; 58 J. Per Lords Justices Lopes and Davey: The case of Bonnard v. Perryman ([1891] 2 Ch. 260) has established, as a rule of practice, that such an injunction shall not be granted except in cases where a verdict for the defendant would be set aside as unreasonable. Per Lord Halsbury: The case of Bonnard v. Perryman cannot restrict the discretion to be exercised on the facts of each case as to whether it is "just and convenient," within s. 25 of the Judicature Act, Halsbury and Lord Justice Davey: There is no distinction, as regards the power of granting an interlocutory injunction, between a case of libel affecting trade or property and one affecting characters. Ih ____ Statement of Principles, not Facts.]—On a motion on the part of trustees of a building society, which was also a bank for deposits at interest, for an injunction to restrain until an action for libel could be brought, the publication and sale of a book containing alleged libellous paragraphs in reference to the annual balancesheets and solvency of the society :- Held, that success and solvency of the society — riem, that inasmuch as no malice was proved, and the paragraphs complained of, if false, were false as paragraphs computation of a mass, were mass as statements of principles, not of facts, an injunction could not be granted. Mulkera v. — Where only one Publication of Newspaper proved within Six Years.]—A first count, to which the Statute of Limitations was pleaded. was upon a libel in a newspaper more than six years old. Other counts, for other recent libels, referred to this libel. A publication of the libel in the first count having been proved within six years :- Held, that the judge was not bound to direct the jury to limit the amount of the damages, on the first count, to the injury occasioned by the single publication proved. Brunswick (Duke) v. Harmer, 19 L. J., Q. B. 20; 14 Q. B. 185; 14 Jur. 110.

- Where subsequent Publications proved to shew Malice.]—When a subsequent publication is put in evidence to show the animus of the defendant, if the judge in summing up leaves to the jury whether the proposed publication is libellous, and, if so, to assess the damages, he is not bound to point their attention to the subnot common to point their attention to the subsequent publication, and tell them not to give damages for it. Durby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1; 25 L. J., Ex. 227; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 4 W. R.

Arrest of Plaintiff in consequence of Libel. |-In an action for a libel published in the Hue and Cry Police Gazette, charging the plaintiff with fraud, and offering a reward for his apprehension, evidence having been given, with the consent of the defendant's counsel, of the arrest of the plaintiff in consequence of the advertisement after the commencement of the action :- Held, that the defendant could not afterwards complain that the judge, in his summing up, did not expressly tell the jury that they were not to take the subsequent arrest into their consideration in estimating the damages for the libel. Goslin v. Corry, 8 Scott (N.R.) 21; 7 Man. & G. 342.

Excessive Damages. ]—Sixty pounds damages in an action of slander, where it was proved that, in consequence of the speaking of the words, the plaintiff lost an employment worth 50. a year, besides board, &c., are not excessive. Jackson v. Hopperton, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 829; 10 L. T. 529; 12 W. R. 913.

Nominal Damages.]—The editor and proprietor of a newspaper published gross and offensive libels of the plaintiff, a elergyman, to which no justification was pleaded. No special damage was proved, but it was shewn that the plaintiff, in a letter addressed to another newspaper, described the defendant's publication as the dregs of provincial journalism," and had published a statement imputing conspiracy and published a statement imputing conspiracy and subornation of perjury to some of his opponents, in which charge the defendant believed himself to be included. The jury having found a verilist for the plaintiff, with a farthing damages:— Held, that, under the circumstances, the jury which wall compare to the acquisition that the over-Nominal Damages against Publisher— might well come to the conclusion that the case Liability of Author of Libel. —The author of a was not one for substantial damages, and that Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577; 8 Jur. (N.S) 724; 5 L. T. 291.

The loss of maintenance by wife may be made the subject of a claim for damages, but it must be distinctly averred. Ib.

Slander on Wife of Trader-Loss of Custom.]—An action by a trader alleging that the defendant falsely and maliciously spoke and published of his wife, who assisted him in his business, and in relation to such business, certain words accusing her of having committed adultery managed woman, process of the inspiration works accounting the resided and carried tallity of friends is sufficient special damage to upon the premises where he resided and carried on business, whereby he was injured in his business, and certain specified persons and others who had theretofore dealt with him ceased to do so, is maintainable on the ground that the injury to his business is the natural consequence of the words spoken, which would prevent persons resorting to his shop. Riding v. Smith, 45 L. J., Ex. 281; I Ex. D. 91; 34 L. T. 500; 24 W. R.

Held, also, that special damage might be proved by general evidence of the falling off of his business, without shewing who the persons were who had ceased to deal with him, or that they were the persons to whom the statements were made. Ib.

- Loss of Trade. ]-The saying of a commission agent, that he is an unprincipled man, and borrowed money without repaying it, is not actionable, unless there is special damage; but if this was said to a person who was going to deal with him, and did not do so in consequence of the speaking of the words, that is special damage; although, if the person had dealt with him, the dealing might have turned out unprofitable. Storey v. Challands, 8 Car. & P. 234.

Damage not natural Consequence of Words spoken. ]-Claim, that the plaintiff was a candidate for membership of the R. club, but upon a ballot of the members was not elected; that a meeting of the members was called to consider an alteration of the rules regarding the election of members; that the defendant falsely and maliciously spoke and published of the plaintiff as follows: "The conduct of the" plaintiff "was so bad at a club in M. that a round robin was signed urging the committee to expel" him; "as however" he was "there only for a short time, the committee did not proceed further"; whereby the defendant induced a majority of the members of the club to retain the regulations under which the plaintiff had been rejected, and thereby prevented the plain-tiff from again seeking to be elected to the club: -Held, upon demurrer, that the claim disclosed no cause of action; for the words complained of, not being actionable in themselves, must be supported by special damage in order to enable the plaintiff to sue; and the damage alleged was not pecuniary or capable of being estimated in money, and was not the natural and probable consequence of the defendant's words. Chumberlain v. Boyd, 52 L. J., Q. B. 277; 11 Q. B. D. 407; 48 L. T. 328; 31 W. R. 572; 47 J. P. 372—

No Special Damage-Novice in Religious Community.]-In an action for slander for words imputing unchastity to the plaintiff (alleging, in substance, that she had left her home, not to go into a convent, but because she was pregnant), the plaintiff alleged that the words were spoken of her as a novice in a religious community, and that by reason of the slander (1), she was disqualified from continuing as a novice; (2), disqualified from re-entering the community, as she bona fide intended, after leave of absence for the purpose of attending a sick relative; (3), she was shunned and avoided by her neighbours and friends. The plaintiff had admittedly entered the community as a postnlant, and commenced her novitiate, but left within and commenced her novinate, but the winning seven months of her admission, and was continuously absent for three years before the date of the slander. No evidence was given that the slander reached the community. By the rules of the community six months should be spent therein as a postulant, and two years as a novice, before profession as a nun, until which the postulant or novice acquired no status in the community. The sisters of the community were precluded from holding any worldly goods, and on profession, took vows of poverty, the income of their property (if any) being held for the benefit of the institution; and the Rev. Mother was directed, according to the rules of the Council of Trent, to provide for the wants of those who were subject to her in food, elothing, &c. :-Held, that assuming the words to have been spoken of the plaintiff as a novice, they were not actionable per se, or without evidence of special damage; and that there was no evidence of special damage within the rules of law applicable to cases of oral slander sufficient to sustain the action, Dwyer v. Mechan, 18 L. R., Ir. 138.

Not Necessary that Words should be Believed by Person whose Act constitutes Damage. ]—In order to support an action for defamatory words actionable only in respect of special damage, it is not necessary that the person whose act constitutes the special damage should have believed the defamatory charge, should have beneved the defaultatory charge, provided that he acted in consequence of the words having been spoken. Knight v. Glibb, 3 N. & M. 467; 1 A. & E. 43; 3 L. J., K. B. 135.

Must be Caused by Slander, not by Repetition of it.]-In an action of slander, a plaintiff, in shewing special damage, must confine his proof to the evidence of persons who received the slanderous statements from the defendant himself. Rutherford v. Evans, 4 M. & P. 163; 6. Bing. 451; 4 Car. & P. 74; 8 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 86; 31 R. R. 465.

The plaintiff alleged special damage from words spoken by the defendant :- Held, that this allegation could not be supported by proof that the defendant had spoken the words to B., and that damage ensued in consequence of B.'s an action for slander, it is not sufficient to prove repeating them as the words of the defendant, a mere wrongful act of a third person, induced Ward v. Weeks, 7 Bing, 211; 4 M. & P. 796; 9. L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 6.

Clarke v. Margan, 38 L. T. 354.

A. spoke slanderous words of B. in the hearing of A., B., and C. only; C. repeated the slander to D., who, in consequence, would not employ B. :-Held, that in an action by B. against A., this special damage could not be gone into, as D. did not hear A. speak the words. Tunnicliffe v. Moss, 3 Car. & K. 83.

a police constable, in consequence of a report duly made to them of a censure uttered on such police officer by a justice of the peace, is in itself sufficient evidence of special damage to resent same action of slander against the justice, Kendillon v. Maltby, Car. and M. 402; 2 M. & Rob. 438. But see Musster v. Lamb, 52 L. J., Q. B., 726; 11 Q. B. D. 588; 49 L. T. 252; 32 W. R. 248; 47 J. P. 805—C. A.

In such an action evidence of malice is necessary; for it is the duty of the justice to express his opinion of the conduct of police constables, in order that the police commissioners may have proper information on which to proceed, in making inquiries to enable them to regulate the force under their direction. Ib.

For verbal slander not actionable per se, the declaration alleged as special damage, that, in consequence of the speaking of the words, four of the plaintiff's customers had ceased to deal with him. Three of those persons proved only that they ceased to deal with the plaintiff in consequence of reports they had heard in the neighbourhood; but the fourth proved the speaking by the defendant of words substantially as charged, and stated that he did not deal with the plaintiff afterwards :- Held, some evidence of special damage. #### 3. CIRCUMSTANCES IN AGGRAVATION OF.

Justification Pleaded. ] - Action for a libel. Plea, not guilty and a justification. The latter plea was abandoned at the trial, and the defence relied upon was that the alleged libel was a privileged communication :- Held, that the plea of justification was no evidence that the communication was not made bona fide, though it might be considered by the jury in aggravation of damages, after they found that the communication was not so made. Wilson v. Robinson, 7 Q. B. 68; 14 L. J., Q. B. 196; 9 Jur. 726.

Ridicule.]-Proof that the plaintiff had been made the subject of laughter at a public meeting is admissible, as identifying his person with the subject of a libel, and as proof of the consequences which had necessarily resulted to him from its application. Cook v. Ward, 4 M. & P. 99; 6 Bing, 409; 8 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 126; 31 R. R.

Gratuitous Circulation of Paper.]-In an action for a libel published in a newspaper, evidence that copies of the newspaper containing the libel had been gratuitously circulated in the plaintiff's neighbourhood, though they are not shewn to have been sent by the defendant, the publisher, is admissible to show the extent of the circulation of the paper, and the consequent injury to the plaintiff. Gathercole v. Miall, 15 M. & W. 319; 15 L. J., Ex. 179; 10 Jnr. 337.

Other Circumstances.]—If a defendant by his pleading admits the publication, the plaintiff is still at liberty to shew the manner of the publication, with a view to the amount of damages. Vines v. Serell, 7 Car. & P. 163.

A proprietor of a newspaper published a libel on a tailor, stating that he had been flogged (which turned out to be a pure fabrication); and although it was complained of at once, and the falsehood of the statement shewn, delayed pub-lishing any contradiction until after action; these circumstances were left to the jury as evidence of negligence, and a verdict for very large damages was not disturbed. Harrison, 1 F. & F. 565.

In an action for a libel, other papers, which are in themselves libels on the plaintiff, may be given in evidence to increase the damages. v. Huson, Peake, 166. But see Cook v. Field, 3 Esp. 133; 6 R. R. 822.

4. CIRCUMSTANCES IN MITIGATION OF,

Suspicion of Truth of Libel.]-In an action for a libel, a defendant may under the general issue prove in mitigation of damages any ground of suspicion short of facts, which would, if pleaded, have amounted to a complete justification. Knobell v. Fuller, Peake's Add. Cas. 139; 4 R. R. 896. But see Underwood v. Parkes, Stra. 1200 ; Mullett v. Hulton, 4 Esp. 248.

The defendant may shew, in mitigation, that he was provoked to issue the libel by publications of was provoked to issue the role by publications of the plaintiff reflecting upon the defendant, Watts v. Fraser, 7 A. & E. 323; 1 M. & Rob. 449; 7 C. & P. 369. S. P., Moore v. Oastler, 1 M. & Rob. 451.

In an action for libel, general evidence that the plaintiff has been in the habit of libelling the defendant is inadmissible. Wakley v. Johnson, R. & M. 422; 27 R. R. 767. S. P., Finnerty v.

Tipper, 2 Camp. 76.
The defendant, cannot, in mitigation of damages, put in newspapers deposited at the Stamp Office, containing libels on himself by the plaintiff; for, non constat that any such newspapers were published, or came to the knowledge of the defendant. Nor can the defendant put in the copy of a work published by the plaintiff, unless to show that such work came to his knowledge and provoked him to write the libel. Watts v. Fraser, 2 N. & P. 157; W. W. & D. 451; 7 A. & E. 223; 6 L. J., K. B. 226; 1 Jur.

Rumour and Hearsay.]-Evidence to prove that a libel was merely a repetition of common rumours, which were prevalent at the time of the facts imputed to the plaintiff, and on which the libel was founded, is inadmissible for the purpose of reducing the damages. Waithman v. Weever, 11 Price, 257, n.; D. & R. N. P. 10; 25 R. R. 770.

A defendant may shew, in mitigation of damages, that he heard the libellous statement from a third person, Duncombe v. Daniell. 2 Jur. 32.

A. WHAT IS.

The word "detain," in detinne, means an ad-S Jur. 894. Gledstane v. Hewitt, 1 C. & J. 565;
 Tyr. 445; 9 L. J., Ex. (o.s.) 145.
 Detinue is a personal action, in which compensation or amends is sought to be recovered, though the goods, or their value, are also sought to be recovered. Crossfield v. Such, 8 Ex. 159; 22 L. J., Ex. 65; 1 W. R. 82.

B. ACTION FOR.

1. IN WHAT CASES.

a. Generally.

Description of Articles Detained.]—In detinne the nature of the articles sought to be recovered must be distinctly specified. Friedel v. Castle-reagh, 11 Ir. R., C. L. 93.

Defendant admitting Possession-Estoppel. If a person, who writes an answer to a demand made upon another person of certain things, saying that he has got them, and thereby induces the claimant to bring an action against him, he is liable to such claimant in detinne, although it does not appear that he had the general controlling power over the things. Hall v. White, 3 Car. & P. 136.

Several Articles-Motion to Assess Damages as to One. ]-In detinue for several things the court will not, on motion, assess the damages as to one article, and strike it out of the declaration on its being delivered up to the plaintiff. Phillips v. Hayward, 3 D. P. C. 362; 1 H. & W.

Defence of Co-tenancy to be Specially Pleaded.]

-A defence that the defendant was tenant in common with the plaintiff must be specially pleaded. Mason v. Furnell, 12 M. & W. 674; 1 D. & L. 576; 13 L. J., Ex. 142.

Justifying Detention.] - A defence that the defendant is justified in detaining the articles in question, or that the plaintiff is not possessed of them must be specially pleaded. **Richards or Richardson v. Frankum, 6 M. & W. 420; 8 D. P. C. 346; 9 L. J., Ex. 162.

b. For Goods.

[The Police (Property) Act, 1897, gives power to courts of summary jurisdiction to make orders for the disposal of property in the possession of the police in connection with any criminal charge.]

In Hands of Police Superintendent-Application to Magistrate as to Disposal of Goods—Adjournment of Hearing—Liability of Superintendent.]-The plaintiff was tried and acquitted on a charge of stealing a diamond ring and pin found on his person. A superintendent of police, into whose hands the goods had come in the ordinary course of proceedings, did not deliver the goods to the plaintiff, but within a reasonable time applied to a metropolitan police magistrate, under 2 & 3 Viet. c. 71, s. 29, for an order as to how he was to dispose of the goods. The magistrate, after hearing evidence, including that of the plaintiff, adjourned the hearing to a day not yet expired. In an action for the detention and conversion of the goods against the superintendent :- Held, that he, having within a reasonable time proceeded in accordance with the provisions of the act to place the matter in the hands of the magistrate, was not liable. Bullook v. Dinklep, 46 L. J., Ex. 150; 2 Ex. D. 48; 35 L. T. 633; 25 W. R. 98; 13 Cox. C. 5367. Affirmed on appeal, 36 L. T. 194; 13 Cox, C. C. 581; 25 W. R. 293-C. A.

Property by Finding—Title of Finder.]—Where an owner of land has the right to exercise a control over it and to prevent unauthorised interference, and some article (abandoned by its true owner) is found by a stranger, either upon or beneath the surface of the land, the presumption is that the right to possession of the article found is in the owner of the land, and not in the finder. The owner of the land can therefore maintain detinue against the finder. South Staffordshire Waterworks v. Sharman, 65 L. J., Q. B. 460; [1896] 2 Q. B. 44; 74 L. T. 761; 44 W. R. 653,

The place in which a lost article is found does not constitute any exception to the general rule of law that the finder is entitled to it as against all persons except the owner. Bridges v. Hawkesworth, 21 L. J., Q. B. 75; 15 Jur. 1079.

Bonâ-fide Sale to Third Parties before Action.] Detinue will lie though the defendant has boun tide sold the chattel before action. Jones v. Dorole, 1 D. (N.S.) 391; 9 M. & W. 19; 11 L. J.,

Possession of Goods of Intestate-Ceasing to hold them prior to Grant of Administration, But it cannot be maintained by an administrator against a person who has had possession of the goods of the intestate, but has ceased to hold them prior to the grant of administration. Crossfield v. Such, 8 Ex. 825; 22 L. J., Ex. 325; 1 W. R. 470.

Right of Person in Possession to Insist on Receipt.]-A person having in his possession the Palace Co., 2 F, & F, 443; 4 L, T, 403, Delivered under Hiring Contract.]-Where goods are hired at a certain rate per month, and are to be returned whenever demanded, the owner may demand them back in the middle of a month, and, on refusal to return, may maintain detinue. Leader v. Rhys, 2 F. & F. 399.

Pawnbroker and Pledgor-Tender of Amount advanced. ]-The pledgee of goods does not by asserting that the transaction was an out and out sale divest himself of his special property in the goods, or relieve the pledgor from tendering the sum advanced. Yungmann v. Briesmann, 4 R. 119; 67 L. T. 642; 41 W. R. 148—C. A.

Repledging by Pledgee.]—If a pledgee re-pledges, the original pledgor cannot maintain detinue against the sub-pledgee without having paid, or being ready and willing to pay, the original debt, to seeme which the pledge was given. Domild v. Suckling, 7 B. & S. 783; 35 L. J., Q. B. 232; L. R. I Q. B. 585; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 795; 14 L. T. 772; 15 W. R. 18.

Joint Owners-Bankruptcy of One-Sale by Solvent Owner. ]-After the bankruptcy of one of two joint owners of goods, the solvent owner may authorise the sale of the goods, and the broker who sells pursuant to such authority may set it up as a defence in an action by the assignees of the owner who has become bankrupt under non detinet. Morgan v. Marquis, 9 Ex. 145; 2 C. L. R. 276; 23 L. J., Ex. 21.

Detention in Respect of Lien. ]-A. left a picture, which was his property, in the rooms of C., an auctioneer. B. was in company with A. when he went to Us rooms with the picture. B, owed C. Sl., and had advanced A. some mousy upon the picture. When A. wanted his picture back, and offered to pay for the warehouse room, C. said the cost of keeping the picture was 5s.; but that he would not deliver it up unless he was paid B.'s debt in addition to that sum :-Held, a waiver of the demand for warehouse room, and that detinue would lie by A. against C. for the picture, without an offer to pay for the cost of keeping it. Dirks v. Richards, Car. & M. 626; 5 Scott (N.R.) 534; 4 Man. & G. 574; 6 Jur. 562. C. employed T. to convey in his barge a quantity of copper ore from Liverpool to Birkenhead, and to deliver the same to L., who had undertaken to indemnify C. from all risk in the transit. The barge having sunk owing to stress of weather, T. applied to C. to know whether he should raise the ore. The answer was that he must ask L. L. said, "I am insured, ask the Insurer," which he did, and received an order to raise it:—Held, that C. had done nothing to estop him from bringing detinue, and that as he never employed T. to raise the ore, the latter could have no lien upon it, neither could he recover as againt C. apon it, incliner could no recover as against C. for salvage or general average. Custellain v. Thompson, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 105; 32 L. J., C. P. 79; 7 L. T. 424; 11 W. R. 147.

A plea setting up a lien on the chattel detained, in respect of a guarantee entered into by the defendant, at the plaintiff's request, for a debt to be incurred by a third party, but not stating that of an invention gave the defenda the debt has been, or is about to be incurred, is share of the patent, and subseque goods of another, whom he knows to be the good; and the plaintiff must shew, by way of owner, has no eight to detain them until he has answer, that the guarantee is terminated. *Mechanytic receipt for them. *Barnett v. Crystal leabaryh v. Gloya, 13 W. R. 201

c. For Deeds and Securities.

Deed Lost. |- In an action by a client against his attorney for detaining his title deed, which had come into his possession in his capacity of attorney to his client, it is no excuse for him to plead that he has lost the deed. Rever v. Palmer, 5 C. B. (x.s.) 91; 28 L. J., C. P. 168; 5 Jur. (x.s.) 916; 7 W. R. 325—Ex. Ch. S. P., Goodman v. Boycott, 2 B. & S. 1; 31 L. J., Q. B. 69; 8 Jur. (x.s.) 763; 6 L. T. 25.

Evidence of Possession of Documents.]—If, in detinue against an attorney for not delivering up papers to his client after his bill has been paid, he pleads non detinet, the plaintiff must prove that the papers were in the defendant's possession; but evidence that they were produced by his agent before the master, on the taxation of his bill, is sufficient proof of his possession.

Anderson v. Passman, 7 Car. & P. 193.

In detinue for papers, the jury must find the value of each paper separately; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prove the value of the articlesfor which he sues. Ib.

Mortgage.]-L. conveyed to the plaintiff, by way of mortgage, land, and deposited with him an indenture conveying the land from G. to T., and also a document purporting to be an indenture, by which the land was conveyed by T. to L. This document was, in fact, a forgery. L. afterwards deposited with the defendant, by way of equitable mortgage, a document purporting to be the conveyance from G. to T., but which was, in fact, a forgery, and also the genuine indenture of conveyance from T. to L.:-Held, that the plaintiff might maintain detinue against the defendant for the recovery of the latter indenture. Newton v. Beck, 3 H. & N. 220; 27 L. J., Ex. 272; 4 Jur. (N.s.) 340; 6 W. R. 443.

- Verbal Gift.]-A private act of parliament enacted "that every transfer of Bristol and Exeter Railway mortgages shall be by deed duly stamped." A. having in his lifetime given, by word of mouth and delivery, to B. two such mortgages or debentures:—Held, that assuming the property in the mortgage debts did not pass by such gift, nevertheless that A.'s executor could not maintain detinue for the documents against B. Barton v. Gainer, 3 H. & N. 387; 27 L. J., Ex. 390; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 715; 6 W. R. 624.

Equitable Deposit of Title Deeds-Principal Sum not Repaid - Remedies of Mortgagor. Where there has been an equitable deposit of title deeds to secure repayment of a loan, an action of detinne cannot be maintained therefor prior to repayment. The remedy is by a suit for redemption, or by summary application for the deeds on terms of substituting for the security a sum of money equal to the amount secured with or noney equal to the amount securet with a proper margin. Bank of New South Wales v. O'Connor, 58 L. J., P. C. 82; 14 App. Cas. 273; 60 L. T. 467; 38 W. R. 465—P. C.

him the letters patent to assist him in negotiating a sale thereof, but as he failed to do so within the time prescribed they desired him to return the letters patent, which, however, he declined to do :- Held, that when the projected sale of the patent failed, the defendant being owner of only one-third share in it, had no right to retain possession of the letters patent as against the plaintiffs, who owned the remaining two-third shares. Casey's Patents, In re, Stewart v. Casey, [1892] 1 Ch. 104; 65 L. T. 40.

Railway Scrip "lodged" with Defendant -Refusal to Re-deliver.]—Where a defendant, after signing an acknowledgement that certain railway scrip had been lodged in his hands by the plaintiff, and was to be re-delivered to him on request, wrongfully detained the scrip for a considerable time, so that its market value had been much diminished, and did not re-deliver it until after action :- Held, that the action was rightly brought in detinue, as the term "lodged" implied that the identical scrip was to be returned. Archer v. Williams, 2 Car. & K. 26.

Promissory Note - Payment of Value into Court. ]-A promissory note having been sued upon in a county court, and the money paid into court, and a demand made for the cancelled note after the holder had notice of the payment, but before he had had time to take the money out of court :-Held, that his refusal to give up the note did not constitute a detention. Norton v. Blackie, 13 W. R. 80.

Lease given as Security - Claim to retain Lease in respect of other Dealings.]-Brewers agreed to lend C., a publican, 1501. on his promissory note, payable on demand, with interest; C. depositing a lease of premises in his occupation as security for the repayment of the 1501, and interest; the brewers agreeing not to call for repayment of the money for two years. on condition that the interest and the rent of the premises were duly paid, and all beer consumed or sold on the premises be bought of them, and paid for regularly; and in case of any of the conditions remaining unperformed after fourteen days' notice, the brewers to be at liberty immediately to put the note in force, and if not paid, with costs and any interest due, to sell the lease ; the expenses of the sale and the principal and interest to be deducted from the proceeds, as also any account due and owing for beer :- Held, that, on tender of the amount of the note and interest, C. was entitled to have the lease returned to him, and that the brewers had no right to retain the lease on account of any sum due for beer supplied since the agreement, the lease being deposited under the agreement as a security for the 150% and interest only. Chilton v. Curring-ton, 15 C. B. 95; 3 C. L. R. 138; 24 L. J., C. P. 10; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 89; 3 W. R. 17.

- Delivery of to Stakeholder. ]-Detinue does not lie against the maker of a promissory note after he has delivered it to a properly constituted stakeholder, though he may have forbidden the stakeholder to hand it over to the person claiming it, and in whose favour it was drawn. Latter v. White, 41 L. J., Q. B. 342; L. R. 5 H. L. 578.

The trustee of a composition deed holding the bills or notes of the debtor or of his snrety, for Life Policy-Delivery of by Assured-Intestacy of Assured -Action by Administrator. A son insured his life and gave the policy to his mother, without making a valid assignment to her of the interest in the money secured. He afterwards died intestate, and his administratrix brought detinne and trover against the mother's solicitor and the mother, to recover possession of the policy:—Held, that the action could not be maintained. Runmensv. Hare, 46 L. J., Ex. 30; 1 Ex. D. 169; 34 L. T. 407; 24 W. R. 385—

d. For Letters.

A person who receives a letter addressed to him, has such a property therein as entitles him to bring detinue against the writer in case by any means it has got back into the latter's hands, Oliver v. Oliver, II C. B. (N.S.) 139; 31 L. J., C. P. 4; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 512; 5 L. T. 287; 10 W. R. 18.

2. ON DISTRESSES.

An action lies for detaining goods taken under a distress for rent, after a sufficient tender made a distress for rent, factor a sometime tenace mane before impounding. Loring v. Warburton, El. Bl. & El. 507; 28 L. J., Q. B. 31; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 634; 6 W. R. 602.

But detinue will not lie on a refusal to deliver up cattle distrained damage feasant, where the tender of amends is after the impounding. Singleton v. Williamson, 7 H. & N. 747; 31 L. J., Ex. 287; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 157; 5 L. T. 645; 10 W. R. 301.

3. PARTIES TO SUE,

Owner of Goods Pledged without Authority.]-If A., without the authority of B., pledges his property with C., a joint action of detinue is maintainable by B. against both A. and C. Garth v. Howard, 5 Car. & P. 346.

Bailment - Delivery to Bailor - Owner of Chattels. ]-To a bill against a bailee, for redelivery of jewels, persons entitled to a part of them are not necessary parties. Saville v. Tancred, 3 Swanst. 141.

Cestui que trust-Delivery of Deed by Trustee to Bailee.]—A cestui que trust cannot maintain detinne for the deed under which he claims against a bailee of the trustee. Foster v. Crubb, 12 C. B. 186; 21 L. J., C. P. 189; 16 Jur. 835.

Administrator-Person in Possession of Intestate's Goods, but has parted with them Prior to Grant of Administration. ]-An administrator cannot maintain detinue against a person who has had possession of the goods of the intestate, but has ceased to hold them prior to the grant of administration. Crossfield v. Such, 8 Ex. 825; 22 L. J., Ex. 325; 1 W. R. 470.

Joint-Owners of Chattel—Agreement that one should have Possession—Pledge of Chattel by the Other. ]-N. the owner of a chattel, sold a half share in it to F., it being agreed that N. should retain possession of it until it was sold. After a time N. gave it to F. to take to an anction-room to be sold. F., instead of so doing, pledged it with a creditor as security for a debt:

—Held, that N. had a special property in the chattel and a right of immediate possession the benefit of creditors, is such a stakeholder. Ib. arising out of it, and could maintain an action

— Joint Deposit — Demand by One.] — Where two or more who are jointly interested in a chattel deposit it with a stranger, a demand by one in his name only, and not on behalf of all, will not entitle such one to maintain detinne for it. Atwood v. Ernest, 13 C. B. 881; 1 C. L. R. 738; 22 L. J., C. P. 225; 17 Jur. 603; 1 W. R.

Joint Interest in Deed-Right to retain Possession. ]-Where several have an interest in a deed, the title to the possession of it is ambulatory, and any of the parties interested having possession may retain it against the other. Foster v. Crabb, supra.

Grant of Arms-Right to Possession of. ]-A. obtained from the Heralds' College a grant of arms to be borne by him and the descendants of his brother. His brother had two sons, the elder of whom was heir-at-law of A., and the younger his executor with another person. A. bequeathed all his household goods and effects to his wife, and she took possession of the grant of arms :-Held, that the two nephews of A, had not such an exclusive interest in the grant of arms as to enable them to maintain detinue for it against the wife of A. Stubbs v. Stubbs, 1 H. & C. 257; 31 L. J., Ex. 510.

Tenants in Common-Bankruptcy of One-Title of Trustee.]-One of two tenants in common of goods committed an act of bankruptcy, and by the direction of his co-tenant sold the goods :- Held, that the assignees of the bankrupt could not maintain detinne, nor recover the proceeds of the sale as money had and received. Morgan v. Marquis, 9 Ex. 145; 2 C. L. R. 276; 23 L. J., Ex. 21.

Craig v. Shedden, 1 F. & F. 553.

4. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

When Cause of Action accrues. ]-Title-deeds of the plaintiffs were fraudulently taken from them and deposited by a third person, without their knowledge, with the defendant in 1859, who held them without knowledge of the fraud to secure the repayment of a loan. The plaintiffs, on discovering the loss of the deeds in 1882. demanded them of the defendant, and upon his refusal to give them up brought an action to recover them, to which the defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations :- Held, that until demand and refusal to give up the deeds to the real owners they had no right of action against which the statute would run. Spackman v. Foster, 52 L. J., Q. B. 418; 11 Q. B. D. 99; 48 L. T. 670; 31 W. R. 548; 47 J. P. 455.

When a person, intrusted with a chattel for of detinue against the pledgee, Nylnerg v. a demand, the Statute of Limitations is no bar to Handelaar, 61 L. J., Q. B. 709; [1892] 2 Q. B. such action if brought within six years after the 202; 67 L. 7361; 40 W. B. 545; 56 J. F. 694— [demand and refresh, although more than bix years have elapsed since the person so intrusted with the article has wrongfully parted with the or a ritier has wronging parted with the possession of it. Wilkinson v. Verity, 40 L. J., C. P. 141; L. R. 6 C. P. 206; 24 L. T. 32; 19 W. R. 604.

The plaintiff's son, without his father's knowledge, in 1881 wrongfully obtained possession of a lease of certain premises of which his father was in possession, and deposited it with B. to secure a loan from B, to him. In 1889 B, became bankrupt, and his trustee in bankruptcy transferred the lease to the defendant. The plaintiff having subsequently discovered his loss, demanded the return of the lease from the defendant, and being refused, brought an action for conversion, to which the defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations :- Held, that the plaintiff's cause of action against the defendant did not accrue until the demand and refusal to give up the lease, and that the Statute of Limitations was therefore no bar to the action. Wilkinson v. Verity, supra, explained. Miller v. Dell, 60 L. J., Q. B. 404; [1891] 1 Q. B. 468; 63 L. T. 693; 39 W. R. 342-C. A.

5. STAYING PROCEEDINGS.

In an action of detinue, alleging no special damage, the court will compel a plaintiff to elect whether he will stay all proceedings on delivery of the chattel in dispute, on payment by the defendant of nominal damages, and all the costs of the action, or will proceed for greater damages at the risk of all costs. Lyons v. Keller, 15 Ir. C. L. R., App. 1.

6. Damages and Costs.

Measure of Damages-Illegal Claim Made to Detain Goods.]-Where goods are detained under an illegal claim to a sum of money in respect of them upon payment of which the owner might recover possession of his property, the measure of damages is not necessarily that sum; but the circumstance that the owner might by paying the sum have obtained the goods is an element for the consideration of the jury in assessing the damages. Daris v. L. & N. W. Ry., 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1303: 7 W. R. 105.

Return of Goods after Action in damaged Condition. |- In detinue, if the defendant pleads the return and acceptance of the goods after action brought, evidence on the part of the plaintiff to shew their damaged state after the commencement of the action is admissible. M'Grath v. Bourne, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 160.

Effect of Consent Order as to Possession—Appointment of Receiver. ]—D. commenced an action against the P. company claiming delivery of eleven cargoes of guano then on their way to Europe and an injunction to restrain the company from dealing with such cargoes. The company denied D.'s title to the cargoes. In April, 1880, at which time only two of the cargoes had been actually received by the company, an order was made by consent under which the company were to retain possession of safe custody to be restored to the owner when the cargoes without prejudice to any question required, is sued in detinue for detaining it after between the parties, on their undertaking to keep proper accounts, and to abide by any order of the court. In December, 1880, an order was made for the appointment of a receiver, and in February, 1881, a receiver was appointed. It was ultimately held by the court that the cargos were the property of D., and an inquiry as to damages was ordered:—Held, that the effect of the consent order of April, 1880, was not to make the detention after that date lawful, and that the period of illegal detention, with respect to which the company were liable in damages, was to be computed from the arrival of each cargo in Europe up to the date of the order for the appointment of a receiver after which the property was in the hands of the court. Pervicus Gusuo Co. v. Dregles, 61 L. J., Ch. 749; [1892] App. Gas. 165; 66 L. T., 536; 7 Asp. M. C. 225—H. L. (E)

Stock—Injunction to Restrain Dealing with— Depreciation—Damages.]—The plaintiffs having instructed their brokers to sell stock, the latter fraudulently deposited the certificate with the C. Bank. The plaintiffs commenced an action for an injunction to restrain the transfer of the stock, and for damages for the unlawful detention. On a motion for an interlocatory injunction, an order by consent was taken by which the bank undertook not to sell or deal with the stock until the trial or futher order, and, the plaintiff under-taking in the usual form to abide by any order as to damages in case the bank had sustained any by entering into their undertaking, the company in which the stock was were restrained from permitting a transfer without the consent of the plaintiffs. The order was made without prejudice to any question. The action went on for some months, after which the bank gave up their claim to the stock, but declined to pay more than nominal damages. The plaintiffs accordingly brought the action on for trial on the question of damages:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to substantial damages on account of the fall in the stock, the order having been obtained to prevent a wrongful sale by the bank. Williams v. Poel River Land Co., 55 L. T. 689 -C A Railway Scrip—Valnation.]—In detinue for railway scrip, which has been delivered up to the plaintiff after action under a judge's order, the plaintiff after action under a judge's order, the judge is warranted in directing the jury at the trial, that in estimating damages they may take into consideration the difference in value of the scrip at the time of the demand and at the time of its delivery to the plaintiff under the judge's order. Williams v. Arrher. 5 C. B. 318; 5 Railw. Cas. 289; 17 L. J., C. P. 28—28. Ch.

Inasmuch as the scrip had already been redelivered, the verdict and judgment were properly confined to an assessment of damages for the detention, by analogy to the case of the re-delivery of charters being rendered impossible by reason of their having been burnt. Ib.

Betention subsequent to Writ.]—Damages are only recoverable for the detention prior to the issuing of the writ. Any subsequent detention must be made the subject of a second action, Leader v. Khys, 2 F, & F, 399.

Delivery after Action brought—Effect of on Judgment.]—In detinue for goods, if all or any are delivered up after action brought, the plaintiff cannot have judgment to recover the goods so delivered to him, or their value, but may have keep proper accounts, and to abide by any order judgment to recover for their detention if he has of the court. In December, 1880, an order was sustained any damage; and judgment to recover made for the appointment of a receiver, and in February, 1881, a receiver was appointed. It was ultimately held by the court that the cargoes was the property of D, and an inquiry as to damages for their detention. Crossfield v. Such, mately held by the court that the cargoes was Phillips v. Hagward, ante, col. 679.

Costs—Goods exceeding £50 in value.]—Where an action is brought for the detention of goods exceeding the value of 50%, the jurisdiction of the county court is ousted, and the plaintiff is entitled to his costs although, in consequence of the goods being returned in the course of the cause, he obtains a verdier for only nominal damages. Leader v. Rhys, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 359; 30 L. J., C. P. 345; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1199; 4 L. T. 380; 9 W. R. 704.

— Tort.]—Detinue is founded on tort, within the County Courts Act as to costs. Bryant v. Herbert, 47 L. J., C. P. 670; 3 C. P. D. 389; 39 L. T. 17; 26 W. R. 898—C. A.

But such an action cannot be said to be brought merely to recover damages for a wrong. Danby v. Lomb, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 423; 31 L. J., C. P. 17; 5 L. T. 353; 10 W. R. 43.

7. JUDGMENT AND EXECUTION.

Ascertaining Value of Goods.]—A judgment in detinue should ascertain the value of the goods or give means for ascertaining same. Phillips v. Jones, 15 Q. B. 859; 19 L. J., Q. B. 874; 14 Jur. 1065—Ex. Ch.

Effect on Property in Goods, —The property in goods, in respect of which judgment has been recovered in an action of dethine, remains in the plaintiff until execution is issued on the judgment. South, Expurte, Eventh, Inv. 44 L. J., Bk. 29; L. R. 10 Ch. 234; 31 L. T. 737; 23 W. R. 153.

Therefore in the liquidation of the affairs of the defendant before execution has issued, the plaintiff cannot prove for the value of the goods.

— When Defendant is Bankrupt,]—Where a plaintiff in an action of detinue has recovered judgment, the property in the goods obtained by the wrongdoer remains, antil the judgment is satisfied, in the plaintiff, and the bankruptcy of the defendant will not vest it in the trustee. Pracke, Experte, Ware, Enr., 24 ft. J., Br. 105; 5 Ch. D. 866; 36 L. T. 677; 25 W. R. 641—C. A. Cp. Brissmead V. Harrisan, 34 L. J., C. P. 190; L. R. 7 C. P. 547; 27 L. T. 99; 20 W. R. 784—Ex. Ch.

The proper course, however, for the plaintiff to pursue is to apply to the court of bankruptey for an order directing the trustee to deliver up the goods, and if instead of this he takes forcible possession, he will be deprived of his costs. 12.

C. COMPELLING DELIVERY OF CHAT-TELS OR GOODS DETAINED.

use be made the subject of a second action, order v. Rhys, 2 R. & F. 399.

Delivery after Action brought—Effect of on degment.]—In detine for goods, if all or any palely send un after action becomes the subject of the delivery of a specific chattle title defound in the option of retaining some upon or delivered un after action becomes the subject of the delivery of a specific chattle chatter.

tiff cannot have judgment to recover the goods Judge's Discretion.]—The discretion of a judge so delivered to him, or their value, but may have to make an order in an action of detinue for the delivery up of chattels, detained, is subject to appeal. Chilton v. Chrrington, 15 C. B. 730; 3 C. L. R. 392; 24 L. J., C. P. 78; 1 Jun. (x.s.)

See ESTATE—HEIR-AT-LAW. 477; 3 W. R. 248.

Power of County Court to Order Return of Chattel.]—In an action of detinue brought in the county court, the county court judge has jurisdiction to make an order for the delivery by the defendant of the specific chattel wrongfully detained, without giving him the option of paying its assessed value as an alternative. Win-field v. Boothroyd, 54 L. T. 574; 34 W. R. 501.

In Equity—When Damages a Remedy.]—A court of equity has jurisdiction to order the court of equity has jurisdiction to order the delivery up to an artist of a picture painted by himself, as having a special value, the legal remely being inadequate. But where, by the terms of an agreement, an artist seeking the restitution of a picture had, in effect, put a fixed price upon it, and as damages would be an adequate remedy, there was no jurisdiction in a court of equity to interfere. Dowling v. Beljemann, 2 Johns. & H. 544; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 538; 6 L. T. 512; 10 W. R. 574.

— Articles of Special Value.]—Where a chattel, from being used in business or otherwise, has a peculiar value, the court will entertain a bill for an injunction to restrain its sale or detention. North v. G. N. Ry., 2 Giff, 64; 29 L. J., Ch. 301; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 244; 1 L. T. 510.

A bill lies to compel the delivery of an altarpiece, or other enricity in specie. Somerset v. Cookson, 3 P. W. 390.

Or of chattels personal, especially in the nature of heirlooms. Macelesfield (Earl) v. Davis, 3 Ves. & B. 16.

The court will order delivery of a specific chattel, the value of which is not to be estimated by damages. Nathrown v. Thornton, 10 Ves. 163. S. P., Lloyd v. Lvaring, 6 Ves. 773; Fells v. Rvad, 3 Ves. 70; Lowther v. Lowther, 13 Ves. 95.

There is nothing in the character or nature of the certificate of registry of a ship which excludes it from the jurisdiction of the court to decree its

to Home the jurisdection of the Court to decree its delivery as against a party unlawfully detaining it. Gibson v. Ingo, 6 Hare, 112.

A bill will lie for specific performance of an agreement to purchase stock, where it also seeks deliverance of mutilities of the better that the court of th delivery up of certificates which give the legal title to the stock. Doloret v. Rothschild, 2 L. J., Ch. (O.S.) 125; 1 Sim. & S. 590.

Where Chattels obtained through abuse of Fiduciary Relation. ]-The jurisdiction of the court by injunction to protect the possession, and to decree the delivery up, of specific chattels, is not nerely as to such the loss or injury to which would not be adequately compensated by damages, but extends to all cases where the possession has been acquired through an alleged abuse of power on the part of one standing in a fiduciary relation to the plaintiff. Wood v. Roweliffe, 2 Ph. 382; 17 L. J., Ch. 83; 11 Jur. 915. And see S. C., 6 Hare, 187.

A. DOCUMENTS.

I, THE PRESENT PRACTICE.

See Ord. XXXI.

A. DISCOVERY.

1. GENERAL RULE.

Chancery Practice prevails.] — Under the Judicature Acts, the right to discovery is regulated by the rules previously existing in the court of chancery. Anderson v. Bunk of British (Olumbia, 2 Ch. D. 644; 45 L. J., Ch. 449; 35 L. T. 76; 24 W. R. 624—C. A.

As to the question discussed, viz., whether under the Judicature Act and Rules, the right to discovery is or is not more extensive than it formerly was in courts of equity; it was put thus:—The Judicature Act is an act to regulate procedure, and not to affect established rights, and if there was no right to discovery before the passing of the Judicature Act there is no right to interrogate now. On these propositions I refrain from expressing any opinion, save that refrain from expressing any opinion, save that they are stated too broadly, for there can be no in ordering affidavit of documents. See per doubt that the Judicature Act, in carrying into effect the object stated in the preamble, "the with and alter rights. It seems to me also not to be very clear that an increased power to exhibit interrogatorics and enforce discovery as to the plaintiff's title, or vice versa, is an interference with the right of the party interrogated. or is more than alteration of procedure. Lyell v. Kennedy, 8 App. Cas. 217—Per Fitzgerald (Lord).

2. ORDER.

Application for—Affidavit in Support.]—Upon an application for discovery under Ord. XXXI. r. 12, the judge has power to demand an affidavit by the party applying of his belief that the party from whom discovery is sought has documents in his possession to the discovery of which he is entitled, and it is entirely within the judge's discretion whether such an affidavit shall be made or not. Johnson v. Smith, 36 L. T. 741; 25 W. R. 539. And see Philipps v. Philipps, post, col. 702.

Grounds for-What may be Considered.]-Ord. XXXI. r. 12, was not intended entirely to alter the principles as to production of documents, but to give the court a discretion to refuse the discovery of them when there was no reasonable prospect of its being of any use. On an application for an affidavit of documents. evidence ought not to be entered into; the court will form its conclusion from the pleadings, but any other proceedings in the action as, e.g. evidence used on a former occasion, may be looked at. Downing v. Fulmouth United Soverage Board, 57 L. J., Ch. 234; 37 Ch. D. 234; 58 L. T. 296; 36 W. R. 437—C. A.

In an action to restrain a nuisance from sewerage works, the plaintiffs, after notice of trial, applied for an affidavit as to documents in the possession of the defendants relating to the matters in question in the action. The application was refused on the ground that it was not to be presumed that the defendants had docu-ments in their possession which would be material on the question whether there was a nnisance or not. The plaintiffs appealed, and gave notice to read the affidavits filed on an application for an interim injunction, which were about thirty in number. From three of these affidavits it appeared that there had been resolutions passed by the defendants bearing on the question of nuisance, and a correspondence between them and the Local Government Board on their proposing an alteration in their system of sewcrage:—Held, that the court was right in refusing the general order asked for, but that these affidavits could be looked at on the question whether there was sufficient reason to suppose that there were no documents the production of which would be of any use, and an order was made for an affidavit limited to resolutions of the defendants, and correspondence between them and the Local Government Board; that the plaintiffs ought not to have given notice to read all the affidavits, but ought to have pointed out the parts on which they meant to rely, and they were, therefore, ordered to pay the costs occasioned by the notice. Ib,

Lindley, L.J., in Wills' Trade Marks, In re, probates of such wills:—Held, that such plain-[1892] 3 Ch. 201, 207. tiff was not entitled to an order for an affidavit

Right to Discovery not Determined by.]—Semble, that Ord. XXXI. r. 20, is not to be construed so narrowly as to mean that the right to discovery or inspection is determined by the making of the common order, or that the court is by the order for discovery or inspection made in the com-mon form rendered powerless to make a subsequent order for questions of law to be determined before inspection. De Curteret v. Land Securities Co., 7 R. 16; 70 L. T. 323; 42 W. R. 104—C. A.

3. IN WHAT MATTERS.

Petition of Right.]—In a potition of right the suppliant cannot obtain a discovery of documents. Thomas v. Rep. 44 L. J., Q. B. 17; L. R. 10 Q. B. 44; 23 W. R. 345. But the Crown can obtain discovery from him. Tomline v. Rep. 48 L. J., Ex. 453; 4 Ex. D. 252; 40 L. T. 542; 27 W. R. 651—C. A.

Mandamus.]—A mandamus, the object of which is to enforce a civil right, is a proceeding in aid of which, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, a judge may grant an order for the inspection of documents by either of the litigant parties when Ambengate Ry, 17 Q. B. 957; 16 Jur. 777. See also Reg. v. London and St. Katharine's Ducks Co., 44 L. J. Q. B. 4; 31 L. T. 588; 23 W. R. 186; post, col. 799.

In Interpleader. ]-Discovery may be ordered in interpleader though there are no pleadings. Philipps v. Philipps, 40 L. T. 815; 27 W. R.

Reference to Arbitrator.]—An order was taken by consent in an action referring the action and all matters in difference to the award of an arbitrator named in the order. The order provided that the parties should produce before the arbitrator all documents in their or either of arbitrator an documents in their or eather or their custody or power relating to the matter in difference; also that the party in whose favour the award should be made should be at liberty, after the service of a copy of the award on the other party, to apply for final judgment in accordance with the award. The plaintiff having during the pendency of the arbitration applied by summons in the action under Rules of Court, 1875, Ord. XXXI. r. 12, for an affidavit of documents, the application was dismissed on the ground, (1) That in consequence of the order of reference the court had no jurisdiction to grant the application, not having beforeit "any matter in question in the action" within the meaning of the rule; and (2) That under the order the whole jurisdiction as to discovery was in the hands of the arbitrator. Penrice v. Williams, 52 L. J., Ch. 593; 23 Ch. D. 353; 48 L. T. 868; 31 W. R. 496.

Action for Penalties. ]-See post, D. III. 4.

Action for Recovery of Land. ]-A plaintiff in an action in the nature of an ejectment action claiming by a purely legal title cannot obtain discovery from the defendants unless before the Judicature Act a bill for discovery in aid of such action could have been sustained. Where, therein his statement of claim only wills and the under Ord. XXXI, rr. 11, 12, Judicature Act, tiff was not entitled to an order for an affidavit of documents in the defendant's possession, following Lyell v. Kennedy, in C. A. (20 Ch. D. 484); Daniel v. Ford, 47 L. T. 575. But Lyell v. Kennedy (20 Ch. D. 484), was reversed, 52 L. J., Ch. 385; 8 App. Cas. 217; 48 L. T. 585; 31 W. R. 618—H. L. (E.) In an action for the recovery of land the defendant may be compelled to make an affidavit of documents in his possession relating to the matter in question. Wrentmore v. Hagley, 46 L. T. 741.

Action to recover Possession of Documents. ]-Where the object of an action is to obtain delivery up of documents in the possession of the defendants, the court will not order them to be detiered up upon an interlocutory application before the defendant has put in his defence. Republic of Costa Rica v. Stronskerg, 11 Ch. D. 323; 40 L. T. 401; 27 W. R. 512—C. A.

Trespass to Several Fishery-No Affidavit in Support. - In action for trespass to a several fishery in portion of the non-tidal waters of the river S., where the the plaintiff was not a riparian proprietor, and did not claim the soil and bed of the locus in quo; the defendants in their statement of defence, upon which issue was joined, traversed the plaintiff's alleged title to a several fishery in the river; and an affidavit was made by them stating that various riparian proprietors, whom they named, had always allowed them and the public generally to fish in the river, and had always denied the existence of a several fishery therein, and that, in fact, the right of fishing in the part of the river in question had been enjoyed by the public from time immemorial. The defendants applied for discovery of documents by the plaintiff under General Order XXXI, r. 11. There was no affidavit in support of the application showing that there were documents in existence, and in the possession of the plaintiff, relating to matters in question in the action:—Held, per Palles, C.B. (Fitzgerald, B., dub.), that the nature of the property claimed raised a presumption that there were documents in existence and in the possession of the plaintiff relating to matters in question in the action; that the motion should be granted, and that the right of the defendants to the inspection or production of any such documents was a matter to be determined, not upon an application under the 11th rule, but upon an application to compel production or inspection after the affidavit as to documents had been made. Per Palles, C.B.:—As a general rule the order for discovery should not be made where there are any reasonable grounds for believing it would be illusory by reason of there being no documents in existence. But if there be prima facie evidence of the existence of documents, one party is entitled to appeal to the oath of the other as to such documents being in his possession or power. Johnson v. Smith (36 L. T. 741; 25 W. R. 589) and Healy v. Smith, (4 L. R., Ir. 72) commented on. Powell v. Heffernan, 4 L. R., Ir. 703.

Proceedings under the Companies Act. ]-When proceedings are taken under the Comfore, a plaintiff claiming possession through an panies Act, 1862, the court has jurisdiction to helr-at-law and subsequent devises had pleaded make an order for an affidavit of documents parties. National Funds Assurance Co., In re, 24 W. R. 774—C. A.

4. Who Compelled to Make.

Person Suing in Name of Another. - Where the agent of a principal resident abroad brings an action in his own name, and on a contract made with him as agent the defendant is entitled to discovery to the same extent as if the principal were a party to the action, and to have the action stayed till such discovery is made. Willis v. Baddeley, 61 L. J., Q. B. 769 : [1892] 2 Q. B. 324 : 67 L. T. 206 : 40 W. R. 577—C. A.

Goods shipped by R. & Co. having been lost at sea, the underwriters, who had insured the cargo, paid R. & Co. for a total loss, and then commenced an action against the shipowners in the name of R. & Co. to recover the value of the goods. An order having been made by consent that the plaintiffs should make an affidavit stating what documents were in their possession relating to the matters in question in the action, and a further order having been made by the master in chambers that both members of the firm of R. & Co. should put in a further and better affidavit, the solicitor of the underwriters deposed that the members of the firm of R. & Co. were abroad, and would not give any further discovery, and that the real plaintiffs had done all they could do to comply with the order :- Held, that the case must be treated as if the nominal plaintiffs on the record were suing for their own benefit, and that the making a further affidavit could not be dispensed with. Wilson v. Raffalorich, 7 Q. B. D. 553-C. A.

Party Abroad. |-The court will grant an order for discovery of documents on the owner of a foreign ship who has appeared to defend an admiralty action in rem, but will allow a reasonable time, according to the circumstances of each case, for the affidavit in answer to be prepared. The Emma, 34 L. T. 742; 24 W. R. 587. And see Wilson v. Raffalovich, supra.

Co-plaintiff. |- Discovery by way of production of documents may be allowed to a plaintiff from a co-plaintiff in cases in which there may be rights to be adjusted between them respectively. Shaw v. Smith, 56 L. J., Q. B. 174; 18 Q. B. D. 193; 56 L. T. 40; 35 W. R. 188—C. A.

Co-defendant.]—Discovery by way of production of documents may be allowed to a defendant from a co-defendant, in cases in which there may be rights to be adjusted between them respectively. Ib.

Discovery cannot be allowed to a defendant from a co-defendant with a view to show that the co-defendant and not the defendant is liable to the plaintiff, as where a defendant, sued for subsidence under the plaintiff's land, proposes to inspect the mines of a co-defendant in adjoining land. Brown v. Wathins (16 Q. B. D. 125) explained. Ib.

The plaintiff made in the same action claims against two defendants, the claim against one defendant being in respect of the alleged breach of a certain stipulation of a contract, and the claim against the other defendant being an alternative claim for negligence by him as agent in effecting a contract without such stipulation though no action was in progress between the defendants could not obtain discovery of documents in the action from the other, Ord. XXXI. r. 12, only providing for discovery between opposite parties. Brown v. Wathins, 55 L. J., Q. B. 126; 16 Q. B. D. 125; 53 L. T. 726; 34 W. R. 293.

A railway company brought an action against contractors, the contractors putting in a counterclaim with their defence, to which they made an insurance corporation defendants, and in which they alleged that the company had obtained a guarantee from the corporation which was enforceable against them, and that the company were trustees of this guarantee for the contractors, and payment of the amount thereof was claimed. The corporation put in a defence that the guarantee had been released and satisfied. and the company in reply repudiated any collusion between them and the corporation. the event of the contractors being successful in obtaining a declaration that the company were trustees of this guarantee and endeavouring to enforce the guarantee, the defence of the cor-poration would be that the company had released their liability, but this would not preclude the ease, because the contractors would reply that that release was not binding as against them. The corporation having taken out a summons for discovery under Ord. XXXI. r. 12, against the company, their co-defendants :- Held, in these circumstances, that there was "some right between these parties to be adjusted in the action." namely, whether or not the liability of the corporation under the guarantee was good, and that the case fell, therefore, within the rule. Alony and Gandia Ry. v. Greenhill, 74 L. T. 345.

Where a company is made a defendant in an action by a shareholder, on behalf of himself and the other shareholders, against the direcand the other snarehousers, against the circu-tors of the company, to recover for the com-pany damages sustained by the company in consequence of the fraud of the directors, the court has jurisdiction under Ord. XXXI. r. 12, upon the application of the plaintiff, to order the company to make discovery of documents. Spokes v. Groscenor and West-End Hotel Co., 66 L. J., Q. B. 572; [1897] 2 Q. B. 124; 76 L. T. 679; 45 W. R. 546—C. A.

One defendant may obtain an affidavit from another defendant as to the documents in his possession relating to the question in the suit. Kennedy v. Wahefeld, 30 L. J., Ch. 827; 22 L. T. 645; 18 W. R. 884.

Third Party brought in by Notice. ]-Where a third party, upon whom notice has been served by a defendant to an action, enters an appearance in the action pursuant to Ord. XIV. r. 20, R. S. C., 1876, such third party is a party within the meaning of Ord. XXXI. r. 12, and liable to the meaning of Ord. ASAA1.1.2, and more to make discovery of documents according to the terms of that rule, Mallister v. Ruchester (Bishop), 49 L. J., C. P. 443; 5 C. P. D. 194; 42 L. T. 481; 28 W. R. 584. And see Edden v. Weardale Iron and Chal. Ca., 56 L. J., Ch. 400; 35 Ch. D. 287; 56 L. T. 464; 35 W. R. 507.

Party for Purpose of Discovery.]-The court will not allow the joinder of solicitors or others as defendants against whom no further relief is as detendants against whom do interior Frier is sought beyond discovery or payment of costs. Burstall v. Beyfus, 53 L. J., Ch. 565; 26 Ch. D. 35; 50 L. T. 542; 32 W. R. 418—C. A.

In an action against a corporation, where an contrary to instructions :—Held, that one of such officer of the corporation against whom no relief is claimed is made a defendant for the purpose of discover; — Held, that, inasmuch as under Ord. XXXI. r. 5, such discovery could be obtained by an ovder to deliver to him interrogatories, he was improperly joined as a defendant, and that his name should be struck out. B74son v. Church, 9 Ch. D. 552; 39 L. T. 413; 25 W. R. 733.

Stranger to Action.]—In an action upon a policy of marthe insurance, the defendant is not entitled to have the proceedings stayed until the plaintiff has obtained an affidavit of documents from a person who is not a party to the action and is not within the jurisdiction of the court, and is not under the plaintiff southol; and it is not material that the plaintiff security; and it is not material that the plaintiff security; and it is not material that the plaintiff derives his title to the subject-matter of insurance through the person from whom the affidavit is sought. Fraser v. Furrows, 46 L. J., Q. B. 501; 2 Q. B. D. 624.

The court has no jurisdiction to make an order for discovery against persons not parties to the action. Burchard v. Macfarlane, 60 L.J., Q B. 587; [1891] 2 Q. B. 241; 65 L. T. 282; 39 W. R. 694.

The Crown.]—The Crown has the same right of discovery against a subject as one subject has against another, but cannot be compelled to give discovery to a subject. Att.-Gen. v. Neucoattrappa.-Type Corporation, 66 L. J., Q. B. 593; [1887] 2 Q. B. 594; T7 L. T. 203.—C. A. The fact that on an information the defendence of the control of

The fact that on an information the defendants answer has not been excepted to within six weeks does not preclude the Crown from obtaining discovery in the usual way. Ib.

Foreign States.]—A foreign prince who sues a court of law in this country, becomes subject, as to all matters connected with that suit, to the jurisdiction of the courts of equity; and consequently is bound to give a discovery necessary to the plaintiffs defence at law. Rottschild v. Porrhyal (Queen), 3 Y. & Coll. 594.

A bill for a discovery in aid of a defence at an law cannot be sustained against a person for whose benefit the action is brought, if he is no IT party to the record at law, and his name does not appear thereon. Purkaya (Queuy), v. Glym, Swarea, I. Y. & Coll. 644; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 49. And see Glyn v. Sourea, 3 Myl. & K. 450.

A foreign prince, admitted to sue in the name of an agent in a court of law in this country, cannot therefore be called upon to answer a bill for a discovery, in aid of the defence at law. Th.

The processings in an original sait by a foreign government were stayed until the plain-tiff in that sait had given the name or names of persons who could be made defondant or defendants in a cross-suit by the same parties against the foreign government, for the purpose of making upon oath the discovery required. Peru (Republic) v. Wepuelia, 44 L. J., Ch. S83; L. R. 20 Eq. 140; 32 L. T. 426; 23 W. R. 776.

A sovereign power or corporate body, whether amenable to the jurisdiction of the court or not, and whether capable of deposing on earl or not, if it commences proceedings for relief in a court of equity, must conform to the practice and regulations for the administration of justice laid down by the court. Prileaw v. United States, L. R. 2 Eg. 689 ; 41 L. T. 700.

The United States of America, saing in a court of this country, and thereby submitting themselves to the jurisliction, stand in the same position as a foreign sovereign, and can only obtain relief subject to the control of the court in which they sue, and pursant to its rules of practice; according to which every person sued in this court, whether by an individual, by a foreign sovereign, or by a corporate body, is entitled to discovery upon outh touching the matters upon which is such, and to file a cross-full the search discovery upon outh to the a cross-full the search discovery upon outh to the a cross-full the search discovery upon outh to the a cross-full the search discovery.

bill for such discovery. Ib. Where, therefore, the United States commenced proceedings against British subjects for relief with respect to the sale of certain shipments of cotton, and they had filed a cross-bill praying discovery against the United States by its Preadent, and the defendants to the cross-bill had not filed any answer:—Held, that the proceedings in the original suit should be stayed until the defendants in the cross-suit had put in a sufficient answer to the cross-suil of dis-

Held, also, that the President was improperly made a defendant. Ib.

Demurrer allowed to a bill filed by the United States of America, on the ground that a foreign savereign state is not entitled to sue in the courts of equity in this country without putting forward some public officer wite cau be called upon to give discovery upon a cross-bill. But, on appeal, held, that the owner of property is the only proper planniff in a suit for its recovery, whether such owner is an individual or a sovereign state; and that it is no ground of demurrer to a bill filed by a foreign republic in its own name simply, that discovery cannot be compelled from it on a cross-bill. Ditack States of America v. Waquer, 36 L. J., Ch. 62½; 16 L. T. 464; 15 W. R. 1020. Reversing L. R. L. T. 645; 15 W. R. 1020. Reversing L. R.

3 Eq. 724.
Semble, that a defendant wishing to obtain discovery should, after filing a cross-bill, apply that the foreign state may name some person from whom the discovery may be obtained, and that the court would stay proceedings in the original suit to enforce such discovery.

A defendant to a suit brought by a sovereign state or corporation has no right to a stay of proceedings in the original suit until a person selected by him for the purpose of discovery, and made a co-defendant to a cross-suit, appears to such cross-suit. Costa Rica (Republic) v. Erlanger, 45 L. J., Ch. 145; 1 Ch. D. 171; 33 L. T. 632; 24 W. R. 151—C. A.

Semble, that where a defendant has a right to discovery, the court will stay proceedings in a suit brought by a sovereign state or corporation until such state or corporation has bond fide named a proper person to give the discovery sought for. Ib.

When a bill is filed by a republican government, the defendant, having put in a sufficient answer, is entitled to the usual affidavit of documents, to be made by one or more of the ministers or officers of the government. Libera (Lepublic) v. Imperial Bank, 42 L. J., Ch. 574; L. R. 16 Eq. 179.

Husband and Wife.]—Where hisband and wife (suing in respect of her separate estate without a next friend) are co-plaintiffs, a defendant is entitled to an order for an affidavit of documents by them in the same form as against any other co-plaintiffs, that is to say, "whether they or either of them . . . . in the possession of them or either of them." See Fendall v. O'Connell, 54 L. J., Ch. 756; 29 Ch. D. 899; 33 W. R. 619. And see Hartley v. Owen, 34 L. T. 752.

Infant.]—An infant party to an action cannot be compelled to make discovery of documents. Curtis v. Mundy, [1892] 2 Q. B. 178; 40 W. R. ordered to make an affidavit in reference to documents in their possession relating to the matters in the suit was refused. Hardwick v. Wright, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 297: 12 L. T. 138: 13 W. R.

A motion by the defendant that the next friend of the jufant plaintiff might be ordered to make an affidavit in reference to documents in his possession relating to matters in the suit, was granted. Crowe v. Bank of Ireland, 19 W. R. 910; Ir. R. 5 Eq. 578-C. A

When plaintiffs were infants suing by their next friend, the court made an order directing the production of documents under the Chancery (Ireland) Act. 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 44), on the outh of the next friend. Ib.

Form of order in such a case.

Where a plaintiff of unsound mind sues by a next friend, the defendant is entitled to an affidavit of documents made by the next friend, or by some one acquainted with the facts. Higginson v. Hall, 48 L. J., Ch. 250; 10 Ch. D. 235; 39 L. T. 603; 27 W. R. 469.

The next friend of an infant plaintiff is not "party to the action" within the meaning of the Rules of Court, 1875, Ord. XXXI, r. 12, and therefore cannot be compelled to make discovery as to documents in his possession or power re-lating to the matters in question in the action. Corsellis, In re. Lauton v. Elwes, 52 L. J., Ch. 899; 48 L. T. 425; 31 W. R. 414. And see Scott v. Consolidated Bank, W. N. (1893) 56.

The court refused either to order the next friend of an infant plaintiff to make an affidavit as to documents, or stay the action till he made as to tocuments, or stay the action this he made such affidavit. Higginson v. Hall, (supra), dissented from. Dyke v. Stephens, 55 L. J., Ch. 41; 30 Ch. D. 189; 53 L. T. 561; 33 W. R.

5. AT WHAT TIME.

Next Friend.]—A motion by a defendant that the next friend of the plaintiff, and that the has a county court and afterwards transferred to ordered to make an atthetic from the recovery of land commenced by plaint in band of the plaintiff (co-defendant), might be the chancery division of the latest transferred to ordered to make an atthetic from the chancery division of the latest transferred to ceedings after transfer will be conducted according to the practice of the high court, so that the plaintiff is not entitled to discovery and production until he has delivered his statement of claim in the action. Davies v. Williams, 49 L. J., Ch. 352; 13 Ch. D. 550; 42 L. T. 469; 28 W. R. 223.

A plaintiff will not in general be allowed production from a defendant until he has delivered a statement of claim. Cashin v. Craddock, 2 Ch. D. 140 : 34 L. T. 52.

The court will not, as a general rule, make an order for discovery of documents under Ord. XXXI. r. 12, before the plaintiff has delivered his statement of claim. In order to support an application for such an order in an action of ejectment, the plaintiff's affidavits must shew some matter on which to found a title to turn the defendant out of possession. But, semble, that in some eases, as in interpleader, discovery may be ordered although there are no pleadings. Philipps v. Philipps, 40 L. T. 815; 27 W. R.

Before Defence. |-- In an action for redemption against a mortgagee in possession, an order for production of documents made before the defence was delivered, and without any special case for production being made was affirmed. Union Bank of London v. Manby, 49 L. J., Ch. 106; 13 Ch. D. 239; 41 L. T. 393; 28 W. R. 23—

Although a plaintiff is not entitled, as a matter of right, to discovery from the defendant, immediately after delivery of his statement of claim, and the court has the power to decline to make an order for discovery at that stage, unless special reasons are given, shewing the necessity for it at that time, nevertheless in an action in which there can be no dispute as to what the "matters in question" are, the plaintiff is entitled to discovery before the statement of defence is delivered. Huncock v. Guerin (4 Ex. Hancock v. Guerin (4 Ex. D. 3) considered. Ib.

Formerly under no circumstances was a defendant entitled to an order for production of documents by the plaintiff before he had put in his answer. Smith v Lay, Fairbairn v. Lay, 22

L. T. 785: 18 W. R. 915.

The defendants, before putting in their statement of defence, moved for the production by the plaintiffs of the conveyance under which they held their land, in order to ascertain whether it contained a reservation of minerals :-Held., that, the land having been conveyed to the plaintiffs in fee-simple, they were prima facieentitled to the land down to the centre of the earth, and unless the defendants could shew that they were not so entitled the plaintiffs could not be compelled to produce their title deeds. Egre-mont Burial Board v. Egremont Iron Ore Co.,

28 W. R. 594.

A plaintiff, after delivering a statement of is not, as a general rule, entitled. under Ord, XXXI. r. 12, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, to an order for discovery of documents before a statement of defence is delivered bebefore a statement of defence is characteristic cause until that happens it is impossible to say what the matters "in question in the action" are. Hancock v. Guerin. 4 Ex. D. 3; 27 W. R. S. P., Cleary v. Fitzgerald, 1 L. R., Ir. 112. 492.

A defendant may obtain discovery of documents, under Ord. XXXI, r. 11, before a statement of defence has been delivered, when such discovery is necessary for the purpose of ascertaining what damage the plaintiff has actually suffered, with a view to paying mouey into court with the defence. Megaw v. M. Diarmid, 10

L. R., Ir. 376. The court has discretionary power to make an order for discovery and production of documents at any time after the writ is issued, although the issues have not been defined by the pleadings. The statement of claim in an action was delivered on the 1st March, and on the 16th April the plaintiff obtained an order for discovery and production of documents, no objection being taken on the part of the defendant that the defence had not been delivered. The defence was delivered on the 2nd May, and on the 4th May the defendant served notice of motion to discharge the order, the objection being that the order when made was irregular, the matter in question in the action not being then so defined as to shew what documents were material :-Held, that the order was within the jurisdiction of the court, and ought not to be disturbed.

Mellor v. Thompson, 49 L. T. 222—C. A.

The court has a discretion in ordering discovery, and there is no absolute rule that a defendant should not be ordered to make an affidavit of documents before the delivery of a defence. Edelston v. Russell, 57 L. T. 927.

The court will as a rule refuse discovery of documents before the defence is delivered, notwithstanding the wide expressions contained in Ord. XXXI. r. 14. British and Foreign Contract Co. v. Wright, 32 W. R. 413.

Document referred to in Pleadings. ]-A plainon which his title depended and declined to produce it to the defendant before statement of defence was put in, was held to have "sufficient cause for not complying with the notice" to produce under Ord. XXXI, r. 14 of the Rules of Court, 1875. Webster v. Whereall, 49 L. J., Ch. 704; 15 Ch. D. 120; 42 L. T. 868; 28 W. R. 951.

The plaintiff by his statement of claim referred to certain entries in his own books, to two letters written to himself, and to two letters written by himself. The defendant, as soon as the statement of claim was delivered, applied for production of the books, of the letters written to the plaintiff, and of copies of the letters written by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's solicitors refused to produce any of them, as the defendant had not delivered statement of defence. The defendant then applied to the court for production :- Held, by Chitty, J., that production ought not to be ordered till a statement of defence had been delivered. But held, on appeal, that production must be ordered at once of documents referred.

49 L. J., Ch. 623; 14 Ch. D. 158; 42 L. T. 179; against it can be shewn, and that the plaintiff must produce his books, with the usual liberty to seal up the parts other than the entries, and must also produce the letters written to himself, but that he could not be ordered to produce copies of letters written by himself, there being no reference to such copies in the statement of claim. Webster v. Whewall (15 Ch. D. 120) observed upon. Quilter v. Heatly, 23 Ch. D. 42; 48 L. T. 373; 31 W. R. 331—C. A.

This rule applies not only as between the plaintiff and the defendant but as between codefendants. Ib.

- Action for Delivery up of Documents.] Where the object of an action is to obtain delivery up of documents in the possession of the defendants, the court will not order them to be delivered up upon an interlocutory application before the defendant has put in his defence. Costa Rica (Republic) v. Strousberg, 11 Ch. D. 323 ; 27 W. R. 512 ; 40 L. T. 401-C. A.

Before Particulars given. - The plaintiffs employed the defendants to purchase goods, as their agents, at the lowest possible prices. plaintiffs sued for an account, and in their statement of claim alleged that the defendants had purchased goods at prices higher than the current prices, and had secretly received from the vendors allowances or commissions. charges against the defendants were stated in general terms, no particulars being mentioned. The defendants denied the charges, and pleaded a settled account. The plaintiffs applied for production of documents :- Held, by Cotton, L.J. (diss., Fry, L.J.), that the plaintiffs were not bound to give particulars of fruud under orl. XIX. r. 6. before obtaining discovery of documents. Whyte v. Ahrens, 54 L. J., Ch. 145, 26 Ch. D. 717; 50 L. T. 344; 32 W. R. 649—C. A. Held, by Fry, L.J., that the allegations of frand in the pleadings not being sufficient to enable the plaintiffs to open a settled account, discovery ought to be refused until the allegations had been made sufficient. 1b.

Precedence of Orders. ]-There is no rule as to the class of cases in which the delivery of par-ticulars should be ordered before discovery, or discovery be ordered before the delivery of par-ticulars. The order of the judge or court will depend upon the circumstances of each case. Waynes Merthyr Co. v. Radford, 65 L. J., Ch. 140; [1896] I Ch. 29; 73 L. T. 624; 44 W. R. 103

In an action by a colliery company against coal merchants for fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of the defendants in selling coal falsely purporting to be the plaintiffs' coal, the plaintiffs by their statement of claim pleaded two particular instances of fraud, and also alleged generally divers other instances. defendants admitted the two particular instances as occurring through the fraud of a clerk, but offered to make an affidavit that they knew of no other instances :-- Held, that as the plaintiffs had made a substantial case, and the defendants had the means of ascertaining from their books whether further frands had been committed, the plaintiffs were entitled to discovery before delivering particulars. Ib.

After some Evidence taken-Application to to in the pleadings, unless some special reason Remove Trade Mark-Trade Labels-Limited Order.]—W. opposed an application by D. to An affidavit of documents made pursuant to register a trade mark under the Patents, Designs, Rules of the Supreme Court, 1875, Ord. The application ir. 12, is conclusive against the party seeking was referred by the Board of Trade to the court. discovery, unless it can be shown either from the D. also applied to remove W.'s trade mark from the register. These applications were ordered to be heard together. After some of the evidence had been taken. D. applied for an order against W. to produce all documents in his possession or relating to the matters in question :-Held, by the court below that it would be oppressive in such a case to compel such discovery as would be ordered in an ordinary action, and that the discovery to be enforced in that class of applications must depend on the particular circumstances of each case. A limited order for discovery was therefore made, under which W. would not in the case of labels be bound to mention all the labels constituting a class, but that it should suffice as regarded each class to mention a specimen or specimens fairly representative of the whole. But held on appeal that the order was oppressive at that stage of the proceedings, and that it must be discharged without prejudice to any order as to production of documents at the trial. When Appeal pending. - When a plaintiff, in an action for the infringement of a patent, has obtained the judgment of the court, he is entitled to an inspection of the defendant's books and to an account, although an appeal may be pending from that judgment. Saxby v. Easterbrook, 41 L. J., Ex. 113; L. R. 7 Ex. 207; 26 L. T. 439; 20 W. R. 751.

6. THE AFFIDAVIT OF DOCUMENTS.

Test of Eufficiency.]-In equity, the test whether the form of sworn discovery is proper is: Can a definite issue for perjury be put to a jury, assuming the answer to be false? v. Daniell, 30 L. T. 357; 22 W. R. 595.

When Conclusive. ]-The defendants in an affidavit of documents made pursuant to Ord. XXXI. r. 12, stated as follows :- "We have in our possession or power certain documents numbered 101 to 110 inclusive, which are tied up in a bundle marked with the letter A., and initialled by the deponent," C. G.; "the said domments relate solely to the case of the defendants, and anot to the case of the plaintiff, nor do they tend to support it, and they do not, to the best of our knowledge, information, and belief, contain any-thing impeaching the case of the said defendants. wherefore we object to produce the same, and say they are privileged from production." A judge at chambers and the divisional court had refused to order, under Ord. XXXI. r. 11, the production of the documents which the defendants so objected to produce :- Held, that the affidavit sufficiently described such documents for the purpose of identification, and that as the affidavit was conclusive against the plaintiff seeking inspection, the judge and the divisional court rightly refused to order their production. referred to, or from an admission in the pleading of the party swearing the affidavit, that other documents exist in his possession or power which are material and relevant to the action. In any of these instances, but not otherwise, a further affidavit may be ordered. Jones v. Monte Video Gas Co., 49 L. J., Q. B. 627; 5 Q. B. D. 556; 42 L. T. 639; 28 W. R. 758—C. A.

When an affidavit has been made in answer to an order for discovery of documents, a further order will not be granted unless there are facts or admissions shewing that documents are withheld. Welsh Steam Coul Collieries v. Gushell, 36 L. T. 352—C. A.

30 L. 1. 302—U. A. It is not enough for the party applying for further discovery to swear to a belief that docu-ments are in the other party's possession. Ib. A defendant obtained an order for discovery of documents. The liquidator of the company made an affidavit, setting out certain documents, and stating that he had no others in his possession. The defendant applied for a further order for discovery on an affidavit, stating a belief that the liquidator had other documents :- Held, that the liquidator's affidavit was sufficient, and the defendant was not entitled to a further order. Ib.

The court will order a further affidavit as to documents to be made by a defendant, if it is satisfied from the admissions in the defendant's answer that material documents not mentioned in his affidavit may be in his possession, even although the answer does not in express terms atthough the airwer does not in express terms admit the existence of such documents. Sault v. Browne, L. B. 17 Eq. 402.

When a defendant by his answer set out a long list of customers of a business carried on by him, but did not mention in his affidavit as to documents any books relating to such business :-Held, that the defendant must make a further affidavit. Ib.

Where a party claims privilege against the production of documents, on the ground that they support his own title, and do not relate to that of his opponent, his affidavit must be taken as conclusive, unless the court can see from the nature of the ease or of the documents, that the party has mismiderstood the effect of the documents. Att.-Gen. v. Emerson (10 Q. B. D. 191) distinguished. Ruberts v. Oppenheim, 53 L. J., Ch. 1148; 26 Ch. D. 724; 50 L. T. 729: 32 W. R. 654 -C. A.

The defendants in an affidavit of documents. made pursuant to Ord. XXXI. r. 12, disclosed a copy of an extract from a letter written by a person not a party to the action to one of the directors of the defendant company. The defendants refused to produce the same on the ground that it was a confidential letter from a person not a party to the action, and on a summons to inspect being taken out, filed an affidavit to the effect that the document related only to their case, and did not tend in any way to support the plaintiffs', or impeach their own case :- Held. that as there was nothing in the document itself to disclose the matter of its contents, the affidavit of the defendants was conclusive, and inspection must be refused. Att.-Gen. v. Emerson (10 Q. B. D. 191); distinguished. Bulman v. Young, 49 L.T. 736; 31 W.R. 766.

Power of the Court to disregard the Affidavit.] The defendant in an affidavit of documents objected to produce certain documents described in a schedule, on the ground that they related solely to the defence of his title to the property in question in the action, and were communications between himself and his solicitors, their Loudon agents, and his counsel, in reference to the defence of his title aforesaid, and prepared or procured for the purposes, and in contemplation of such defence. The description of some of the documents as given in the schedule appeared not to agree with the above claim of privilege :- Held, that the defendant must make a further and better affidavit. Lyell v. Kennedy, 52 L. J., Ch. 385; 8 App. Cas. 217; 48 L. T. 585; 31 W. R. -H. L. (E.)

Although a defendant to an action swears that certain documents, which are in his possession. and are material to the matter in issue, form and support his own title, and do not contain anything which could form or support the plain-tiff's case or impeach the defence, the court will not act on such oath (at least in proceedings excepted by Ord, LXII, from the rules under the Judicature Act, 1875), but will order such doen-ments to be produced, if from the whole of the defendant's answer, or from the description of the documents given by the defendant, the court is reasonably certain that the defendant has erroneously represented or misconceived the nature of such documents. Att.-Gen.v. Emerson, 52 L. J., Q. B. 67; 10 Q. B. D. 191; 48 L.T. 18; 31 W. R. 191—C. A.

Documents are material to the matters in question in the action within the meaning of Ord. XXXI. r. 12, if it is not unreasonable to suppose that they may contain information directly or indirectly enabling the party seeking discovery, either to advance his own case, or to damage the case of his adversary. The plaintiff company sued the defendant company for breach of contract ; the defence to the action was that no contract had been concluded, and that only negotiations had taken place between the parties. The defendants having obtained an order for an affidavit of documents, the plaintiffs set out amongst others their minute-book, which referred to certain documents and letters; the entries as to these documents and letters were of a date subsequent to the date of the alleged breach of contract; the documents and letters were not set out by the plaintiffs in their affi-dayit. The defendants claimed a further and better affidavit from the plaintiffs, setting out the documents and letters above mentioned, on the ground that they might shew that after the alleged breach the parties were still negotiating, and might tend to disprove the plaintiffs' allegation that a contract had been concluded :- Held, that the plaintiffs were bound to make a further affidavit of documents. Compagnic Financière du Pacifique v. Perurian Guano Co., 52 L. J., Q. B. 181; 11 Q. B. D. 55; 48 L. T. 22; 31 W. R. 395 -C. A.

Inconsistency.]-When an affidavit of documents of the plaintiff is not inconsistent with dence, if the defendants set forth extracts of require a further affidavit. Att.-Gen. v. Castle-

In a snit to restrain a corporation from permitting a river, which flowed through the relator's land, to be polluted, he made the usual affidavit of documents. In the course of the proceedings questions were raised as to his title to certain lands, and his agent filed an affidavit stating that he had in his possession rent-books and a deed of exchange which shewed the title to the lands in question. Upon a summons by the defendants that the plaintiff be ordered to file a full and sufficient affidavit, stating whether he had in his possession any other documents than those mentioned in his affidavit, particularly the rent-books and deed of exchange :- Held, that as there was no inconsistency on the face of the plaintiff's affidavit, the defendants were not entitled to any further affidavit of documents. Ib.

Unless the answer of a defendant as to the documents in his possession or power is inconsistent with the original affidavit made by him. he will not be required to make a further affidavit as to them. Westminster Brymbo Coal and Cohe Co. v. Cluyton, 3 N. R. 111; 9 L. T. 534; 12 W. R. 123.

But where there is inconsistency, the court will require a further affidavit as to particular documents inquired after. Ib.

A defendant, who has made an affidavit as to documents in his possession, may be required, under special circumstances, to make a further affidavit as to documents. Noel v. Noel, I De G. J. & Sm. 468; 2 N. R. 294; 32 L. J., Ch. 676; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 589; 8 L. T. 555; 11 W. R.

Where a case is made out, raising a reasonable suspicion that a defendant who has made an affidavit as to documents has in his possession other documents relating to the matters in onestion, and not disclosed by the first affidavit, the court may order him to make a further affidavit, although the first is sufficient in point of form.

A defendant who had filed an affidavit as to documents was ordered to file a further affidavit. After this order had been made, but before any further affidavit had been filed, he applied for an affidavit as to documents in the possession of the plaintiffs, the time for excepting to his answer having expired, and the plaintiffs were ordered to make such affidavit. Semble, that this order was correct. Ib.

A plaintiff having reasons to believe that a defendant has in his possession a particular class of documents not included in the schedule to his affidavit as to documents, may, by summons, require him to state on eath whether he has or ever had in his possession any and what documents coming within the class referred to. Willett v. Thiselton, 1 N. R. 42.

Upon a motion for discovery and inspection of documents, grounded on a defendant's answer, the court is not at liberty to disregard the statements in the answer, as to parts of the documents which are disclosed, however suspicious those statements may be; but if they are inconsistent with each other, the court will adopt the statement which is most favourable to the plaintiff; and if such parts of the documents as are disclosed contradict the answer as to the other parts. Bowes v. Fernie, 3 Myl. & C. 632.

Prolixity.]-An affidavit of documents unany material part of the suit, the court will not necessarily prolix, was ordered on motion to be

Although there is no rule of court specially giving power to the court to take pleadings or affidavits off the file for prolixity, yet the court has an inherent power to do so in order to prevent its records from being made the instruments of oppression. Where, however, an affidavit of documents was of oppressive length, but it appeared to the court that delay and expense would be caused by filing a fresh one, the court permitted it to remain on the file, but ordered the party filing it to pay the costs of it. Hill v. Hart-Davis, 53 L. J., Ch. 1012; 26 Ch. D. 470; 51 L. T. 279-C. A.

"Never have had."]—The omission of the words "and never have had" from an affidavit of documents is in itself a sufficient reason for ordering a further and better affidavit. Wagstuffe v. Anderson, 39 L. T. 332. See Jones v. Monte Video Gas Co., ante, col. 706.

"In possession of my Solicitor or Agent." Where, in an affidavit made by a defendant, on an order for production of documents, the words "or in possession, custody, or power of my solicitor or agent," are omitted, the court will not hold such affidavit insufficient, if a satisfactory reason is given for such omission, and will hold that it is a satisfactory reason that an exception involving documents in the hands of the defendant's solicitor has been overruled; the documents, such as books, diaries, &c., in the hands of a solicitor, not being documents of the client, although they may be liable to be produced. Woodhatch v. Freeland, 11 W. R. 398.

An affidavit as to documents should in terms negative possession by an agent. Ledwidge v. Mayne, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 463.

By Husband and Wife—Form,]—Where husband and wife were co-plaintiffs but had different interests, viz. successive life interests, and an order for an affidavit of documents was made against them in the form usual against co-plaintiffs, viz. "whether they or either of them . . . in the possession of them or either of them, and they put in an affidavit "we have not in our . . . we have not in our," the affidavit was held insufficient as not being in compliance with the order. Fendall v. O'Connell, 54 L. J., Ch. 756; 29 Ch. D. 899; 52 L. T. 553; 33 W. R. 15—C. A.

Omission of Documents in Custody of Solicitor. ]-Trustees in receipt of the rents and profits of real estate allowed them to be received by their solicitors, and all the accounts relating to them were kept by the solicitors in their general professional account books. The solicitors were also solicitors of the trustees in the suit. Upon a summons for the production of documents, the trustees, in making the usual affidavit as to what documents were in their possession, &c., or "in the possession, power, or custody of their solicitors," omitted to insert these books; upon adjourned summons as to the sufficiency of the affidavit :- Held, that these books were not andavit:—ricat that these books were not within the terms of the order for production Eglinton (Early v. Lumb, 35 L. J., Ch. 113; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 45; 13 L. T. 698; 14 W. R. 170.

Bundles.] — Where the documents of which a defendant is required to set forth a list are numerous, it is not necessary for him to specify each of them, but it is sufficient for him to describe them so as to enable the plaintiff to move for them; as, for instance, to say that they are contained in bundles or hogsheads, scaled up and marked A, B, &c. Christian v. Taylor, 11 Sim. 401; 10 L. J., Ch. 145.

The court will not order the production of a bundle of documents. Nicholl v. Jones, 2 H. & M. 588; 5 N. R. 361; 13 W. R. 451.

The plaintiff having obtained an order for the discovery of documents, the defendant, in his affidavit, objected to produce "certain documents, letters, and correspondence, which have passed between my legal advisers and myself, passed detween my legal acrisers and myself, and "erratain instructions to and opinions of counsel," which "are numbered 50 to 76 inclusive, and are tied up in a bundle marked with the letter A, and initialled by me":-Held, that the documents were sufficiently described, and that the plaintiff could not be compelled to further identify them. Tuylor v. Batten, 48 L. J., Q. B. 72; 4 Q. B. D. 85; 39 L. T. 408; 27 W. R. 106.

"Bundles of letters" is not a sufficient description of correspondence in an affidavit of documents. Hamilton v. Nott, 42 L. J., Ch. 512; L. R. 16 Eq. 112.

Letters may be described in an affidavit of documents by bundles, with sufficient references for identification. Walker v. Poole, 51 L. J., Ch. 840; 21 Ch. D. 835.

A defendant was in possession of real estate to which the plaintiff claimed to be entitled as heirat-law of his mother. The plaintiff filed a bill for discovery and production of documents in support of the defendant's title. The defendant, by her answer, stated her belief that a deed had been excented, of which she set out the dates, parties, and effect, whereby her father became seised absolutely of the property. She was the universal devisee of her father. She also filed an affidavit in support of her title, to which she appended a list of documents, and among them was "a bundle of deeds and papers relating exclusively to the title of me the above-named defendant to the premises mentioned and referred to in the plaintiff's bill." The plaintiff took out a summons for a further affidavit of documents :-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to know whether the above-mentioned deed was in the defendant's possession, and to a further affidavit containing a list of each of the documents relating to her title. Fortesoue v. Fortesoue, 34 L. T. 847; 24 W. R. 945.

An affidavit of documents had been filed setting out the numbers and the dates, but not the parties to title-deeds, and a summons was taken out to have the names of the parties added :-Held, that as the deeds were privileged the courtwould not order the names of the parties to the deeds to be set out. Taylor v. Oliver, 45 L. J., Ch. 774; 34 L. T. 902.

When discovery of documents is made it is not enough to make them up in bundles and number the bundles, but the documents in the bundles must be described, and each document must be marked or numbered specially, so that any party to documents should refer to the documents in requiring a particular document may call for it,

An affidavit of documents is sufficient which states that the deponent has in his possession or power "certain documents" numbered 1 to 26 inclusive, which are tied up in a bundle marked "A," and initialled by him; the documents being sufficiently described to enable the court, if it thought fit, to enforce production. Tuylor v. Butten (supra) followed. Budden v. Wilkinson, 63 L. J., Q. B. 32; [1893] 2 Q. B. 432; 4 R. 525; 69 L. T. 427; 41 W. R. 657—C. A.

Verifying Privilege in.]—An affidavit as to documents by a party who objects to produce them is insufficient, if it merely states "that the documents are privileged:" it ought to state and verify the facts upon which the objection is grounded. Gardner v. Irvin, 48 L. J., Ex. 223; 4 Ex. D. 49; 40 L. T. 35; 27 W. R. 442—C. A.

Documents passing between the defendants or their agents and their solicitor ante litem motam, and stated in an affidavit as to documents to be "confidential communications between solicitor and client with reference to matters which are now in question in this cause," are described sufficiently to protect them from production. Macfarlane v. Rolt, 41 L. J., Ch. 649; L. R. 14 Eq. 580; 27 L. T. 305; 20 W. R. 945.

Copies of letters and telegrams sent by clients to their solicitors ante litem motam, are privileged from production. Ib.

An affidavit of the plaintiff objecting to produce certain documents on the ground that they were "privileged as communications between herself and her solicitor" was insufficient in that it did not shew the communications to be of a pro-fessional and confidential character. O'Shea v. Wood, 60 L. J., P. 83; [1891] P. 286; 65 L. T. 30—C. A. Sec also Webb v. East, 49 L. J., Ex. 250; 5 Ex. D. 23; 41 L. T. 715; 28 W. R. 336-C. A. And Westinghouse v. Midland Ry., 48 L. T. 462-C. A.

- Shorthand Notes in previous Action. An action having been commenced to determine whether the defendant had or had not executed a certain agreement, the defendant, while the action was pending, commenced an action against other persons, whom he charged with a conspiracy to defraud him, and to utter the agreement as binding upon him, knowing it to be a forgery. After the commencement of the second action, the defendant caused shorthand notes to be taken of the evidence, speeches, and summing-up at the trial of the first action, as he deposed, for the purpose ["amongst others"], of his case in the second action :- Held, upon the above facts, that the shorthand notes were privileged from inspection in the second action, and that the affidavit need not shew that the notes came into existence exclusively for the purposes of such action. Nordon v. Defries, 51 L. J., Q. B. 415; 8 Q. B. D. 508; 30 W. R. 612; 46 J. P. 566.

— Documents relating solely to Case of Party claiming Privilege.]—Privilege was claimed in an aftidavit of documents on the ground that the documents related solely to the title or case of the plaintiff, and not to the case of the defendant, nor did they tend to support it :- Held, sufficient ; that the fact that the affidavit stated that the documents related to the "case" as well as to the "title" of the plaintiff, but omitted to state that the documents Assurance Co. v. Gilbert, 64 L. J., Q. B. 578;

Materiality. ]-The plaintiffs in a suit in which their title to a piece of land was in issue, made an affidavit of documents refusing to produce certain documents as being immaterial to the defendant's case. But amougst the documents produced was one of a kind similar to those sought to be protected, and this one contained entries throwing a doubt upon the accuracy of the allegation in the plaintiffs' affidavits, that the documents sought to be protected were immaterial: -Held, that they must make a further affidavit. Hastings Corporation v. Ivall, 42 L. J., Ch. 883;

The defendants who, by their answer, admitted that U. & Co. had acted as their solicitors till 17th October, 1865, in the schedule to their affidavit as to documents, set down certain correspondence between U. & Co., and their agents in Paris, of the 19th, 20th, and 21st of October, and in their affidavit denied that they had any other documents relating to the matters in onestion :- Held, that the correspondence bore strong internal evidence of being written when U. & Co. were not acting for the defendants, and that there was no such ground of suspicion disclosed as to entitle the plaintiffs to a further affidavit. Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles v. Masterman, 29 L. T. 559; 22 W. R. 66—L.JJ.

In a suit in which the genuineness of the signature of a testator to a document was one of the issues to be tried, the defendant was ordered to produce on affidavit any cheques in his possession signed by the testator between specified dates. The defendant produced a great number of cheques, stating in his affidavit that they were all the cheques in his possession signed by the testator, but that he had other cheques drawn on the testator's bankers, which he did not produce because they were forgeries :- Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to any further particulars, or to production of the cheques alleged to be forged. Wilson v. Thornbury, 43 L. J., Ch. 356; L. R. 17 Eq. 517; 22 W. R. 509.

He was then examined by the plaintiffs, ex parte, on their behalf, before the examiner; and in the course of such examination deposed to the possession of certain documents not mentioned in his affidavit. Upon summons by the plaintiffs, that the company might be ordered to make a further affidavit accounting for the documents referred to by the secretary in his examination:—Held, that the application was irregular, and summons dismissed with costs. Further Discovery as to Particular Docu-ment.]—A plaintiff, seeking from a defendant who has made the ordinary affidavit as to documents, further discovery as to a particular document, cannot obtain, on summons, an order for a further affidavit, but must amend his bill and specify the document in question. Thorp v. Sutcliffe, 39 L. J., Ch. 712. But see now R. S. C., Ord. XXXI, r. 194.

B., I. 6 (post, col. 810).

When a defendant, after answer, has obtained an affidavit as to documents in the common form, if he finds that the inquiry in the common form is not sufficiently pointed to enable him to obtain discovery as to specific matters, his proper course is to file a concise statement of the specific matters, with respect to which he seeks discovery, with interrogatories, which it will be the duty of the plaintiff to answer fully; and it will be no answer to the defendant to say that some of the matters given in the specific statement were comprised in, or that they were all referred to in the answer, and that the first affidavit was sufficient. Newall v. Telegraph Construction Co., L. R. 2 Eq. 756; 14 W. R. 914.

A defendant, having filed a concise statement. with interrogatories, under the above circumstances, is not entitled, before the answer has come in, to take out a further summons for an affidavit of documents in the same special form as that in which he has interrogated; and such a summons will be dismissed as unnecessary. Ib.

Lost Documents. ]-A defendant, in his first answer, stated that certain papers in another suit referred to in the bill were in the possession of his solicitor, and being asked by the amended bill to set forth a schedule thereof, he stated that his solicitor had made diligent search for them, but they could not be found, having been misplaced or mislaid in the solicitor's office, and that therefore he could not set forth a schedule of them :-Held, that the answer was sufficient. Ellwand v. M. Donnell, 8 Beav. 14.

Document found after Affidavit Filed.]-It is the duty of a party in an action, who, after the dary of a party in an action, who, after filing an affidavit of documents, discovers a document of which his opponent has a right to have inspection, but which is not disclosed in the schedule, to inform his opponent of the discovery, either by supplementary affidavit or by notice. Mitchell v. Darley Main Colliery Co., 1 Cab. & E. 215.

7. WHAT DOCUMENTS.

However disagreeable it may be to make the disclosure; however contrary to his personal interests; however fatal to his claims, he is compelled to set forth on oath all he knows, believes, or thinks, in relation to the matters in question. Flight v. Robinson, 8 Beav. 22; 13 L. J., Ch. 425; 8 Jur. 888.

Documents privileged from Inspection. -- A defendant, in an action for the recovery of land of which he is in possession, may be compelled by order to make an affidavit of his documents of title, although he may have a right to object to produce them, New British Mutual Investment Co. v. Peed, 3 C. P. D. 196; 26 W. R. 354.

In an action for an account in which the issue of settled accounts was raised, the defendant was compelled to make an affidavit of accounts and documents not pretended to be privileged or irrelevant to the matter of the action, but claimed to be covered by the alleged settled accounts. Dickson v. Harrison, 47 L. J., Ch. 686.

Documents Referred to in the Pleadings. See Webster v. Whewall, and Quilter v. Heatley, . supra, cols, 703, 704.

Marine Insurance-Ship's Papers. ]-In an action on a policy of marine insurance, underwriters are entitled to discovery of ship's papers, in accordance with the practice in force beforethe Judicature Acts, without an affidavit, and from all persons interested in the proceedings.

Risk not wholly Marine.]—In an action upon a policy of insurance, in which the risk was of a mixed nature, the transit being partly by sea and partly by land, and in which perils of 'transit or conveyance' had been substituted for "of the seas," the defendants had, before delivering their defence, applied for the usual order for discovery of "ship's papers" under the old practice —Held, that the peculiar practice of granting discovery of ship's papers was applicable to actions brought upon marine policies alone, and could not be extended. Henderson v. Underwriting Association, 60 L. J., Q. B. 406; [1891] 1 Q. B. 557; 64 L. T. 774; 39 W. R. 528.

Libel Action—Particulars of Justification.]—Where, in a libel action, the defendant justifies, and gives particulars of his justification, he is not entitled to discovery of anything more than the matters relating to those particulars, and an application for a general inspection of the documents disclosed by the plaintiff's affidavit of documents will be refused. Yorkshire Provident Life Assurance Co. v. Gilbert, 64 L. J., Q. B. 578; [1895] 2 Q. B. 148; 14 R. 411; 72 L. T. 445.

Possession or Power - Joint or Separate Custody. ]-A defendant was, by an order in the must set out every document you have in your common form, required to make and file a full possession, whether you are bound to produce them or not. Per Jessel, M.R., Scanston v. Lishmann, 45 L. T. 360; 4 Asp. M. C. 450—C. produce, on the ground that they were not in his exclusive possession, but only in his possession jointly with another, who was not a party to the On motion by the plaintiff, the defendant was ordered to make and file an affidavit in conformity with the terms of the order, setting forth the number and particulars of the documents which he acknowledged to be in his joint possession, but claimed to be privileged. Luzurus v. Morley, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1119; I L. T. 3.

A husband and wife sued as eo-plaintiffs in respect of an alleged breach of trust by the trustees of their marriage settlement. The wife had a life estate for her separate use, and sued without a next friend. An order was made that the plaintiffs should file an affidavit stating "whether they or either of them" had in the possession or power "of them or either of them" any documents relating to the matters in question. They filed an affidavit admitting the possession of various documents, which they scheduled, and going on to say, "We have not now, and never had, in our possession, custody, or power, or in the possession, custody, or power of any other person or persons on our behalf, any deed, &c., other than and except the documents set forth in the said schedule" :- Held, that the plaintiffs must be ordered to file a further and better affidavit, for that an affidavit relating only to documents in the joint custody of the husband and wife did not comply with the order, and that the order was right in requiring them to answer as to documents in the Dossession of either of them. Fundall v. O'Connell, 54 L. J., Ch. 756; 29 Ch. D. 899; 52 L. T. 553; 33 W. R. 619—C. A.

a. Joint Possession or Interest.

Production to Party Interested.]-Deed is made to two severally; possessor of deed bound to produce it for advantage of other. Anon.,

One member of a club, on behalf of himself and the rest, sued two other members, to recover back moneys belonging to the club. It having been determined that the other individual members were not necessary parties :-Held, that the defendants could not resist the production of the documents in their possession, on the ground that the other members had an interest in them. Richardson v. Hastings, 7 Beav. 354; 13 L. J., Ch. 416.

Production to Third Party.]-In an action for the seizure of the goods of the plaintiff, which was justified by the defendant under an alleged power of distress in a mortgage deed, the defendant stated in his affidavit of documents that he and one B., who was not a party to the action, jointly had in their possession or power certain documents specified in a schedule to such affidavit, and that they were the muniments of title of himself and the said B. as mortgagees, and that he, the defendant, objected to their production : Held, that such affidavit showed sufficient reason for not making an order for inspection of reason for not making an order for inspection of the documents, Murray v. Walter (Cr. & Ph. 114) followed, Kearstey v. Philips, 52 L.J., Q. An appellant on a bill to perpetuate testimony under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 69, obtained from the Court of Chancery a subpoena duces tecum, directed to deposited a single sum of 51. in court, applied the respondents. The appellant, being unable for an order for discovery of documents against to enforce this writ against the respondents, who were resident in Scotland, applied to the Court of Session, under 22 Vict. c. 20, to compel them to search for an exhibit to the documents men-tioned in the subpoena. The respondents stated, as a reason for non-search and non-production of the documents, that they were locked up in the muniment room at a certain castle, and that though they were, as trustees of the late owner of the castle, in possession of the key of the muniment room, yet they could not search that room, because there was a dispute between them and the present owner of the castle as to the right of the possession of the documents :-Held, that the respondents could not be compelled to produce the documents. Campbell v. Dalhousie.

produce the documents. Campbell v. Dalkousie, (Eurl), L. R. I Sc. App. 462; 22 L. T. 879—H. L. The defendant by his answer stated that certain documents, which he admitted to be in his possession, did not belong to him individually, but jointly with other parties, who acted as his agents, and against whom no equity was in this respect raised by the bill :—Held, that the ordinary rule of the court applied to this case, and that the plaintiff had no right to the production of the documents, either on the ground that they were in the actual possession of the defendant, or on the ground that the parties to whom they belonged in part acted as the agents of the defendant. Reid v. Langlois, I Mac. & G. 627; 2 Hall & Tw. 59; 19 L. J., Ch. 337; 14 Jur. 467.

A defendant admitted that certain documents were in the possession of himself and W. C., his co-executor, and that others were in the possession of their joint solicitor. W. C. not being a party to the suit :- Held, that an order for production could not be made against the defendant on such an admission. Morrell v. Wootten, 13 Beav. 105; 20 L. J., Ch. 81; 15 Jur. 319.

Two defendants admitted the possession of documents. One died :-Held, that a motion for production against the survivor, in the absence of the representatives of the deceased defendant, could not be maintained. Robertson v. Shewell, 16 Beav. 277.

Title deeds were in the custody of a solicitor of two tenants in common, A. and B .: - Held, that A. could not be ordered to produce the that A. comm not be ordered to produce the deeds in a suit to which B. was not a party. Edmonds v. Foley (Lord), 30 Beav. 282; 31 L. J. Ch. 384; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 552; 5 L. T. 709; 10 W. R. 210.

Production of deeds and documents will not be ordered where a defendant and another person, who is not a party to the suit, are severally interested in the estate and title-deeds. Th

Where a defendant has in his possession documents belonging to his cestui que trust, a production will not be ordered in their absence (per Sir L. Shadwell). But where an action at law is brought by a trustee, by the direction and for the benefit of the cestni que trust, such trustee is bound to produce all the documents to the same extent as if he had not only the legal but also the beneficial interest. Semble. Few v. Guppy, 13 Beav. 457.

Upon a motion on behalf of a defendant in a suit for production by the plaintiff of a document of which the plaintiff had obtained production by an order against his co-defendant, the court by an order against his co-determine, the court refused to make an order in the absence of the latter. Reynolds v. Godlee, 4 Kay & J. 88. But the mere circumstance of the plaintiff having obtained the document for a specific and the defendants' negligence. A suit and cross limited purpose, would not have enritted him to suit had previously been commenced in the have it protected, on the ground of an implied [court of Admiralty between the owners of the confidence that it should not be used for any other purpose. Ib.

One of several defendants, by his answer, admitted the possession of documents, but by an affidavit subsequently filed, stated that since his answer he had deposited them with one of his co-defendants. A motion for their production refused in the absence of the co-defendant. Burbidge v. Robinson, 2 Mac. & G. 244.

On a bill to set aside a deed filed by one plaintiff only, praying that, if necessary, it might be taken as on behalf of creditors, generally, it appeared that A., claiming under the deed, had a power of appointment, and that she had appointed under her power. The plaintiff moved for production of documents in the hands of the trustee of the deed offering to confirm the appointment of A. The appointees were not parties :- Held, that the production could not be enforced in the absence of those persons,

Ford v. Dolphin, 1 Drew. 222.

In a bill filed to sell the inheritance where it appeared on the face of the answer of the tenant for life, that the parties entitled to the remainder immediately expectant on the life estate were not before the court :- Held, that the court could not compel the tenant for life to produce the deed under which the absent parties held their estate; although as against the tenant for life the right of the plaintiff to inspection was complete. Dundas v. Blake, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 640; but this was varied on appeal by ordering both deeds to be produced, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 260.

Held, also, that it is not a valid objection to a motion by the plaintiffs for the production of documents of the defendants, to show that the bill is open to a demurrer for want of equity.

Where documents are admitted by some defendants to be in the joint possession of themselves and other defendants, a motion for the production of those documents cannot be made against some of the defendants only. Anon., 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 170.

A. and B., by their joint answer, admit certain documents to be in the possession of A. B. must be served as well as A. with notice of production of them. Smith v. Sidney, 6 Jur. 432.

- Possession of Joint Agent.]-Order for production of documents in possession of the treasurer of the "Times" newspaper, refused, Murray v, Walter, 1 Cr. & Ph. 114; 3 Jur. 719.

An admission of the possession by an agent on behalf of the defendant and other persons who are not parties to the cause of documents relating to the matters in question, does not entitle the plaintiff to an order for their production. Lopez v. Deacon, 6 Beav. 254.

A plaintiff is not entitled to the production of documents held by the solicitor of a defence association, to which the defendant belongs, relating to the constitution of the association; but he may call on the defendant to disclose the names of the persons composing such association. Boxill v. Cucan, 15 W. R. 608.

Compromise of former Action. - The two vessels, and these suits were compromised by a private agreement in writing :-Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to inspection of this agreement with an average statement attached to it; for that, without deciding that such an objection would be material, it did not appear that the owners of the H. objected to the inspection; and the document clearly related to the matter in question, as it might contain an admission of liability on the part of the defendants. Hutchinson v. Glover, 45 L. J., Q. B. 120; 1 Q. B. D. 138; 33 L. T. 605; 24 W. R. 185. Affirmed on appeal, 33 L. T. 834—C. A. A party to a suit cannot be required to produce documents relating to the compromise of a dispute between himself and a person not a party to the suit. Warrick v. Queen's College,

- Undertaking not to Produce. - Production ordered of documents admitted by defendant to be in his possession subject to an undertaking to a third party not to part with the possession to any one else. Penkethman v. White, 2 W. R.

Sufficiency of Objection. ]-Where a party to a suit is required to make an affidavit as to documents in his possession, and alleges in his affidavit as a reason for not producing them that they were in the possession of himself and a third person as joint owners, he is bound to state the nature of the joint ownership. Bovill v. Cowan, 39 L. J., Ch. 768; L. R. 5 Ch. 495; 22 L. T. 503; 18 W. R. 533.

The defendants objected to produce documents on the ground that persons not parties to the suit were interested in them:—Held, that this was no ground for resisting production. Kettlewell v. Barstow, 40 L. J., Ch. 375. Affirmed, L. R. 7 Ch. 86: 27 L. T. 258: 20 W. R. 917.

When, in answer to interrogatories, the defendant admits that he has certain documents in his custody, possession, or power, it is not competent to him, upon an application for leave to inspect and take copies of them, to urge that others have an interest in them, and therefore he cannot produce them. Plant v. Kendrick, L. R. 10 C. P. 692,

h. Of Partner.

A sole defendant in a suit relating to transactions in which he had been engaged with the plaintiff, had made entries relating to these transactions in the books of a partnership firm of which he was a member:—Held, that no order could be made on him to produce the partnership books without the consent of his partner. Hadley v. McDouyall, 41 L. J., Ch. 504; L. R. 7 Ch. 312; 26 L. T. 379; 20 W. B. 393. Person accountable, whether as partner or not, must discover all books relating to the matters in question. Swanston v. Lishman, 45 L. T. 360; 4 Asp. M. C. 450.

A bill of discovery against a surviving partner, charged that he had lately or once in his possesplaintiffs were the owners of goods shipped on state of the board the defendant's vessel the B., and their case was, that the goods had been lost through a prayed that the defendant might set forth a collision between the R and the H cough a collision between the B. and the H., owing to schedule of such particulars as were in his custody, &c.; the defendant answered that after the death of his partner he had some books, &c., in his possession, which were delivered to the representatives of his partner, who would not allow him to inspect them; and, save as aforesaid. he denied that he had lately or once any books, &c. :-Held, that this answer was sufficient. Mackintosh v. Booker, 6 L. J., Ch. 233: 1 Jur.

The defendant by his answer stated that certain books relating to a concern in which the plaintiff claimed to be a partner with the defendant, were in the possession of the treasurer of the concern on behalf of the several shareholders in it, many of whom were not parties to the suit:-Held, that the defendant could not be Murray v. Walter, ordered to produce them. Cr. & Ph. 114; 3 Jur. 719.

A defendant was, by an order in the common form, required to make and file a full and sufficient affidavit, stating whether he had, or had had, in his possession or power, any, and if any, what documents relating to the matters in ques tion in the suit, and accounting for the same ; and he made and filed an affidavit setting forth that he had not in his actual custody any documents relating to the matters in question, except such entries as might be contained in the accountbooks of his firm, which he objected to produce. on the ground that they were not in his exclusive possession, but only in his possession jointly with another, who was not a party to the snit. On motion by the plaintiff, the defendant was ordered to make and file an affidavit in conformity with the terms of the order, setting forth the number and particulars of the documents which he acknowledged to be in this joint possession, but claimed to be privileged. Lazarus v. Mozley, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1119; 1 L. T. 3.

A witness a partner in a bank was required, by a subpcena duces tecum, to produce all books and accounts in his custody or power, containing any entries relating to 6,500l. consols, or to the dividends thereof, or the application or disposition thereof, or relating to the matters in question in the suit :- Held, that the witness was not compellable to produce any books, &c., because the language of the subpœna was too general, and because the books, &c., relating to the stock, were partnership property, and his co-partners would not consent to his producing them. Att.-Gen. v. Wilson, 9 Sim. 526; 8 L. J.,

A defendant, who was required to set forth in his answer to interrogatories certain entries in the books of a firm of which he was a member, stated in his anwer that he and his co-partners had given express directions to their agents, in whose custody the books were, not to produce them to any one, nor allow any stranger to inspect them, without the express authority of the defendant and his co-partners; that the books were not in the power of the defendant alone, but of the defendant and his co-partners; and that the defendant had no right or lawful power to produce them, nor to set forth their contents, without the consent of his co-partners :- Held. that the answer was insufficient, as the defendant did not state that his co-partners had refused to consent to his setting forth the entries. having been formed between C., D. and E., the plaintiff in a suit relating to the affairs of the late co-partnership, to which C was a party, served D and E and the agent of their firm (none of whom were parties to the suit) with a subpoena duees tecum, requiring them to produce certain books of the late firm; and also moved that C. might be ordered to concur with D. and E. in producing the books, or causing them to be produced, and to give or join in giving such direction to D. and E., and the agent, as should be necessary to enable or authorise them to obey the subpoena. The court refused the motion, with costs. S. C., 13 Sim. 453; 7 Jur. 225

Where a defendant is interrogated as to the contents of the books of a company in which he is a partner, and the question is one he is bound to answer if he can, it is no exense for not answering to say that the books are in the custody of the officer of the company, and that his partners will not allow him access to them. If he has a right to inspect the documents, he is bound to enforce that right, and the court will, if necessary, give him time for that purpose. Taylor v. Rundell, 1 Ph. 222; 13 L. #### c. Of Officer or Representative of Company.

The directors of a company are bound to make an affidavit as to doenments belonging to the company, as being in their possession, though the company is a party to the suit. Clinch v. Financial Corporation, L. R. 2 Eq. 271: 12 Jur. (N.S.) 484; 14 W. R. 685,

Motion for production of documents belonging to a company, against defendants, who had been, but were no longer trustees of the company, no other shareholders being parties. The answer admitted the documents to be in the office of the company, but not otherwise in the possession or custody of the defendants:—Held, that produc-tion could not be enforced. Penny v. Goode, 1 Drew. 474; 22 L. J., Ch. 371; 17 Jur. 82; 1 W. R. 120.

In a suit by a shareholder against a public officer of a joint-stock banking company, charging insolvency and praying a dissolution and an account, the defendant stated that the company was dissolved, and that the documents were not in his individual possession, but admitted them to be in the possession of the directors, and the solicitor to the company, and he set them forth in his schedule. On a motion to produce the same :-Held, that notwithstanding the dissolution, he still represented the company for the purposes of this motion, and was bound to produce the documents. Hall v. Connell, 3 Y. & Coll. 707; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 25.

In an action on a promissory note, made by the defendant as security for the repayment of moneys due to the plaintiffs from a limited company, the defendant objected to produce doeuments relating to the matters in question in the action, being the banker's pass book and directors' minute book of the company, on the ground that they were in his custody only as liquidator in the voluntary winding up of the company. The plaintiffs then filed a bill against the defendants for discovery in aid of the actions. From the answers of the defendants to this bill, it appeared that they had in their actual possession certain letters which had passed between the defendants and the directors and shareholders of the company and the agents in India. On a motion by the plaintiffs for the production of these letters, the defendants submitted that they were not bound to produce them, because they held them on behalf of themselves and also of the other shareholders of the company who were not parties to the suit :--Held, ordering the production, that the defendants sufficiently represented the whole body of shareholders for the purposes of the litigation, and that so far as the parties by or to whom the letters were sent were shareholders of the company, the letters were not privileged. Glyn v. Caulfeild, 3 Mac. & G. 463; 15 Jur. 807.

The covenant of a shareholder in the deed of Where Lien Claimed, —A defendant, shortly ratter filing an adhiavir as to documents, entered into liquidation of his affairs by arrangement. Some time afterwards he changed his solicitors. The plaintiff applied for production of documents, which the defendant resisted on the ground that they were in the possession of his former solicitors, who claimed a lien on them:—Held, that an order for production must be made, with liberty to apply in case the defendant found it impossible to produce the documents, the plaintiff not to attach the defendant without leave of the court. Vale v. Opport, 44 L. J., Ch. 579; L. R. 10 Ch. 340; 33 L. T. 41; 23 W. R. 780.

A solicitor cannot set up a lien acquired in a cause as against the right of other parties in the cause to production. Ih.

Where an order for discovery has been made, it is no answer to a summons for production of documents that the documents are in the possession of former solicitors who claim a lieu on them for costs, and that the person resisting production is unwilling to discharge the lieu because he believes he has a good claim for negligence against such solicitors. The court, however, in making the order for production will give liberty to apply so as to provide for the contingency of the party called upon to produce documents finding a difficulty in obtaining them. Lewis v. Puccell, 66 L. J., Ch. 463; [1807] 1 Ch. 678; 76 L. T. 282; 45 W. R. 489.

A solicitor defendant cannot refuse to produce documents of his client on the ground that he has a lien for costs, even when plaintiffs claim under his client. Lockett v. Cury, 3 N. R. 405.

A solicitor has no lien upon the will of his client, and cannot refuse to produce a deed executed by the client in his favour, containing a reservation of a life interest, and a power of revocation. Baleh v. Symes, Turn. & R. 87; 23 R. R. 105

Not acquiring Document in that Character.]—A plaintiff is not cutified to production of documents admitted to be in the possession of the solicitor of the defendant, where such possession was not acquired in that character. **Magg v. Owen, C. P. Cooper, 12. P. Cooper, 12.

Documents of Glient's Testator, —A defendant admitted that documents were in his solicitors! hands, having come to them as the representatives of the solicitors of the defendant's testator; but he said they were not in his possession or power, or under his control. The court refused to order a production. Palmer v. Wright, 10 Beav, 234.

Documents belonging to Solicitor.] — The solicitor for the plaintiff in a probate action had also acted for many years as solicitor to the testatrix, whose will was in dispute :—Held, that the plaintiff could not be ordered to produce for inspection the following documents in the possession of the solicitor: "diaries, extracts from diaries, cash ledgers, expense ledgers, eash books, disbursement books, and bankers' cash books, containing entries and memoranda relating to the deceased and her affains." O'Shea v. Wood.

Communications between the assignces and the Commissioner of the Insolvent Debtors' Court held not privileged; books, &c., relating to the matters in question in the possession, but the property of the defendant's solicitors, not ordered to be produced. Flight v. Robinson, 8 Beav. 22; 13 L. J., Ch. 425; 8 Jur. 842; 8 14.

A plaintiff excepted to the defendant's answer on the ground that he had not set forth a list of the books and doenments in the possession of his experiment of a runs testate :—Held, that as these books and doenments were the solicitor's private property, the defendant-was not bound to set them forth. Colyger v. Colyger, 30 L. J., Ch. 408; 4 L. T. 134; 9 W. R. 452.

Action against Solicitor.]—Where a defendant has in his possession documents belonging to his client, production will not be ordered in the absence of the latter. Few v. Guppy, 13 Beav, 457.

Documents belonging to other Glients.]—The solicitor to the defendants, being also clerk to the commissioners under an inclosure act, to an information admirs, on his examination, that he has in his possession the original award of the commissioners, which ought, according to the act, to have been deposited in the parish chest: though it is sworm, that the production of the original award at the hearing will afford material evidence for the relators, the court will not make an order on the solicitor for the production of the deed at the hearing. Att-Gen. v. Berkeley, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 33.

The court will not order the production of documents by defendants, which are in the possession of their solicitors, as solicitors for them and for other persons not before the court. Cridland v. De Mauley (Lord), 13 Jur.

f. Of Executors and Administrators.

It is the bounden duty of an excentor to keep clear and distinct accounts of the property which he is bound to administer. If, therefore, he chooses to mix the account with those of his own trading concerns, he cannot thereby protect himself from producing the original books in which any part of those accounts may be inserted. Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Mer. 43; 17 R. B. 7. An order for production cannot be made Ch. 521; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 240; 8 L. T. 100; 11 against an executor upon admissions in his W. R. 457. testator's answer. An order for the production of deeds, &c., will not be made against the has been previously made against the defendant | 3 Jur. 1119. himself, there being nothing to shew that they were in the possession of the administrator. Scott v. Wheeler, 12 Beav. 366; 19 L. J., Ch. 402.

The court refused to order an executor to produce certain drafts of his testator, which at the date of the application were in the possession of the bankers on whom they had been drawn. Bayley v. Cass, 10 W. R. 370.

The trustees and executors, defendants in an administration suit, admitted by their answer the possession of title-deeds of mortgage securitics, in which they had properly invested their testator's assets; but alleged that the mortgagors objected to the production of the deeds and would prefer to pay off their debts, and they objected to the production of the deeds in the suit in the absence of the mortgagors. On a motion for production :- Held, that the deeds must be produced. Gough v. Offley, 5 De G. & Sm. 653; 17 Jur. 61.

P., a defendant, who had been a partner with his father as solicitors for two years before the father's death, and was also his executor, was in possession of documents relating to the estate of the testator in the cause, of whom the father had been solicitor and agent in the management of the property, and of whose will the father was trustee and executor. New trustees had been appointed, and, there being an index of title-deeds in duplicate, one copy (with some other of the deeds and documents) was handed to the trustees, and the other (at the foot of which was written a receipt by the trustees for the deeds therein mentioned) was left with the defendant :- Held, that P. was bound, on the application by summons of the trustees, to make a full discovery of all the documents of every kind relating to the estate; and that the copy of the index in his possession must also be handed to the trustees, they giving him another receipt. Bowen v. Pearson, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 782; 8 L. T. 495; 11 W. R. 811.

In the course of an administration suit, certain estates in Venezuela were sold to one who was not a party to the suit. The contract of sale, which was approved by the court (the purchaser having appeared and submitted to any order that might be made), provided that, in case of any damage sustained by the purchaser by reason of adverse claims, the amount of such damage should, in case of disagreement, be settled as the judge should determine. Adverse claims were made, and proceedings taken in chambers to ascertain the amount of damage: -Held, that the purchaser was entitled, on summons in chambers, to require production by the vendors of all documents relating to the matters in dispute between him and them.

Dent v. Dent, 35 Beav. 126; 35 L. J., Ch. 112. A person having come in to prove as a creditor under a common decree for the administration of assets, and having produced prima facie evidence in support of his claim, an order was made upon his application directing the executors to file an affidavit as to their possession of Executor claiming a debt from his testator, ordered to produce his private books, containing administrator of a deceased defendant, though the suit has been revived, and though an order son, 3 Y. & Coll, 692; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 10;

g. Private and Confidential Letters.

Letters written to the defendant by a stranger to the suit, and marked "private and confidential," were in the possession of the defendant, who did not deny that they were material to the matters in issue in the suit, but objected to produce them, because the writer of the letters would not consent to their production :- Held, that the letters must be produced to the plaintiff, but that he must undertake not to use the information contained in them for any collateral purpose. Hopkinson v. Burghley (Lord), 36 L. J., Ch. 504; L. R. 2 Ch. 447; 15 W. R. 543.

Production ordered of documents admitted by the defendant to be in his possession but which were stated to have been delivered to him by a third party under an undertaking not to part with them to any one else. Penkethman v. White, 2 W. R. 380.

Where a party to an action sends letters marked "private and confidential" to the other party containing threats of committing a contempt of court, he cannot by so marking them impose on the other party, who had refused to hold any personal communication with him, any condition as to the way in which the letters might be used. Kitcat v. Sharp, 48 L. T. 64.

A letter written in answer to inquiries about the character of a servant is privileged in this sense only, that although it contains defamatory statements it will not support an action for libel unless malice is shown; but it is not privileged in the sense of being privileged from production. Wabb v. East, 49 L. J., Ex. 250; 5 Ex. D. 108; 41 L. T. 715; 28 W. R. 336; 44 J. P. 200—

h. Documents in Pawn or Subject to Lien.

In Pawn.]-A defendant will not be ordered to produce letters, which, together with other goods in a portmanteau, have been pawned by him before the commencement of the suit. Liddell v. Norton, 1 Kay (App.) xi.; 2 Eq. Rep. 668; 23 L. J., Ch. 169.

Pawnee of a bailee must discover, so as to enable the owner to bring an action. Strode v. Blackburne, 3 Ves. 226.

Lien.]-A defendant was committed for the non-production of documents admitted by him to be in his possession or power. It afterwards appearing that prior to the suit they had been deposited with a third party, who claimed a lien thereon which the defendant was unable to satisfy, he was discharged from custody without producing them. North v. Huber, 29 Beav.

A solicitor had been ordered to deliver to his client all deeds, papers and documents belonging to her; he delivered some only, alleging that the rest were detained by counsel for unpaid fees, tors to file an affidavit as to their possession of and by other parties for money due, which the documents relating to the claim or to any item client had not advanced funds to meet. #### i. Documents Abroad.

Upon what terms a party is to be excused the production of books of account and papers which are out of the kingdom, and necessary to his business. Galbett v. Curendish, 3 Swanst. 2027.

Where a defendant admits books in the West Indies to be in his possession, enstady or power, the court will order him to bring them here within a reasonable time; and if they are not byought, will consider it the same as if he had them here in the first instance, and refused to produce them. **Economics of Delphar, Turn. & B.

A defendant by his answer stated that he had handed over some documents relating to the matters in question to his agent in Jamaica, to enable hin to defend a suit there; that the agent had left the island; and that the documents had been taken possession of by a receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery there:—Held, that this admission entitled the plantifit on an order for production; but liberty was given to the defendant to relieve himself, if possible, by affiliarit from the effects of this admission. Morrice v. Seaby, 2 Bear, 500.

In a bill for an account the plaintiff charged fraud and wilful neglect against the defendants, who interrogated him as to invoices and other documents in his (the plaintiff's) possession. The plaintiff's naswer alleged that they were in New Orleans, and that he was unable to communicate with his clerks there, or to proceed rithere to fetch them. The defendant excepted to this answer:—Held, that such documents, which tended to establish or disprove the fraud charged, must be produced before the hearing, and were not fitting subjects of an inquiry in chambers; and that the plaintiff was bound to show that he has attempted to obtain the documents and failed in that attempt, a mere allegation that they are in a country where war is miging not being sufficient. The exceptions were therefore allowed. Mereas v. Haigh, 2 N. R. 284; 8 L. T. 561. S. C, 3 De G. J. & S. 528; 1 Johns, 785; 11 W. R. 792.

k. Documents in Custody of Court.

Documents of Lunatic.]—In an action of the committee of a lunatic whose title-deads are in the committee of a lunatic whose title-deads are in the enstody of the court having jurisdiction in lunacy, an order on the defendant to produce the documents for hispection ought not to be made, as they are not in his possession or control. Virelan v. Little, 52 L. J., B. 771; 11 Q. B. D. 370; 48 L. T. 793; 31 W. R. 891; 47 J. P. 566.

— Application by a Person claiming under a Deceased Lunatie.]—According to the practice in lunacy the court will order production of all documents in the castody of the master or registrar relating to the estate of a deceased lunation the application of a person claiming under him. But he must make out a primh facie title to the estate. Shufth. In r.e, 15 Ch. D. 286; 43 L. T. 234; 28 W. R. 925—C. A.

2. PRIVILEGE.

See infra, D. OBJECTIONS TO DISCLOSURE.

3. PRACTICE.

Discretion of Judge.]—Under Ord. XXXI. a judge has no discretion as to refusing to allow, at the instance of one party to an action, the production of documents in the possession of another party relating to the matter in question, provided the documents are not privileged. Bustraw. v. Withe, 45 L. J., Q. B. 642; 1 Q. B. D. 423; 34 L. T. 865; 24 W. R. 721—C. A.

No Jurisdiction in Official Referee to order.]
—The official referees have no jurisdiction to make an order for the production of documents, the proper course being to take out a summor for the purpose in the chambers of the judge to whom the action is attached. Danvillier v. Myers, 17 Ch. D. 346; 29 W. R. 535.

order on Solicitor of Party.]—It is not consistent with the practice of the court to make an order for production of documents on the solicitor of a party against whom discovery is sought. Cashin v. Craddock, 2 Ch. D. 140; 34 L. T. 52.

A plaintiff issued a writ of summons against several defendants, the indorsement of claim comprising a great variety of seemingly unconnected matters; and then, before delivering a statement of claim, took out a summons for the production, by the solicitor of the defendants and others named in a schedule to an affidavit of even date, of certain documents specified in the schedule; starting by the affidavit that the specified documents were in the possession of the persons named, and that the whole of the documents related to the action and were essential to establish the plaintiff's case:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the production asked. Ib.

Extension of Time, 1—A defendant having been ordered to produce documents within six weeks from 25th July, 1873, obtained, from time to time, orders extending the time up to the 13th March, 1874. The last application was opposed by the plaintiff, and he appealed from it:—Held, that the appeal was not one which ought to be entertained. Peru (Republic) v. Ruzo, 30 L. T. 190; 22 W. R. 588.

Examination of Document by Court.]—The court will examine decuments claimed to be privileged, to see whether they establish a case of privilege. Votter v. Schreiher, 53 J. P. 39.
Observations on Ord. XXXI. r. 19A, sub-r. 2,

Observations on Ord. XXXI. r. 19A, sub-r. 2, empowering a judge to inspect documents "for the purpose of deciding as to the validity of the claim of privilege." Williams v. Opebrada Hy, Land and Copper Co., 65 L. J., Ch. 68; [1895] 2 Ch. 751; 78 L. T. 397; 44 W. R. 76.

Costs.]—When an order is made in an action in the Chancery Division for the production of documents at the office of the production grary's solicitor, that party if ultimately successful in the action, is not entitled, as between party and party, to his solicitor's costs of the production. Brown v. Sewell, 16 Ch. D. 517; 44 L. T. 41; 28 W. R. 295—C. A.

Where a bill has been dismissed with costs, the plaintiff is entitled to the costs of a motion for believing these documents to be forged, applied the production of documents, which had been rendered necessary by the default of the defendant. Lovell v. Yates, 11 L. J., Ch. 158; 6 Jur.

Non-Compliance with Order, Effect of.]-See post, cols. 748 et seq., and col. 778.

C. INSPECTION.

1. BY WHOM.

Relative.]-An order gave liberty to the "plaintiff, his solicitors or agents," to inspect documents in the defendant's possession :-Held, that this did not authorise the inspection by a non-professional relative of the plaintiff, though alleged to be the only person conversant with the accounts. The court also refused to make a special order, permitting the inspection by such party. Sumerfield v. Pritchard, 17 Beav. 9; 10 Hare (App.) Ivilii; 22 L. J., Ch. 528; 17 Jur. 361; 1 W. R. 270.

Another Defendant.]-A plaintiff having an order for himself, his solicitors, and agents to inspect a defendant's documents, will not be permitted to take with him another defendant to assist him in inspecting the documents. Bartley v. Bartley, 1 Drew. 233; 9 Harc (App.) xlix. n.; 10 Hare (App.) lxxvi.; 22 L. J., Ch. 47; 16 Jur. 1062; 1 W. R. 48.

Solicitor.]-An undertaking to produce documents to the plaintiff means to him, his solicitors and agents. Williams v. Prince of Wates Life Insurance Co., 23 Beav. 338; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 55.

Where an undertaking to produce is given in a cause, the meaning of the undertaking is, to produce to the solicitor or agent of the party seeking production, as well as to the party himself, unless specially provided against. Ib.
And see Groves v. Groves, infra.

Solicitor's Clerk.]-An order having been made that B., his solicitors or agents, be at liberty to inspect documents, with the assistance of L. as his accountant. L. and a clerk of B.'s solicitors' firm went to the place of inspection, and L. was refused to be allowed to inspect, except in the presence of B., or one of the principals of his firm of solicitors :-Held, that L., if accompanied by a duly-authorised clerk of B.'s solicitors' firm, was at liberty to inspect. Lindsay v. Gladstone, L. R. 9 Eq. 132.

Scientific Expert. - A suit was instituted to restrain proceedings at law to recover for work and labour in constructing a sewer, on the ground of fraud on the part of the defendant in equity, in improperly obtaining possession of an estimate in writing, and by chemical process removing the figures indicating the price. The document in question having been deposited with the clerk of records in pursuance of an order for production, the plaintiff moved for liberty to subject it to chemical tests for the purpose of the trial at law, upon an undertaking by the defendant to produce it to be stamped at the trial at law. The court refused to make any order. Twenty-man v. Barnes, 2 De G. & Sm. 225; 12 Jur. 743.

Under a decree in an administration suit, a creditor supported his claim in chambers by the

to have them deposited with the chief clerk, and for liberty to have them produced to be examined by scientific persons, to test their genuineness, and the application was granted, the creditor's solicitor being allowed to be present at such examination. Groves v. Groves, 1 Kay (App.) xix.; 23 L. J., Ch. 199; 2 W. R. 86.

Where defendants did not by their answer deny the gennineness of a deed, but merely stated that they did not know whether they had executed it, and after an ordinary inspection applied for an order allowing inspection of it by expert witnesses, which application was not supported by any affidavit as to the deed being forged, but only by an affidavit of the defendant's solicitor, to the effect that he was advised and believed that it was necessary to his clients' case that the deed should be so inspected by witnesses :- Held, that an order for inspection by witnesses ought not to be made. Boyd v. Petrie, L. R. 3 Ch. 818.

Accountant.]—Under the common order for production and inspection of documents, the term "agent" does not include a professional accountant, appointed pro re nata. Bonnardet v. Taylor, 1 John. & H. 383; 30 L. J., Ch. 523; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 328; 3 L. T. 384; 9 W. R. 452.

But a proper case having been made, a special order was made for inspection by a professional

The common order to inspect documents had been obtained by a plaintiff, in pursuance of which order his solicitor inspected the docu-ments, but took with him to the inspection a Mr. A., a professional accountant, who was also an anditor of a railway company, a rival com-pany to the defendants'. On this circumstance being ascertained by the defendants, they refused to allow the inspection to proceed. The plaintiff afterwards moved for an order to amend the common order to inspect, by inserting in it the common order to inspect, by inserting in it the words "accountant" or "Mr. A." Stuart, V.-C., refused to make any order on that motion, but expressed his opinion that A. was not an objectionable assessment was weeken and was also are controlled. tionable person, and was also an agent within the terms of the common order to inspect. The plaintiff and A. subsequently attended to con-tinue the inspection, when the defendants again objected to its being taken by A. The plaintiff then moved for an order to commit the defendants' scoretary for contempt of the common order to inspect documents, when an order was made for his committal, and for payment by him of 100. costs. On an appeal from that order:
Held, that it must be discharged. Turner, L.J., thought that the word "solicitor" in the order thought that the word "solicitor in the cause"; and the word "agent," some person connected with the suit, and not a special agent appointed with the suit, and not a special agent appointed for the particular purpose. Draper v. Manchester, Skeffield, and Lincolnshire Ry, 30 L. J., Ch. 286; 7 Jur. (N.S. 86; 3 L. T. 68; 30 W. R. 215. Varying 3 De G. F. & J. 28; 9 W. R. 215. Varying 3 De G. F. & J. 28; 90 W. R. 117—L.JJ.

Where it is not made to appear that a party is not competent to make the inspection by himself or his agents in the usual way, an accountant will not be appointed as a special agent for that purpose. Coleman v. West Hartlepool Harbour Co., 5 L. T. 467.

L., a partner in an Indian firm now dissolved, production of certain documents. The plaintiff, had, in a suit against his former partners, obtained an order for production of the books, with leave person from whom he received his instructions in to inspect. He became bankrupt, and B., his the suit, though Y, was the person named in the assignee, revived the suit. Upon application by B, to have the benefit of the order, it appearing that the books were very voluminous, and that the accounts were kept in Indian currency : -Held, that he was entitled to the benefit of the order to inspect, and to take in an accountant; and it appearing that L. was conversant with accounts, and had himself kept some of the books, that B. was entitled to take in L. as such accountant. Lindsay v. Gladstone, L. R. 9 Eq. 132.

A shareholder in a joint-stock company brought an action to have his name removed from the register on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation in the prospectus issued by the company, and applied for leave to inspect, by an accountant, books of account disclosed in the affidavit of documents made by the secretary of the company :-- Held, that under the special circumstances of the case, and to save expense, such an order might be made. Bonnardet v. Taylor, supra, followed. Gibney v. Clayton, 27 L. R., Ir. 75.

In the case of a company winding up, where the debts are large and the transactions of the company have been complicated, the court will allow an inspection of the accounts by a proper person on behalf of the shareholders, without any special fact being stated as a reason for the order. Joint Stock Discount Co., In re, Buchanan, Exparte, 15 L. T. 261; 15 W. R. 99.

Surveyor. - Where some of the schednled documents to the affidavit of documents consisted of plans which the defendant stated it to be useless for him to inspect alone, the common order was extended so as to allow the plans to be in-Swansea Vale Ry. v. Budd, 35 L. J., Ch. 631; L. R. 2 Eq. 274; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 561; 14 W. R.

Witness.]—An application before decree to have documents produced for inspection to intended witnesses is a special application, and only to be made on special grounds. Where defendants did not by their answer deny the genuineness of a deed, but merely stated that they did not know whether they had executed it, and after an ordinary inspection applied for an order allowing inspection of it by witnesses, which application was not supported by any affidavit as to the deed being forged, but only by an affidavit of the defendants' solicitor to the effect that he was advised and believed that it was necessary to his clients' case that the deed should be so inspected by witnesses :-Held, that an order for inspection by witnesses ought not to be made. Boyd v. Petriv, L. R. 3 Ch. 818.

Land Agent. - Under the common order for the inspection of documents made in a suit for restraining a nuisance, the plaintiff has a right to have the documents inspected by his land agent although he is a witness in the suit. Att.-Gen. v. Whitwood Local Board, 40 L. J., Ch. 592; 19 W. R. 1107.

Agent of Foreign Government.]-Under an order for production of documents to the plaintiffs, their solicitors or agents, the plaintiffs, a foreign republic, required the defendants to produce the documents to S., who was stated in an affidavit made by the plaintiffs' solicitor to be the duly-appointed agent of the plaintiffs, and the documents were made exhibits for the purpose of bill as the agent in this country of the republic. The defendants having refused to produce the documents to S. :-Held, that S. was the dulyauthorised agent of the plaintiffs within the meaning of the order. Costa Rica Republic v. Erlanger, 44 L. J., Ch. 402; 23 W. R. 462, Affirming, L. R. 19 Eq. 33; 31 L. T. 635.

Several Inspectors-Documents Numerous and Voluminous. - Where the documents in defendant's possession relating to the matters in question in the suit were very numerous and voluminous the court ordered inspection to be permitted to any twelve persons the plaintiffs might name, the names and addresses of the proposed inspectors being furnished to the defendants. Peru Republic v. Weguelin, 41 L. J., Ch. 165.

2. WHAT DOCUMENTS.

Document referred to in Pleadings. ]-In am action for an injunction to restrain a defendant, his servants, agents, and workmen, from selling any whisky other than that made by the plaintiff as "Glenlivet" whisky, and from using the term or trade-mark, "Glenlivet," or any other name colourably like the word "Glenlivet," the court was moved by the plaintiff to discharge an order made in chambers on the application of the defendant under Rules of Court, 1875, Ord. XXXI. rr. 16, 17, for the production of all invoices, letters, bill-heads and brands referred to in the plaintiff's statement of claim, which had the word "Glenlivet" written on them, and the easks on which the word was branded :-Held, that the motion must be refused; that "any document" in the order mentioned must mean any document to which reference is made; and that, although the order must be varied by striking out "casks with brands on them" for convenience' sake, the alteration was so slight that the defendant would have the costs of this. motion in any event, Smith v. Harris, 48 L. T. 869. See also Quilter v. Heatley, 23 Ch. D. 42; 48 L. T. 373; 31 W. R. 331.

Documents referred to in Affidavit-Affidavit: not Filed. ]-A motion to set aside an award on the ground of misconduct on the part of an arbitrator is "a cause or matter" within the meaning of Ord. XXXI. r. 15, and the court has jurisdiction under r. 18 to order inspection of documents referred to in an affidavit made by the arbitrator for the purpose of being used at the hearing, by the party resisting the motion, although the affidavit has not been filed. Former and Lord, In re, 66 L. J., Q. B. 498; [1897] 1 Q. B. 667; 76 L. T. 376; 45 W. R. 486—O. A.

Exhibits to Affidavits. ]—The plaintiff having marked judgment by default in an action brought to recover damages for trespass to and flooding the plaintiff's lauds, the defendants applied to set aside the judgment. In support of this application an affidavit was filed on behalf of the defendants by their solicitor, setting out their defence to the action, and in that affidavit substantiating the defence alleged. The inter-other party may have previously made an affilocutory judgment was set aside on the 11th July, 1890, after which no further steps were taken in the action, owing to proposals for a compromise being made. On the 21st January, 1891, the plaintiff applied to the defendants for inspection of the documents made exhibits in the affidavit :- Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to inspection. Tebbutt v. ### 3. PLACE FOR GENERALLY.

Place of Business.]—When a defendant, by his answer, admits the possession of books and papers relating to the matters in question, but states that they are in constant use in his business, and necessary for that purpose, the court only orders, in the first instance, that they shall be produced to the plaintiff at the place of business at which they are stated to be in use; leaving it open to the plaintiff, if he does not obtain a satisfactory inspection of them there, to apply to the court for a further order. Grane v. Cooper, 4 Myl. & C. 263.

It is a matter of course to allow a defendant's books in use for daily business to be produced at the place where the trade is carried on, instead of being deposited at the record and writ clerk's office; this indulgence may be refused where there is ground for a suspicion that the books will be tampered with; but the fact of alterations alleged to be fraudulent having been made:— Held, not to be a sufficient ground for such refusal where the alterations were discovered by the plaintiff a year and a half before any attempt to have the books removed from the defendant's custody. Mertens v. Huigh, 1 Johns, 735; 3 De G. J. & S. 528; 11 W. R. 792.

Motion for a defendant to produce documents belonging to him jointly with another person, not a party to the cause, and whom he stated, in his answer, to be averse to the production, refused. But leave was given to inspect the documents on the premises. Skey v. Bennett, 6 Jur. 981.

Solicitor's Office. ]-A married woman and her husband put in a joint answer, whereby she claimed to be entitled, to her separate use, to the premises sought to be recovered by the bill, and admitted possession of certain deeds relating to the title of the premises. On motion by the plaintiff for an order for the husband and wife, or one of them, to produce the deeds, the court of the other party, the court may order inspec-tion of such document, notwithstanding that the for inspection, and at the hearing, and the husband to permit her to do so. the suit, which were in the defendant's custody, and sworn before the consul or ambassador to be deposited with the clerk in court, directed abroad; plaintiff to be at liberty to take copies at an inspection at the office of the defendant's his own expense. Hornby v. Pemberton, Mos. 57. solicitor, Roberts v. Lloud, 7 L. J., Ch. 115.

Where documents have been once ordered to be produced at the office of a solicitor, the same course will, in making a subsequent order for production, in the absence of special circumstances, be followed. Graces v. Graces, 1 Kay (App.) xix.; 23 L. J., Ch. 199; 2 W. R. 86.

Deeds and documents admitted by the answer, being very numerous, the usual order for their production may be qualified by a direction that they may be inspected, &c., at the office of the defendant's attorney. Crease v. Peuprase, 2 Y. & Coll. 527; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 8; 1 Jur. 840.

Purchasers of an estate, sold in several lots under decree, requiring to compare with the original deeds lodged in the Master's office, for the purposes of the sale, the copies furnished to them with the abstract of title, the court ordered that the deeds should be handed over to the plaintiff's solicitor, he undertaking to relodge them after the comparison should be made; and that the plaintiff's solicitor should produce them in his office to the solicitors for the several purchasers, and permit them to compare the said deeds with the copies furnished, or to be furnished, to them. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 75.

Room specially Hired — Where Documents Numerous and Voluminous.]—When the documents in the defendants' possession relating to the matters in question in a suit were so numerous that they could not all be contained in the room in which the defendants offered inspection of them, the court gave leave to the plaintiffs to hire a room, and provide proper safeguards, and ordered the defendants to produce the books to them there. Under the same circumstances the court ordered inspection to be permitted to any twelve persons the plaintiffs might name, the names and addresses of the proposed inspectors being furnished to the defendants. Peru Republic v. Weguelin, 41 L. J., Ch. 165,

Before Steward of Manor-Court Rolls. ]-The usual order was made for the deposit by the defendant of all documents in his possession. Some of them consisted of the court rolls of a manor, of which the defendant acted as steward, but his right to that office was contested. The court released the defendant from the necessity of depositing them in court, and ordered the production at the steward's. Carew v. Daris, 21 Beav. 213.

In London-Grounds for Refusal.]-It is not sufficient, in order to avoid production in London, to state that books are in constant use, without stating that they cannot be removed without inconvenience. Hooper v. Gumm, 2 John. & H. 602; 10 W. R. 644. Talbot v. Marshfield, 13 L. T. 424.

Abroad. ]-Parties' documents allowed to be inspected at Beyrout and Alexandria. Bustros v. Bustros, 30 W. R. 374—C. A. Order for production of documents in Japan. Whyte v. Abreus, 32 W. R. 649.

Motion refused, first, because duplicates of the books had been transmitted to England, and the motion should have been to inspect the entries here; secondly, because the books contained other matters besides those relating to private trade, and plaintiff had not named particularly in his notice what particular entries or papers were to be examined; and thirdly, because plaintiff might have made some of the members of the company defendants, and got their answer on oath. Steward v. East India Co., 9 Mod. 387.

> Discretion of Judge.]—When a judge of first instance in ordering production of documents directs them to be produced at a particular place, he is exercising a discretion with which the Court of Appeal will not interfere. Bustros v. Bustros, Changing Place of Inspection. |-- In an action against a municipal corporation, the plaintiffs obtained from Hall, V.-C., the usual order for inspection of documents at the office of the defendants' London solicitors. Pearson, J., to whose court the action was subsequently attached, made an order which, as drawn up, directed that the order of Hall, V.-C., should be "varied, and as varied," should be "as follows," and then went on to direct inspection at the muniment office of the Corporation of Colchester, giving liberty to the plaintiffs to apply at the trial, whether successful or unsuccessful, for any additional costs. incurred by the inspection not being in London : —Held, on appeal (1), that the order of Pearson, J., was wrong in form in purporting to vary the order of Hall, V.-C., and should, instead, have given the new directions "notwithstanding" the order of Hall, V.-C.; (2) that Pearson, J., had jurisdiction, in his discretion, to change the placeof inspection; (3) that the order should give the hispecton; (a) that the order smooth any particular documents in London; (4) that the defendants must undertake to pay such additional costs as the judge at the hearing might hold to have been reasonably incurred by reason of the inspection being at Colchester instead of in London. ### 4. DEPOSIT IN COURT FOR.

Documents, such as court rolls or merchant's account books, are ordered to be produced for inspection only, and not to be deposited in court. Carew v. Davis, 21 Beav. 213.

The minute book of a local board will, in a proper case, be ordered to be deposited in the record and writ clerk's office for inspection, notwithstanding that it is in constant use by the board. Att.-Gen. v. Whitwood Local Board, 40

L. J., Ch. 592: 19 W. R. 1107.

The defendant, by his answer, denied the plaintiff's title to certain money deposited with a bank, but admitted the possession of a document which gave him, the defendant, control over that money :- Held, on a motion for the production of the document, that the plaintiffs were only entitled to inspect it and take copies, and not to deprive the defendant of his control over the money by having the document deposited in the usual way. Berwick Corporation v. Murray, 1 Mac. & G. 530; 1 Hall & Tw. 452; 13 Jun. 1063.

Under an order for production and inspection, it is not sufficient to leave the box containing the deeds in the hands of the clerk in court locked, but the key must also be left, though party undertakes to attend with key when called

Preston v. Carr, M'Clel. & Y. 457. The common direction that a party shall produce before the Master all books and papers relating to the matters in question, as the Master shall direct, entitles the Master to require, by his warrant, that all such books and papers generally shall be left in his office; and a refusal to leave them, in pursuance of such a warrant, is a disobedience to the order of the court which has directed their production. Shirley v. Ferrers, 1 Myl. & Cr. 304; 5 L. J., Ch. 293.

Court will not order plaintiffs (where cause has been referred to commissioners) to produce and leave documents, &c., in their possession in the hands of their clerk in court for inspection of defendants. Shrewsbury School Governors v.

Muddock, 7 Price, 655. The object of a bill being to set aside deeds, the court will not, on motion, go beyond the usual liberty to inspect, &c., and for production at the hearing, by an order to deposit them with the Master for safe custody, without a special case establishing danger, that they may not be produced; therefore, where most of the circumstances relied upon, viz., variations in two deeds, appeared upon the answer, the order was limited to production at the hearing. Beckford v. Wildman, 16 Ves. 438.

The court leaves it to the discretion of the Master to determine, under the usual order for production of books, whether they are to be merely produced from time to time or to be deposited with the Master. Henna v. Dunn, 6 Madd. 340.

A party ordered to produce books, &c., before the Master, is bound to leave them if the Master thinks fit so to direct. Sidden v. Liddiard. 1

Sim. 388.

Where books, papers and writings mentioned in a schedule to the defendant's answer, are deposited by the defendant with his clerk in court for the inspection and examination of the plaintiff, under the usual order for that purpose, the defendant is entitled to have them restored to him so soon as such inspection and examination have taken place; and the plaintiff is not entitled to have them retained in the custody of the clerk in court, notwithstanding it may be necessary that they should be produced before the Master in taking the accounts directed by the decree, or on the hearing of an appeal from the decree. Small v. Attwood, 1 Y. & Coll. 37. See Clark, En parte, Jacob 589; 23 R. R. 150.

Defendant, admitting by his answer that he had in his possession a promissory note on which he had commenced an action against the plaintiff, but which the plaintiff by his bill alleged to have been long since paid, was ordered to deposit the same with his clerk in court for the inspection of the plaintiff, although an injunction to restrain the action had been dissolved. Pilking-ton v. Himsworth, 1 Y. & Coll. 617; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 95.

On a motion for the production of documents, the defendant was permitted to shew by affidavit that they could not be left in the office without great inconvenience : but as the ground for this indulgence was not stated by the answer, he was ordered to pay the costs. Gardner v. Dangerfield,

5 Beav. 389.

Documents were directed to be deposited with the clerk of records and writs, after an order allowing the plaintiff or his solicitors to inspect and take copies thereof, at the office of the defendant's solicitors; the solicitors not agreeing by whom the copies were to be made. Prentice v.

Phillips, 2 Hare, 152.

A defendant voluntarily permitted the plaintiff to inspect documents, &c., admitted by his answer to be in his possession. The plaintiff availed himself of that permission, and afterwards moved that they should be left with the clerk in court. The Master of the Rolls refused the application, with costs, on the defendant undertaking to allow further inspection. Chapman v. Serern, 5 L. J., Ch. 11.

Motion in a supplemental suit to deposit documents with the Master, in whose office other documents had been deposited in the original suit, instead of with the writ clerks, though unopposed, was refused. Alcock v. Sloper, 7 Beav.

A party in possession of documents cannot, except by consent, be compelled to produce them for inspection elsewhere than before an officer of the court. Maund v. Allies, 4 Myl, & Cr. 503; 3 Jur. 309.

Appeal. ]-A defendant, having been ordered to deposit documents in court, and having appealed from that order, an order was made, that, pending the appeal, the plaintiff should not be at liberty to inspect the documents. Kelly v. Hutton, 15 W. R. 916.

5. DELIVERY OUT OF COURT AFTER.

Person not party in cause may petition to have deeds belonging to him, and which had been brought into Master's office under decree, delivered out to him. Marriott v. White, 1 Sim.

& S. 17.

Where deeds had been brought into Master's office, under an order of reference in a suit for pecific performance of two contracts relating to different parts of lands of the parties, one for exchange, the other for purchase, referring it to Master to settle a conveyance from the defendant to a purchaser (a third person) of the exchanged lands, upon whose report so much of the bill as related to that contract was ordered to be dismissed with costs :- Held that plaintiff could not take his deeds out of court, the defendant shewing that they were still of service there, and necessary to him in defending the same suit as to the other contract. Cooper, In re, 1 Myl. & Cr. 33.

Re-delivery of documents deposited in the Master's office ordered, on petition, in an abated suit. Alderman v. Bunnister, 9 Beav. 516. Deed brought into court by the executor, under the common order for production of documents made in a creditor's suit, will, after the debts are paid, be ordered to be delivered out to the party by whom they were deposited, and the court refused to order such deeds to be delivered to the plaintiff in the cause, although he was the tenant for life of the estate comprised in the deeds. Plunkett v. Lewis, 6

In a suit on behalf of an infant plaintiff by his next friend, deeds relating to the plaintiff's title were, upon admissions in the defendant's answer, deposited, by order, in court, for the purpose of discovery, and before the hearing the plaintiff, having attained his majority, repudiated the suit; whereupon, upon application by the defendant to the Vice-Chancellor, the deeds were ordered to be delivered back to the defendant, notwithstanding the opposition of the next friend, who claimed to have them retained in court till the cost incurred on behalf of the plaintiff while an infant had been answered. Upon an appeal from this order being made, supported by affidavit, shewing that since the Vice-Chancellor's order the deeds had been delivered to the defendant, and by him handed over to the plaintiff, by whom they had been deposited with other persons by way of mortgage for value, the court documents produced, (2) something in the refused the appeal motion, with costs, to be paid by the next friend. ### 6. SEALING UP PART,

Mode of. - A party who has obtained an order for the production and inspection of the business books of his opponent in litigation is not entitled to insist that the parts of the books containing entries not relevant to the matters in question shall be kept actually scaled up during the whole litigation, or that they shall be only unscaled and rescaled on oath from time to time as the books are required in the business, when, if that were done, the business of the opponent would be in-terfered with. It is sufficient in such a case if the irrelevant entries are covered up during the inspection, and the person who produces the books makes an affidavit that nothing material has been covered up during the inspection.

Ch. 320; [1897] 1 Ch. 761; 76 L. T. 369— C. A.

Application. - Where a defendant has made an affidavit of documents in his possession, upon summons in chambers, he is entitled to make a substantive application for the protection of any part of them. Tulbot v. Murshfield, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 901; 13 L. T. 424; 13 W. R. 885.

Form of Affidavit. ]-In an affidavit of sealing up irrelevant matter, it is not necessary for the deponent to state positively that no sealed-up portion relates to the matters in question. Per Fry, L.J.: The affidavit onght to state what has been done, and upon whose investigation the deponent is relying, and, if he has not conducted the investigation himself, he ought to pledge his oath to the belief that nothing sealed up is relevant to the matter. Jones v. Andrews, 58 L. T. 601-C. A.

Conclusiveness of Affidavit. |- The mere fact that the sealing up, or affidavit of sealing up, has not been done without carelessness is not a sufficient ground for ordering a general unsealing. In such cases, as in ordinary cases of discovery of documents, the person seeking discovery is bound by the oath of the party making discovery, unless the court is satisfied, not on a conflict of evidence, but from (1) the the denial upon oath of the relevancy of concealed passages will not be sufficient; and upon the court itself ascertaining that they might possibly refer to the questions at issue, an order was made upon the defendant for the production of the concealed passages, with costs. Lewis, 22 L. J., Ch. 946: 1 W. R. 118.

An affidavit in support of a claim to seal up certain passages in a book not being sufficiently explicit, the court inspected the disputed passages in order to determine their right to protection. Lafone v. Falkland Islands Co., 4 Kay & J. 34;

27 L. J., Ch. 25: 6 W. R. 4.

A defendant was ordered to produce the whole of an agreement, although in his affidavit as to documents he had set out two clauses of the agreement, and sworn that those two clauses alone assisted the plaintiff's case, or related to the matters in question in the cause. Luscombe v. Steer, 37 L. J., Ch. 119; 17 L. T. 370.

Irrelevant Matter.]-Upon a motion for the production of documents described in a schedule to the answer, and admitted to be in the defendant's possession, liberty will be given to the defeudant to file an affidavit as a ground for qualifying the order for production, by permitting him to conceal such parts of the documents as do not relate to the subject of the suit. Curd v. Curd, I Hare, 274. Affirmed 6 Jur. 307.

A bill of discovery insisted on the invalidity of a patent, on the ground that it had been assigned to more than five persons, and prayed a production of the documents, &c., "relating to the matters aforesaid":—Held, that the defendants were bound to produce those documents only which related to that point, and were entitled to seal up such parts as related to other matters. Semble, Few v. Guppy, 13 Beav. 457.

An agent, defendant to a bill for an account by his principal, ordered, on motion, to leave with his clerk in court documents in his possession, containing entries relating to the cause, sealing up entries on other subjects, and making affidavit that he has scaled such entries only. Gerurd v. Penswich, 1 Swanst, 533; 1 Wils, 222.

- In Letters. ]-To a bill of discovery praying, amongst other things, a discovery of the correspondence between the parties, defendants in the schedules to their answer set forth a list of all letters, &c., in their possession, and also extracts from the correspondence, stating in the body of the answer that such extracts were the only parts which related to the matters in question, and that many of such letters related also to other matters; on a motion for the production of such letters, the court refused the application, the plaintiff might read the extracts from the schedules, without reference to the body of the answer. Campbell v. French, 2 Cox, 286; 3 Ves. 321; 4 R. R. 5.

In Trade Books. ]-The bill set up custom, that all corn grown and flour sold in a particular district, in which the defendant ocenpied a farm, should be ground at the plaintiffs' ancient mill, and alleged that the defendant had infringed that custom, by selling corn and flour grown upon his farm which had been ground at other mills. The defendant, a corn merchant parcels. Ib.

from the elementstances of the case, that the and flour dealer, by his answer, denied the affidiavit as to documents or scaling does not truly state what it ought to state. Ib.

Under an order for production of documents, ness; and by his affidavit stated, that the quantity of corn and flour grown and sold by him within the district did not exceed oneeightieth part of the corn and flour mentioned in such entries. An order was made, upon motion by the plaintiffs, for the production of the books, the defendant having liberty to file affidavits to enable him to seal up such entries as did not relate to corn and flour grown and sold within the district. Ord v. Fawcett, 19 L. J., Ch. 487: 14 Jur. 456.

— In Partnership Books.]—The defendant and W. P. were partners, W. P. died and appointed the defendant his executor. In an action by a person interested under W. P.'s will against the defendant a decree was made for administration of W. P.'s estate, and for taking accounts of the partnership as between the defendant as surviving partner and W. P.'s estate. An order having been made for the production of the partnership books by the defendant, he claimed to seal up such entries as related to his own private affairs :- Held, that inasmuch as the plaintiff and defendant were both interested in the partnership property, the defendant was not entitled to the ordinary power to seal up such entries as he might swear to be irrelevant to the matters at issue in the action, but only to seal up entries which related to certain specified private re, Pickering v. Where a defendant by affidavit admitted documents to relate to the matters in the snit, but denied that they tended to prove the plaintiff's case (an alleged partnership), or that the plain-tiff's name appeared in them: production-ordered, with liberty to seal up money items in the accounts. Mansell v. Frency, 2 John. & H. 320: 4 L. T. 437: 9 W. R. 610.

In Court Rolls. |- In a suit by the freehold tenants of a manor with respect to right of common and estover, they are entitled to see the court rolls. The lord of the manor may not seal up such parts as he swears do not relate to the matters in dispute. Warwiek v. Queen's College, 36 L. J., Ch. 505; L. R. 3 Eq. 683.

- In Maps, &c. ]-A party was ordered to produce so much of a map in his possession as produce so futer of a map in its possession as-related to certain property; and allowed to with-hold such parts of the same map as related to other property. Fazakerly v. Gillibrand, 8 L. J.; Ch. 248.

Where an issue is, whether a piece of land called O, is or is not identical with or part of land called F., the plaintiff averring the negative is entitled to production of whatever documents may aid him in establishing his negative averment, notwithstanding such documents may alsoevidence the defendant's title. Earp v. Lloyd, 3 Kay & J. 549.

Therefore, in a case of this description the defendant was ordered to produce all maps, plans and terriers, and all deeds and other documents relating to the matters at issue, but with liberty to seal up such parts of the deeds and other documents as did not describe or relate to-

- Memoranda, the production of which the plaintiff was entitled to, were entered in the same book with other matters, to a discovery of which the plaintiff was not entitled, and they could not be separated or sealed up :-Held, that the defendant must suffer the inconvenience of his own act, and produce the whole. Carere v. White, 5 Beav, 172

Where production was sought of so much as consisted of copies of, or extracts from, or reference to, documents or records in a public registry of a report made by a third person at the instance of the defendant's solicitor, for the purpose of his advising the defendant, and which report itself, it was admitted, was protected, the court refused to order production, on the ground that the extracts or copies were so mixed up with the protected parts of the report, that it would an processor parts of the report that it would be difficult, and almost impracticable, to exhibit the one portion without disclosing the other portion. Charton v. Freezen, 2 Dr. & Sm. 394; 12 L. T. 105; 13 W. R. 490.

Application for Unsealing.]—In an action by principal against his agents the plaintiff claimed an account of all sums received and paid by the defendants as his agents. The plaintiff subsequently obtained an order for an affidavit of documents. The defendants then obtained liberty to seal up such portions of the documents as were irrelevant, and they scaled up more than 10,000 passages contained in nearly 5,000 books and documents. The plaintiff then applied for an order on the defendants to unseal all books and documents, and all portions thereof, which had been scaled up under the order, or such portions thereof as the court should direct. The court held that the application that everything scaled up should be unscaled could not be acceded to, and that it was necessary for the plaintiff to establish by particular instances his right to compel the defendants to unseal. A list of particular documents was then prepared and brought before the judge, who directed certain scheduled items to be unscaled, but refused the rest of the application :- Held, on appeal, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a general unsealing of the documents. Jones v. Andrews, 58 L. T. 601-C. A.

Under the usual order for the production of books, &c., with liberty to seal up on affidavit such parts as did not relate to the matters in question, the defendants had produced a book with certain pages scaled up, and had made the required affidavit. The plaintiff afterwards, in an affidavit of facts, leading strongly to the inference that one of the pages scaled up did relate to the question in dispute, moved that the defendants might produce the book unscaled, but the motion was refused, although the defendants declined to answer the affidavit. Sheffield Canal Co. v. Sheffield and Rotherham Ry., 1 Ph. 484; 3 Rail. Ca. 133; 12 L. J., Ch. 376. See also Leigh, In re, 6 Ch. D. 256,

Jurisdiction of Court to Unseal-Irrelevancy of Entries.]—The word "privilege" in Ord. XXXI. r. 19A, sub-r. 2, is not used in a narrow sense, but extends to every case in which inspection is sought to be resisted on any ground whatsoever, and consequently the Court has jurisdiction to unseal documents in respect of which the irrelevancy, in order to determine whether the acquainted with matters which should be kept

When Relevant and Irrelevant Matters In- objection is well founded. Ehrmann v. Ehrmann, 65 L. J., Ch. 889; [1896] 2 Ch. 826; 75 L. T. 243.

Where the plaintiffs scaled up certain docu-ments and objected to the inspection by the defendant of such sealed parts, on the ground that they were irrelevant to the matters in question in the action, the Judge unsealed one of such parts, but, having examined it, refused to make an order for inspection, as he was not satisfied that the plaintiff's affidavit was untrue. Ih.

Removing Part of Document. ]-When a party is ordered to produce documents, and claims privilege as to some, forming parts of others, although he is entitled to seal up those portions (with the sanction of the Court), he must produce all in their integrity, and cannot remove or mutilate them; if he does he must pay the costs of a motion to produce. Agres v. Leny, 19 L. T. 8.

Between the date of an order for the production of a trust cash-book and its production, eighteen leaves had been abstracted; In answer to an amended bill, charging the mutilation, the defendant (a trustee) acknowledged that they were taken ont by his son, with his sanction, as containing entries relating to his private affairs only. An order was made to produce these eighteen leaves, notwithstanding, by his answer and by affidavit, the trustee denied that they had ever been in his possession since, or that he had ever seen them; and notwithstanding the plaintiffs might have proceeded by process of contempt for nonperformance of the original order. Furrer v. Hutchinson, 3 Y. & Coll. 692; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 10; 3 Jur. 1119.

7. IMPROPER USE OF DOCUMENTS INSPECTED.

A plaintiff ought not to use for any collateral purpose documents ordered by the Court to be produced for the purpose of the suit. Richardson v. Hastings, 7 Beav. 354; 13 L. J., Ch. 416.

Where a plaintiff obtains an order for production and inspection of documents, he does so upon an express undertaking not to make public any information so obtained, or to communicate it to persons strangers to the suit. Williams v. Prince of Wales Life Insurance Co., 23 Beav. 338; 3 Jur. (N.s.) 55.

Order against.]-On motion for production of deeds, the defendant asked that the plaintiff might be prevented using them for any collateral purposes, alleging that they were proceedings at law pending. The court, however, declined so to restrict the order. Tagg v. South

Deron Ry., 12 Beav. 151.

A plaintiff obtaining information from the production of documents in the defendant's possession is not at liberty to make it public, andan injunction will, if necessary, be granted to restrain him. A plaintiff, having published statements relative to the matters in question, was, as a condition for making an order for production of documents, required to undertake not to make public, or communicate to any stranger, the contents of such documents. Th. Williams v. Prince of Wales Life Insurance Co., 23 Beav. 338; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 55.

The books and papers of a company are the property of its shareholders, who are entitled to inspect them, though there is a secrecy clause in the articles of an association, and though objection to discovery is based on the ground of in the course of inspection they will become secret. But it is their duty not to divulge such the cause. information so acquired; and a court of equity will restrain them by injunction from so doing, and will punish them should they offend. Brinsley, Ex parte, 36 L. J., Ch. 150.

8. RIGHT TO TAKE COPIES.

Who has. ]-Any party having a right to the production and inspection of documents has also a right to take copies of them. Lockett v. Carey (10 Jur. (N.S.) 144) not followed on this point. Pratt v. Pratt, 51 L. J., Ch. 838; 47 L. T. 249; 30 W. R. 837.

When a party establishes his right to inspect books in the adverse party's possession, it is of course to grant the order for inspection, with liberty to take copies. Hyde v. Holmes, 2 Moll. 372.

A party who has obtained an order for the inspection of documents has a right to inspect, take notes and make copies of all such parts as shall not have been scaled up under the terms of the order. Coleman v. West Hartlepool Harbour and Ry., 5 L. T. (O.S.) 467.

- Opposite Party-Same Solicitor.]-It would appear to be a settled practice, that where the same solicitor acts for both the plaintiff and the defendant in a cause, not to allow copies to be taken by one party of documents brought into chambers by the other. Sharp v. Wright, L. R. 1 Eq. 684; 14 L. T. 246; 14 W. R. 552.

- Under Companies Act, 1863.]-The right of inspection and perusal of the register of of Inspection and periods to the register of debenture stockholders, which by s. 28 of the Com-panies Clauses Act, 1863, is given to mortgagees, bondholders, debenture stockholders, shareholders and stockholders of the company, includes the right to take copies. Matter v. Eustern and Midland Ry., 57 L. J., Ch. 615; 38 Ch. D. 92; 59 L. T. 117; 36 W. R. 401—C. A.

Party Depositing Document in Court-Office Fees. - Defendant saed as executor, admitted to have certain accounts, &c., in his hands, which he was ordered to deposit for plaintiff's inspection. Afterwards a reference was directed for taking the accounts, to make out which, defendant applied to be allowed to take copies of the account, which was refused at the office, nuless he would pay for office copies :- Held, on motion, that he was entitled to this liberty as his right. Gabbit v. Carendish, 2 Anstr. 547; 3 R. R. 627.

Defeudant ordered to deposit books in the hands of the deputy remembrancer for inspection of other party, and afterwards ordered to account, in doing which he must refer to these books, is not obliged to pay the fees of the office in taking copies. Ib.

Costs of. ]-See SOLICITOR (TAXATION).

Photographs of Documents.]-The Court has power to allow a party to an action to take photographs of documents in the possession of the other party. Lewisv. Londesborough (Earl), 62 L, J., Q. B. 452; [1893] 2 Q. B. 191; 69 L. T. 358

9. Costs.

Not Between Party and Party.]—The general it. 4, applied, and that the notice of motion was rule with regard to the inspection of documents irregular. Litthfield v. Jones, 25 Ch. D. 64; is that the costs of inspection must be paid by 32 W. R. 288. is that the costs of inspection must be paid by the party inspecting, though, under exceptional the cause. Peru Republic v. Weguelin, 41 L. J., C. P. 144; L. R. 7 C. P. 352; 27 L. T. 123; 20 W. R. 745.

Where an order is made in an action in the Chancery Division for the production of documents at the office of the producing party's solicitor, that party if ultimately successful in an action is not entitled, as between party and party, to his own costs of inspecting the documents of the other party. Brown v. Sewell, 16 Ch. D. 517; 44 L. T. 41: 29 W. R. 295—C.A.

As between party and party, no costs can be allowed in respect of notices to inspect documents, or of attendance for the purpose of inspecting documents, at the office of the solicitor to whose client the documents belong. The discretion given to the taxing-master by Ord. LXV. r. 27 (17)repeated from Rules of Supreme Court, 1875 (Costs), schedule, r. 15-only applies to taxation of costs as between solicitor and client. Wicksteed v. Biggs, 54 L. J., Ch. 967; 52 L. T. 428.

Solicitor Cannot Charge Opposite Party.]-Where documents which a defendant is ordered to produce are permitted to remain in his solici-'s office for the plaintiff's inspection, the solicitor is not entitled to charge the plaintiff for inspecting them, although the clerk in court would have been entitled to demand Gs, 8d, per Woodroffe v. Daniel, 10 Sim, 126,

Where the inspection of documents on either side is ordered to take place at the office of the solicitor, instead of at the record and writelerk's office, the solicitor at whose office the inspection takes place is not entitled to charge the other side for attendances during the inspection. Flockton v. Peake, 4 N. R. 456; 12 W. R. 1023.

Of Production on Examination of Witness. The defendants were ordered to deposit certain documents with their clerk in court for the usual purposes, and to give an inspection of the remainder at their office, and produce them at the examination of witnesses and at the hearing :-Held, that the production on the examination of witnesses in town and at the hearing should be at the expense of the defendants, but the production on the examination of witnesses in the country at the expense of the plaintiff. Daries v. Harford, 3 Beay, 118.

D. NON-COMPLIANCE WITH ORDER, EFFECT OF.

Attachment—In what Cases.]—An applicaa fourth insufficient affidavit of documents. See-Thomas v. Palin, 21 Ch. D. 360.

Where a party is shewn not to be in a condition to make an affidavit of documents, the court will not order him to be attached. Per Cotton, L.J., Wilson v. Raffalovitch, 7 Q. B. D. 553, 561.

- Irregular Notice of Motion for. ]-On giving notice of motion to commit a defendant in contempt for disobeying an order for discovery, plaintiffs omitted to serve with the notice of motion a copy of an affidavit which they stated in the notice that they should read in support of the motion. Held, that Ord. 52, was issued against the defendant in an action for his contempt in not complying with an order of the court to make and file an affidavit of documents relating to the matters in question in the action. After the issue of the writ of attachment, but before it was enforced, the order was duly complied with by the defendant, and immediate notice of such compliance was given to the plaintiffs' solicitors. The defendant was nevertheless arrested and imprisoned:—Held, that the arrest was altogether irregular; and that it was the duty of the plaintiffs' solicitors to have staved the enforcement of the writ of attachment. Guy v. Hancock, 56 L. T. 726.

Where a party ordered to be attached for default in making an affidavit of documents, put in an affidavit and obtained an ex parte order for discharge, the court holding the affidavit insufficient, discharged the ex parte order, but directed that the attachment should not issue for a fortnight. Price v. Price, 48 L. J., Ch. 215.

- Where Order Served on Solicitor. ]-In an action for the specific performance of an agreement by the defendant to sell two leasehold houses to the plaintiff, judgment for specific performance was given, and an order was afterwards made that the defendant should, within four days after service of the order, produce to the plaintiff "the abstract, and at the same time produce upon oath for inspection all deeds and writings in his possession or power" relating to the property:—Held, that under r. 21 of Ord, XXXI., service of this order on the defendant's solicitors was sufficient service to found an application to attach the defendant for disobethence of the order. Joy v. Hadley, 52 L. J., Ch. 471; 22 Ch. D. 571; 47 L. T. 615; 13 W. R. 519.

See further infra. II. A. 6, e; and tit. ATTACH-MENT.

Staying Proceedings. ]-The Court of Chancery has not only full power to stay all pro-ceedings in a suit till the plaintiff has made a discovery which it has called upon him to make, but, if not satisfied that its order has been properly obeyed, may dismiss the suit itself ; and where money has been paid into court, may direct the payment of that money out of court to the party entitled to it. Liberia Republic v. Roye, 45 L. J., Ch. 297; 1 App. Cas. 139; 34 L. T. 145; 24 W. R. 967—H. L. (E.)

Where a plaintiff, after an order for the production of documents, persisted in not filing a sufficient affidavit as to documents, the court fixed a time at which the bill should, in default of a sufficient affidavit, stand dismissed, and the money in court be repaid to the defendant who had paid it in. Ib.

Dismissal of Action.]—Ord. XXXI. r. 20, of the Rules of Court, 1875, does not make it imperative on the court to dismiss the action of a plaintiff who has failed to comply with an order for the production of documents. Hartley v. Owen, 34 L. T. 752, XXXI. of the Rules of Court, 1888, to have the action dismissed. The action still subsisted, and the plaintiff must have leave to amend by adding paintiff must have leave to amend by adding a next friend; the plaintiff to pay the costs of both summonses. Cardwell (Lord) v. Tomlinson, 54 L. J., Ch. 957; 52 L. T. 746; 33 W. R. 814.

> Inadmissibility of Document in Evidence.] -The penalty for non-production of documents is that they cannot afterwards be used in evidence. Roberts v. Oppenheim, 53 L. J., Ch. 1148; 26 Ch. D. 724; 50 L. T. 729; 32 W. R. 651-C. A.

II. BEFORE THE JUDICATURE ACTS.

A. IN CHANCERY.

1. BY WHAT PARTIES

Person Denying Interest. ]-C., a registered judgment creditor of a legatee, files a bill against the executors, one of whom carries on the testuthe executors, one or whom carries on the testa-tor's banking business in partnership with N., testator's partner, to establish an equitable charge against testator's assets. By supplemental, bill N. is made a party, the plaintiff charging that he and the other defendants, or one of them, carries on testator's business with his assets, and that he claims an interest in the subject-matter of the suit :—Held, that N., who denied that he claimed any interest, and was thus precluded from demurring, was not bound to answer as to the banking books, the plaintiff having shewn no title by the averments upon his bill to the discovery sought by him against N. Chaffers v. Day, 3 W. R. 263.

Co-defendant.]—Defendants put in separate answers; one of them moved that the other might leave with his clerk in court certain deeds mentioned in his answer, for the inspection of the defendant who moved. Motion refused, with costs. Dassaux v. Sheppard, 2 Fowl. Exch. Pr. 60.

A defendant is entitled, after decree, to obtain an order at chambers for the production of documents by a co-defendant. Hart v. Monteflore, 30 Beav. 280; 31 L. J., Ch. 333; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 350; 5 L. T. 441; 10 W. R. 97.

Arbitrators.]—Arbitrators or their umpire will not be compelled to answer to interrogatories tending to disclose the materials upon which their award was founded; nor produce papers and calculations taken by them for their own guidance. Ponsford v. Swayne, I John. & H. 433; 4 L. T. 15.

Nor will they be compelled to produce the submission to arbitration, nor their award, nor such papers, &c., until their fees are paid. Ih. A bill, filed against an arbitrator, charged fraud and collusion between the arbitrator and one of the parties to the award, and alleged certain specific facts in support of this charge :-Held, that the arbitrator could not, by denying to add next Friend. |-Where, after writ issued, the fraud generally, protect himself from the

He pleaded his bankruptey:-Plea overruled, on the ground that he was bound to give the discovery sought. Popper v. Henzell, 2 H. & M. 486; 13 L. T. 63; 13 W. R. 962.

Bill against bankrupt and assignees charging a fraudulent bankruptcy to defeat the plaintiff's execution, and stating, that under an agreement with the assignces for an arbitration, the plaintiff deposited the goods for sale, the produce to be in trust, according to the award, -that he had lost his copy, and the assignees had obtained the original from the person with whom it was deposited for the benefit of all parties, and refused inspection, prayed a discovery and injunction; a demurrer by bankrupt disallowed. King v. Martin, 2 Ves. J. 641.

Married Woman.]-On a bill for specific performance of agreement to purchase, against husband and wife, in which there was a statement, that wife had separate estate, &c., with an interrogatory in support of statement as to the fact. Demurrer by her allowed to such discovery. Francis v. Wigzell, 1 Madd. 258.

Demurrer by a married woman to a bill praying discovery only against her, and relief against her husband, as to contracts, &c., by her, as agent for her husband; alleging the vouchers, &c., to be in her possession:—Allowed upon the objection to making a mere agent a party. Le Terier x Auspach (Margrarine), 15 Ves. 159. And see S. C., 5 Ves. 322.

Demurrer of a married woman to a bill of discovery against her and her husband, in aid of an action for a debt on her account, allowed. Barron v. Grillard, 3 Vcs. & B. 165.

Next Friend of ]- A motion by a defendant, that the husband of the plaintiff (a codefendant), might be ordered to make an affidavit in reference to documents in possession relating to the matters in the suit, was refused, Hardwich v. Wright, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 297; 12 L. T. 138; 13 W. R. 560.

Corporation or Company. ]-A bill against a corporation to discover writings. The defendants answer under their common seal, and so being 2 Str. 764 not sworm will answer nothing in their own preudice. Ordered that the clerk of the company

> A person properly made a party for discovery, as secretary to a company, cannot evade making such discovery simply by resigning his situation after the filing of the bill. Acomb v. Landed Estates Co., 14 L. T. 57; 14 W. R. 387.

> Production of documents upon oath cannot be obtained from the secretary of a company who has not been made a party to a suit against the company. Att. Gen. v. East Dercham Corn Exchange Co., 5 W. R. 486.

The clerk to a city company or other corporate body will be compelled to disclose on oath the particulars of the deeds, documents and papers admitted by the answer of such company to be in their possession for the usual purposes of the Att.-Gen. v. Mercers' Co., 3 L. T. 438; snit 9 W. R. 83.

Where a railway company were the sole defendants to a suit, the court, upon an application by the plaintiff, nnder the 18th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, for an order for the production upon oath of documents in their possession, ordered the company, on or before a day named, to file a full and sufficient affidavit, to be made by one or more of their proper officers, stating whether they had in their possession or power any, and if any what, documents relating to the matters in question in the suit, unless the company should in the meantime satisfy the court, by sufficient evidence, that they could not procure such officer or officers to make such affidavit. Ranger v. G. W. Ry., 4 De G. & J. 74; 28 L. J., Ch. 741; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1191; 7 W. R. 426.

The mayor or other individual member of a corporation, trustee of a rent-charge out of the estate of such member, for a charitable use, must answer not only with the rest under their common scal, but also individually, a charge of having destroyed or cancelled the deed. Dummer v. Chippenham Corporation, 14 Ves. 254.

2. On Application of Defendant.

Plaintiff had proved a deed in the cause, and defendant had got an order at the Rolls for leave to inspect it, on the ground that the deposition referring to the deed had made it part of the deposition. Order discharged per Lord Chaneellor, because defendant is not before the hearing to see the strength of the cause, or any deed to pick holes in it. Dacers v. Dacers, 2 P. W. 410; 2 Str. 764; Ogle v. Gower (Earl), 2 Fowl.

The rule extends equally to letters referred to 7 Ves. 414.

A plaintiff stated certain papers in his bill, but did not allege that they were in his possession : the defendant, after answer, moved for the production of the papers, and the motion was refused with costs. Jackson v. Sedgwick, 2 Wils. 167

Whenever a defendant wants a discovery of a deed in the hands of a plaintiff, he must file a cross-bill for the purpose, although the deed be referred to, by the original bill, as being in the plaintiff's custody, and ready to be produced, as the court should direct. Spragg v. Corner, 2 Cox,

After an answering affidavit had been filed to a cause petition, and the petition had been amended, without interrogatories to the amendments, the court refused, without a cross-petition, to order the production of document stated in the petition to be in the petitioner's possession. Slige (Marquis) v. Hildebrand, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 118.

On a bill to set aside a partition on the ground of inequality, and for a new partition, stating a valuation and estimate, the gross result of which, without the particulars, was contained in a schedule to the bill, the answer denying the accuracy of the valuation, but alleging that the defendant was unable to set forth in what particulars it was inaccurate, by reason of such omission : a motion by the defendant for production of the valuation, and papers, &c., relative thereto, refused with costs. Michlethweit v. Moore, 3 Mer. 592.

Where a defendant seeks the production of deeds, &c., stated to be in the plaintiff's possession, the usual course is by filling a cross-bill, but such a case as the present would not, even if a cross-bill were filed, suffice to obtain an order for the purpose. Ib.

Motion by a defendant for the production of a document, admitted by the plaintiff to be in his custody, refused. Milligan v. Mitchell, 6

Production of deed in plaintiff's possession ordered on motion, and affidavit that defendant believed instrument to be forged, and that he could not fully answer bill before he inspected it. Jones v. Lewis, 2 Sim. & S. 242.

The court will not, on motion by a defendant, compel a plaintiff to produce documents in his possession, although the defendant swears that an inspection of them is necessary to enable him to answer the bill. Penfold v. Nunn, 5 Sim. 409.

Plaintiff in tithe cause, lessee of vicar, ordered on motion on part of defendant to bring in and deliver to clerk in court books, papers, &c., stated in affidavits to be in his possession, and to belong to vicar, who was not a party to snit. Foreman v. Cooper, 11 Price, 515.

rector's title, cannot, by a cross-bill, compel the rector to discover the evidence of his title : therefore, where the rector, by his answer to such a cross-bill, refused to set forth under what deed or deeds the rectory was conveyed to the persons under whom he claimed, exceptions to the answer, which had been taken on the ground of that refusal, were overruled. Bellwood v. Wetherell, 1 Y. & Coll. 211; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq., 23.

As to how far vicar, plaintiff in tithe cause, is compellable to produce for inspection, &c., vicar's books, and those of predecessors admitted by him in his answer to cross-bill by defendant to be in them, in order to put in his answer, the court, as exhibits by the depositions. Wiley v. Pistor, | payments of sums of money as compositions corresponding in amount with the money payments set up by defendant as modus relied on. The costs of all proceedings had for the obtaining the discovery by such means, must be paid by party so acquiring it. Firkins v. Love, 13 Price, 193; M'Clel, 73.

Where an information was filed by the attorney-general, under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, s. 25, against an army agent for a discovery of accounts from 1792 to 1802, who pleaded a settled account by clearing warrants, and, the plea having been overruled, afterwards moved to amend the plea, and for the purpose of so doing that the attorneygeneral, or the secretary at war might be ordered to produce certain vouchers, accounts, &c., rendered annually during that period by the defendant to the war office, and there deposited, and which the defendant swore were material to his defence : the court under the particular circumstances ordered the proceedings upon the information to be stayed until the documents were produced. Att.-Gen. v. Brooksbank, 1 Y. & J. 439; 30 R. R. 819.

In a bill against executors, the plaintiff having stated two promissory notes of the same date, one for 15,000% sterling, the other for 15,000 French louis, given by the testator for securing a sum of 15,0007, on an affidavit by one of the executors that he had inspected the first note, and observed on the face of it circumstances tending to impeach its authenticity, that he was informed and believed that the second note had been produced by the plaintiff for payment in a foreign country, and that he was advised and believed that it was necessary, in order that his answer might fully meet the case, that he should, before answer, have inspection of the second note, it was ordered that. the defendants should not be connelled to answer till a fortnight after production of the second note. Princess of Wales v. Liverpool (Earl), 1 Swanst. 114; 1 Wils. 113; 19 R. B. 282.

Motion by defendant for inspection of book produced by plaintiff under commission issued after publication had passed, was refused with costs. Forester v. Helm, M'Clel, 558.

The usual course of proceeding, where doenments are in the hands of the plaintiff, which the defendant is desirous of the panton, when the defendant is desirous of seeing, is for the defendant to file a cross-bill. *Shepherd v. Morris, 1 Beav. 175; 8 L. J., Ch. 86; 3 Jur. 164.

The court cannot order a document to be produced by the plaintiff for the defendant's inspection; but where a bill seeks an account, and requires the defendant to inspect a certain document relating to the accounts in the possession of the plaintiff's solicitor, and explain, if he can, the errors and omissions in the defendant's accounts, the court will grant the defendant a reasonable time for putting in his answer, after The defendant in a title suit, who denies the the plaintiff shall have deposited the document with his clerk in court, for the defendant's inspection. Ib.

Whether a plaintiff, having deposited a document in the hands of his clerk in court, for the defendant's inspection, can compel him to inspect it, is doubtful. Ib,

The court cannot, at the instance of the defendant, order a plaintiff to produce for the defendant's inspection documents stated in his bill, to be in the plaintiff's possession. Where a plaintiff by his bill states documents to be in his possession, and it is necessary for the defendant to see his possession, and to contain entries relating to though it cannot compel their production, will extend the time for answering, until the plaintiff has produced them. The fact of the documents being in the plaintiff's possession, must, however, appear upon the record. Taylor v. Heming, 4 Beav, 235, 10 L. J., Ch. 369; 5 Jur. 766.

Where the defendant, with a view of paying on heumbrances according to the provisions of a trust-deed, which the excitions sought to enforce by the suft, was in treaty with an insurance office for a loan on the security of the estates, and who sought inspection of the tritle-deeds for the purpose of ascertaining the value, &c.; a notion by the defendant for staying the proceedings, and for the solieitor of the company to inspect, &c., the deeds, &c., in the Master's office, refused. Damer v. Portarlington (Ebril), 15 Sim. 380. Sec & C., 2 Ph. 30; 15 L. J., Ch. 405; 10 Jun. 673.

Motion by defendants, to a bill for partnership account for a production of the accounts before answer, refused. Pickering v. Rigby, 18 Ves.

A plaintiff, although appointed receiver in the cause, cannot, before decree, be ordered as plaintiff to produce books or accounts in his possession for the inspection of a defendant. Maund v. Allies, 4 Myl. & Cr. 503; 3 Jur. 309.

A plaintiff, unless he specifically offers to do by the bill, or is required to do so by a crossbill, is not bound to produce, previous to the defendant being compelled to put in his answer, documents admitted to be in his (the plaintiff's) possession, and alleged as proving his case. Bate v. Bate 7. Bate 7. But, 23 by 191, 232.

Under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ]—Production of all relating to the matters in question in the suit was refused, there being no distinct evidence of the nature of the documents required, or that they were in the plaintiff's possession. First v. Mullivas, 22 L. J., Ch. 72; 16 Jur. 946; I. W. R. 6.

No affidavit is necessary to support an application for production on oath of documents under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 20. *Rochdale Canal Co. v. King, 15 Beav. 11; 9 Hare (App.) with v. 15 Vict. c. 86, s. 20. *Rochdale Canal Co. v. King, 15 Beav. 11; 9 Hare (App.)

The court has settled an order under that act, requiring the plaintiff to make an affidavit of the documents in his possession, and to produce such as he does not thereby object to produce. Th. A defendant is entitled of right to such an

A defendant is entitled of right to such an order for production, and a delay in making the application does not deprive him of it. Ib.

In a suit for an account a defendant moved for the production of certain documents after the cause had been set down for hearing:—Held, that the court would not order production at that stage of the proceedings. Waters v. Shaftesbury (Eurl), 12 Jur. (N.S.) 3; 13 L. T. 558; 1; W. R. 239.

Semble, the court will not allow its machinery to be used for the purpose of enforcing production, where it suspects that such production is required in aid of criminal proceedings relating to the matters in question in the suit. 1b.

Motion to compel plaintiff to produce certain documents, &c., in his possession, relating to the motions in the sait. The notice of motions in the sait when the production of the particular documents required, and affidavits were filed alleging that the particular documents so specified were in the possession of the plaintiff. Production ordered. Mo Autosia v. G. W. Ry, 22 L.J., Ch. 70, 72, 182; 10 Jun. 284, 1012; 1 W. R. 19.

A defendant is entitled to production of documents in the plaintiff's possession before the hearing, and the plaintiff is bound either to produce such documents or to shew that he is unable to do so. Mertens v. Maigh, 11 W. R. 792.

A plaintiff not having interregated the defendant as to documents, and not having excepted to the answer, obtained an order calling upon the defendant to make the common affiliarit as to documents, and the defendant having made the affiliarit, the plaintiff obtained a second order requiring the defendant to make a further, more full and sufficient affiliarit as to documents relating to a particular purchase or sale specified in the plaintiff's second ammons as having been mentioned in the bill. Before filing any second affidiarit, the defendant obtained the common order against the plaintiff for the production of the documents in his possession or power relating to matters in question in the cause:—Held, that the defendant no being in default at the time of obtaining this order, was entitled to it, and a motion to discharge the order was dismissed with costs. Morl v. Nucl. 2 N. R. 156; 8 L. T. 346; 5

A defendant, after filing his answer, may apply for production of documents, under the 15 & 16 Vict. e. 86, s. 20, although the six weeks during which the answer is open to exceptions have not elapsed. Walker v. Kennedy, 26 L. J., Ch. 397; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 481.

A sait was commenced by bill, to which no interrogatories were filed, and no answer was required. The defendant obtained leave to file a voluntary answer, and moved, before putting in such answer, that the plaintiff might be ordered to produce documents:—Held, that as no discovery was paryed by the bill, and no answer required, the defendant was entitled to the order.

Briley v. Dunkorley, 27 L. J., Ch. S.H.; if W. R. S.B.. Where a plaintiff set out in his bill a letter written by the defendant, and stated that it was the plaintiff's intention to prove, and put in cyclence all letters which had passed between him and the defendant on the subject of the transactions in question, if so advised:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled, before putting in his answer, to more for the production of the plaintiff's documents. Halliday v. Temple, 8 De G. M. & G. 96.

Under no circumstances will a defendant be entitled to an order for production of documents by the plaintiff before he has put in his answer. Swith v. Lay, Fairbairn v. Lay, 22 L. T. 785; 18 W. R. 915.

A defendant, before filing his answer, cannot in the absence of special circumstances, obtain an order compelling the plaintiff to produce a deed referred to in the bill. Philips v. Pennefather, I. W. R. 73.

If a plaintiff files an affidavit in support of an interlocatory motion for an injunction, and is cross-examined upon the affidavit, if he has been served with a notice to produce, on cross-examination, all deciments relating to the subject matter of the injunction, he may be ordered, at the request of a defendant, to produce any documents referred to in the uffidavit, or which are material to the motion; although such defendant may not have had time to put in an unswer to the bill, as directed by 15 & 16 Victe, 28 ds, 20, CRiff v. Bull, 38 L. J., Ch. 571; 20 L. T. 841; 17 W. R. 1120.

A defeudant in contempt for non-compliance with orders of the court is, nevertheless, entitled the plaintiff to support his case under an inquiry directed by the decree. Haldane v. Echford, 38 L. J., Ch. 372; L. R. 7 Eq., 425; 20 L. T. 389; 17 W. R. 570.

A defendant's case being that the plaintiff has no title, he has a right to call for production by the plaintiff of any documents which tend to impugn the plaintiff's title. Boyd v. Petrie, 20

L, T. 984; 17 W. R. 903. The 20th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, does not extend to enable a defendant to obtain an order for the production of documents in the possession of a co-defendant; in such a case a cross-bill may still be necessary. Att.-Gen. v. Clapham, 10 Hare (App.), lxviii.

B. was the general agent of a receiver of rents for T., who filed a bill, stating certain accounts, and referring to others which had been furnished by B.; and interrogatories were filed, examining B, as to the correctness of these accounts. But before answering, B. moved that T. might produce the accounts for his inspection, stating that the vouchers were lost, and that, without such production, he would not be able to put in a full and sufficient answer; and the motion was refused with costs. Turner v. Burhinshaw, 2 N. R. 414; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 866; 8 L. T. 569; 11 W. R. 851.

3. IN WHAT ACTIONS.

For Recovery of Documents. ]—A plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of letters and documents, upon which the defendant claimed a lien for literary labour performed thereon at the plaintiff's request, part of such labour consisting of notes, &c., written upon the documents themselves. Upon a common summons by the plaintiff that the defendant might be ordered to produce the letters and documents, and the plaintiff be at liberty to inspect the same, the court granted the application. Brougham (Lord) v. Canvin, 37 L. J., Ch. 691; 18 L. T. 281; 16 W. R. 688.

The plaintiff, the owner of an estate, appointed the defendants receivers and surveyors. The plaintiff discharged the defendants and filed a bill for the delivery up of all documents relating to the estate. The defendants admitted the possession of certain documents connected with the property, which they insisted were their own private memoranda :- Held, that they were private inconsuma:—rich, that may were bound to produce them, in order to enable the court to judge whether they were of such a nature that they ought to be delivered up. Beregford (Lady) v. Dricer, 14 Beav. 387; 20 L. J., Ch. 476.

A decree made with costs against a land agent and receiver, after his discharge, for the delivery up of all documents relating to the estate and its management. S. C., 16 Beav. 134; 22 L. J., Ch. 407.

Upon bill by heir at law for discovering and delivering up or depositing title deeds against persons in possession of them as executors, and in possession of the premises by agreement with a tenant by the curresy, plaintiff need not state every link in his pedigree. Ford v. Peering, 1 Ves. J. 72.

To Impeach Documents.]-Bill by a widow, devisee in fee, impeaching a mortgage by her.

to an order for the production of documents by stating it differently from the bill, by the addition of a power of revocation and appointment of new uses, by the exercise of which a fine was not necessary. Production of the will, not being affected by the answer, ordered on motion. Bird v. Harrison, 15 Ves. 408.

Where a deed is sought to be impeached, the plaintiff is entitled to have it produced, and the defendant cannot resist the production upon the ground of lien. Baloh v. Symes, Turn. & R. 87: 23 R. R. 195. See Tyler v. Drayton, 2 Sim. &

- To Rectify.]-A bill was filed to rectify a deed of settlement of partnership accounts, and, as consequential relief, to have the accounts taken. The deed, and certain correspondence relating to the contract between the parties, and the partnership accounts, were admitted by the answer to be in the possession of the defendants. The plaintiff obtained an order, upon motion, for leave to inspect the deed; but, semble, he was not entitled, before he obtained a decree to rectify the deed, to the production of the partnership accounts. Wimburn v. Lloud, 12 L. J., Ch. 92.

— To Set Aside.]—Production refused of a deed, which the plaintiff, by his bill, sought to set aside. Dendy v. Cross, 11 Beav. 91.

Plaintiff filed his bill to set aside an agrycument signed by himself, containing terms to be performed partly by himself, and partly by the defendant. On the motion of the plaintiff, the court ordered the defendant to produce the agreement, notwithstanding he alleged that he intended to produce the same in evidence against an action at law brought against him by the plaintiff. Rapson v. Cubitt, 7 Jur. 77.

A party having deposited with his bankers an annuity deed, together with other instruments, as security for the balance of his banking account, cannot, by his answer to a bill seeking to have the annuity deed cancelled, and the other securities first applied in satisfaction of the banker's claim, protect himself from answering as to such other scenrities, by alleging that they are his own title-deeds, in which the plaintiff has no interest. Duncombe v. Daris, 1 Hare, 181; 11 L. J., Ch. 17.

A suit was instituted by a cestui que trust, toset aside a sale by trustees to their solicitor. The solicitor submitted to give up the purchase on repayment. He admitted the possession of the title-deeds, but resisted their production unless the plaintiff consented to repay the purchasemoney, saying that the title was bad, and that the plaintiff would have the power, as he had the inclination, to expose the title, in case he abandoned the suit :- Held, that the solicitor was bound to produce the deed. Shalleross v. Weaver, 12 Beav. 272. Affirmed 2 Hall & Tw. 231: 19 L. J., Ch. 450.

The object of the suit was to set aside certain long leases granted in 1740, which became vested in the defendant, who had made family settlements of them which he admitted to be in his custody:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a production of those settlements. Att.-Gen. v. Ellison, 4 Sim. 238.

Where a suit was instituted by a mortgagor to-set uside the mortgage deed, on the ground that it was obtained by the mortgagee under circumwhile cover, for amount of a fine. Answer, stances of pressure and surprise, which, how-admitting possession of the will, and the title ever, the mortgage denicel, the court, upon under it; alleging the loss of the settlement; motion, ordered the production of the deed, it and that he had been the mortgagor's only pro- 238: 8 L J, Ch. 305.

fessional adviser in the transaction. Davis v. Upon a bill charging fraudulent concealment Parry, 4 Jnr. (N.S.) 431 : 6 W. R. 174.

Plaintiff alleged that a certain deed was deposited with the defendant as security for a sum of money alleged to have been lent and paid off. Defendant insisted that the deed was an absolute conveyance, and did not set up his right as mortgagee to refuse to produce the deed. Production ordered, and production likewise ordered of documents of subsequent dates in the defendant's possession resulting from the deed.

Jones v. Janes, 1 Kay (App.), vi.
In a bill to redeem, the plaintiff contested the validity of one of several mortgages held by the defendant:—Held, that he was not entitled to a production. Crisp v. Platel, 8 Beav. 62.

- Charging Fraud. ]-A deed belonging to the defendant, which the bill impeached for fraud, ordered to be produced for the plaintiff's inspection, after it had been proved by the defendant and publication had passed. Fencott v. Clarke, 6 Sim. 8.

Where, as a security for money advanced from time to time to A., the creditor of A. had taken various bills of sale and assignments of A.'s personal property, but had left A. in the wisible user and enjoyment of that property; upon a bill filed by a subsequent judgment creditor of A., impeaching the prior securities for fraud:—Held, upon motion before hearing, that plaintiff was entitled to production of the several bills of sale and assignments. Neate v. Latimer, 2 Y. & Coll, 257. Affirmed 11 Bli. (N.S.) 112; 4 Cl. & F. 570.

Where deeds are impeached for fraud, the mere allegation of fraud by the bill will not entitle the plaintiff to an order for their production : on the other hand, in order to obtain a production, it is not necessary that the fraud should be admitted by the answer; the court must look at the circumstances of each case. Bussford v. Blakesley, 6 Beav. 131.

Order made for the production of a deed impeached for fraud, though the fraud was denied by the answer, the case, on the whole, being such as to render an inspection proper. Ib. A deed in the custody of a purchaser for valuable consideration, which the bill impeached for fraud, ordered to be produced. Kennedy v. Green, 6 Sim. 6.

On a bill to set aside an agreement for the purchase of the secret of a process of manufacture, charging fraud, and that the defendant had no secret to disclose, and calling on him to set forth what his secret (if any) consisted in ;-Held, upon demurrer to the discovery of the secret, that the defendant must disclose it. Carter v. Gartze, 2 Keen, 581; 7 L. J., Ch. 276; 2 Jur. 736.

A title-deed of the defendant, which was not directly the subject of the suit, was charged by the bill to have been fraudulently altered. The charge was denied by the answer. The court refused to order its production until the hearing of the cause. Swift v. M'Ternan, 13 Ir. Eq. R.

Where the purchase of a reversionary interest was impeached on the ground of fraud and inadequate consideration, the purchaser was held bound to produce the deeds by which that transaction was effected and all subsequent documents relating to it, but not any of the

of an incumbrance forming an obstacle to the plaintiff's title in selling, motion made that the defendant might produce his mortgage deed, by reason that such deed contained a recital admitted by the answer, that such incumbrance had been paid off :- Held, that inasmuch as the plaintiff had paid 4,000%, and it was not the ordinary case of mortgagor and mortgage, the deed must be produced. Cannock v. Chichester, Cannock v. Jauncey, 1 Drew. 497; 1 W. R.

Incidental to Relief. ]-Primâ facie discovery is incidental to relief. Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & S. 83; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 6; 24 R. R. 149.

4. PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS REFERRED TO IN THE PLEADINGS.

Admissions, Sufficiency of. ]—Defendant referring to deed in his answer, as in his possession, bound to shew the whole deed. Potts v. Adair, 1 Austr. 259.

Papers specifically referred to in an answer, and admitted to be in defendant's custody, may be ordered to be inspected by the plaintiff. diner v. Mason, 4 Bro. C. C. 479.

The plaintiff has a right to inspect documents admitted by the defendant's answer to be in his possession, before the dissolution of a special inimnetion. Walker v. Corke, 3 Y. & Coll. 276: 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 56.

The statement of a defendant, by his answer. of the contents of an instrument is not a sufficient ground for an order for the production, without an express admission of the instrument being in the defendant's custody or power. Erskine v. Bize, 2 Cox, 226.

Defendant, though he might perhaps have objected to answer, compelled to make full disclosure by production of letters mentioned in schedule to answer. Taylor v. Milner, 11 Ves.

The plaintiff is entitled to the production of documents referred to in the answer, and admitted to be in the custody of the defendant, although an injunction obtained by the plaintiff has been dissolved, on the ground that the contract which he seeks to enforce is illegal. Erans v. Richard, 1 Swanst. 7.

In ordering the production of documents, the court proceeds on the principle that they are, by reference, incorporated into the answer, and become a part of it. Id 8.

If the defendant refers to a document in his answer, but does not admit it to be in his possession, the plaintiff is not entitled to have it produced. Souby v. Mercer, 3 Jur. 949.

Qualified submission to produce a deed, if the court shall require it, does not fix the defendant ; and deprive him of the discretion of the court as to the propriety of the production. Id. 213.

A defendant answered that he had in his possession a book relating to matters improperly inquired into by the bill, and that, save as aforesaid, he had no books, &c., relating to the matters in the bill mentioned:—Held, that this was not sufficient admission to entitle the plaintiff to production of the book. Harford v. Rees, 15 Jur. 663.

Semble, where the bill charges that certain deeds are in the possession of a particular defendant, who allows the bill to be taken as confessed against him; the charge in the bill is equivalent to the defendant's admission by answer, so as to ground a motion for an order upon him to produce the deeds. Parcell v. Langston, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 443

It is not the practice to order the production of documents admitted in the answer for a limited period. Att.-Gen.v. Bingham, 9 Beav. 159.

A mortgagee against whom a bill for redemption was filed by another mortgagee having admitted the possession of vouchers (bills and notes):—Held, bound to produce them. Gibson v. Honest, 9 Beav. 203

A book, admitted to be in the defendant's possession, must be produced, though the answer admits the fact in reference to which the production is required. Thomas v. Morgan, 3 L. J., (0.8.) Ch. 157.

Where documents are referred to in an affildavit, it does not give the other side an absolute right to their production, but it is a matter for the discretion of the court. Motion for this purpose before hearing petition refused with costs. Armsby, Exparte, 2 Deac. & C. 192.

Where defendant referred to his schedule as

Where defendant referred to his schedule as containing all deeds, &c., in his enstody, &c., the plaintiff is entitled to the inspection of all such deeds, &c., as of course, nuless it appeared by description of any particular instrument in schedule, or by arhidavit, that it was evidence not of the title of plaintiff, but of the defendant, or that plaintiff had otherwise no interest in its production. Fuler v. Dragton, 2 Sim. & S. 908.

The plaintiff sought a renewal of a lease not in his possession: the defendant's answer denied his right to the enewal, "insemuel as he is convinced from bouncars in his possession, to which is such lease was executed." Defendant standed that it appears by a certain dead and schedule, which he admitted to be in his cossession, that a lease for a different term and each had been executed, and that it is manifest from the schedule, a renewal, if obtained, was fraudulent.—Held, that the defendant had referred to the deed and schedule in such a way as to make it part of his answer, and was bound to produce it. Pholan v. Hamilton, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 946.

Where a defendant in his answer states his gnorance of a fact, save as may appear in his answer, or by documents in his schedule, no document in the schedule will be exempted from production, although the answer as to some positively states that they are privileged committed tons. Mathods. V. G. W. Ry., 1 Mac. & G. 73: 1 Hall & Tw. 41; 18 L. J., Ch. 169; 13 Jnr. 179.

The mere statement in an answer of a document, the contents of which defendant is not bound to disclose, does not entitle to production. The principal question in the cause was, whether a party who was equitably entitled for life to a long term of years, with a general power of appointment over the residue of the term, had by a certain deed assigned the whole term to the party nucler whom the defendant claimed, or only her life-interest. The plantiff asserted that the deed had passed only the life-interest. The defendant set forth a short abstract of the deed as howing the contrary. A notion for production for the deed was refused. Glover v. Hall, 2 Ph. 184; 17 IL J., Ch. 249.

Production of a deed constituting the root of the plaintiff's alleged title, under particular circumstances, refused. Ib.

On the sufficiency of the admission upon which the order for production of documents should be made. Wing v. Harcey, 10 Harc (App.), lxviii.; 1 Sm. & G. (App.), 10; 17 Jnr. 481.

Answer admitting the execution of an instrument, and craving leave to refer to it, when produced, is not a ground to move for the production; not admitting that it is in the possession or power of the defendant. Darwin v. Clurke, 8 Ves. 158.

A defendant who, in his answer, refers to a dead in the words "as by the said indenture when produced will appear," must produce it for the inspection, &c., of the plaintiff, although he does not eraye leave to refer to it. Welford v.

Skainthrope, 2 Beav. 587.
If a defendant in his answer states the effect of documents admitted to be in his possession, but for his greater certainty eraves leave to refer to the documents themselves when produced, the plaintiff is entitled to move for their production, although the answer positively swears that they form part of the defendant's title, and in no way assist or make out the title of the plaintiff. Hardman v. Ellames, 2 Myl. & K. 732; Coop. though 351; 5 Sim. 409; 4 L. J., Ch. 181. And see 3 L. J. Ch. 74.

That defendants, by their answer, admitted that two deeds were in their possession, stated them partially, and referred to them, when produced, for greater certainty —Held, on motion, that they were bound to produce them for the inspection of the plantiffs. Dundas v. Blake, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 640; 10 Ir. Eq. R. 260.

If a defendant, by his answer, refers to the contents of a document, and continues, "as by the said deed, &c., when produced will appear," he is bound on motion to produce it. Hill v. Homme, 6 L. J., Ch. 258.

The defendant in his answer set out the contents of certain documents, but did not refer to them when produced, or admit them to be in his possession, nor was he directly interrogated to the fact:—Held, that the plaintiff could not compel the production of them. Southneed v. Daly, 10 Ir. Eq. B. 7.

The 18th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 8f, does not alter the practice with respect to the production of documents. A plaintiff is entitled to the production of those documents only white are admitted by the answer and not privileged. Druft answer is a privileged document. Lumbe v, Orton, 1 Druv. 41+; 1 W. R. 207.

Description of Document, Sufficiency of.]— Motion for production of deeds and papers, referred to as in defendant's possession, but not described by the nuswer or schedule, and without an office to produce them, as the court shall direct, refused. Athyns v. Wright, 14 Vcs. 211;
18 R. R. 199.

Rule that there must be schedule before court will order production of deeds and papers, applies only in eases of discovery. Anon., 6 Madd. 97.

only in eases of discovery. Anon., 6 Madd. 97.
Defendant earnot be ordered to produce deeds, &c., males stated in a schedule to his answer, or at least described with certainty. In Ireland it is still the practice to pray in bill a schedule. Anon., 1 Smith, 117.

A defendant by his answer admitted that he had in his possession "divers books of account":

—Held, that the particulars were not sufficiently

Denial of Opponent's Interest or Title.]-If a defendant denies the plaintiffs title, and says positively that the documents in his custody, relating to the matters in the bill, will not shew the plaintiff's title, the court will not order him to produce them : but if he says merely that he believes that they will not shew the plaintiff's title, the court will order him to produce them. Bannatyne v. Leader, 10 Sim. 230.

Defendants in their answer admitted the possession of certain deeds, &c., contained in schedule thereto, but said that all and every such deeds, &c., " make out and shew the title of defendants, and that they did not in any respect make out or assist in making out the title of said plaintiff thereto, or to any part thereof":—Held, upon motion for production, that defendants were protected by the form of their answer. Colls v.

Sterens, 7 Jnr. 54.

An admission in the answer to a bill of discovery, that the defendant possessed documents specified in a schedule wholly or in part relating to the matters mentioned in the bill, not accompanied by a precise denial of a precise case which the bill specifically charged, or by a denial that the documents related to that case :—Held, to entitle the plaintiff to the inspection of all the documents in the schedule which might be evidence on the case so specifically charged, although the defendant said they were the evidences of his own title. Smith v. Beaufort (Duke), 1 Hare, 507. Affirmed, 1 Ph. 209; 13 L. J., Ch. 33; 7 Jur. 1095.

Where a motion for production of documents was resisted on the ground that the answer contained no admission of the plaintiff's title, which title depended solely on whether A. B. had died before or after a certain day, and the answer admitted that the documents in question related to the matters mentioned in the bill, "except the question of the death of A. B." :- Held, that this was not a sufficiently distinct denial that they related to the plaintiff's title to protect them from production. Edwards v. Jones, 1 Ph. 501; 14 L. J., Ch. 62.—L. C. Reversing 8 Jur. 416.

On a motion for the production of documents, a survey or valuation of the property to which the question in the cause related, described by the defendant as consisting of his evidence, and supporting his case, and not that of the plaintiff, and made with the view to the defence in the suit, was considered as a minute furnished by a witness of the evidence he would give, and, as such, it was held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the production of it. Llewellyn v. Badeley, 1 Hare, 527; 11 L.J., Ch. 310; 6 Jur. 705.

In a suit, seeking a partnership account, the defendant denied that any partnership had existed, but admitted that the names of both of the alleged partners had been used on the show-board, and otherwise in the business, as if they were partners, but with the view only of introducing the alleged partner into the business on the retirement of the defendant; and the defendant admitted the possession of books, accounts and documents relating to the business and matters in question, but said that they related exclusively to his own title, and to matters connected with his own property and affairs, in which the alleged partner had no specified to enable the court to make an order; business carried on in partnership, or in confor their production. Inman v. Whitley, 4 Beav. junction with the alleged partners :-Held, that the statement in the answer was not sufficient to exclude the title of the plaintiff to the production of the documents mentioned in the schedule. Harris v. Harris, 4 Hare, 179; 9 Jur. 80.

A bill cannot be supported against a mere stranger for the production of documents; but the plaintiff must shew such a connection between him and the defendant as entitles him to see the documents. Where the defendant was retained as the solicitor of a third party Where the defendant acting under a power of attorney from the plaintiff, but the defendant denied the plaintiff's interest, and that he was accountable to him :-Held, that so long as that stood upon the record, it excluded the plaintiff from instituting his suit or to see the documents. Adams v. Fisher, 3 Myl. & C. 526; 2 Keen, 753; 7 L. J., Ch. 289; 2 Jur. 508.

Generally a reference in the answer of the defendant to deeds contained in a schedule makes them part of his answer, and he is bound to produce them; but where he denies, and it does not appear on the face of the pleadings that the plaintiff has any interest in them, he does not make them part of his answer merely referring to them, or even by stating them in a schedule. Farrer v. Hutchinson, 3 Y. & Coll. 692; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 10; 3 Jur. 1119.

Whether by an interrogatory founded on a charge in the bill, that the defendant, during a partnership with plaintiff as solicitor, had discounted bills whereby he had made a profit; the plaintiff required him to set forth the names of the persons with whom, &c., and the amount of such profits. Although the defendant in his answer noticed the charge, and admitted the transactions to which it referred, yet he refused to answer as to particulars inquired, because plaintiff was not interested in such transactions. The court, on arguing exception taken thereto, overruled it, and held defendant was not bound to answer the interrogatory. John v. Davie, 13 Price, 632.

The defendant to a bill of discovery in aid of the plaintiff's defence to an action at law, cannot be compelled to produce a document as to which the bill contains no allegation that it relates to the matter in issue in the action; and this protection was held to be sufficiently claimed the defendant stating that he was advised, and verily believed that the document in question did not contain evidence in support of the plaintiff's pleas in the action. Peile v. Stoddart, 1 Mac. & G. 192; 1 Hall & Tw. 207; 13 Jur.

A statement in an answer that certain documents admitted to be in the defendant's possession form part of the evidence of his title, and do not form part of the title of the plaintiff to the premises in question, is not sufficient to protect them from production on motion, if they be in their nature such as may furnish evidence in support of the plaintiff's ease, and the answer does not distinctly deny that they do. Semble, a defendant who has answered cannot resist a motion for production of documents referred to in his answer on the ground that the bill is open to a general demurrer for want of equity. Bute (Marquis) v. Glamorganshire Canal Co., 1 Ph. 681; 15 L. J., Ch. 60.

An information made claim, on behalf of a interest, and that they did not relate to any charity, to a farm, out of which a fixed annual rent-charge had for many years been paid. The G. J. & S. 440: 2 N. R. 145; 32 L. J., Ch. 662: defendant admitted the right to the rent-charge, but contended that he represented parties who were purchasers of the farm for valuable consideration without notice. He admitted that he had in his possession title-deeds, which made out his own title, but did not make or evidence the title of the charity :-Held, that the defendant was not bound to produce them. ... port the plaintiff's equity. 22 L. J., Ch. 15; 1 W. R. 47.

The title of the attorney-general in an information rested in part on an agreement executed by an ancestor of the defendant. The defendant denied the right of the attorney-general, and stated that the previous possessor of the estates in question, who was party to the agreement, was only tenant for life, but set out a settlement in which he appeared to be tenant in tail :-Held. which he appeared to be teledine in that :—reld, that as the discrepancy appeared capable of explanation in favour of the defendant, there was sufficient denial of title to resist production of the documents. Att.-Gen. v. Rivers, 1 W. R. 240.

A. settled property on trust for the plaintiff and others, but he reserved a power of defeating it. The plaintiff alleged that the trusts had been partially defeated by a subsequent deed, and called upon the trustee to produce the deed. The trustee, in his answer, stated that the plaintiff's interest had been totally defeated by the subsequent deed, which he did not object to produce ; but he said that A. (who was not a party to the suit) objected to the production :- Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to inspect it, but that the order could not be made in the absence of A. Buyden v. Tylee or South, 21 Beav. 545; 26 L. J., Ch. 425; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 783; 5 W. R. 128.

5. AFFIDAVIT OR ANSWER,

Affidavit, when Compulsory. ]-In a snit by the heir at law for discovery in aid of an action of ejectment brought by him against persons in session claiming as devisees of the ancestor :-Held, that the defendants, whether bound to produce any documents or not, must make the usual affidavit in answer to a summons for production by the plaintiff. Rumbold v. Forteath, 3 Kay & J. 44; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 686.

A defendant against whom a decree for an account was made, had before decree made full discovery by answer as to documents in his possession:—Held, nevertheless, that the plaintiff after decree was entitled to call for an affidavit as to his possession of any documents other than those mentioned in his answer relating to the the schedule thereto, set forth a list of all the matters in question. Hanslip v. Kilton, 1 De deeds, &c., relating to the matters in question in

9 Jur. (N.s.) 482; 8 L. T. 376; 11 W. R. 762. Defendant required on summons to file affidavit as to possession of documents, notwithstanding his having answered the usual interrogatory as ns as any answered the issue interrogatory as to books and papers, and his answer not having been excepted to. Manby v. Bewicke, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 671, 672; 4 W. R. 757.

The defendants were ordered to make the usual affidavit as to whether they had any documents in their possession which related to the matters in question in the cause, although by their answers they denied the plaintiff's alleged title to the estates in their possession. Quin v. Rateliff, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1327; 3 L. T. 363; 9 W. R. 65.

Qualified Answer. ] - It is not sufficient that a party swears he has no books, &c., to his knowledge, concerning the matters in question, but those produced; he must swear without the qualifying words "to his knowledge." Hertford (Marquis) v. Hertford Poor, 4 Vin. Abr. 440; 2 Eq. Abr. 14; Bridg. Prac. Dig. 423.

The defendants to a bill for an account of dealings in stock, were interrogate das to which of them received the several sums of money, and whether the same were paid in cash or cheques; they set forth an account of their receipts as joint, and only specified the sums received :Held, sufficient. Robinson v. Lamond. 15 Jur.

The answer stated that an account of all dealings was set forth in the schedules, and stated that "the defendants have set forth to the best of their belief or otherwise a full account":

Held, sufficient. Ib.

In answering an injunction bill, if the partienlar answer to a particular interrogatory contain an allegation of matter not inquired of by the interrogatory, so that it does not answer the questions directly, but with what amounts to a qualification, and thereby destroys the positive effect of the answer, either as a direct or explicit denial or admission of the fact interrogated to ; it will nevertheless be sufficient if the introduction of the qualifying matter be authorised by anything in the bill on which the interrogatory is founded. Bally v. Kenrick, 13 Price, 291. A peeress ordered to produce deed confessed in her answer on honour only, not on oath. Hamilton v. Gerrard, Pre. Ch. 92.

A defendant is bound to answer directly and precisely; and in answer to a specific interrogatory is not at liberty to refer to a schedule which he does not pray may be taken as part of his answer. Boldero v. Saunders. 3 N. R. 59.

Description of Documents or Accounts.]— Upon a bill filed by the representative of a deceased partner in a firm of wine merchants, against the surviving partner for an account and for particulars of all transactions for a period of six months, the defendant referred to a book containing the particulars required, but refused to set them out in the form of a schedule. He also claimed protection against disclosing the names and private dealings of the customers of the firm. Exceptions to the answer allowed on both grounds. Telford v. Ruskin, 29 L. J., Ch. 867 ; 8 W. R. 575.

A defendant, in his answer to the usual interrogatory as to deeds, &c., stated that he had, in of the items in the schedule was "Banker's Pass-book":—Held, that this description was sufficient, Houghton v. Barnett, 20 L. J., Ch.

An answer admitting the possession of "divers books of account," is not sufficiently specific to enable the court to make an order for their production. Inman v. Whitley, 4 Beav. 548.

When interrogatories are in a form which would make it oppressive to require a detailed answer, a defendant may answer by reference to books; but he must refer to them with such explanation and in such a manner as to make it as convenient as possible for the plaintiff to consult them. Drake v. Symes, 1 Johns. 647: 29 L. J., Ch. 349; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 318; 1 L. T. 186; 8 W. R. 85.

Accordingly, in answer to interrogatories as to policies and investments of an insurance company of which the defendants were directors :- Held, that it was not sufficient to schedule a large number of ledgers, policy books, and the like, and to say the books were correct, and the defendants willing to be bound thereby, that they could not set forth any information except what was contained in the books; and that the detailed particulars asked for would occupy many hundred folios. Ib.

A defendant who is required to set forth accounts, is bound to set them forth as well as he is able, without much labour or expense, and he is not bound (more especially where he has not been a party to the transactions, but is only the representative of a party, and the accounts are long and complicated) to refer to the books for the purpose of making out the accounts. He must, however, allow the plaintiff to inspect the books, Christian v. Taylor, 11 Sin. 401; 10 L. J., Ch. 145.

How far Conclusive.]-Bill for discovery, whether in a mortgage made by A, to B., which had been assigned to the defendant, there was not some trust declared for the benefit of the plaintiff; defendant by answer denied that there was any trust declared for the plaintiff; the answer being replied to, the question at the hearing was, whether the defendant should be obliged to produce the deed; the court would not compel him to do it. Hall v. Atkinson, 2 Vern. 463.

In a suit for tithes instituted by a rector against a party who was both patron of the rectory and lord of the manor, in which the land for which the tithes claimed were situate, suggesting that a customary payment of 40l. per annum, alleged by the defendant to have been made from time immemorial in lien of all tithes was founded on a series of corrupt contracts by way of resignation bonds, and otherwise between successive patrons and rectors :—Held, upon a supplemental bill of discovery filed by the rector, that the defendant was bound to produce all such private documents in his custody relating to the matters inquired after by the bill as did not constitute his title to the inheritance of the manor, or the lands of which the tithes were claimed, or the inheritance of the tithes. The plaintiff is not bound by the defendant's construction of documents in his possession (not his title-deeds) if it be clear from the circumstances that they may relate to the plaintiff stitle. Knight v. Waterford (Marquis), 2 Y. & Coll. 37.

An injunction had been obtained restraining the suit, and traversed the interrogatory. One the defendants whose title to the surface land was admitted, from interfering with or working certain mines claimed by the plaintiffs. Upon a motion by the defendants for production of documents in plaintiff's possession, the plaintiff's stated in their affidavit in opposition that the documents in question showed the title of themselves and other defendants in the same interest to the mines and minerals exclusively, and that none of them in any manner shewed that the defendants applying had or ever had any estate, right, title, or interest, in the mines or minerals: -Held, that these documents were entitled to be protected from production. But an affidavit that documents (admitted to be relevant) relate to, or shew or tend to shew the title of the plaintiffs exclusively, is not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to protection. Parties are answerable for the correctness of their affidavits as delivered to the other side. Lloyd v. Purves, 6 W. R. 421, 507.

A plaintiff filed a bill charging the defendant with infringing his patent, and praying for an account of the dealings and profits of the business :- Held, that the defendant must answer the interrogatories asking for such accounts, although he expressly denied the plaintiff's title to relief, or that the accounts would assist him in making out his case. Swinborne v. Nelson, 22

Duty to Examine Documents and make Inquiries. ]-It is the duty of a corporation, when apprised by an information of the nature and extent of the claims made upon them to cause a diligent examination to be made before they put in their answer, of all deeds, papers and muniments, in their possession or power, and to give in their answer all the information derived from such examination; and if they pursue an opposite course, and in their answer allege their ignorance upon the subject, and the information required is afterwards obtained from the documents selected. in their answer, the court will infer a disposition on the part of the corporation to obstruct and defeat the course of instice, and on that ground alone will charge them with the costs of the suits. Att.-Gen. v. East Retford Corporation, 2 Myl. & K. 35.

To a bill by the executors of a lessor against the lessees (trustees for a mining company) the defendants, after giving some of the discovery required, stated that there were other documents in the custody of the agents of the association, but who were not their agents personally, containing all the information that could be obtained about the matters in question, but that the defendants had no power to use those documents except when sitting at the board of directors, or by an order of the board, and that they believed the directors declined to allow them to use the same, or to afford them any information which would assist the plaintiffs in prosecuting the snit, until all the other shareholders should have been made parties :- Held, this answer was insufficient by reason of its not stating that the defendants had applied to the board of directors for leave to procure and give the information required, and that they had been refused. Taylor v. Rundell, Cr. & Ph. 104; 11 Sim. 391; 4 Jur. 426.

Discovery case in which a defendant must seek for information, which he may not himself possess. Glengall (Eurl) v. Frazer, 2 Hare, 99; 12 L. J., Ch. 128; 6 Jur. 1081.

In answer to a bill seeking to impeach a security, and requiring the defendant to set forth what communications passed between his on the sufficiency of the answer of the corporation, solicitor and agents in the transaction and the plaintiff; and what letters were written and received, and entries made on the subject by such solicitors, it is not sufficient for the defendant to say that the solicitors had ceased, for several inquired after. Ib. years since the transaction, to be his solicitors or agents, and that he does not know what communications or entries they had or made: the defendant, if he has not personal knowledge of the facts, must at least shew that he has endeavoured to acquire the information from his agents in the transaction in question. Ib.

An answer may be verbally full, but technically insufficient, as where a defendant sets up his ignorance of facts as to which he has plainly the means of obtaining the information required. The answer of persons engaged in working a coal mine, which stated that they could not, as to their belief or otherwise, set forth the mode of working :- Held, insufficient, the court assuming that they must have workmen under their control from whom such information might be derived, and which the defendants were bound to afford. Att.-Gen. v. Rees, 12 Beav. 50.

If a bill state a fact not denied by the answer, by which it appears that the defendant has the means of making an inquiry, he must auswer as to the result of his inquiry. Neate v. Marl-borough (Duke), 2 Y. & Coll. 3; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 98.

Upon a bill of discovery, in aid of a defence to an action on a bill of exchange, if the defendant in equity is interrogated as to the consideration given for the bill, he must answer, not only as to the consideration which he gave for the bill himself, but as to that which he knows another party to have given. Edwards, 2 Y. & Coll. 125. Glengall (Lord) v.

The directors of a company are bound to make an affidavit as to documents belonging to the company, as being in their possession, though the company is a party to the suit. Clinch v. Financial Corporations, L. R. 2 Eq. 271; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 484; 14 W. R. 685.

A defendant, after making in his answer a statement, from which it appeared that he had not personally inspected the documents in his possession relating to the subject of the suit, stated that he was advised, and that to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief it was the fact, that the documents did not, nor did any of them, in any way make out evidence or support, or tend to make out evidence or support, the case, or any part of the case, made by the plaintiff, nor defeat nor impeach, or tend to defeat or impeach, the case or defence, or any part of the case or defence, of the defendant, but were evidence in support of the defendant's case : -Held, that as it appeared on the face of the answer that the defendant had not himself inspected the documents, Peile v. Stoddart (1 Maen. & G. 192) did not apply, and they were not protected from production. Manby v. Bewiche, 8 De G. M. & G. 476; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 671; 4 W. R. 757.

Where an incorporated company, in answer to an interrogatory in a bill as to documents which ever were in the power of agents formerly and not now in their employment, stated ignorance as to the fact, but did not state that they had made any particular inquiries of such former agents :-Held, that the answer was sufficient, there being no special circumstances alleged applicable to any particular document or any particular person. M. Intosh v. G. W. Ru., 4 De G. & Sm. 502.

Held, also, that the court could not, in deciding regard the circumstance that the engineer, in a separate answer (which had not been excepted to in that particular), stated that he did not remember, and could not set forth any of the particulars

Sealing up Documents.]-Where a defendant has appended to his answer a schedule of documents, which he is afterwards, upon summons in chambers, required to produce, it is his business to see that the summons is drawn up in such a form as will allow of his scaling up any part of such documents as he maintains upon affidavit to be irrelevant to the matter in suit. Talbot v. Marsh field, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 901: 13 L. T. 424: 13 W. R. 885.

But, where a defendant has made an affidavit of documents in his possession upon summons in chambers, he is entitled to make a substantive application before the chief clerk for the protection of any part of them, supporting the right to production by the usual affidavit as to relevancy.

Where a decree or order directs parties to produce books, &c., the master, under the 16th General Order of 1828, may determine not only as to the books, &c., to be produced, but also as to the parts of them to be inspected. Duncan v. Varty, 14 Sim. 393.

Affidavit to Vary-On behalf of Defendant. ]-The defendant, by his answer, admitted that he had in his possession certain documents relating to the matters in question, but he stated that several of them were privileged. The plaintiff having moved for the production of all the documents, the court admitted an affidavit to be read on the part of the defendant, specifying which of them were privileged. Pursons v. Robertson, 2 Keen, 605; 7 L. J., Ch. 1; 1 Jnr. 770.

Semble, on a motion to produce documents, the affidavit of the defendant is admissible to shew that the documents are within any ground upon which the defendant is entitled to withhold the production. Llewellyn v. Buddeley, 1 Hare, 527: 11 L. J., Ch. 310; 6 Jur. 705.

Upon a motion for production of documents, the defendant was permitted to produce an affidavit to show they were privileged :- Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to use an affidavit in opposition to it. Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp, 10 Beav. 143; 16 L. J., Ch. 88; 11 Jnr. 721.

Privilege as to cases and opinious anterior to any litigation. A defendant, by his answer, stated that he was advised that the cases and opinions stated in the schedule were privileged: -Held, that the privilege was not sufficiently shewn by the answer; but liberty was given to supply the omission by affidavit. Penruddoch v. Hammond, 11 Beav. 59.

A defendant, by his answer, stated that he had handed over some documents relating to the matters in question to his agent in Jamaica, to enable him to defend a suit there; that the agent had left the island; and that the documents had been taken possession of by a receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery there :- Held, that this admission entitled the plaintiff to an order for production, but liberty was given to the defendant to relieve himself, if possible, by affidavit, from the effects of this admission. Morrice v. Swaby, 2 Beav. 500.

The cost of affidavits used to qualify the the production of documents, must be paid by the Smith v. Massie, 4 Beav. 417; 5 defendant. Jur. 1053.

On a motion for the production of documents, the defendant was permitted to shew, by affidavit, that they could not be left in the office without great inconvenience; but as the ground for this indulgence was not stated by the answer, he was ordered to pay the costs. Gardner v. Dangerfield, 5 Beav. 389.

On Behalf of Plaintiff. |-On a motion for a defendant to produce a deed before the examiner, affidavits cannot be read to prove the fact of its being in his possession; it must appear upon his answer. Leave given, though the cause was at issue, to amend the bill for the purpose of obtaining that permission. Barnett v. Noble, 1 Jac. & Walk. 227.

On a motion for the production of papers, Lord Langdale gave leave to supply a defect in the auswer by affidavit. Davis v. Harford, 7 L. J.,

Ch. 2, n.

On a motion for the production of documents. affidavits to prove that a letter was written by a defendant, of which the defendant denied in his answer that he had any recollection, and to prove a fact of which the defendant stated that he was ignorant, were rejected. Edwards v. Jones. 14 L. J., Ch. 62.

Where the answer is found insufficient, plaintiff may read affidavits filed since it was put in, Wilson v. Wilson, C. P. Cooper, 499.

Upon a motion for production of documents in the defendant's custody, the court will not receive evidence extraneous to the answer to shew that a particular document had been fraudulently omitted from the schedule, although the defendant does not object to the admission of extrinsic eyidence, and has adduced evidence to contradict it. Reynell v. Sprye, 1 De G. M. & G. 656; 21 L. J., Ch. 13; 15 Jur. 1046.

Where, on a motion for the production of papers admitted to be in the defendant's possession, the right to their production depends on documents stated in the bill, but which are neither admitted nor denied by the answer, the plaintiff is at liberty to verify such documents by affidavit. Addis v. Campbell, 1 Beav. 258;

8 L. J., Ch. 305.

- To Vary Affidavit of Documents. ]-An affidavit of documents, under s. 18 of the 15 & 16 Viet. c. 86, partakes of the nature of an answer : and hence the court will not order the production of a document not mentioned in the affidavit, upon evidence given by the plaintiff of the materiality of such document, but will order the defendant to put in a further affidavit. Richards v. Watkins, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 168.

The court will make an order under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 18, after decree. Ib.

Claim of Professional Privilege, Sufficiency of Allegations on. ]—The schedule to a defendant's answer of the documents in his power contained as follows: "Letters from Messrs. K. & C., the defendant's solicitors, to Mr. F., one of the witnesses examined for the defendant at the trial of the action, bearing date, &c."; and the defendant, in the body of his answer, stated that all the documents in the schedule related to and were connected with the matters in question in the suit, and were prepared and written for the 115.

answer of a defendant so as to excuse him from institution of it, for the purpose of the defendant's defence to the suit, and for the purpose of the action between the parties to which the suit related:—Held, that the letters were not sufficiently characterised, as being of a confidential nature, to protect them from being produced. Dartmouth Corporation v. Holdsworth, 10 Sim.

> A bill filed by the insurers of a life against the insured, to which the solicitor of the insured was a defendant, stated that, on a particular day, an agent of a company, with whom the insured wished to effect an insurance, came to the office of the insured, and told their agent that the life was bad, handing to such agent at the same time an unfavourable medical report upon the life. The defendant, the solicitor of the insured, was present at this interview, but in his answer to the bill, refused to state what passed, because he was then the solicitor and attorney, and was present as the solicitor and attorney of the insured, and acquired his information touching the matters which he refused to answer, solely from the fact of his being present at the time in the capacity of solicitor and attorney, and professional and confidential adviser of the insured : -Held, on appeal, that the defendant, not having shewn that the circumstances were such as to make the communication privileged, was bound to answer more fully. Principles upon which some communications are privileged. Desharough v. Rawlins, 3 Myl. & C. 515; 7 L. J., Ch. 171; 2 Jur. 125.

> A defendant, by his answer, stated that he was advised that the cases and opinions stated in the schedule were privileged :- Held, that the privilege was not sufficiently shewn by the answer; but liberty was given to supply the omission by affidavit. Pouruddock v. Hammond. 11 Beav.

A defendant admitted that he had in his possession documents relating to the matters in the bill, and refused to set forth a list of them, because they had been procured by his solicitor since the institution of the suit. and for the purpose of his defence to it; and the same were. as he was advised and insisted, confidential communications:—Held, that the allegation relative to the documents did not justify the defendant's refusal to set forth a list of them; and, therefore, that his answer was insufficient. Balguy v. Broadhurst, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 111; 14 Jur. 1105.

A solicitor declined answering some interroga-tories, on the ground that he had obtained all his information "whilst acting as the solicitor" of his co-defendant:—Held, that he had not brought himself within the rule as to professional privilege. Thomas v. Rawlings, 27 Beav. 140; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 667.

A solicitor said he had obtained his information "either as a creditor or as the solicitor" his client :- Held, that this statement, must be taken most strongly against the solicitor, and that he was bound to give discovery. Ib.

The rules of the court as to privileged communications will not exempt a defendant from answering, who states that his knowledge has been acquired "by virtue of his employment as the solicitor of his client." It must have been acquired by means of confidential communica-March v. Keith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 342; 30 L. J., Ch. 127; 6 Jur. (N.s.) 1182; 3 L. T. 498; 9 W. R. that the defendant has acquired information as solicitor of A., acting as such in relation to the matters inquired after, but not alleging that he acquired it from the client, is insufficient. Ib.

A judgment creditor filed a bill against his debtor, alleging that he was cutitled to property, and praying that the same might be sold : that the debt might be paid out of the proceeds; and that the priorities of the different incumbrancers might be declared. He made A. and B. defendants, whom he alleged to be incumbrancers upon the property, and who were also the solici-tors of the debtor. The plaintiff filed interrogatories for the examination of A. and B. They put in their answer, but declined to give discovery as to certain matters, on the ground that they were the solicitors of the indement debter, and that all the knowledge and information which they possessed in reference to the matters had been acquired by them in their capacity of solicitors to the debtor:—Exceptions for insufficiency allowed. Lowis v. Pennington. 29 L. J., Ch. 670; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 478; 8 W. R.

6. ORDER FOR.

a. Discretion of Court.

It is within the discretion of the court to make or refuse an order for production by a defendant upon oath of documents under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 18. Lane v. Gray, 43 L. J., Ch. 187.

Where documents are referred to in an affidavit, it does not give the other side an absolute right to their production, but it is a matter for the discretion of the court. Motion for this purpose, before hearing petition, refused with costs. Arusby, Ex parte, 2 Deac. & C. 192.

b. Application.

Time for. ]-The court will not, upon an interlocutory application after cause is set down for hearing, declare that at the hearing a particular document may be produced and read in evi-Att.-Gen. v. Fishmongers' Co., 4 Myl. & C. 1.

If a defendant submits to produce a deed, he will be obliged to do so before the hearing, if the court shall think fit to order it. Stanhone v. Roberts, 2 Atk. 214.

A defendant put in a plea to a part of the bill, and answered the remainder. The plaintiff moved for production before the plea had been set down, but the court directed the motion to stand over until the plea had been argued. Buchanan v. Hodgson, 11 Beav. 368. And see Arnsby, Ex parte, supra.

Application for Payment into Court-Separate Motions.]-Where a defendant admits, by his answer, the possession of documents and a balance of money, it is irregular to move for the production of the former and payment into court of the latter by two separate motions ; they ought to be included in one. In this case the court ordered the plaintiff to pay the extra costs occasioned by this irregular proceeding. Hawke v. Kent, 3 Beav. 288; 10 L. J., Ch. 30.

Where Application in Former Suit. ]-A defendant had been ordered by the Vice-Chancellor in another suit to give inspection of documents. the defendants to make the usual affidavit of the

A plea of privilege by the answer, alleging The order had been made two years, but had not been acted on :-Held, that this did not prevent an order for production in the present suit.

Bourne v. Mole. 4 Beav. 417.

> On Appeal, ]-Plaintiff appealing from a decree dismissing the bill, entitled to the usual order for the production and inspection of deeds. Church v. Barclay, 16 Ves. 435, Under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86-At Chambers. ]-Applications for production of documents should be made at chambers in the first instance. Thomson v. Teulon, 9 Have (App.) xlix.; 22 L. J Ch. 11, 243; 1 W. R. 12.

Where a plaintiff desired to compel the discovery and production of documents by a defendant, and took out a summons in chambers (afterwards adjourned into court) for leave to file exceptions, on the ground of the insufficiency of the defendant's answer to the interrogatory in the bill, the court held that the application must be dismissed with costs, the new practice under the 15 & 16 Vict, c. 86, being settled that either the plaintiff or the defendant had the power of enforcing immediate discovery and production of documents by an application to the judge's clerk in chambers. Burnard v. Hunter, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1065 : 4 W. R. 34.

- Time for.]-A bill is filed for specific performance of an agreement by twenty-one persons, the first being called agent of the others; and the next day after the answer is filed, the defendants take out a summons that the plaintiff may produce documents. The plaintiff objects, on the ground that such proceeding cannot be taken under six weeks, when the answer must be deemed sufficient under the 20th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. The defendants also reonire the affidavit to be made by all the plaintiffs :- Held, that a defendant can apply instanter upon the filing of an answer, that the plaintiff may produce documents, but the court will give sufficient time to the plaintiff. to ascertain that the answer is sufficient; and that interrogatories may be filed within six weeks. Held also, that the affidavit must be made by all plaintiffs, unless there is some special reason to the contrary. Walker v. Kennedy, 26 L. J., Ch. 397; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 481; 5 W. R. 396.

A cause having been heard on further directions, a decree made, and accounts taken, the next friend moves in his own name for production of a special document for a special purpose, and there is a variation between the summons in chambers and the order. Upon motion to discharge that order :- Held, that the summons must follow the notice of motion; that a plaintiff has no right after decree to move for production; and there being no admission in the answer, order discharged with costs. Rippin v. Dolman, 2 W. R. 432.

A plaintiff, in March, 1860, filed a bill claiming to be entitled as heir to estates in the possession of the defendants, but subject to a term of 1,000 years outstanding, which prevented him from bringing ejectment. The bill contained the usual allegation in reference to documents. The answer, filed on the 15th June, denied the title of the plaintiff, and declined to make discovery of the deeds in their possession. No exception was taken to that answer. On the 24th July a summons was taken out, requiring chambers. On the 30th July the plaintiff amended his bill, and filed further interrogatories. The second answer of the defendants was filed on the 29th August. On the 24th October exceptions were filed on the ground of insufficiency. The Vice-Chancellor directed that the hearing of the summous should be adjourned into court, and come on to be heard with the exceptions. Quin v. Ratcliff, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1327; 3 L. T. 363; 9 W. R. 65.

The defendants undertaking not to set up the term of 1.000 years, or any other term, the court overruled the exceptions, and gave the plaintiff leave to bring ejectment. Ih.

Production of documents ordered upon motion by the plaintiffs, the defendants having put in a plea to the bill, to which the plaintiff had replied. Parkinson v. Chambers, 1 Kay & J. 72;

3 Eq. Rep. 234; 3 W. R. 130,

The practice of raising questions as to the production of documents on a summons to consider the sufficiency of the affidavit is too firmly established to be disturbed, though not to be commended. Nicholl v. Jones, 2 Hem. & M. 588; 5 N. R. 361; 13 W. R. 451.

- Documents must be Specified.]-A defendant, moving, under s. 20 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, that the plaintiff may produce documents, must specify in his notice of motion the documents required. Fiott v. Mullins, 16 Jnr. 946. After decree, a summons requiring affidavit as to documents by the plaintiff must specify the points as to which discovery is sought. Haldane

v. Eckford, L. R. 7 Eq. 425.

___ Evidence.]—No affidavit is necessary to support an application for production on oath of documents under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 20, whether that application be made by the plain-tiff or the defendant, Rochdale Cunal Co. v.

King, 9 Hare (App.) xlix. u.
A plaintiff, before answer, or a defendant, is entitled to an order for the production of docu-ments in the possession of his adversary; and delay in making the application does not deprive him of the right. Ib.

Upon a claim, the court refused a motion made by the plaintiff, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 18, for the production of documents, supported by the plaintiff's affidavit alone of their importance to the cause. Wing v. Harrey,

1 Sm. & G. (App.) x.; 17 Jur. 481.
Semble, that in a suit by claim, the plaintiff ought to file an affidavit, with interrogatories, to obtain the necessary admissions on which to move for production. S. C., 17 Jur. 481.

___ Must be Founded on Answer.] -A motion for production of documents, at or before the hearing, must be founded on the answer [or affidavit, see 9 Hare (App.) p. xlix.] of the defendant [or party against whom the application is made], and the 18th sect. of the stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, does not enable the court to make an order for such production, founded upon the affidavit of any other person, and not upon the admission of the party against whom the order is sought. Lamb v. Orton, I Drew. 414; 10 Hare (App.) xxxi.; 22 L. J., Ch. 713; 1 W. R. 207.

- Plaintiff's Case assumed True. ]-For the documents in their possession; and on the 28th, documents, it must be assumed that the plainthe chief clerk having refused to make an order, the plaintiff appealed to the Vice-Chancellor in documents upon that assumption; because, if the court must wait until the fate of the litigation is known, that would be equivalent to refusing production. Gresley v. Mousley, 2 Kay & J. 288: 2 Jur. (N.S.) 156.

> Forms.]—The court has settled an order. with reference to the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 20, requiring the party against whom the application is made to make an affidavit as to the documents in his possession or power, and to produce such of them as he does not state an objection to produce. And the court has also settled a form of affidavit on the model of a carefully prepared answer, which, though not obligatory, will be considered satisfactory. 1b.

> Form of notice of motion, and affidavit in support, making a sufficient prima facie case for an order in the terms of the notice. Order made where the defendants had previously been compelled to produce documents and make full discovery, though during a five years' litigation they had never before taken any step to obtain such discovery from the plaintiff. M'Intosh v.

G. W. Ry., 16 Jur. 989.
Sect. 20 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, was intended to give power to a defendant to enforce discovery of what documents the plaintiff had, without cross-bill. Semble, however, that the hunguage of the section is inefficient for that purpose. Ib.

c. Amending Bill, Effect of.

On a motion for production of documents, it is for the plaintiff to shew from the admissions in the answer that the documents relate to the contents of the bill as it stands when the motion is made. And therefore, where, after an answer admitting possession of certain documents relating to the matters mentioned in the bill, or some of them, the plaintiff amended his bill by striking out part of it, and then moved upon that answer, the motion was refused. Haverfield v. Pyman, 2 Ph. 202.

A plaintiff does not, by obtaining an order to amend, between the time of giving notice of a motion for the production of documents and its being heard, deprive himself of his right to their production. Chidwick v. Prebble, 6 Beav. 264; production. 12 L. J., Ch. 338; 7 Jur. 294.

Order for production made, on admissions in an answer filed prior to the amendment of the bill, but which did not vary the case. Reynell v. Sprye, 11 Beav. 618.

The effect to be given to the answer to an original bill, after such bill has been varied by amendment. Att.-Gen. v. Thompson, 8 Hare, 118.

The bill stated that the defendant, a stockbroker, had converted old 33 per cent. stock, which he had received as the attorney for the plaintiff, to his own use, and prayed a re-transfer. The defendant, in answer, said that, on the dissolution of a partnership between him and H. W., and formation of two new establishments for carrying on the business of brokers, he, by the directions of the plaintiff, and other customers of the old firm, transferred to H. W. a large specified sum of like stock, in which was included the stock belonging to the plaintiff and the other customers of the old firm who were purpose of an application for the production of similarly circumstanced. The plaintiff amended his bill, stating the defence as a pretence, and interrogated as to the quantity of stock vested in the old firm at the time of the dissolution, and the quantity that belonged to each of the customers of the old firm at that time, and the uame of and quantity of stock belonging to each of them, and the uame of and quantity of stock belonging to the customers of the old firm who transferred their business to H. W., and the same of those who continued their business with the defendant:—Held, that the defendant was bound to answer the interrogatories so far as they related to the old 3½ per cent, stock, but not as to other stocks. Flanagua v. Williams, 2. Jones, 557.

A plaintiff filed a bill in the Court of Exchenger for an account of tithes, and for discovery and relief. The defendant, being an infant, put in his answer by his guardian. The answer set up an immemorial payment in fleu of tithes, but did not make the required discovery. When the defendant came of age, the plaintiff filed a supplemental bill against him, alleging the existence of new facts, and praying for discovery:—Held, that such bill, so far as it sought discovery as to supplemental or newly-discovered matter, and the unanswered statements in the original bill, could be supported. Waterford (Marquis) v. Knight, 3 Cl. & F. 270; 9 Bli. (X8.) 307.

Where, after a defendant has made a sufficient affidavit as to documents, the plaintiff amends his bill, introducing new marters, he is cutitled to have from the defendant a further affidavit of documents as to the amendments. Warden v. Peddianton. 32 Beau. 33.

d. Privilege, how Claimed.

Where a bill seeks discovery of matter that the defendant is not obliged to answer, he must take the benefit of it by demurrer. Selby v. Selby, 4 Bro. C. C. 11.

Where a bill charges a defendant with acts which would subject him to a criminal presention under a strutue, the defendants need not plead the statute, but may demur to the bill. Flowing v. 8t. John. 2 Sim. 181.

Plea that the discovery will subject the defendant to penalties, does not require the support of an answer, as a plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice does, as to facts from which notice is inferred. Cluridge v. Houre, 14 Ves. 59.

Plaintiffs having brought au action against the defendant to recover payments made for insuring lottery tickets, prayed a discovery and account, offering to allow payments made by the defendant; as the defendant could not have that advantage at law, a denurrer was overruled. Brandon y. Johnson. 2 Ves. J. 516.

An objection to the production of documents must be properly raised by the defendant's answer, where the bill seeks their production. Hunter v. Capron, 5 Beav. 93.

Where defendant demurred generally to bill for discovery, as to whether he had not deeds, &c., in his possession, destructive of his title, there being parts of the bill which, whatever should be the fate of the demurrer, ought to be answered, and the demurrer was, on that account, overruled, the court gave leave to withdraw and demur particularly, and answer on payment of costs, as between party and party. Whyman x, Legh, 6 Price, 88.

e. Consequences of Non-Compliance.

Attachment, —On a motion for an attachment for refusal of production and inspection of documents, pursuant to order, or for immediate inspection, the defendants objecting that the documents contained passages improper for inspection, the Loud Chamcellor refused the application, but directed the defendants to pay the costs of it. Jones v. Powell, I Swaust, 535. See Editerties v. Powl. Dick. 693.

An attachment had bear directed against a defendant for putting in three insufficient affidavits; but before it issued he had put in a fourth affidavit;—Held, that the court could not order the attachment peremptority to issue, nor direct the affidavit to be taken off the file for irregularity, as in the case of a fourth answer, which is governed by a general order. Harford v. Lloyd, 2 W. R. 537.

An order had been made upon the defendant for production of documents. The plaintiff went to the office of defendant, where he was shewn a letter-book, of which inspection was refused until counsel's opinion had been taken. The defendant subsequently asserted that he had lost take the book:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an attachment against the defendant not-withstanding the circumstances of having gone to his office for the purpose of inspection. Moralington v. Keee, 4 w. R. 793.

Order to Enforce.]—The four-day order to enforce the production of documents in the master's office by a party to the cause, does not require personal service. Hobson v. Shearwood, 6 Beav, 63: 12 L. J., Ch. 447: 7 Jur. 687.

It is not irregular to obtain the four-day order for production of deeds before the certificate of the defendant's default has been filed. Askew v. Peddle, 10 Sim. 182.

Sequestration.]—Commission of partition, and partits to produce deeds, defendant in contempt for not producing, &c. Sequestration finally ordered. Trigg v. Trigg, Dick. 325; 1 Sim. & S. 274. n.

Sequestration for non-production of deeds discharged on payment of the costs, the party having been examined and denied knowledge of them. Pelham (Lard) v. Vewcastle (Duke), 3 Swanst. 29.

Receiver.]—Receiver granted against tenant for life, subject to term for ruising portions, he refusing to produce title-deeds necessary to raise such portions. Brigstocke v. Mansel, 3 Madd. 47.

Dismissal of Bill.]—After an order that the defendant should have a fortnight's time to answer, after the plaintiff had produced an instrument stated in the bill, fifteen months having clapsed without production, the plaintiff was ordered to produce the instrument on or before a day named, and production not being made the bill was dismissed with costs. Princew of Wales v. Literpuol (Eurl), 3 Swaust. 567; 2 Wils. Ch. 29; 19 R. R. 282.

Denial of Relief.]—Whether, after a verilict at law, in an action of trespass, the court will grant an injunction against future trespasses, in favour of parties who refused at the trial to produce documents necessary to a fair decision, quare. Freld v. Beaumont, I Swanst. 210.

Where defendant denies charge in bill pertz, 7 Ex. 67; 2 L. M. & P. 597; 21 L. J., Ex. of fraud and misconduct in partnership, and 25; 15 Jur. 1040. explains others away, and alleges his inability to put in a full answer, by reason that plaintiff withheld improperly the partnership's books, the court refused (but without prejudice to future application) the injunction prayed by the bill. Littlewood v. Caldwell, 11 Price, 97; 25 R. R. 711.

Costs.]-Plaintiff procured the usual order for defendants to produce certain deeds within a particular time, but did not take the usual steps to enforce it, on account of the defendants submitting to perform the order. Subsequently, the delants not having produced a particular deed, plaintiff gave notice of motion to produce the same, and for defendants to pay the costs of the application. Defendants immediately produced application:—Determine infinite and provided the deed, but refused to pay the costs of the application:—Held, upon motion by plaintiff for defendants to pay the costs, that plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the motion, made necessary by the non-compliance of defendants with the order, although the plaintiff had not taken the regular steps to enforce it. Mare v. Marsden, 4 Jur. 1079.

f. Effect of Delay in Application.

Delay in moving for production of documents until after the defendant's witnesses are examined, and the exhibits marked, whereby the plaintiff may ascertain which are the defendant's exhibits, is no objection to the order being made. Branfort (Duke) v. Taylor, 2 Hare, 245.

The court has settled an order under the 15 & 16 Viet. c. 86, s. 20, requiring the plaintiff to make an affidavit of the documents in his possession, and to produce such as he does not thereby object to produce. A defendant is entitled of right to such an order for production, and a delay in making the application does not deprive him of it. Rochdale Canal Co, v. King, 15 Beav. 11; 9 Hare (App.) xlix. n.; 22 L. J., Ch. 604; 17 Jur. 1001.

B. AT LAW.

1. AT COMMON LAW.

Where Interest. ]-Wherever an action is brought upon an instrument in which the defendant has an interest, the court has a common law jurisdiction to order the plaintiff to allow the defendant to inspect it. Doe d. Child v. Roe, I El. & Bl. 279; 22 L. J., Q. B. 102; 17 Jur. 136:1 W. R. 53.

In an action against the proprietor of a newspaper for the breach of a contract to employ the plaintiff as sub-editor, the defendant justified the dismissal of the plaintiff on the ground of his having, from improper motives, lent himself to the insertion of a garbled report of proceedings in a court of justice. The court refused to allow the plaintiff to inspect and take copies of the original report, and of the alleged garbled statement, he having no legal interest therein. Powell v. Bradbury, 2 C. B. 541.

Necessary to Action.]—The court has power, independently of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, to compel the plaintiff to produce for the defendant's inspection a document upon which the action is brought, where the defendant is a party to the brought, where the defendant is a party to the tion for so doing. Reid v. Coleman, 2 C. & M. document and has no copy of it. Bluck v. Gom- 456; 2 D. P. C. 354; 4 Tyr. 274; 3 L. J., Ex.

A defendant had a freehold interest in premises, and was also assignee of the lease of other adjoining premises, the reversion of which was in the lessor of the plaintiff. The defendant for some time previously to and until the end of the term, occupied the freehold and leasehold pre-mises together, and, as the lessor of the plaintiff stated, had obliterated the boundaries between On the expiration of the lease the lessor of the plaintiff brought ejectment to recover a portion of the land which he claimed as parcel of the leasehold, and alleged that the defendant claimed as his freehold; and he prayed to be permitted to inspect the lease, the assignment of the lease to the defendant, and the conveyance of the freehold to the latter, alleging that he believed that the parcels in the lease and in the conveyance of the freehold would help to make out his case :- Held, that he was entitled to inspect the lease (if he had no counterpart), and also the assignment, but not the conveyance of the freehold, as that deed did not prove any part of his title to the land he sought to recover. Doe d. Arery v. Langford, 1 B. C. C. 37; 21 L. J., Q. B. 217.

Held, also, that the lessor of the plaintiff might, even independently of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, upon an affidavit of the loss or nonexistence of the counterpart, inspect the deed creating the term. Ib.

The court will not in general grant an inspection of documents, nuless they are set out in the declaration, or the one party holds them as trustee or agent for the other. Goodliff v. Fuller, 14 M. & W. 4; 2 D. & L. 661; 14 L. J., Ex. 104.

The court would not, in the exercise of its discretionary power, compel a defendant to produce certain bills of exchange, on which an action was brought, and which were set out in the declaration, in order that he might inspect or take copies of them, on an affidavit by the plaintiff, stating that the defendant had obtained them from him by undue and fraudulent means, and which the defendant negatived by affidavits in general terms. Threlfull v. Webster, 7 Moore, 559; 1 Bing. 161: 1 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 28.

A defendant is entitled under the common law jurisdiction of the court to have an inspection of letters which, in the course of a negotiation for taking a farm, he as agent for his brother had written to the plaintiff, but of which he had kept no copies, it being shewn that the claim in the action was founded upon such letters, and that the inspection was necessary for his defence thereto. Price v. Harrison, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 617; 29 L. J., C. P. 335; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1345.

Copies. - Where a defendant makes an affidavit at judges' chambers, identifying a document, which is exhibited to him only and not filed, he will be compelled to allow the plaintiff to take a copy of that document, although it is sworn to furnish a defence to the action. Telibortt v. Ambler, 7 D. P. C. 674.

Where no Counterpart.]—Where there is an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, of which there is only one part, the party who has the agreement in his possession ought. when applied to, to give the other party a copy; and he has no right to impose terms as a condi138. Where two parts of a lease were interchangeably executed, and the part in the possession of the plaintiff was lost, the court would not interfere the planners was ast, the court would not interfere to compel the defendant to permit the plaintiff to inspect and take a copy of that part which was in his possession. Woodcock v. Worthington, 2 Y. & J. 4.

Where a lease is executed by both lessor and lessee, and the lessee assigns it by way of mortgage, the lessor, having no counterpart, is entitled, on an ejectment brought for a forfeiture, to compel the mortgagee to allow an inspection, and give a copy of the lease. Doe d. Morris v. Roe, I M. & W. 207; I Gale, 367; I Tyr. & G. 545;

5 L. J., Ex. 105.

A lessee of a corporation elected to pay an increased rent, pursuant to the finding of a jury under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, and indorsed the finding of the jury on his part of the original lease. In an action for the increased rent, the lessee was compelled to produce his part of the lease for the inspection of the corporation, and to allow a copy of the indorsement to be taken; although it was admitted that the original lease was still in the admitted that the original tease was sent in the possession of the corporation, as well as the inquisition taken before the jury. Log-Book, -In an action on a charter-party against charterer, the court refused to compel the plaintiff to produce and allow the defendant to inspect the ship's log-book. Rundle v. Beavmont, 4 Bing. 537; 1 M. & P. 396; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 91.

As against a Trustee. |- The court will not compel a person not a party to the suit to produce for inspection a deed which he holds as a mere trastee, where the individual praying the inspection is not an executing party to the deed, though he claims to be interested in it, and though he may, by operation of law, be affected by it. Cooks v. Nash, 3 M. & Scott, 164; 9 Bing, 723; 2 L. J., C. P. 129.

Inspection was refused to a plaintiff in re-plevin, of a deed to which he was no party, assigning to the avowant the reversion of the demised premises. Brown v. Rose, 6 Tannt. 283.

The court will not compel a party to allow the inspection of his title-deeds, and give copies to a person who supposes that such deeds contain a reservation in his favour of manorial rights, unless it appears that the party holds the deeds as trustee for the applicant. Pickering v. Noyes, 2 D. & R. 386; I B. & C. 262.

Other Cases. ]-The court will compel a defendant in an action on a covenant in a deed, which he holds, to produce it to the plaintiff for the purposes of the cause; it matters not that the plaintiff seeks for inspection for the purpose of discovering some defect in the deed. King v. King, 4 Tannt. 666.

Where two parts of an indenture of charterparty were supposed to have been interchangeably executed, and the part of which the master of the chartered vessel had the custody was lost at sea with the ship, the court would not compel the charterer, being sued thereon, to grant inspection and a copy of the other part, for the purpose of the plaintiff's declaring with certainty. v. Brown, 1 Marsh, 610; 6 Taunt, 302.

In an action by the owner of a ship against the proprietor of goods on board, for contribution in respect of the general average loss, the defendant is entitled to an inspection of the statement of the general average, but not of the documents from which it has been drawn up. When an action on certain bills of exchange was brought against a defendant, who pleaded that he was liable, if at all, as a surety only :-Held, that he was not entitled to the inspection principal debtor, but to which deed the surety was no party. Smith v. Winter, 3 M. & W. 309: 6 D. P. C. 386; 1 H. & H. 45; 7 L. J., Ex. 79.

The court refused to set askle an order made by a judge requiring the plaintiff to permit the defendant to inspect and take a copy of a promissory note on which the action was brought, although it appeared that no special ground was shewn for the order at the time that it was made. Woodner v. Decerence, 2 Man. & G. 7.58; 3 Scott (N.B., 224; 9 D. P. C. 572; 10 L. J., C. 2075. S. P., Cottis v. Cortis, 3 M. & Scott, 819.

The court refused to compel the plaintiff to the objectivith the master an agreement upon which he was suing, on a suggestion by the defendant that the signature theoret, numporting to be his signature. Was a force by: but permitted the detendant and his witnesses to have inspection of the agreement in the hands of the plaintiffs of the property of the property of the plaintiffs (8 Scott (S.A.) 834; 1 D. & L. 333; 6 Man. & G.

The court refused to allow a plaintiff to inspect a document in the hands of the defendant, alleged by his (the defendant's) attorney to be signed by the plaintiff, and to afford a perfect defence to the action, upon an affidiavit of the plaintiff, that, if such document existed, and purported to be signed by him, the signature was a forgery. Jessel v. Millengen, 1 M. & Scott, 605. A creditor has a right to domand inspection,

A creditor has a right to demand inspection, at common law, of the written assents to a deed under the Bankruptey Act of 1861, s. 192; they being by virtue of the stante part of the deed itself. Andrew v. Pell. L. R. 2 C. P. 251.

On New Trial.]—Where a deed has been produced and read on a trial by one party, the court will oblige him to permit the other party to inspect that deed in case of a new trial. **Identity v. **Pigott, 1 D. P. C. 219; 5 M. & P. 252; 7 Bing, 400; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 120.

The court refused to admit a plaintiff to inspect and take a copy of a deed in the hands of the defendant, for the purpose of enabling him to shew cause against a rule for a new trial, 1Food v. Morewood. 2 Scott (N.R.) 204; 9 D. P. C. 44; 10 L. J. C. P. 229.

For the Purpose of Stamping Document.]—If one part of a document has been lost, the party holdling the other part, or his attorney fit he holds it, may be compelled to produce it at the stamp-office, to be stamped, though not held on any trust for the party applying. Neale v. Successy, 1D. P. C. 314; 2 C. & J. 278; 2 Tyr. 318; 1 L. J., Ex. 118.

If there are two parts of an agreement between landlord and tenant, in an action upon the agreement by a purehaser of the premises, the court will not compel the tenant to produce his part to be stamped, unless such purehaser has applied to the vendor, or used every endeavour without success to find him. Travis v. Collins, 2 C. & J. 625; 2 Tyr. 726; 1 L. J., Ex. 244.

The courts will not, at the instance of the plaintiff, compel a defendant to produce an instrument to be stamped which is in his hands, and to which the plaintiff is neither an instrumentary party nor a party in interest. Taylor v. Osborne, 4 Taunt. 150:

The court will not compel a defendant to produce, for the purpose of being stamped, an agreement between himself and a third person, although it appears by an affidavit of the third person that the act complained of by the plaintiff arose out of that agreement. Laurenea v. Howker, 5 Bing. 6; 2 M. & P. 9; 6 L. J. (o.s.) (C. P. 193.

Where a defendant surreptitionsly obtained by bissession of an unstamped agreement, excented by himself and the plaintiff (thereby preventing the plaintiff from fixing a stamp as he had intended in twenty-one days after execution), and then swore that he had lost the agreement, the court ordered that he should produce a copy in his possession to the plaintiff, and that if the plaintiff produced that eopy stamped at the trial, the defendant should be precluded from producing the original. Bousfield v. Godfrey, 5 Bing, 418, 2 M. & P. 771; 7 L. J. (0.8.) C. P. 158; 30 R. R. 683.

In an action founded upon a document in which both parties have an interest, and which was in the possession of one, but is said by him to be lost, a judge cannot order that if such party does not produce the document to be stamped, a copy duly stamped shall be read at the trial, and that the original shall not then be produced on the other stide, nor objection taken to the want of a stamp on the original. The centre rescribed such an order after it had been enforced by the judge at mist privas and made a rule of court. Lunkin v. Humitton, 16 J. B. 187.

ranco court. Bunkow V. Bunkow, 15 Q. S. 181.
The defendants contracted with the plaintiff to pay him certain sums per horse power, for all engines manufactured for them on the plaintiff's principle, the money to be paid on the contract for manufacturing the engines being entered into. In an action brought upon that contract:—Held, that the plaintiff hald a right to the production of a letter written by a third party to the defendants, containing evidence of a centract to manufacture an engine, for the purpose of lawing it stamped. Hald v. Bainbridge, 3 D. & L. 92; 14 L. J., Q. B. 289.

When Doouments not admitted to be Gennine.]—Where, in an action of contract, it appears that documents, evidencing the contract sized upon, are in the possession of the plaintiff, the defoutant is entitled to inspect them, although he does not admit their gennineness. Benjimin v. Szades, fr. R. 6 C. L. 16. And see Wilson v. Thornburg, 48 L. J., Ch. 356; L. R. 17 Eq. 517; 22 W. R. 509.

2. Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6.

a. Effect of Statute.

On Common Law Jurisdiction.]—The 14 & 15
Vice. 99, s. 6, has not taken away the jurisdiction previously possessed by courts of common law, to order the inspection and copy of documents in the hands of an adverse party. Hunt

Materiality. — The power given by the statute extends only to the production of instruments which can be shewn to be material and relevant to the proof of such issues as lies upon the applicant, and not to the production of an opponent's books for the mere purpose of enabling a party to search them, with the view of discovering anything favourable to himself. **Rayner* v. Almaese, 2 I. M. & P. 055; 21 L. J. Q. B. 68; 15 Jur. 1069. S. P., Alexeerthy or Galexorthy v. Norman, 21 L. J., Q. B. 58; 17 J. 17 U. 1061, n.

Where it reasonably appears upon affidavit that a document in the possession of one party is material in support of the case of the other pairy, or to contradict the ease set up in answer, an inspection of such a document will be granted. Scott v. Walker, 2 El. & Bl. 555; 22 L. J., Q. B. 404; 17 Jur. 916. party, or to contradict the ease set up in answer,

The powers of ordering the inspection of documents given by statute to the courts of common law, will not be exercised except for the purposes of assisting a bonâ fide suit, and will not be exercised to assist a plaintiff in another action against another person. Temperley v. Willett, 6 El. & Bl. 380; 25 L. J., Q. B. 259; 2 Jnr. (N.S.)

519 : 4 W. R. 546.

The court refused to grant an order for the inspection of a document upon an affidavit made by the defendant which stated that the plaintiff's claim was for money lent to the defendant's wife, and that the first intimation which the defendant received of such claim was after the death of his wife, but on the day of her death, when the plaintiff shewed the defendant an account-book, which the plaintiff stated contained accounts between himself and the defendant, and in which the defendant believed the sum claimed was charged against him, and that he was desirous of knowing whether the money was advanced before or after his marriage with his deceased wife, Wright v. Morrey, 11 Ex. 209; 24 L. J., Ex. 259.

Inspection will only be allowed by the court where it is reasonably shewn that the documents sought to be inspected really exist, and are relevant to the case of the party seeking the inspection. Houghton v. London and County Assurance Co., 17 C. B. (N.S.) 80. Upon a motion for an inspection of the plaintiff's books, which the defendant alleged to be necessary, for the purpose of establishing a setoff in respect of commission which he claimed on sales effected by the plaintiffs through his introduction : the court granted the rule, although the plaintiffs swore that there was no agreement to allow the defendant any commission; but held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to seal up all those parts of the books which they pledged their oath that the defendant had no interest in. Bull v. Clarke, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 851.

Title Deeds.]—Inspection, under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, can only be had in a case where a discovery could have been obtained by filing a bill in equity. Gomm v. Parratt, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 47; 26 L. J., C. P. 279; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1150; 5 W. R. 882.

A demandant in dower is not entitled to inspection of the deed under which the property out of which she claims to be endowed was conveyed away by her husband, as against a bonâ tide purchaser for value without notice of the marriage, the balance of authorities being assumed to be in favour of the position that a bill for discovery could not be sustained in such a case. Ib.

Since the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, ss. 55, 56, abolishing profert, the court will order inspection of a deed relied on by a defendant in his pleaan a deed renea on by a derendant m ins piea, though it is a disclosure of his title. Penarth Harbour Co. v. Cardiff Waterworks Co., 7 C. B. (N.S.) 816:29 L. J., C. P. 230; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 942; 1 L. T. 551; 8 W. R. 215.

When a party pleading justifies under a deed the opposite party is entitled to an inspection and copy of the deed, although he is not a party to the deed and is not interested in it. Ib.

Disclosing Case, -It is no objection to an order for the inspection of a document in the possession of a defendant, that its production will disclose his case, provided that it is satisfac-torily shewn that it also supports the plaintiff's case. London Gas Light Co. v. Chelsea Vestry, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 411; 28 L. J., C. P. 275; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 469.

Neither by statute nor at common law has the court any power to grant an order for the in-spection of documents to a plaintiff who seeks it, not in order to support his own case, but to see whether any, and if so, by what means any, defence can be made out against him. Shadwell v. Shadwell, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 679; 28 L. J., C. P. 315; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1410. S. P., Reynoldson v. Morton, 2 L. T. 462.

With a view to New Trial. ]-The court will not grant an inspection of documents produced at a trial, merely to enable the losing side to see whether they will furnish him with grounds upon which to move for a new trial. Pratty. Goswell, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 706; 3 L. T. 669.

Where Fraud alleged. |-In an action for a breach of contract in not accepting goods, to which the defendant pleaded fraud, a judge having made an order for the inspection of correspondence between the plaintiff and the consignors of the goods and the plaintiff and his brother, after the contract and breach :--Held, that the order was properly made in the exercise of the discretion of the judge. Colman v. Truman, 3 H. & N. 871; 28 L. J., Ex. 5.

b. In what Actions.

Mandamus.] — A mandamus, the object of which is to enforce a civil right, is a proceeding in aid of which, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6. a judge may grant an order for the inspection of documents by either of the litigant parties, when the return to such writ is traversed. Reg. v. Ambergate Ry., 17 Q. B. 957; 16 Jur. 777.

Breach of Promise of Marriage.]-In an action for a breach of promise of marriage, the court will grant leave to the defendant to inspect his letters to the plaintiff, written between ascertained periods, upon an affidavit that the letters relate to the matters in question in the cause, and are in the plaintiff's custody, and that the defendant is advised and believes that he has a good defence on the merits, and that the production of the letters is material and necessary to support his case. Stone v. Strange, 3. H. & C. 541, 34 L. J., Ex. 72; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 164; 11 L. T. 717; 13 W. R. 350.

In an action for breach of promise of marriage to which the defence is a simple denial of the promise, the court will on motion of the plaintiff direct an inspection and interchange of copies of the letters which have passed between the par-Chute v. Blennerhasset, 16 Ir. C. L. R.

App. ix.

But the court refused to allow the defendant to inspect his letters sent to the plaintiff, upon an affidavit that the promise, if any, was contained in the letters. Hamer v. Sowerby, 3 L. T.

Libel and Slander.]—In an action in which the declaration stated the libel to have been contained in various letters sent to several persons, the defendant, his attorney, and witnesses were allowed to inspect and take, by photograph or otherwise, fac-simile copies of the several letters and envelopes thereto. Dazeny v. Pemberton, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 628; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 891.

1008, 11 C. D. (S.S.) 202; 5 JM. (S.S.) (S.S

In an action for libel, where there is a plea of justification, inputting to the plaintiff dishonesty while in the employ of the defendant, the plaintiff will be allowed inspection of statements of accounts furnished by himself, of noneys received in the course of such employ, and of letters from himself to the defendant relating thereto, and of entries in the defendant relating thereto, and of entries in the defendant's books of moneys received from him, so far as they may be material to disprove charges contained in the plea; or if the plea is general, so far as they may relate to charges specified in particulars; and the defendant will be compelled to delives such particulars. Cultins v. Yutes, 2T L. J., Ex. 150. See Cartis v. Luttis, 8 M. & Sooti, 810.

In Insurance and Shipping Cases.]—In an action on a policy of marine hisamunee for a constructive total loss, the defendant is cuttitled to an inspection of all papers in the possession of the plaintiff relative to the matters in issue, including letters between the captain and the plaintiff. Hayner v. Ribon, 6 Ib. 8, 888; 35 L. J., Q. B. 50; 14 W. R. 81.

In an action upon a fire policy, the court made an order for the production of communications which passed between the company and their agent by whom the insurance was effected, and between the company and other offices who shared in the risk, relative to the existence my value of the property about to be insured. Wielley v. Pole, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 538; 32 L. J., C. P. 263.

But they refused to allow the plaintiff to inspect the reports and list of salvage made out for the company by their own officers. Ib.

In au action by a consignee of goods against shipowners, for damage sastanded in consequence of the unseaworthiness of the ship, the contrade an order for him to inspect and take copies of certain surveys made on a ship, in a foreign port, a general average statement, the ship-wright's bill for repairs done to the ship, the capitain's protest, and the logbook, as being dooments proximately connected with the matter in issue. David v. Lond, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 716; 3 L. T. 700; 9 W. R. 313.

c. Affidavit.

Primâ facio Casa.]—Under the statute, where an inspection is litigated, the party applying for it must shew by affidavit that an action or other proceeding is pending, and also circumstance satisficient to satisfy the court or judge that there are in the possession or under the control of the opposite party certain documents relating to such action or proceeding; a primâ facie case, calling for an answer, must at least be stated in this respect. Hant v. Hewitt, 7 Ex. 286; 21 L. J., Ex. 210: 16 Ju., 503.

To this affidavit the opponent may answer, by swearing that he has no such documents, or that they relate exclusively to his own case, or that he is for any sufficient reason privileged from producing them; or he may show on affidavit that the part encetted does not in any way relate to the plaintiffs case. Lb.

In an action against a director of a company completely registered, to receive money due for services rendered to the company, the plaintiff made affidavit, that there was, as he believed, in the possession of the company and of its directors, a book or books containing minutes of the resolutions, orders and proceedings of the directors of the company and of the committees thereof; and that he was advised that it might be necessary that the minutes or some parts thereof should be adduced on the trial of the cause as evidence on his part; that without an inspection and a copy thereof he could not safely proceed to trial; and that he had no copy thereof in his possession or control, or any certain information as to the contents :- Held, that this affidavit was insufficient to obtain an inspection of those documents under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6. Papper v. Chambers, 7 Ex. 226: 21 L. J., Ex. 81; 16 Jur. 19. Sec Sneider v. Mangino, 7 Ex. 229; 21 L. J., Ex. 121; 16 Jur. 153.

d. Costs.

Rule as to.]—There is no general rule that the costs of inspection of documents must be borne by the party seeking it, and that the costs of obtaining an order for the inspection are costs in the cuse; but the court will, in its discretion, order both the costs of the application and inspection to be, in any event, the costs in the cause of the party called upon to grant the inspection. Scilorit v. Ruck, 4 H. &. N. 468; 1 F. & F. 546; 7 W. R. 488.

e. Order to Produce and Inspect.

Extracts.]—Under a judge's order to produce papers and give copies, it is sufficient to give extracts of those parts of letters which are relevant to the subject. Clifford v. Taylor, 1 Taunt. 167.

Conclusiveness of Affidavit.]—When an inspection of documents is asked, the court is not bound by the denial of the party in whose possession they are that they relate to the case of the adversary; but if the court can collect from the whole of the materials before them that, in fact, the documents, although they may relate to the subject-matter of the suit, are not such as good to establish the case of the party asking inspection, they will refuse inspection. Chartered Bask of Isdain, Australia, and Chinav. Lioh, 4 B. & S. 73; 32 L. J., Q. B. 300; 8 L. T. 454; 11 W. R. 830.

Place.]—Where an application is made for inspection of documents under the statute, a place for the inspection should be named. Rogers v.

Turner, 21 L. J., Ex. S.

Issue need not be joined before the order is g applied for. Ib.

Form of rule to inspect. See Scatt v. Walker,

3. UNDER 17 & 18 VICT. C. 125, S. 50.

When Granted. - The court will not order a defendant to answer on affidavit what documents he has in his possession or power where he has furnished the plaintiff with an abstract of an account, and informed him that it was taken from a particular book which contained all the entries relating to the matters in dispute between them. Bray v. Finch, 1 H. & N. 468; 26 L. J., Ex. 91; 5 W. R. 148.

At what Stage.]-The court has no power to grant a rule to inspect documents when no cause or proceeding in court has been commenced. Saddlers' Co., In re. 31 L. J., Q. B. 62: 10 W. R. 87.

Except under special circumstances the court will not, where by the indorsement on the writ of summons it appears that the action is to recover principal and interest on a mortgage deed, order the plaintiff, before declaration, to allow the de-fendant inspection of the deed; for non constat that the plaintiff may declare upon the deed, and it may turn out that the application is premature. The fact that the defendant executed the deed under the advice of the plaintiff's attorney, without any copy of it, and is ignorant of its effect or contents, is not sufficient to justify the application at so early a stage in the cause. Jones v. Hargreaves, 29 L. J., Ex. 368.

An application for the discovery of documents may be made by a defendant before plending. Forshaw v. Lewis, 10 Ex. 712; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 263.

Against Directors of Companies. - In an action against a company, the court, or a judge, has power under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 50, to order a director of the company to allow inspection of their doenments in his possession. Lucharme v. Quartz Rock Muriposa Gold Mining Co., 1 H. & C. 134; 31 L. J., Ex. 335; 6 L. T. 502; 10 W. R. 565.

An affidavit of a director, in answer to an attachment for disobedience, of such an order, stating that he had not, on the day the order was made, or at any time since, the documents in his possession, custody, or power; and that ever since the order was made it had been out of his power to comply with it, is insufficient; and the court ordered the director to be examined vivâ voce before a master. S. C., 31 L. J., Ex. 508: 10 W. R. 799.

Against Attorney of Company. ]-The aftorney of a body corporate is not an officer thereof within the meaning of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 50, and therefore cannot be compelled to make a discovery of documents in an action to which the body corporate is a party. Brown v. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co., 43 L. J., C. P. 112.

Affidavit to Obtain.] - An application for a discovery of documents must be inade upon an auxiliary to relief or remedy at law. Lempster affidavit of the party to the cause. Christopherson v. Latinga, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 809; 33 L. J., C. P. 121; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 180; 9 L. T. 688; 12 W. R. 410.

An affidavit by his attorney is not sufficient, even though the party is absent beyond seas. Herschfield v. Clark, 11 Ex. 712; 25 L. J., Lx. 113 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 239.

But, in the case of a corporation aggregate, the

v. G. W. Ry., 16 C. B. (N.S.) 761; 33 L. J., C. P. 307; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 804; 10 L. T. 722; 12 W. R. 1059.

An affidavit of belief that some documents (as letters or entries) are in the possession of the opposite party, which relate to the subject-matter of the snit, and of which it is material that the applicant should have a discovery, is insufficient, but the affidavit must describe the documents, that the court may see that they are documents "to the production of which he is entitled for discovery or otherwise"; and it must state or shew reasonable grounds for belief that such documents are in the possession or power of the opposite party. Thompson v. Robson, 2 H. & N. 412; 26 L. J., Ex. 367; 5 W. R. 728. S. P., Hewett v. Webb, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1189; 5 W. R. 73.
To entitle a party to discovery he must shew by affidavit that his adversary is in possession of some one document to the production of which he is entitled. Erans v. Louis, L. R. 1 C. P. 656. The court will not, in an action against an attorney for negligence, make an order for the production of his books, upon a mere suggestion of the client's belief that they contain entries relating to the matters complained of. Ib. Upon an application for discovery the affidavits should identify the documents of which discovery is sought; a mere vague suggestion that some documents exist will not suffice. Woolley v. Pole, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 538; 32 L. J., C. P. 263.

In order to support an application to inspect, it is sufficient if the party applying shows that the documents sought to be inspected are in the possession, custody, or control of the other party, and are material to substantiate his own case; the effect of the evidence to prove that case being a matter to be decided at the time of the trial, and forming no ground for determining whether the inspection should or should not be ordered. Riccard v. Inclosure Commissioners, 4 El. & Bl. 329; 8 C. L. R. 119; 24 L. J., Q. B. 49; 1 Jur-(N.S.) 495; 3 W. R. 113.

Setting up Privilege.]—It is no answer to an application for an order for a discovery of documents that they are privileged from production; if such is the fact, that must be shewn in the affidavit made in obedience to the order. Firshaw v. Lewis, 10 Ex. 712; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 263.

Equitable Jurisdiction not affected. ] - The 50th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, under which the production of documents ean be enforced by summons, does not affect the jurisdiction of courts of equity. Makepeace v. Rogers, 5 N. R. 499.

III. PRIVATE DOCUMENTS IN WHICH APPLICANT HAS AN INTEREST.

Heir or Issue in Tail.]-Heir in tail refused discovery of settlement unless he wants it as v. Pomfret, Ambl. 154; Dick. 238.

But if for purposes of mortgage then he may have discovery. Or marriage. Ib.

Negative plea that plaintiff is not heir, as alleged, should be accompanied by an answer to facts charged as evidence of plaintiff's title, and, therefore, where the bill charged that defendant was in possession of deeds and writings, to prove the plaintiff's pedigree, he was entitled to ffidavit may be made by its attorney. Kingsford | discovery, though not of all deeds and writings.

in defendant's custody or power, of all such deeds and writings as, on the face of them, connected the plaintiff with the heirship, and to a full and circumstantial answer so far as the defendant knew, or had heard and believed, the particular pedigree set out in the plaintiff's bill. Nolan v. Shannou, 1 Moll. 168.

Where the heir admits by his answer, that he is testator's heir, and that the will is duly executed, and to the purport set forth in the bill, he shall not be entitled to an inspection of the title deeds. Patter v. Patter, 3 Atk. 719; 1 Ves. 274 : Ambl. 98.

An heir-at-law has no equity except to remove incumbrances in the way of his legal right; he cannot call for an inspection of deeds in possession of the devisees. Shaftesbury (Lady) v. Arrow-smith, 4 Ves. 66: 4 R. R. 181.

Bill by heir in tail against devisees; on motion an inspection was ordered of all deeds of settlement admitted to be in the possession of the defendants creating estates in tail general, but no farther. 1b. Every heir has a right to inquire by what means and under what deed he is disinherited, and before he has established his title at law, he may go into equity to remove terms out of the way which would prevent his recovering there, and may also have a production and inspection of deeds and writings in equity. Harrison v.

Southeate, 1 Atk, 539 A peer disinherited by his ancestor is entitled to the favour of the court, and on bill and answer to have the family deeds brought before the master, in order to see whether anything can be discovered for his advantage. Suffolk (Earl) v.

Howard, 2 P. W. 177. Bill of discovery in aid of an ejectment by a plaintiff, claiming as heir-at-law, against the devisees of a feme covert, alleging the absence of any power of appointment in such feme covert, or that it was never duly exercised by her. The only issue raised on the pleadings being on the validity of the appointment by the devise; the plaintiff was held not to be entitled to the production of the deeds under which the defendants alleged that the power of appointment was given to their devisor, although it appeared that by such deeds the estate was limited to her heirs and assigns in default of appointment. Benutt v. Glossop, 3 Hare, 578.

The right of the heir-at-law, and that of the heir in tail, to production of documents upon bill for discovery in aid of an action of ejectment, distinguished. Rumbold v. Forteath, 2 Kay & J. 748; 3 Jnr. (N.S.) 657.

The principle upon which, in such a suit, the heir in tail is entitled to inspect deeds of settlement creating estates in tail has no application to a suit by the heir-at-law. Ib.

But in a suit of this nature the heir-at-law is entitled to production of all such parts of deeds and writings admitted by the defendant as relate to or tend to shew his pedigree. Ib.

Form of an order for this purpose. A bill alleged the plaintiff to be entitled under wills which it set out as tenant in tail; it alleged that the defendants claimed under the same will as tenants in fee. The question as raised by the pleading was one of pure con-struction of these wills. The bill also alleged the plaintiff's pedigree as tenant in tail. The answer ignored the pedigree, but admitted the possession of documents tending to evidence that pedigree :- Held, that the plaintiff was entitled cannot compel production. Ib.

to production of them. Wright v. Verna 1 Drew, 344; 22 L. J., Ch. 447; 1 W. R. 138. Wright v. Vernon.

The plaintiff is entitled to a production of such papers only in which he has a common interest with defendant, Burton v. Neville, 2 Cox, 242.

Tenant for Life and Remainderman. ]plaintiff claimed, by virtue of a remainder in tail expectant on the tenant in tail's dying without issue, and was the heir male of the family: the defendants were sisters and heirs general of the tenant in tail and by their answer shewed that their brother, the tenant in tail, suffered a recovery, declaring the use to himself in fee, and referred to the deeds in their enstedy; the court ordered, before the hearing, the defendants to leave with their clerk in court the deeds making the tenant to the precipe, and leading the uses of the recovery. Semble, bill does not lie by purchaser from contingent remainderman, for inspection of titledeeds in hands of tenant for life. Noel v. Ward,

1 Madd, 322 : 16 R. R. 229. A tenant for life in remainder expectant on the death without issue male of a defendant, a tenant for life in possession aged about fifty-nine and numerried, having incumbered his reversionary interest, applied to the defendant for particulars of the estates devised by the will which created the settlement, and of the estates since purchased. The will contained devises and bequests of freehold and leasehold estates in strict settlement, and directed the purchase, with the residue of the personalty of other freehold estates, to be settled to the same uses. The defendant refusing to produce the deeds, on the ground that it was undesirable that facilities should be afforded for any further incumbrance of the reversionary life-interest, the bill was filed for an account, and for production of the deeds and discovery. The defendant demurred to the latter portion of the bill, but the demurrer was overruled. He then filed an answer setting forth a list of the deeds, but without giving particulars of the property. The interrogatories had asked for a statement of the acreage rental and particulars. Exceptions to the answer allowed. Beynon v. Morris, 10 L. T. 710.

When the title of a remainderman is clear, the court will, at his instance, compel the remainderman to produce the title deeds; but if his title is not clear, the court will not, incidentally, decide in favour of the remainderman's title to the estate, in a suit merely for the production of the title deeds. Pennell v. Dysart (Earl), 27 Beav. 542.

Any remainderman whose estate is vested, may maintain a bill against the tenant for life mannam a bu against the tenant for fife for the sole purpose of production and inspection of the muniments of title. Ducis v. Dysact (Eurl), 20 Beav, 405; 24 L. J., Ch. 381; 1 Jur. (8.8), 743; 3 Eq. R. 599; 3 W. R. 393.

If the tenant for life suggests that the purpose for which production is required is improper, the onus is on him to shew it. 1b.

This right, however, only exists when the title of the remainderman is undisputed; for, if there is a reasonable cause for litigating his title, he ment, brings a bill for discovery of the deed, and posited with the clerk of the peace, among the it appearing the entail was discontinued, the court would not relieve him. Kelley v. Berry, 2 s. 8. Rex v. Staffordshire JJ., 1 N. & P. 260; 6 Vern. 35.

Testator devised a term for years, and all his personal estate to A., an infant; and if A. died during his infancy, and his mother should die without any other child, then to B. A. died during his infancy, though the mother was living and might have a child, yet the court aided B. the devisee over, by directing an account and discovery of the estate, in order to secure it in case the contingency should happen. Studholme v. Hodgson, 3 P. W. 300.

Landlord and Tenant. ]-A party interested in documents in the custody of his adversary is entitled to their production. Inman v. Hodgson, 1 Y. & J. 28.

Whenever a plaintiff has established an interest in any instrument in the hands of the defendant, he is in general entitled to a production of it; and in this case, the court thought the plaintiff had established a sufficient interest in the documents required, and ordered a production of them. Smith v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 Cox, 363.

The landlord having lost his counterpart has a right to a discovery from his tenant, and the tenant refusing to permit a copy of his lease to be made on the landlord's application, and at his expense, shall pay the costs of the bill of discovery. Perry v. Newenham, 1 Moll. 72.

As to what discovery a landlord is entitled to from his lessee as to the management of the rrom ins lessee as to the management of the property, particularly in the case of mines, &c. Taylor v. Rundell, Cr. & Ph. 104. Affirming II Sim. 391; 1 Y. & C. C. C. 128; 1 Ph. 222.

A bill of discovery was filed by the assignee of the lessor against the assignce of the lessee in aid of an action at law on the covenants in the lease. The latter had the lease and assignment in his possession, but stated that he had the property by way of security, and he objected to produce them in the absence of the party entitled to the equity of redemption :- Held, that he was bound to produce them for the plaintiff's inspection. Balls v. Margrave, 4 Beav. 119.

A court of equity will not compel tenant to make a discovery which may invalidate his title in a court of law. Lowther v. Troy, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 192.

If a tenant holds lands of his own, together with demised lands, and allows the boundaries to become confused, he is bound (if necessary) to produce his own title deeds to elucidate the matter. Southwell (Chapter) v. Thompson, 6 L. J., Ch. 196,

2. COURT ROLLS OF MANOR.

Inspection-In what Actions. ]-A plaintiff who claims common appurtenant over the waste of a manor is not necessarily entitled to producthe manor, where the defendant denies that they contain anything supporting the claim. Minet v. Morgan, L. R. 11 Eq. 284; 24 L. T. 120; 19

W. R. 374

A plaintiff filed a bill in equity to establish a right of common of vicinage over a common within a manor of which the defendant was lord. By his answer the defendant denied the plaintiff's right:-Held, that he was entitled to production of the records of, and documents relating to, courts baron held within the manor, to the production of accounts and memoranda relating to the digging of gravel and cutting of turf on the common, and to have a list of the documents relating to the title of the lord of the manor: but not to have such documents produced, the defendant stating by affidavit that they related exclusively to his own title as lord of the manor, and did not in any way tend either to establish the rights claimed or to defeat the defence to the snit. 1b.

In a snit by the owner of lands adjoining a manor to establish a right of common appurtenant to his tenement :- Held, that the defendant, though not a tenant of the manor, was entitled to require the production of all documents which might support his claim. Minet v.

Morgan, 18 W. R. 1015,

In a snit by plaintiffs against the lord of a manor, claiming as freeholders a tract of pasture or sheep-walk with the minerals and usual incidents of the ownership in fee simple of freehold land, and expressly denying the existence of any rights of ownership in the lord over this sheepwalk, where the defendant by his answer stated that the plaintiffs were tenants of the manor, and as such had exclusive right of pasturage over the sheen-walk, but claimed as lord of the manor to be absolutely entitled to the soil of this sheep-walk, subject only to the plaintiffs' right of pasturage:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an inspection of the rolls of the manor. Owen v. Wynn, 9 Ch. D. 29; 38 L. T. 623; 26 W. R. 644-C. A.

Parties Entitled, ]—A resident inhabitant of a town corporation has a right to inspect and take copies of a by-law of the corporation, pending an action against him for a breach of the same, although he is not a corporator. **Harrison v.** Williams, 4. D. & R. 820.

A stranger to a corporation has no right to a rule to inspect its books. Hodges v. Atkins, 3 Wils. 398; 2 W. Bl. 877.

Pending an action by a corporation for tells, the court will not grant leave to inspect the corporation muniments on the application of a stranger to the corporation. Southampton v. Graces, 8 Term Rep. 590; 5 R. R. 480.

In an action for tolls due to a comporation, the defendant who had acquired the chameter of a corporator after the cause of action arose, but before trial, has no right to inspect the corporation books, and must still be considered as a foreigner quotal this action. Bristal v. Visger, 8 D. x R. 434.

The court will not grant an application by members of a corporate body for a mandamus to inspect the documents of the corporation, unless it is shewn that such inspection is necessary with reference to some specific dispute or question depending, in which the parties applying are interested; and the inspection will then only be granted to such extent as may be necessary for the particular occasion. Raw v. Merchant University of the particular occasion.

Mandanus to compel corporation to allow inspection of charters and grants. Stafford Corporation, Exparte, 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 41.

Mode of compelling Inspection.]—A mandamus lies to permit a resident inhabitant of a corporate town to inspect and take copies of a by-law of the corporation, pending an action against him for a breach of the same, although he is not a corporator. Harrison v. Williams, 4 D. & R. 820

The rule is absolute in the first instance for an inspection of the books of a corporation, where a quo warranto is depending. Rex v. Travavnion, 2 Chit. 366.

If an affidavit in support of the rule for such an information omits a material fact which is stated in the affidavit filed on the other side, the latter affidavit may be read by the prosecutor in support of his rule. Rew v. Mein, 3 Term Rep. 596.

Object of the Secrey Clause.]—The object of the secrecy clause continued in bank deeds is only to prevent vexations attempts to pry improperly into the affairs of the concern, and wherever a proper case is made out, a court of equity will not hesitate to make an order for inspection, non obstante the secrecy clause. Birmingham Banking Company, In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 150; 15 L. T. 203.

Relating to Charitable Trust.]—A corporation as trustees for a charity shall not be obliged to produce their books relating to the trust, though they submitted by their answer to produce them as the court shall direct. Att.-Gen. v. Coventry (Chio) Buth 290

4. BOOKS OF CORPORATIONS AND COMPANIES.

Inspection under Companies Clauses Act, 1845.]—By the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, 8 Vict. c. 16, s. 117, it is enacted that the company's books when bulanced, together with the page more than attacked, conjunct with the balance sheet, shall for the prescribed periods, and if no periods he prescribed, for fourteen days precious to each ordinary meeting, and for one mouth thereafter, he open for the inspection of the shareholders at the principal office or place of business of the company; but the shareholders shall not be entitled at any time, except during the periods aforeseid, to demand inspection of the books, unless in virtue of a written order signed by three of the directors. For s. 119 see Reg. v. London and St. Kutharine's Docks Co., infra.

By Shareholders.]—By the Companies Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16), s. 115, the directors are ordered to keep full and true accounts of all sums of money expended on behalf of the company. By s. 119, the directors are required to appoint a bookkeeper to enter the accounts in books to be kept for the purpose, and every such bookkeeper shall permit any shareholder to inspect such books and take copies and extracts therefrom. Under these provisions a shareholder is not entitled to inspection of the books of a public company unless he satisfies the court that he requires such an inspection for a bona fide purpose, and not out of mere idle curiosity. Reg. v. London and St. Katharine's Docks Co., 44 L. J., Q. B. 4; 31 L. T. 588; 23 W. R. 136.

Therefore, where a shareholder applied for a mandamus calling on the directors to permit him to inspect the books without shewing that he had any definite object in view beyond looking at the accounts, the court refused the application. Ib.

A canal company was incorporated under acts of parliament which provided for inspection by the shareholders of the company's books and documents. A shareholder of nine years' standing was solicitor to a waterworks company, who had obtained a decree in chancery against the canal company, and it was under consideration whether the company should appeal. This shareholder applied to the secretary, without stating his object, for inspection of the register of shareholders, and was refused. Upon a rule for mandamus by the shareholder to obtain this inspection, the secretary stated on affidavit, and it was not contradicted, that the prosecutor made his application for inspection in the interest of his clients, and not for any purpose or in the interest of the company or of any member of the company as such; that his object was to canvass the shareholders and endeavour to persuade them to oppose the appeal.—Held, not sufficient reason for discharging the rule.

Reg. v. Wilts and Berks Canal Navigation, 29 L. T. 922.

The right given to holders of stock and debentures by the Companies Clauses Acts, 1845 and 1863, of inspecting the registers of a company, is not confined to an inspection of the names and addresses only of the holders of the stock and debentures. Holland v. Dickson, 57 L. J., Ch. 502; 37 Ch. D. 669; 58 L. T. 845; 36 W. R. 320.

And it may be exercised without assigning any reason. Ib. The fact that a person has taken his stock in a for the purpose of serving the interests of such company, does not deprive him of this statutory right. Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands Ry., 57 L. J., Ch. 615; 38 Ch. D. 92; 59 L. T. 117; 36 W. R. 401-C. A.

— By Creditor of Company. ]—The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 36, gives a judgment creditor of a company a right to inspect the list of shareholders if he cannot have execution against the company. This right may be enforced by rule of court or order of a judge. Meader v. Isle of Wight Ferry Co., 9 W. R. 750.

Inspection by Party sued by Company. ]-In an action by a company against an alleged shareholder for calls under a winding-up order, the court will uphold an order of a judge giving liberty to him after plea to inspect the registry of shares, and the allotment and agenda books in the possession of the company. Lancashire Cotton Spinning Co. v. Greaturer, 14 L. T. 290. Lancashire

The granting such an order is purely in the discretion of the judge, and the court will not review his exercise of such discretion unless the court clearly sees that the order was wrong. Ib.

Persons sucd by a corporation for making, while directors, false entries in the books of the corporation, are not entitled to inspect the books of the corporation; at all events, not without an affidavit that such inspection is necessary to their defence. Imperial Gas Co. v. Clarke, 7 Bing. 95; 4 M. & P. 727; 9 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 28.

Production on Cross-Examination of Secretary of Company. ]—A petition for winding up a company having been presented by a shareholder, the secretary filed an affidavit in opposition to the petition, and was cross-examined by the petitioner before a special examiner. On his cross-examination, he was called on to produce the books of the company, which be refused to do. Malins, V.-C., accordingly, on the application of the petitioner, made an order, that the company, by their secretary, should produce before the special examiner, upon the cross-examination of the secretary, the books and papers which they had had notice to produce :-Held, that the petitioner had a right to the production of the company's books and papers on the cross-examination of the secretary for the purpose of testing his evidence, but for no other purpose; and that the order of Malins, V.-C., was right both in form and substance. Emma Silver Mining Co., In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 455; L. R. 10 Ch. 194; 31 L. T. 816; 23 W. R. 300.

The power of the Court of Chancery to make an order for the production of documents, for the purpose of their being put into the hands of a witness who is being cross-examined in order to test his evidence, is the same as that of a common law court at a trial at uisi prius. Ih.

Rights under Special Act. ]-A railway act contained several clauses relating to inspection of the books. In an action for ealls, the defendant applied for an inspection to enable him to plead, which inspection was not directed to be given by any of the clauses. The court refused to compel the company to permit the inspection required. Birmingham, Bristol, and Thames Junction Ry. v. White, 4 P. & D. 649; 1 Q. B. 282; 2 Railw. Cas. 863; 10 L. J., Q. B. 121; 5 Jur. 800.

A canal act provided, that "proprietors, landcompany at the instance of a rival company, and owners, and others interested in the navigation," should have a right to inspect the books of the ! company :-Held, that a creditor by bond was a company interested in the navigation within the spirit of the enactment. Pontet v. Basingstoke Canal Co., 2 Bing. (N.C.) 370; 2 Scott, 543; 5 L. J., C. P. 153.

Under Deed of Settlement.]—The deed of settlement of a company formed and completely registered under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, and after-wards under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, contained the following clause: "The books wherein the proceedings of the company are recorded shall be kept at the principal offices of the company, and shall be open to the inspection of the share-holders every day of the year." The deed provided that separate books should be kept of the minutes of the proceedings at the general meetings of the shareholders, and of the minutes of the proceedings of the directors. A rule having been obtained for a mandamus to the company to grant to a shareholder inspection of the books of the minutes of the proceedings of the com-pany :-Held, that the clause gave shareholders only power to inspect the books and minutes of the proceedings at the general meetings, not the books of minutes of the proceedings of the directors. Reg. v. Mariquita Mining Co., 1 El. & El. 289; 28 L. J., Q. B. 67; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 725; 7 W. R. 98.

Commissioners of Sewers. ]-Where commissioners of sewers connected and imposed a joint rate upon two divisions or levels formerly drained and rated separately, and an owner of property in one of them disputed the legality of the joint rate, and gave notice to the commissioners that he should move for a certiorari to quash it, the court refused an application for a mandamus to the commissioners to produce for inspection all commissions, plans, rates, presentments, decrees, accounts, proceedings, and minutes of proceedings relating to the district or any part thereof. Reg. v. Tower Humlets Sewers Commissioners, 3 Q. B. 670; 3 G. & D. 92; 13 L. J., Q. B. 12; 6 Jur. 1059.

Provisional Committees. ]-In an action by an allottee of railway shares against a member of the provisional committee, to recover his deposit, the court ordered that the plaintiff should have an inspection and copy of the subscribers' agreement and parliamentary contract, which both the plaintiff and the defendant had signed, and which were in the hands of the solicitors of the company, the plaintiff's affidavit stating that an inspection of them was necessary to him for the purpose of framing his case, and the defendant not shewing that they were not within his power or control. Steadman v. Arden, 15 M. & W. 587; 4 D. & L. 16; 15 L. J., Ex. 310; 10 Jur. 553. S. P., Ley or Lee v. Barlow, 5 Railw. Cas. 1; 5 D. & L. 375; 1 Ex. 800; 17 L. J., Ex. 105.

In an action by the secretary against a provisional committee man of a projected railway company, for arrears of salary, a judge ordered that the defendant should be at liberty to inspect and take copies from the minute-book of the company containing resolutions of the managing committee, referred to in the plaintiff's particulars as the foundation of his claim. The court refused to rescind the order, the plaintiff not satisfactorily shewing that it was not in his power to comply with it. Shaw v. Holmes, 3 B. 952.

Canal Committee. ]-Where a canal act gives the control over the company's affairs to a committee, and authorises every proprietor to inspect the books in which the committee is directed to enter accounts, &c., a mandamus will not be granted to compel the company to permit a proprietor to inspect the books, where there has been no refusal by the committee, although there has been a direct refusal by the clerk, in whose possession the books are. Rev v. W. Canal Co., 5 N. & M. 344; 3 A. & E. 477.

Costs.]-Upon a rule for a mandamus to inspect the register of a company by one of its proprietors, the company opposed on the ground that the applicant was prompted by improper motives. Although the majority made the rule absolute, one of the court expressed his opinion that the object of the application was not justifiable, and dissented from the decision :- Held, that this was no ground for setting aside the ordinary rule, by which costs are given to the successful party. Reg. v. Wilts and Berks Canal Navigation, 30 L. T. 498.

In Winding-up.]—A clause in articles of association, directing that the books of account (thereby directed to be kept) should, subject to any reasonable restrictions as to the time and manner of inspecting the same that might be imposed by the company in general meeting, be open to the inspection of the sharcholders during the hours of business, is no longer applicable when the company is under a voluntary liquidation. Yorkshire Fibre Co., In re, L. R. 9 Eq. 650; 18 W. R. 541.

____ Liquidator.]—An official liquidator, in respect of claim by alleged shareholders in his company to be released from their liability as shareholders, is in the position of a defendant to a suit commenced against the company for that purpose; and he is not privileged to refuse, on examination, to produce documents drawn up by him, or to answer questions as to which a defendant would not be privileged. The obligation to answer is a wholly different question from the question how far the answer is to be evidence at the hearing. Barned's Banking Co., In re, 36 L. J., Ch. 262; L. R. 2 Ch. 350; 16 L. T. 249; 15 W. R. 524.

When an official liquidator represents the company in a suit against strangers, or in a proceeding in a winding-up against a contributory, the adverse party has a right to the same discovery from him as from an ordinary litigant. Contract Corporation, In re, Gooch's Case, 41 L. J., Ch. 338; L. R. 7 Ch. 207; 26 L. T. 177; 20 W. R.

But when the question is whether a past shareholder is to be placed on list B. and, if so what is the extent of his liability, that being a question which does not concern the company, the official liquidator is only bound to afford equal facilities to the shareholder and the creditors, but not to make discovery at the instance of either party. *Ib.*On an application that the official liquidator might be ordered to make the usual affidavit as to documents in his possession :-Held, that such an order ought not to be made, for that the official liquidator, being an officer of the court, is not, even in proceedings under s. 165, in the position of an ordinary litigant, and will not, in the absence of special circumstances, be required session, mough he is count to produce to the massast for an escape, are county of the habeas requires to see. Banker's Books. ]action against the Bank of England for refusing to pay the dividends upon stock which had stood in her name in the books of the Bank of England. and their refusal being grounded on an alleged transfer of that stock from her name, the court made a rule absolute for allowing her to inspect the entry in the transfer book of the bank which transferred that stock. Foster v. Bankof England, 8 Q. B. 689; 15 L. J., Q. B. 212; 10 Jur. 872.

A banker with whom a contributory has formerly kept an account may be summoned under the Companies Act, 1862, s. 115, and compelled to produce his books relating to the contributory's account, and to give all information in his power touching his affairs. Shares in a company which was in course of winding-up had been transferred from C. to N. without consideration, G, being the active party in the transaction, and the subsequent calls had been paid with moneys supplied by G. The liquidators, considering it material to trace these moneys, applied for a summons calling upon the secretary of a banking company with which G. kept his account to attend for examination, and produce all books containing entries as to G.'s affairs :- Held, that the summons might issne, it being left to the witness, upon his attending the snumons, to take any objections he might have to the inspection of the books. Smith, Knight & Co., In re, L. R. 4 Ch. 421; 20 L. T. 206; 17 W. R. 510.

Upon a reference to the master, it being necessary (to enable him to make his report) to have the evidence of entries in the books of the Bank of England, the master is bound to grant his certificate, in order to justify the bank in permitting an inspection, rather than compel the parties, by his refusal, to file their bill for a discovery. Brace v. Ormond, 1 Mer.

A person having brought an effecting a purchase was brought against a sworn broker of the city of London, who is bound to enter in a book all contracts made by him. The court granted a rule to compel the broker to produce this book to the plaintiff, in order that he might take a copy. Browning v. Alwyn, 7 B. & C. 204; 9 D. & R. 801.

> Answer in Chancery. ]—An answer to a former bill, for the same matter, though not filed, is to be deemed a public document, unless the contrary be shown; if, therefore, it relate to the plaintiff's title in an existing suit, the defendant, in whose enstody it is, will be ordered to produce it unless he can swear that it was not intended to be used as an answer. Knight v. Waterford (Marquis), 2 Y. & Coll. 37.

B. INTERROGATORIES.

I. THE PRESENT PRACTICE.

See Ord. XXXI.

1. ORDER FOR.

Summons for—Striking out for Irrelevancy—Grounds for Application.]—On the hearing of a summons before the chief clerk for leave to deliver interrogatories under Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Ord, XXXI, r. I. he may consider the general relevancy or irrelevancy of the proposed interrogatories, and may, if a copy of the interrogatories is produced to him on the summons, strike out such as are irrelevant; but he is not at liberty to settle or amend, in the way of condensation, the form of any particular interrogatory that is in itself relevant. Sucabey v. Dovey, 55 L. J., Ch. 631; 32 Ch. D. 352; 54 L. T. 368; 34 W. R. 510.

Upon an application for leave to exhibit interrogatories under Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. XXXI. r. l. it is not necessary for the applicant, nor can be be required, to produce a copy of the proposed interrogatories; and if produced to the chief clerk on the hearing of the summons he has no right to settle them, or to decide upon the relevancy or irrelevancy of specific interrogatories and allow or disallow them accordingly. All that is necessary to sup-port the summons is a statement by the applicant-not necessarily in writing-as to the general nature and scope of the proposed interrogatories, so as to enable the court to decide whether he is entitled to the whole or any part of what he asks. Martin v. Spicer, 32 Ch. D. 592; 54 L. T. 598; 34 W. R. 589.

Time for Application. - See post, col. 808 et seq.

Leave given though Tendency to Criminate.]
-Leave to administer interrogatories ought not to be refused on the ground that it is plain from the nature of the ease that they must necessarily criminate the party interrogated, who eannot answer them without admitting that he has been guilty of felony. Harrey v. Lorekin, 54 L. J., P. I: 10 P. D. 122; 33 W. R. 188—C. A.

Service of .] -- Service of an order to answer interrogatories upon the solicitor of a party is, under Ord, XXXI. r. 21, sufficient service to found an application for attachment :- So held, where the party in default had in fact notice of the order. Mulcaster, In re, Dalston v. Nanson, 47 L. J., Ch. 609; 26 W. R. 484.

An order to answer interrogatories, as also the notice of motion for an attachment in default. having been served on the solicitor of the defaulting parties:—Held, that, for the purposes of Ord. XXXI. r. 21, discovery includes the answering of interrogatories, and that the service on the solicitor was sufficient service. 1b.

An order upon a party in a suit to answer interrogatories need not be personally served. Little v. Roberts, 30 L. T. 367.

2. IN WHAT MATTERS.

Suit for Nullity of Marriage.]—In a suit for nullity of marriage, the court has power to give leave to administer interrogatories between the parties to the suit; for suits of that kind were formerly within the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, which had power to allow interrogatories to be administered between the parties. and now all the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts as to suits for nullity of marriage (including matters of practice and procedure,) is vested in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division. And, further, even if the power to allow interrogatories to be administered between the parties did not otherwise exist, it would be conferred upon the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873; for at the time of passing that statute the superior courts of common law and the Court of Chancery had power to allow interrogatories to be administered between the parties to a snit; and by s. 16, all the jurisdiction of those courts, including the ministerial powers and authorities incident thereto, was transferred to and vested in the High Court of Justice, and by s. 23 the jurisdiction transferred to the High Court may (so far as regards procedure and practice) be exercised in the same manner as it might have been exercised by any of the courts whose jurisdiction has been transferred. Harvey v. Lovekin, 54 L. J., P. 1; 10 P. D. 122; 33 W. R. 188—C.A.

In a suit for nullity of marriage the court has power to order interrogatories. Euston v. Smith, 9 P. D. 57 : 32 W. R. 596.

Petition for Revocation of Patent. ]-A petition was presented under s. 26 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, to procure the revocation of a patent, on certain grounds, which were stated in the particulars of objections. A summons was subsequently taken out, in pursuance of leave specially reserved, for directions as to the further conduct of the petition, asking that the petitioners might be at liberty to deliver to the respondent interrogation; and (2) that they should be at liberty tories, or, in the alternative, that the respondent to appear at the trial of the action, and oppose answer to the petition. The question was whether the practice as to delivering interrogatories applied to a petition of this kind:—Held, that interrogatories might be delivered upon the usual terms of making a deposit. Haddan's Patent, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 126; 51 L. T. 190; 33 W. R. 96.

Action for Penalties. ]-See post, cols. 901 et See further, infra 6, and post, cols, 853 et seg.

3. BY AND TO WHAT PERSONS.

Between Plaintiffs and Co-plaintiffs and Defendants and Co-defendants.] - Discovery by way of interrogatories may be allowed to a plaintiff from a co-plaintiff, or to a defendant from a co-defendant, in cases in which there may be rights to be adjusted between them respectively. Shaw v. Smith, 56 L. J., Q. B. 174; 18 Q. B. D. 193; 56 L. T. 40; 35 W. R. 188-C. A.

Discovery cannot be allowed to a defendant from a co-defendant with a view to show that the co-defendant and not the defendant is liable to the plaintiff, as where a defendant, sucd for subsidence under the plaintiff's land, proposes to inspect the mines of a co-defendant in adjoining land. Brown v. Watkins (16 Q. B. D. 125) ex-

By Party brought in.-To original Plaintiff.] M. commenced an action against K. K. delivered a defence and counter-claim, to which M. and I. were defendants. I. applied for leave to exhibit interrogatories for the examination of M .:-Held, that as I. was not a defendant in the original action, and I. and M. were co-defendants in the counter-claim, they were not opposite parties, and that I. had no right to interrogate M. Molloy v. Kilby, 15 Ch. D. 162; 29 W. R. 127-C. A.

By Third Party to Plaintiff.]—Persons who are served by a defendant with a third party notice are not thereby made defendants within the definition of the word in the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 100, nor do they become defendants by putting in a defence. But where persons had been served with a third party notice by the defendant for the purpose of claiming an indemnity, and had obtained an order (1) that the question of indemnity should be tried after the trial of the action; and (2) that they should be at liberty to appear at the trial of the action and oppose the plaintiff's claim so far as they were affected thereby, and for that purpose to put in evidence and cross-examine witnesses :-Held, that the third parties had been placed by the order in the position of defendants, and had a right to examine the plaintiff by interroga-tories under Order XXXI. r. 1. Eden v. Wear-dule Iron and Coal Co., 56 L. J., Ch. 400; 35 Ch. D. 287; 56 L. T. 464; 35 W. R. 507—

By Plaintiff to Third Party.]-Persons who had been served by a defendant with a third party notice for the purpose of claiming indemnity, obtained an order (1) that the question of in-demnity should be tried after the trial of the might be ordered to furnish particulars of his the plaintiff's claim so far as they were affected thereby, and for that purpose to put in evidence and cross-examine witnesses :- Held, that the third parties had put themselves in the position of "opposite parties" to the plaintiff; and the plaintiff had a right to examine them by inter-rogatories. MacAllister v. Rochester (Bishop) Togatories. MacAusser v. Moenseter (Disamp) (5 C. P. D. 194) followed. Eden v. Weardale Iron and Coal Co., 56 L. J., Ch. 178; 34 Ch. D. 223; 55 L. T. 860; 35 W. R. 235—C. A.

By Claimant to Defendant, - A claimant has a right to interrogate a defendant, in order to discover whether be is the real defendant or not : and if it appears that he is the nominal defendant only, the claimant has a right to ask who the real defendant is. Shetchley v. Conolly, 11 W. R.

Infant. ]-An infant plaintiff or defendant cannot be compelled to answer interrogatories. Mayor v. Collins, 59 L. J., Q. B. 199; 24 Q. B. D. 861; 62 L. T. 326; 38 W. R. 349.

Guardian ad litem.]—A guardian ad litem is not a party to the action within the meaning of Ord. XXXI. r. 1, and therefore cannot be compelled to answer interrogatories. Ingram v. Little, 11 Q. B. D. 251; 31 W. R. 858.

4. TO CORPORATIONS.

Officer-Leave to Deliver. ]-If the court is satisfied that a proper officer is named the leave will be granted as of course. Alexandra Palace Co., In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 7; 16 Ch. D. 58; 43 L. T. 406; 29 W. R. 70.

In an action against a corporation, where an officer of the corporation, against whom no relief is claimed, is made a defendant for the purpose of discovery:—Held, that, inasunch as under the Judicature Act, Ord. XXXI. r. 4, such discovery could be obtained by an order to deliver to him interrogatories, he was improperly joined as a defendant, and that his name should be struck out. Wilson v. Church, 9 Ch. D. 552

Member or Officer. ]-Semble, an ordinary member of a company ought not to be examined on interrogatories unless the judge is satisfied that there is no officer of the company capable of making the discovery, and that the member proposed to be examined has the required information. Berkeley v. Standard Investment Co., 49 L. J., Ch. 1; 13 Ch. D. 97; 41 L. T. 388; 28 W. R. 125—C. A.

An application on the part of the plaintiff for leave to deliver interrogatories to H., the seeretary of the company, and for an order that H. should answer the interrogatories, was resisted by the company on the ground that H. had ceased to be secretary of the company before the date of the application, and it was ordered that the interrogatories should be answered by the proper officer of the company. H. was still a member of the company, but had not been served with notice of the application:—Held, that the order was right. Chaddock v. British South Africa. Ch., 65 L. J., Q. B. 635; [1896] 2 Q. B. 153; 74 L. T. 755; 44 W. R. 658—C. A.

Notice to Member. ]-Where in an action against a company an application is made under Ord. XXXI. r. 5, for leave to deliver interrogatories to a member of the company, notice of the application must be served upon the member.

Answer by Member-Costs. - Where a member of a company is examined on interrogatories under Ord, XXXI, r. 4, he cannot refuse to file his affidavit until he has been paid his taxed costs of making it; nor will the court make any order as to the payment of his costs separately from the costs of the company. Berkeley v. Standard Investment Co., supra.

Answer by Solicitor-Privilege. - Interrogatorics delivered in an action against a cornoration to the town clerk, or other their proper officer, were answered by the town clerk, who objected to give information on the ground that it was derived from communications which had been made to him as solicitor in the action, and were therefore privileged :- Held, that as the corporation had elected to answer through him, the objection could not be matutained. Swansew Corporation v. Quirk, 49 L. J., C. P. 157; 5 C. P. D. 106; 41 L. T. 758; 28 W. R. 371; 44 J. P. 378.

In an action by a corporation interrogatories were administered by the defendant for the examination of the town clerk, who objected in his answer to answer certain of the inter-rogatories, on the ground that the information possessed by the plaintiffs or himself had been obtained by him as the solicitor for the plaintiffs in the action for the purpose of enabling the plaintiffs to bring and maintain the action:— Held, that, as the corporation had no option to answer by any officer other than the town clerk. but were compelled to answer through him, the privilege was properly claimed by him on their behalf, and the objection was good. Swansea Corporation v. Quirk (supra) distinguished.
Salford Corporation v. Lever, 59 L. J., Q. B.
248; 24 Q. B. D. 695; 62 L. T. 434; 54 J. P.

5. AT WHAT TIME.

Before Defence.]-A plaintiff may, before the: statement of defence has been delivered, deliver interrogatories; but if he does, the interrogatories may be struck out, unless sufficient reasons are given by him why the interrogatories are necessary at that stage of the action. Mercien v. Cotton, 46 L. J., Q. B. 184; 1 Q. B. D. 442; 35; L. T. 79; 24 W. R. 566—C. A.

Except under very special circumstances, leave will not be given to a defendant to interrogate the plaintiff before the statement of defence.

Disney v. Longbourne, 45 L. J., Ch. 532; 2 Ch. D. 704; 35 L, T. 301; 24 W. R. 663.

An action was brought against the executors of a deceased truste socking to make his estate liable for breaches of trust. The exceutors were personally ignorant of all the transactions in respect of which the plaintiff sought rollef, and applied for leave to interrogate the plaintiff before putting in the statement of defence, alleging that his solicitor (who was partner in a firm of solicitors who had acted for the trustees during the trusteeship of the testator) could furnish information which would enable them to defend the action successfully :- Held, that leave must be refused, and that the executors must put in Radford, 65 L. J., Ch. 140; [1896] 1 Ch. 29; 73 such statement of defence as they could, and L. T. 624; 44 W. R. 103. then interrogate. Ib.

It is in the discretion of the judge at chambers whether he will strike out interrogatories delivered by the plaintiff before the statement of defence. Beal v. Pilling, 38 L. T. 486.

A. brought an action against B. for expenses incurred on his behalf and authorised by him in a letter sent to A. by C., B.'s solicitor. B. in his statement of defence denied the authority of C. to write the letter. A. joined C. as defendant, and interrogated him before his statement of defence was delivered as to whether he had authority from B.:—Held, that the interrogatories were not premature. Ib.

In an action in the Chancery Division interrogatories may be delivered before the statement of defence. Harbord v. Monk, 9 Ch. D. 616: 27 W. R. 164.

The case of Mercier v. Cotton (supra) applies only to actions in the nature of common law actions. 1b.

After Close of Pleadings. ]-A plaintiff applied for leave to deliver interrogatories after having himself closed the pleadings, without explaining the reason for his delay. Leave was refused. On appeal, the court refused to interfere with the discretion of the judge in chambers. Ellis v. Ambler, 36 L. T. 410; 25 W. R. 557.

Though great delay had taken place, leave was given to file interrogatories after the close of the pleadings; costs of the application to be costs in the cause. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co. v. Daries, 5 Ch. D. 775; 37 L. T. 67; 25 W. R. 876.

By Defendant before Delivery of Particulars by Plaintiff. |- In an action by the executors of a married woman against her husband to recover furniture said to be part of her separate estate, delivery by the plaintiffs of particulars of and relating to the exact chattels claimed, was postponed until the defendant had stated on oath which of the articles had belonged to his late wife, on the ground that the defendant must know what furniture his wife had, whereas the plaintiffs, as mere executors, had not the means of knowing. Millar v. Harper, 57 L. J., Ch. 1091; 38 Ch. D. 110; 58 L. T. 698; 36 W. R.

There is no hard and fast rule as to the class of cases in which particulars will be ordered to be delivered before discovery, or discovery to be given before particulars; the court will exercise its discretion upon all the circumstances in each ease. In an action by a colliery company against coal merchants, in which the plaintiffs alleged that they had lost business by reason of the fraudulent acts of the defendants, giving one specific instance of frand in their statement of claim (which was admitted by the defendants), and alleging that "on divers other occasions and anegnig that on divers other occasions the defendants had taken orders from "divers other persons" for coal from the plaintiffs' colliery, and fraudulently supplied coal not purchased from the plaintiffs :- Held, that as the defendants had means of ascertaining from their books whether other frauds of the kind alleged had been committed, which the plaintiffs had not, the defeudants were not entitled to particulars before giving discovery.-Dictum of General Allegation of Fraud-Principal and Agent—No Particulars.]—The plaintiff alleged that he had employed the defendant as a stockbroker, but that the defendant had in many of the transactions dealt with himself as principal, and had also charged the plaintiff with moneys not paid. The plaintiff delivered interrogatories asking for the particulars of the dealings on behalf of the plaintiff and the names of the persons with whom the defendant had dealt and the amounts paid. The defendant refused to answer on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to this information until after decree:— Held (dubitante Fry, L.J.), that though there were no particulars of the frauds alleged, the plaintiff was entitled to discovery in order to enable him to give details of the frauds alleged. Whyte v. Ahrens (26 Ch. D. 717) discussed. Per Bowen, L.J., Ord. XIX. r. 6, is a rule of pleading only. Leitch v. Abbott, 55 L. J., Ch. 460; 31 Ch. D, 374; 54 L. T. 258; 34 W. R. 506; 50 J. P. 441-C. A.

Action for Infringement of Patent-Validity of Patent denied-After Validity established. ]-In an action for infringement of a patent where the defendant denies the validity of the patent. discovery by interrogatories as to the processes used by the defendant ought not as a rule to be postponed under Ord. XXXI, r. 20, until after the validity of the patent has been established. Benno Jaffé Lanolin Fabrik v. Richardson, 62 L. J., Ch. 710; 3 R. 515; 68 L. T. 404; 41 W. R. 534.

6. WHAT ADMISSIBLE.

General Principles.]—The right of discovery as existing in the Court of Chancery still exists. except so far as it is modified by the Judicature Acts and the General Orders ; and a party still has a right to exhibit interrogatories, not only for the purpose of obtaining from the opposite party information as to material facts which are not within his own knowledge, and are within the knowledge of the opposite party, but also for the purpose of obtaining from the opposite party admissions which will make it unnecessary for him to enter into evidence as to the admitted. Att. - Gen. v. Gaskill, 51 L. J., Ch. 870; 20 Ch. D. 519; 46 L. T. 180; 30 W. R. 558-C. A.

It is said that since the Judicature Act we are literally and absolutely bound by the chancery practice, but I can find no decision which goes to that length—per Grove, J. Dalrymple v. Leslie, 51 L. J., Q. B. 61; 8 Q. B. D. 7; 45 L. T. 478; 30 W. R. 105.

An information, which before the passing of the Judicature Act could have been obtained in equity by filing a bill of discovery, can now be obtained by interrogatories in any cause before the High Court of Justice, although the cause may have been entered for trial before the Judicature Acts came into operation, Ramsden v. Brearley, 33 L. T. 322.

Interrogatories may be administered in all the divisions on the same principle as in the old Court of Chancery, subject to the power given to a judge by the Judicature Act, Ord. r. 5, to strike them out as being scandalous or Kay, L.J., in Zierenberg v. Labouchere ([1893] r. 5, to strike them out as being scandalous or 2 Q. B. 189), explained. Waynes Merthyr Cb. v. irrelevant, or not put bona fide for the purpose of the action, or not material at that stage of the allege that the piece of wood was not knocked action. Eade v. Jacobs, 26 W. R. 159.

Therefore a party is entitled to discovery of the facts necessary to support his opponent's case, but not of the evidence by which it is to be proved. 1h.

The Judicature Act and Ord, XXXI. seem to confer on the litigant in every action the right to exhibit interrogatories to his opponent, subject to the protection given by the exercise of judicial discretion, and by the succeeding rules of Ord. XXXI.; and probably the intention was to give the litigant in all cases a right to interrogate his adversary as to every relevant matter on which he could examine him, if he thought fit to call him as his witness on the trial of the cause. semble, Lyell v. Kennedy, 52 L. J., Ch. 385; 8 App. Cas. 217; 48 L. T. 585; 31 W. R.

There was another question discussed, whether, under the Judicature Act and Rules, the right to discovery is or is not more extensive than it formerly was in courts of equity. It was put thus :- The Judicature Act is an act to regulate procedure, and not to affect established rights, and if there was no right to discovery before the passing of the Judicature Act, there is no right to interrogate now. Semble, these propositions are stated too broadly, for there can be no doubt that the Judicature Act, in carrying into effect the object stated in the preamble, "the better administration of justice," does interfere with and alter rights. It seems also not to be very clear that an increased power to exhibit interrogatories and enforce discovery as to the plaintiff's title or vice versa, is an interference with the right of the party interrogated, or is more than alteration of procedure. Ib.

As to Truth of Allegations in Pleadings. ]. An interrogatory whether it was the fact that certain allegations made in the statement of claim were true, and whether it was not the fact that certain statements in the defence were true, was disallowed. Johns v. James, infra, col.

Anticipating Defence.]-A judge has discretion to disallow interrogatories which would not facilitate proof or save expense. Interrogatories of a hypothetical nature, unaccompanied by affidavit as to the source from which they are derived, and put, not for the purpose of support-ing the plaintiff's case, but of anticipating the defence, will be struck out. Grumbrecht v. Parry, 49 L. T. 570; 32 W. R. 203.

Relevancy.]-A party ought not to be compelled to answer interrogatories as to matters not relevant to the issue in the action, even though such matters might be admissible in cross-examination as going to a witness's credit. Generally the rule is that interrogatories are allowable only as to facts well pleaded and not admitted; but this is subject to the qualification that in cases of doubt as to what is properly pleadable discovery ought to be allowed where the facts are so to the control of the state of the control of the c

down by one of your servants, state the name and address of the person or firm in whose employ the person was, and the name of the person by whom and how it was so knocked down, and for what he was on your premises." The defendant in his answer stated that the wood was knocked down, without the knowledge or consent of himself or his servants, by some person who was upon his premises as a customer. and declined to give the name and address of such person on the ground that the information was not relevant, and not required bona fide for the purpose of the action :- Held, on an application for a further and better answer, that the question went beyond the sphere of interrogatorics, and that the defendant's objection to answer was good. Meek v. Witherington, 67 L. T. 122 : 57 J. P. 7.

Evidence of other Party. - In an action to restrain the defendants from using a trade nameand from selling their goods as the goods of the plaintiffs, the defendants by counter-claim claimed the like relief, and also an account of the goods sold by the plaintiffs as and for the goods of the defendants, and of the profits of such sale. Both the plaintiffs and defendants claimed to derive their title under a partnership that had been dissolved in 1861, and both had since that time carried on the same business. An interrogatory exhibited by the defendants required the plaintiffs to set forth the quantities of goods sold by them since 1861, distinguishing the quantities sold in each year:—Held, that the interrogatory was not for the ordinary purposes of discovery, but was directed to the details of the plaintiff's evidence, and was rightly disallowed. Saunders v. Jones (7 Ch. D. 435), infra, col. 817, explained and discussed. Benbow v. Law, 50 L. J., Ch. 35; 16 Ch. D. 93; 44 L. T. 119; 29 W. R. 265—C. A.

Where Answer not Evidence.]-The plaintiff alleged that G. had deposited money with the defendant E. in trust for S. and A. (both since deceased) successively for their lives, and then for the plaintiff and another person absolutely. That E. had employed it in trade and made large profits, and had paid the interest to S. and A. for their lives, but now refused to pay over the principal. E., by his defence, admitted the deposit, but denied the trust and stated that he had only held the money for G. to draw upon, and had many years ago paid it away by G.'s. directions; he denied payment of interest to S. and A. The plaintiff delivered, among others, interrogatories requiring E, to set out (1) the dates and particulars of the payments made by thin out of the deposited sum; (2) an account of the profits made by the employment of the profits made by the employment of the money in trade; (3) whether E, had not paid to S, and A, quarterly sums by way of interest on the moneys, and if not, then he was asked whether he had not during some and what years paid to S. and A. certain and what moneys, and whether or not quarterly, or at some and what dates and under what agreement, or for what reason or in respect of what matters; and he was required to set out an account of all moneys paid by him since 1854 to S. and A., or either of them. E. filed an affidavit verifying his defence and denying the trust, denying the payment of any interest to S. and A. on the deposited sum, tories asked the following question: "If you denying the plaintiff's title, and declining to make any further answer. Fry, J., ordered E. attorney-general and a local board to restrain the to make a further answer as to (1) and (3). E. defendant from building across a public footappealed :- Held, on appeal, that E, was not bound to answer interrogatory 1, as an answer to it could not furnish evidence to establish the alleged trust, and could not be of any use to the plaintiff except by discrediting E.'s evidence if he made erroneous statements as to the particulars of his payments, and that it would be oppressive to require him to go through his books for a number of years for that purpose. Parker v. Wells, 18 Ch. D. 477; 45 L. T. 517; 30 W. R. 392-C. A.

"Matter in question in the Cause"—Order XXXI. r. 1.]—The plaintiff, as executrix of A. M., sued the executor of H. M., alleging that H. M. had received 6,000L in trust for A. M., had invested it in securities producing at least five per cent. per annum, and applied the interest to his own purposes. The plaintiff claimed payment of the 6,000l, with interest at five per cent. The defendant professed ignorance as to the matters alleged, and set up several alternative defences: that H. M. had not received the 6,000L; that if he had, he paid it to A. M.; that if he received it A. M. agreed that he should retain it for his own use as a gift from her; that if he received it, it was agreed between him and A. M. that he should retain it in satisfaction of a claim which he had against her; that A. M. was at her death indebted to H. M. in an amount exceeding the 6,000l. The plaintiff delivered interrogatories for the examination of the defendant. By interrogatory 18 he asked particulars as to the way in which the 6,000L had been invested by H. M., and what was the rate of interest on the investments, and how the income had been disposed of? By interrogatory 23 he asked whether the defendant was not the brother of H. M., and whether during the period of the transactions referred to in the statement of claim the defendant had not been the solicitor and agent of H. M., and lived with him, and aeted as his confidential agent with respect to his property, and become acquainted with all his affairs? The defendant. in answer to interrogatory 18, stated that H. M. had invested the 6,000£, and applied the income to his own purposes, and declined to answer further, and he declined to answer inter-rogatory 23 at all:—Held, that as the plaintiff was not seeking to follow the investments of the 6,000l., the defendant was not bound to give the particulars of such investments; but that as the defendant did not admit the receipt of five per cent. interest, he was bound to answer as to the amount of interest that had been received, as it would enable the court at the hearing to make an immediate decree for payment of principal and interest if the plaintiff established the trust. Parker v. Wells (18 Ch. D. 477) distinguished. Held, further (dissentiente Cotton, L.J.), that the defendant was not bound to answer interrogatory 23, for that an interrogatory asking in substance whether the defendant had not been in such a position that he must know whether the allegations in the statement of claim were true or false, did not relate to any matter in question in the cause within the meaning of Ord. XXXI. r. 1. Morgan, In re, Owen v. Morgan, 39 Ch. D. 316; 60 L. T. 71; 37 W. R. 248—C. A.

To restrain Building across Public Footpath-path. The amended statement of claim alleged that at a meeting of the board held after the commencement of the action the defendant had attended and signed an agreement for settling the action on certain terms, and the plaintiffs sought to enforce this agreement, or, in the alternative, to restrain interference with the footnath by virtue of their original title. The defendant. by his defence, denied the existence of any public right of way over the ground. He admitted the signature of the agreement, but alleged that it was obtained by threats and pressure after a long conversation and argument, and without his having it read and explained to him. The plaintiffs delivered interrogatories as to the existence of a public right of way over the land, and as to what passed in the conversation at the board meeting, and at a conversation between the defendant and the plaintiffs' solicitor before that meeting. The defendant declined to answer those interrogatories, alleging that as to the right of way he was not bound to answer as to a right which he had denied by his pleadings; and that as to the conversations he ought not to be called upon to answer till the plaintiffs' solicitor had been examined and cross-examined so to the conversation:—Held, by Bacon, V.-C., that the defendant having by the statement of defence denied the existence of the right of way, was not bound to answer as to it, and that he was not bound to answer as to the conversations, no discovery being requisite as to facts which the plaintiffs had the means of establishing. But held, by the Court of Appeal, that the defendant was bound to answer as to the existence of the right of way, for that one object of interrogatories is to enable a party to obtain admissions from the other party, and so to relieve himself from the necessity of adducing evidence. Att.-Gen. v. Gaskill, 51 L. J., Ch. 870; 20 Ch. D. 519; 46 L. T. 180; 30 W. R. 558—C. A. Held, also, that as the conversations were material on the issue whether the agreement had been unduly obtained, the defendant must answer as to them; and that it would not be right to allow him to delay answering until he saw what account another person would give of what had taken place. Ib.

Persons present-Grounds of Liability. |-- In an action against two defendants by a plaintiff claiming to be a creditor of a late partner of one of the defendants, for all of whose creditors it was alleged the defendants were trustees under a deed of assignment of certain property, the defence in substance was, that the firm were never indebted to the plaintiff, that the deed contained no trust for the payment of any debt of the late partner, but was an assignment by way of mort-gage to secure repayment to the defendants of a sum advanced by them to pay such of the late partner's debts as they should in their discretion think fit, that neither the late partner nor the defendants ever recognised the plaintiff as a creditor, that the plaintiff was not a party nor privy to the deed, and that he was not aware of its existence until the bankruptey of the late partner. The defence admitted a certain alleged interview, but denied the alleged purport of the conversation therent. Plaintiff stated that he had seen "some accounts," which showed that the defendants had not properly discharged the Conversations.]-An action was brought by the debts. Interrogatories filed by the defendants calling upon the plaintiff to set forth how the as to what was done by those on board with when communication of the fact of the execution of the deed by the defendants to the plaintiff was made, and what accounts they were which the plaintiff had seen, were allowed. Johns v. James, 13 Ch. D. 370.

(3 Ex. D. 335) observed upon. 1b. In an action for dissolution of partnership in the business of surgeons, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant "for some time past and since from about" a certain date "so behaved and conducted himself towards the plaintiff in the presence of . . . many of the patients of the partnership," as to make it impossible for the plaintiff to carry on practice with him. An interrogatory by the defendant calling upon the plaintiff to set forth the particulars and circumstances of the occasions on which the defendant had so behaved and conducted himself, allowed. Lyon v. Tweddell, 13 Ch. D. 375,

An interrogatory as to the names of the persons in whose presence the defendant had so behaved and conducted himself, disallowed. Ib.

See Johns v. James, supra.

The plaintiffs sued as administrators to recover possession of hereditaments for breach of a covenant contained in a lease; the defendant alleged that the intestate verbally consented to the breach of the covenant :- Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to interrogate the defendant as to when the consent was given and as to the conversation which took place, but that they were not entitled to interrogate him as to the persons in whose presence the verbal consent was given. Eade v. Jacobs, 47 L. J., Ex. 74; 3 Ex. D. 335; 37 L. T. 621; 26 W. R. 159-

Knowledge of Servant or Agent.] - In an action against a tramway company for negligence, interrogatories were administered to the defendants, asking (inter alia) whether or not the plaintiff did not raise his hand to warn the defendants' driver to stop, and whether or not such warning was seen by the driver. The defendants, by their secretary, refused to answer, on the ground that they had received no information beyond that contained in the driver's report, and further stated that "certain information had been collected by the solicitor with a view to establish the defence" :- Held, that such answers were insufficient. Paritt v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co., 48 L. T. 730. A party to a cause is not excused from answering interrogatories relevant to the question in issue on the ground that they are as to matters which are not within such party's own knowledge, but are only within the knowledge of his agents or servants, if derived in the ordinary course of their employment; and he is bound to obtain the information from such agents or servants, unless he shows that it would be unreasonable to require him to do so, as that, either such agents or servants have left his employment, or it would occasion unreasonable expense, or an unreasonable amount of detail or the like, Therefore, in an action by cargo owners against the owners of a ship, for a loss alleged to have arisen from negligence in the navigation of such ship, by which she ran ashore and was stranded, firm became collectively liable to the plaintiff, regard to such navigation at the time of the accident, which stated in substance that the defendants were not on board at the time, and had no knowledge or information respecting the matters inquired into, except as appeared by the protest of which the plaintiffs had inspection, was held insufficient, as it did not appear that there was any difficulty in the defendants obtaining the required information from those who were in charge of the ship at the time of the accident. Bolokow v. Fisher, 52 L. J., Q. B. 12; 10 Q. B. D. 161; 47 L. T. 724; 31 W. R. 235; 5 Asp. M. C. 20—C. A.

In an action by owners of water mills to restrain a canal company, who had statutory power to take water from the river on which the plaintiffs' mills were situate, from wrongfully diminishing the quantity of water in the river, to the injury of the plaintiffs, the defendants interrogated the plaintiffs, and asked them to give a list of the days between specified dates on which they alleged that the working of their mills was interfered with by the negligence of the defendants. The plaintiffs answered that they were unable to specify the particular days:— Held, that this answer was sufficient, and that the plaintiffs were not bound to state whether they had made inquiries of their agents, servants, and workmen. Bolckov v. Fisher (supra distinguished. Rasbothom v. Shropshire Union Railways and Canal C., 53 L. J., Ch. 327; 24 Ch. D. 110; 48 L. T. 902; 32 W. R. 117.

Grounds on which Mine stated to be Worthless. ]-A statement of claim alleged that the defendant had advertised a worthless mine by means of private newspapers and circulars containing false statements, and that the plaintiff was thereby induced to take shares. Interrogatories were administered by the defendant, asking the grounds on which the plaintiff alleged the mine to be worthless, and that he should set out the particular papers by which he had been deceived:—Held, that the interrogatories were simply directed to show what were the material facts upon which the issues in the case would be raised, and must be allowed. Askley v. Taylor, 38 L. T. 44—C. A.

To Specify Acts of Misconduct, &c., relied on. |-The defendant employed the plaintiff as manager of his business under a written agreement at a salary and a commission on the gross amount of sales. Disputes having arisen, the defendant summarily dismissed the plaintiff. The plaintiff commenced an action for wrongful dismissal. The defendant by his defence alleged specific acts of misconduct against the plaintiff, and also alleged in general terms other acts of misconduct justifying the dismissal. The plaintiff exhibited four interrogatories, of which the substance was to ask the defendant to specify the acts of misconduct on which he relied, and a fifth interrogatory asking for the total amount of the gross proceeds of sales during the period for which the plaintiff claimed remuneration. The defendant refused to answer the first four interrogatories, on the ground that they related to the case of the defendant, not of the plaintiff, and the fifth interrogatory, on the ground that, as the right to an account of commission was disputed, the defendant was not bound to give an answer by the defendants to interrogatories that the interrogatories must be answered. such account at that stage of the action :- Held,

An interrogatory by the defendant calling upon the plaintiff to set forth the partienlars and circumstances of the oceasions on which the defendant had so behaved and conducted himself, allowed. Lyon v. Tweddell, 13 Ch. D. 375.

Breach of Trust.]—In an action for specific performance of an agreement to sell the remainder of an underlease of house property to the plaintiffs, who were trustees for a married woman, interrogatories by the defendant, who had notice that they were trustees, but no notice of the actual trusts, for the purpose of establishing that the proposed investment of the trust funds in the purchase was a breach of trust, were ordered to be struck out as irrelevant. Mansfield v. Childerhouse, 46 L. J., Ch. 30; 4 Ch. D. 82; 35 L, T. 590; 25 W. R. 68.

As to whether Persons sued as Married were so.]-A plaintiff sued the defendants as man and wife, and then asked them whether they were married. The interrogatory was ordered to The plaintiff did not appeal be struck out. because he considered that a part of the re-maining interrogatories would oblige an answer to the question disallowed. The defendants neglected to answer that part of the interrogatories:—Held, that they were not bound to answer. Smith v. Bery, 36 L. T. 471; 25 W. R. 606.

Accounts-Administration Action. ]-In an administration action the persons beneficially entitled have a right to call upon an executor defendant before the hearing or the close of the pleadings, to answer interrogatories by which he is required to make discovery on oath of the accounts of the estate. This rule has not been abrogated or altered by the Judicature Acts and Rules. Semble, that in such a case, if an account has been already rendered, it would be a sufficient answer to verify such an account. Sutcliffe, In re, Alison v. Alison, 50 L. J., Ch. 574; 44 L. T. 547: 29 W. R. 732.

Of Partnership. ]—Interrogatories seeking to obtain accounts:—Held to be premature and disallowed. Parker v. Wells, 18 Ch. D. 477; 45 L. T. 517; 30 W. R. 392. And see Lyon v. Tweddell, 13 Ch. D. 375.

Question as to Defendant's Title-Action for Recovery of Land. ]-In an action for the recovery of land the plaintiff is entitled to discovery as to all matters relevant to his own and not to the defendant's case. In an action for the recovery of land the plaintiff claimed as the plaintiffs applied for and obtained an order as assignee of co-heiresses of a deceased intestate for a further answer, but the order did not direct owner of the land, and the defendant relied on to what extent the answer should go:—Held, on his possession and also set up the Statute of motion to discharge the order, that the order was Limitations -Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to interrogate the defendant as to matters relevant to the pedigree and heirship of his assignors and as to alleged admissions by the defendant that his possession of the land was as tiff's Evidence. ]-B. and N., two landowners in

In an action by an administratrix for recovery of lands which formerly were in the possession of the deceased, the defendant was not compelled to answer interrogatories as to the circumstances under which he went into possession, the instru-ment (if any) under which he held, and the character of his possession. If in an action for recovery of land it is alleged that there are peculiar circumstances entitling the plaintiff to administer interrogatories of such a character as the above, there should be an affidavit setting out the facts relied on. Bleazby v. Bleazby, 10 L. R.

Defendants in their defence to an action of ejectment pleaded that they were in possession, "by themselves or their tenants." The plaintiffs delivered an interrogatory asking them to give "the names of the tenants referred to in their defence, to state the nature of their tenancies, and the dates at which the same were respectively created" :- Held, that the interrogatory did not require the defendants to disclose what related exclusively to their own title, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to information as to the dates but not as to the nature of the tenancies. Eyre v. Rodgers, 40 W. R. 137,

- Lay Rector-Vicar. I-In an action by the lay rector of a parish claiming the freehold in the chancel and churchyard against the vicar of the parish and his churchwardens, interrogatories were disallowed which inquired into the evidence of the plaintiff's title. Garland v. Orum, 55 J. P. 374.

— Minerals.]—The plaintiffs brought an ac-tion for an account of coal worked by the defendants under certain closes of land, and an injunction to restrain any further working, and by their statement of claim alleged that they were entitled to the minerals under the said closes of land. The defendants denied the title of the plaintiffs, but did not set up any title in themselves. The plaintiffs administered interrogatories to one of the defendant firm, one of which required him to set forth "under or by what, if any, conveyance, assignment, lease, licence or authority, the defendant firm claim to be entitled to the coals and minerals underlying the closes in question, giving the dates and names or parties to any such conveyance, assignment, or lease, and the names of the person or respective persons from whom they allege that they obtained any such licence or authority, and giving the date of any such licence or authority, and stating whether the same be in writing or not." The plaintiffs were asked to set forth particulars of their exer-eise of such rights, and whether they did so by any licence or in consideration of any and what payment. The plaintiffs objected to answer these interrogatories on the ground that they related exclusively to their own title and to the evidence they should adduce at the hearing. Upon a summons that the plaintiffs might be ordered to make a sufficient answer :- Held, that the plaintiff N. must answer so much of the first interrogatory as asked, whether the beerhouse and cottages had any lands appurtenant thereto or held therewith, because he had not pleaded they were in effect directed to the discovery of the evidence by which the plaintiffs intended to prove their case at the hearing. In Actions relating to Price on Sale of Horses. ] -In an administration action a horsedealer brought a claim against the estate of the testator for charges connected with the purchase and sale of horses for the testator, and for the standing of horses at livery, for several years. The horse-and to establish commonable rights thereover. dealer alleged that he had never sold horses on commission as agent for the testator, but on the cottages, and the plaintiffs pleaded the exercise terms that he should pay the testator a fixed of the rights claimed from time immemorial, sum for each horse, and sell it again on his own account for what he pleased, retaining the difference, if any, by way of profit; and this was the custom of all horsedealers of good standing. And he declined to disclose the prices at that if the plaintiffs ever had any rights of which he had sold the horses, as being irrelevant common thereon such right had been extinto the issue, namely, what the agreement or course of dealing between himself and the tes-tator was:—Held, that the discovery was irrelevant to the issue; and the court in exercise of its discretion under Ord. Evidence of the course of dealing of other horsedealers admitted to show that the alleged agreement with the testator was not an unreasonable one. Ib.

The plaintiffs claimed 1,7321. 10s., the price of three horses alleged to have been sold by them to the defendant. By his statement of defence the defendant denied that the horses were sold to him, and further alleged that the prices charged were excessive, and that the horses were ordered by his wife without any authority to pledge his credit for them. Reply, that the horses were necessaries suitable to the estate and degree of the wife. -The following interrogatories were administered to the plaintiffs :- 1. State the date when you purchased each of the horses alleged by you to have been sold to the defendant on, &c .- 2. State, if you did in fact purchase each or any of the said horses, and were in fact the owners of the same, when, as you allege, you sold them to the defendant. 8. Give the exact amount you paid or had contracted to pay for each of the said horses .- 4. If you were not the owners of the said horses or any of them at the date when, as you allege, you sold them to the defendant, state specifically and in detail how and under what that they had, and the defondant had pleasted that they had, and the defondant had pleasted that they had not but that the rest of the interrogatories need not be answered, because [5. State specifically and in detail the date—interrogatories need not be answered, because [5. State specifically and in detail the date—interrogatories need not be answered. dates upon which you received the said horses into your control :- Held, that the 1st and 3rd interrogatories were relevant and material to the issues, and ought to be answered; but that the 2nd, 4th, and 5th were inadmissible. Sheward v. Londsdale (Lord), 5 C. P. D. 47; 28 W. R. 324. Affirmed, 42 L. T. 172—C. A.

> Action for Non-Delivery of Cargo. ]-The defendant, a shipowner, was sued by the owners of the cargo and charterers for non-delivery of cargo. The defendant alleged that the nondelivery was caused by perils of the sen excepted in the charter-party and bill of lading :- Held, that interrogatories asking the plaintiff whether the cargo was insured, and if so, with whom, by whom, and to what amount, were irrelevant and therefore inadmissible. Bolekow v. Young, 42 L. T. 660.

> Action to recall Probate-Undue Influence. -The plaintiff sued to recall probate on the ground that the testator was not of sound mind, and that the will was obtained by the undue influence of the defendants, two of whom were the executors, and the third universal legatee. The plaintiff delivered interrogatories circular letter purporting to be signed by the for the examination of the defendants, asking defendant had been sent round to the defenwhat sums they had received from the testator by way of payment for services, loan, or gift, and whether the universal legatee had since the death of testator made over any and what part of the property to the other defendants. The defendants declined to answer these interrogatories as irrelevant:—Held, that the inter-rogatories must be answered, the period in the first interrogatory being limited to three years. Holloway, In re, Young v. Holloway, 56 L. J., P. 81: 12 P. D. 167; 57 L. T. 515—C. A.

Action for Infringement of Patent-Particulars—Documents.]—An action was brought by the registered owner of two letters patent for similar inventions, dated in 1883 and 1884, for infringement of both patents. The plaintiff discontinued the action so far as related to the patent of 1884. The defendants then delivered interrogatories as to what constituted infringements of both patents, and they asked him as to documents in his possession relating to the preparation of the specifications filed under both patents. The plaintiff declined to answer on the ground that the particulars of infringement had been sufficiently stated by him, and as to the documents, that they were confidential communications between himself and his solicitor and counsel, and that such documents were privileged; and that, as regarded any documents relating to the patent of 1884, the interrogatories were irrelevant to the issue. The plaintiff's solicitor the plaintiff was not obliged to give any further answer as to the particulars of breaches; that the plaintiff's answer as to documents was insufficient, as it did not distinguish between the communications between him and his solicitor as such, and communications between him and his solicitor in his character of patent agent; the former class only being privileged. Museley v. Victoria Rubber Co., 55 L. T. 482.

Action against Licensee of Patent for Account -Secret Process-Names of Customers. ]-Action against a licensee under a patent for account and royalties. The defendant denied user and alleged that the process employed by him was a secret process of his own. The plaintiff closely interrogated the defendant as to his process by detailed reference to the plaintiff's specification, and also required names of some of the defendant's customers:—Held, that the defendant was bound to answer fully so long as he did not disclose his own secret :- Held, also, that the interrogatory as to his customers must be answered. Ashworth v. Roberts, 60 L. J., Ch. 27; 45 Ch. D. 623; 63 L. T. 160; 39 W. R. 170.

Libel - Comparison of Handwriting. ] - In order to prove that the defendant was the writer of a libellous letter, he may be interrogated as to whether or not he was the writer of another letter addressed to a third person,— as leading up to a matter in issue in the cause and therefore relevant. Jones v. Richards, 15 Q. B. D. 439.

- Names of Persons, though probably Witnesses. In an action for libel the defendant pleaded that the libel was true. The sub-stance of the libel was that the plaintiff had culation, but declining to answer further, on the dant's competitors in business. The plaintiff had in speeches and letters stated that he had seen a copy of the alleged letter, that two of such letters were in existence in the possession respectively of a firm of bankers and a firm of manufacturers at Birmingham, and that his informant in the matter was a solicitor of high standing at Birmingham. In interrogatories administered by the defendant the plaintiff was asked to state the name and address of his informant, in whose hands he had seen the copy of the letter, and the names and addresses of the persons to whom the letter had been sent and in whose possession the twoletters existed; but he refused to do so on the ground that he intended to call those persons as his witnesses at the trial :-Held, that the defendant was entitled to discovery of the names and addresses of such persons as being a substantial part of facts material to the case upon the Chamberlain, 55 L. J., Q. B. 448; 17 Q. B. D. 154; 54 L. T. 714; 34 W. R. 783—C. A.

In an action for libel contained in a private letter written by the defendant, the plaintiff cannot interrogate the defendant as to the person or persons from whom he received the information contained in the letter. Machenzie v. Steinkoff, 54 J. P. 327.

— Newspaper—Name of Correspondent— Manuscript.—In an action against the publisher of a newspaper for a libel contained in a letter from a correspondent and in a leading article thereon the defence was that the alleged libel consisted of an accurate report of certain public proceedings and fair comment thereon:— Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to interrogate the defendant as to the names of the persons on whose information the reports were based, or the name of the correspondent who wrote the letter, or as to the original manuscript of the letter. Hennessy v. Wright, 36 W. R. 879-C. A.

In an action of libel against the proprietor of a newspaper, if the defendant admits the publication of the words complained of, the plaintiff is not entitled to interrogate the defendant as to the name of the writer of the words, unless the identity of such writer is a fact material to some issue raised in the case. Gibson v. Erans, 58 L. J., Q. B. 612; 23 Q. B. D. 384; 61 L. T. 388; 54 J. P. 104.

- Inquiry as to Extent of Circulation of Newspaper-Inquiry as to Source of Information.] -In an action for libels contained in a newspaper and a pamphlet, accusing the plaintiff of being the author of certain discreditable letters, copies of which were printed in the libels, the only defence being payment into court of 40s., which the defendants alleged to be enough to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff delivered interrogatories, asking, by the first and second, as to the extent of the circulation of the newspaper and pamphlet, and, by the others, as to the names of the persons from whom the letters were obtained, what was paid for them, and what inquiries were made, and what steps taken, to test and verify the information supplied to the defendants. The defendants answered, as to the fabricated a story to the effect that a certain ground that the information required could not of the defendants' business transactions, and that the precise number of copies issued was not material or relevant, and declining to answer the other interrogatories on the ground that they were irrelevant and not material, and that their object was to discover the evidence to be adduced in support of the defendants' case, and that they were unreasonable, unnecessary, and vexatious, and not put bona fide for the purposes of the action, but for the purpose of eriminating third parties, not parties to the action, and that the matters inquired into related solely to the defendant's case. On an application by the plaintiff for an order for a further answer :- Held, that as to the first and second interrogatories, the defendants were bound to answer further, stating approximately the extent of the circulation, but that the other interrogatories were not sufficiently relevant or material to entitle the plaintiff to an answer. Purveil v. Walter, 59 L. J., Q. B. 125; 24 Q. B. D. 441; 62 L. T. 75; 38 W. R. 270; 54 J. P. 311.

In an action for libel against a newspaper which is well known in the locality in which the action is to be tried an interrogatory asking the number of copies printed and circulated of the issue containing the libel is irrelevant and will not be allowed. Parnell v. Walter (supra) over-ruled. Whittaker v. "Searborough Post" News-paper Co., 65 L. J., Q. B. 564; [1896] 2 Q. B. 148; 74 L. T. 753; 44 W. R. 657—C. A.

Semble, in the case of an obscure newspaper of small circulation the interrogatory is relevant. Ib.

As to Publication in Newspaper.]—In an action for libel in which the defendant traversed the publication; denied that the words were published of the plaintiff, or in the defamatory sense alleged; and pleaded fair comment, the plaintiff exhibited interrogatories, asking whether the defendant published the libel in two Irish papers specified in the interrogatories, and whether the words were not published of the plaintiff. The defendant was also interrogated (No. 4) as to whether he did not publish the words complained of "in the London 'Times' newspaper or some other and what newspaper?"
"When did such publication take place?" The defendant answered all the interrogatories in the one answer as follows: "That in bona fide comment on the conduct and language of the plaintiff, and in reference to matters of public interest, I caused to be printed and published of and concerning the plaintiff and others in the several newspapers in the said interrogatories mentioned the words in such interrogatories referred to, honestly believing the same to be true and without malice" :- Held, that except as to the fourth interrogatory, the answer was sufficient and was not objectionable, on the ground of its qualified form, but that a further answer should be given to No. 4, giving the date of the alleged publication. Malone v. Fitzgrald, 18 L. B., 1r. 187.

As to Documents—Sufficient Affidavit.]—See Jones v. Monte Video Gas Co., 49 L. J., Q. B. 627; 5 Q. B. D. 556; 42 L. T. 639; 28 W. R. 758— C. A., ante, col. 706.

After defendant has made a sufficient affidavit of documents, the plaintiff will not be allowed to administer to him a general roving interrogatory as to documents in his possession, the effect of

be obtained without a difficult and troublesome; which would be to compel the defendant to make inquiry, that the answer would involve disclosure a further affidavit as to documents. There may possibly be cases in which, after a sufficient affidavit as to documents has been made, the court will allow the plaintiff to deliver an interrogatory as to some specific document or documents, but whether this shall be allowed is a matter within the discretion of the judge in each particular case, and though his decision can be appealed from, the Court of Appeal will not appeared from, the Court of Appeal will not readily reverse it. Jones v. Monte Video Gas Co. (5 Q. B. D. 556) explained. Hall v. Truman, 54 L. J., Ch. 717; 29 Ch. D. 307; 51 L. T. 586— C. A.

In an action for the recovery of land the defendant claimed that certain documents mentioned in his affidavit of documents were privileged from production, on the ground that they supported his title and did not contain anything impeaching his defence or supporting the plain-tiff's ease. The defendant's affidavit was sufficient on the face of it. The plaintiffs proposed to administer interrogatories to the defendant for the purpose of showing that the documents in question supported the plaintiff's title, and therefore that they were not privileged from production:—Held, that the interrogatories were production — Teat and the Interrogatories were inadmissible. Jones v. Monte Video Gas Co. (5 Q. B. D. 556) and Mull v. Trumau (29 Ch. D. 307) followed. Nicholi v. Wheeler, 55 L. J., Q. B. 231; 17 Q. B. D. 101; 34 W. R. 425—C. A.

Interrogatories in Cross-examination-Contentious Affidavit.]—The defendant in an action for recovery of laud having made an affidavit of doenments, which stated that he had in his possession certain documents numbered and tied up in a bundle marked with the letter A, and that he objected to produce such documents on the ground that they related solely to his own title, and did not in any way tend to prove or support the title of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs administered interrogatories to the defendant, asking whether such documents did not include a will mentioned in the statement of claim and relied upon by the plaintiffs in support of their title, and whether the defendant had ever seen the will, and, if so, when last and where. The defendant objected to answer the interrogatories. The plaintiffs thereupon applied for an order that the defendant should further answer, and at the hearing sought to make use of an affidavit in contradiction of defendant's affidavit of documents :-Held, that a contentious affidavit was not admissible to contradict the defendant's affidavit of documents, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a further answer, Morris v. Edwards, 60 L. J., Q. B. 292; 15 App. Cas. 309; 63 L. T. 26-H. L. (E.)

Question as to the Credit of Witnesses only. ]-Questions which go merely to the credit of the witness, and might be put in cross-examination, cannot be put as interrogatories to a party, and are as such irrelevant. Allhusen v. Labouchere, 47 L. J., Ch. 819; 3 Q. B. D. 654; 39 L. T. 207; 27 W. R. 12—C. A.

As to Damages.]-Interrogatories as to the amount of the damages claimed are only admissible, as a rule, where the defendant does not directly traverse the plaintiff's claim, but has either paid money into court or can show that such claims are primâ facie extortionate. Clarke v. Bennett, 32 W. R. 550.

Professional Privilege.]-L. brought an action | tories objected to disclose certain information against K. to recover possession of real estates asked for by the plaintiff L. on the ground of proformerly belonging to A. D., who had died fessional privilege, which the court held properly intestate. His title was under a conveyance claimed in law. L. sought by reference to certain from persons who claimed to be the co-heiresses of A. D. K. brought an action against L. for ments referred to in the interrogatorics and answer, penalties under 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, on the ground that he had bought a pretended title. L. exhibited interrogatories in the latter action for the examination of K., by some of which various questions were asked as to the pedigree of the alleged co-heiresses. K. answered that he had no personal knowledge of any of the matters inquired after by these interrogatories, and that such information as he had received in respect of them had been derived by him from information procured by his solicitors or their agents in and for the purpose of defending his title to the estates, and he submitted that he ought not to be required to put in any further answer :- Held, that since K.'s only information as to the matters of pedigree inquired after arose from privileged communications which he was not bound to disclose, and the matters inquired after were not simple matters of fact patent to the senses, he ought not to be compelled to answer on School, the congression to be competited to answer on his belief as to those matters. Kennedy v. Lygll, 23 Ch. D. 387; 48 L. T. 455; 31 W. R. 691—C. A. Affirmed, 9 App. Cas. 81— H. L. (E.)

The privilege from discovery resulting from professional confidence does not extend to facts communicated by the solicitor to the client which cannot be the subject of a confidential communication between them, even though such facts have a relation to the case of the elient in the action. A plaintiff interrogated a defendant as to whether interviews and correspondence had not, between certain dates, taken place between their respective solicitors, and also between the defendant's solicitor and a third person, in reference to an agreement the specific performance of which it was the object of the action to enforce. The defendant declined to answer the interrogatory, so far as it related to communications between his solicitor and other persons, on the ground that he had no personal knowledge, and the only information he had was derived from confidential communications between him and his solicitor in reference to his defence in the action:—Held, that he must make a further answer. Foukes v. Webb, 54 L. J., Ch. 262; 28 Ch. D. 287; 51 L. T. 624; 38 W. R.

---- Power to go behind Affidavit.]--Where in an answer to interrogatories the party interrogated declines to give certain information on the ground of professional privilege, and the privilege is properly claimed in law, the court will not require a further answer to be put in, unless it is clearly satisfied, either from the nature of the subject-matter for which privilege is claimed, or from statements in the answer itself, or in documents so referred to as to become part of the answer, that the claim for privilege cannot possibly be substantiated. Lyell v. Kennedy, 53 L. J., Ch. 937; 27 Ch. D. 1; 50 L. T. 730—C. A.

The mere existence of a reasonable suspicion which is sufficient to justify the court in requiring a further affidavit of documents is not enough when a claim for privilege in an answer to interrogatories is sought to be falsified. Ib.

admissions in the answer itself, and from docuas well as from documents scheduled to K.'s affidavit of documents, to show that the information sought was obtained under circumstances which negatived the claim of privilege, and sought a further answer:—Held, that no further answer should be required, as the admissions in the answer and in the documents referred to therein only raised a case of suspicion at the most, which might be capable of explanation if K. were at liberty to make an affidavit. Ib.

The court declined to decide how far, under the present practice, reference could be made, as against the interrogated party, to any document in his possession not referred to in his answer, but only scheduled to his affidavit of documents.

And see generally as to Professional Privilege, post, D. IV. (cols. 910 et seq.).

Tendency to Criminate-Refusal to Answer. Where a witness refuses to answer a question put to him on the ground that his answer might tend to criminate himself, his mere statement of his belief that his answer will have that effect is not enough to excuse him from answering, but the court must be satisfied from the circumstances of the ease, and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called upon togive, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to him from his being compelled to answer. But, if it is once made to appear that the witness is in danger, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question. Subject, however, to that reservation, the judge is bound toinsist on the witness answering, unless he is satisfied that the answer will tend to place him in peril. Reg. v. Boyes (1 B. & S. 311) approved. and followed. Roynolds, Ex parte, Reynolds, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 756; 20 Ch. D. 294; 46 L. T. 508; 30 W. R. 651; 46 J. P. 533—C. A.

When the answer to an interrogatory might tend to eriminate the person interrogated, he may refuse to answer, but the interrogatory isnot therefore objectionable. Ib.

Where a person interrogated refuses to answeran interrogatory on the ground that his answer might tend to criminate himself, if the court can. clearly and affirmatively arrive at the conclusion that there is no reasonable ground for believing. that it would have that effect, it has jurisdiction. to compel an answer. But, if a corpus delicti, or an act which there is reasonable ground for believing amounts to a corpus delicti, is shown to exist, the court should have very clear evidence that danger to the deponent cannot reasonably be apprehended before it declines to allow the privilege claimed. Bradley v. Clayton, 26 L. R., Ir. 405.

- Leave to Administer.]-Leave to administer interrogatories ought not to be refused on the ground that it is plain from the nature of. the case that they must necessarily criminate the party interrogated, who cannot answer them without admitting that he has been guilty of hen a claim for privilege in an answer to intergatories is sought to be falsified. 15.

The defendant K. in his answer to interrogaP. D. 122; 53 W. R. 188—0. A. - Striking Out.]—An action having been brought to set aside a deed of gift made by a lady a few days before her death, on the ground that the instructions for it were given while she was in a state of stupor produced by large doses of a narcotic drug, the plaintiff exhibited interrogatories, following out in detail the statements of the claim, with a view of showing that the defendant, who was the grantee in the deed of gift, had procured the drug for her and encouraged her to take it, in order to avail himself of the stupor which it produced to obtain the execution of the deed of gift. The defendant moved to strike out the interrogatories as scandalous, irrelevant, and not put bona fide for the purposes of the action :- Held, that supposing the matter inquired after to be an indictable offence, that was no reason for striking out an interrogatory, which, being relevant, was not scandalous; and that the remedy of the defendant was to decline to answer, on the ground that his answer might tend to criminate him. Fisher v. Owen, 47 L.J., Ch. 681; 8 Ch. D. 645; 38 L. T. 577; 26 W. R.

In an action of libel the defendant admitted the publication of two libels set out in the statement of claim, but denied the publication of the third. The plaintiff by affidavit stated that he believed this denial to be untrue, and that he was unable to find out except from the defendant himself who had published the third libel. The defendant had obtained an order striking out interrogatories by the plaintiff asking the defendant if the words constituting this libel had not been written or circulated by him, or with his knowledge, authority, or consent :-Held, that there was a conflict or variance between the rules of courty and the rules of the common law with reference to discovery con-cerning matters which might tend to criminate the person interrogated; and, that, therefore, under sub-s. 11 of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, the rules of equity must prevail, and no interrogatories with such a tendency can now be allowed. Athorley v. Harrey, 46 L. J., Q. B. 518; 2 Q. B. D. 521; 36 L. T. 551; 25 W. R.

7. STRIKING OUT.

Ord. XXXI. r. 7-Interpretation of.]-Order XXXI. r. 7, deals with two cases-first, where interrogatories are exhibited which are in themselves unobjectionable, but which, by reason of the circumstances of the case, it would be unreasonable or vexatious to call upon the party interrogated to answer; secondly, where interrogatories are in themselves objectionable by reason of being prolix, oppressive, unnecessary, or scandalous. In the first case, all or any of the interrogatories may be set aside by a judge's order; in the second case, all or any may be struck out. Oppenheim v. Sheffield, 62 L. J., Q. B. 167; [1893] 1 Q. B. 5; 4 R. 111; 67 L. T., 606; 41 W. R. 65—C. A.

Prolixity.]—Where interrogatories are un-reasonably prolix, it is the duty of the court to strike them out under Ord. XXXI. r. 7. Grumbrecht v. Parry, 32 W. R. 558-C. A. Affirming, 49 L. T. 570.; 5 Asp. M. C. 176. In Whole or Part.]—If a judge thinks that interrogatories as a whole, or en bloc, are vexatious or unreasonable, he may strike out the whole of them without sifting the mass for the purpose of saving those questions which may be reasonable and fit. And he may, if he thinks proper, allow the parties whose interrogatories have been struck out to administer interrogatories again to the opposite party. Cawley v. Burton, 32 W. R. 33.

If the judge considers a set of interrogatories to be as a whole prolix, oppressive, or numecessary, he has power to strike them all out, though some of them may be unobjectionable. Sam-mons v. Bailey (infra) overruled. Oppenheim

v. Sheffield, supra.

Objections should be Specific. 1-Objections to answers to interrogatorics must be specific. party cannot, by objecting at chambers in a general way to the answers given, or by objecting to a particular answer, entitle himself to an appeal from the order of the judge upon the sufficiency of all the answers, or of those not specifically objected to. Church v. Perry, 36 . T. 513.

A party who applies to strike out interrogatories must, unless they are altogether an abuse of the practice of the court, specify those to which he objects. Allhusen v. Labouohore, 47 L. J., Ch. 819; 3 Q. B. D. 654; 39 L. T. 207; 27 W. R. 12—C. A.

Whether Objection to be taken in Affidavit in Answer.]-Objections to particular inter-rogatories on the ground of irrelevance, or that they seek discovery of the other party's evidence, must be taken in the affidavit in answer, and do not afford ground for setting aside the interrogatories. Gay v. Labouchere, 48 L. J., Q. B. 279;
4 Q. B. D. 206; 27 W. R. 413.

An order cannot be made under Ord, XXXI. r. 7, striking out those parts of a set of interrogatories which the judge considers objectionable.

Any objection which the party interrogated may have to answering should be taken in the affidavit in answer. Sammons v. Bailey, 59 L. J., Q. B. 342; 24 Q. B. D. 727; 38 W. R. 605.

Where any party objects to answer interrogatories on any of the grounds mentioned in r. 7, he is entitled to apply for an order under the rule, and cannot be required to take his objection in his affidavit in answer. Oppenheim v. Sheffield, supra.

Where Leave to Administer.]—The fact that leave has been obtained to administer interrogatories is not a bar-to an application under either part of r. 7. Ib.

Right to Leave Interrogatories Unanswered. When interrogatories are administered which it is apparent ought not to be put, the party interrogated may leave them unanswered, and need not allege any reason for so doing. Smith y. Berg, 36 L. T. 471; 25 W. R. 606.

He is not obliged to apply to a judge at chambers to have the interrogatories dis-allowed. Ib.

8. THE ANSWER.

Sufficiency of ]-The duty of the court, with reference to answers to interrogatories, is now regulated by Ord. XXXI. rr. 10, 11, and limited to considering the sufficiency or insufficiency of the answer, i.e. whether the party interrogated court can do is to compel a defendant to afford has answered that which he has no excuse for such a discovery as he swears he is able to give, not answering-and only in the case of insufficiency can it require a further answer. Lyell v. Kennedy, 53 L. J., Ch. 937; 27 Ch. D. 1; 50 L. T. 780—C. A.

Semble (per Bowen, L.J.), that an embarrassas insufficient. Ib.

A party interrogated may, on a question of sufficiency, refer to his whole affidavit in answer to interrogatories, and is not restricted to the passages dealing with any particular interrogatory, and all embarrassment to the interrogating party is now obviated by the provisions of Ord. XXXI, r. 24; but he must not endcavour to import into an admission matter which has no connection with the matter admitted. Ib.

- Libel-Belief. ]-In an action for libel, the defendant, in answer to an interrogatory asking if she had not written a letter containing certain statements (setting out the alleged libel), and if not those statements, any and what statements, replied, "To the best of my recollection and belief I never wrote a letter containing the statements set out, or any of those exact statements. I did write a letter, but on what exact date I cannot say. I kept no copy, and have no copy of the letter, and I am unable to recollect with exactness what the statements contained therein were":-Held, that the answer was a fair and sufficient answer, and that the defendant could not be called upon from recollection to state, before trial, what was her recollection of the words she used. Dalrymple v. Leslie, 51 L. J., Q. B. 61; 8 Q. B. D. 5; 45 L. T. 478; 30 W. R. 105.

- Defence of plene administravit. ]-In an breaches of trust, the executors pleaded plene 3 W. R. 392—C. A. administravit, and the plaintiffs having thereupon administered interconstructions. estate, and their administration of it, the executors' answer was merely a repetition of their defence:—Held, insufficient, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a further and more specific answer. St. George v. St. George, 19 L. R., Legal Personal Representative—Know-ledge of Solicitor and Banker of Testator— Inquiry of Solicitor or Banker-Oppression. ]-In an action against an executor, to recover from the testator's estate moneys paid to the testator in alleged improper exercise of a power more than twenty years before action brought, the executor need not make inquiry of the solicitor or banker to his testator respecting the dealings of the testator with the moneys, if the inquiry will not obviously result in obtaining information with respect to which the executor is interrogated. Alliott v. Smith, 64 L. J., Ch. 684; [1895] 2 Ch. 111; 131R. 586; 72 L. T. 789; 43 W. R. 597.

Irrelevant and Embarrassing.]—Where an interrogatory, setting out a certain letter, and asking whether the defendant had written such ing answer to interrogatories may be dealt with a letter, or one to the same purport and effect at any time to any person, was answered by ninety folios of matter giving the whole circumstances of the case :- Held, that such an answer was irrelevant and embarrassing, although a reasonable and legitimate explanation of an answer to an interrogatory is relevant. Lycll v. Kennedy, 33 W. R. 44.

> Allowance of Interrogatories by Judge—Right to object in Affidavit in Answer—Appeal.]— Although a judge has, under R. S. C., 1893, Ord. XXXI. r. 2, gone through proposed interrogatories and struck out parts of them, and given leave to deliver them as amended, the party interrogated may, as provided by R. S. C., 1883, Ord. XXXI. r. 6, take by his affidavit in answer any proper objection he may have to answering them. Peek N. Ray, 63 L. J., Ch. 647, [1894] 3 Ch. 282; 7 R. 259; 70 L. T. 769; 42 W. R. 498-C. A.

The allowance of such amended interrogatorics is a matter in the judge's discretion, and an appeal against it will not succeed unless a strong case of error in principle or of substantial injustice can be made out. Ib.

Time for Answer.]-Where a defendant's answering an interrogatory cannot help the plaintiff to obtain a decree, but will only be of use to him if he obtains a decree, the court has a discretion whether to oblige the defendant to answer it before trial, and will not do so where particulars of their testator's real and personal The court or judge has power to enlarge the time for appealing against an order in chambers, not-withstanding that the time for appealing has elapsed, and that the action stands dismissed under the order. The defendant obtained an order dismissing the action unless the plaintiff filed his answers to interrogatories within seven days. The plaintiff did not appeal, but by mistake filed his answer too late. He afterwards obtained an order extending the time for appealing, and a further order varying the original order by enlarging the time for filing the answer:—Held, that the court or judge had jurisdiction to make such orders. Burke v. Rooney (4 C. P. D. 226) approved; Whistler v. Huncock (3 Q. B. D. 83) distinguished. Carter v. Stubbs, 50 L. J., Q. B. 161; 6 Q. B. D. 116; 43 L. T. 746; 29 W. R. 132—C. A.

Default-Setting aside Judgment-Service of Order - Affidavit showing Merits. ] - Interrogatories for the examination of the defendant were delivered by the plaintiffs on January 17. On February 5, the defendant not having filed answers, an order was made that if he should not file answers within three days judgment might be signed against him. On February 9, no affidavit having been filed by the defendant, the plaintiffs signed judgment under this order. On application by the defendant to set aside the indement he stated on affidavit that on February 9 a copy of the order of February 5 had been left at his house and received by him, and that he in consequence filed on February 11, and as he supposed within the three days named in the order, answers to interrogatories which he had sworn on January 28. No affidavit showing that he had a defence on the merits was filed by the defendant :- Held, that the order did not require to be served, that the judgment was therefore regular, and that, in the absence of an affidavit showing that he had a defence on the merits, the defendant was not cutitled to have the judgment set aside. Farden v. Richter, 58 L. J., Q. B. 244; 23 Q. B. D. 124; 60 L. T. 304; 37 W. R. 766.

Printing Answers.]—Where a long schedule forms an integral part of an affidavit, the record and writ clerks have no authority to file it unless it is printed, or the court has ordered it to be filed in writing. Webb v. Bornford, 46 L. J., Ch. 288; 25 W. R. 251.

But if the matter contained in the schedule is in the form of an exhibit it need not be printed. Ib. Where the schedule to an affidavit of twentyfive folios contained 200 folios, the court dispensed with printing altogether. Ib.

Duty to Produce Office Copy.]—The duty of producing the office copy of the affidavit in answer to the plaintiff's interrogatories lies on the defendant, the party on whose behalf the affidavit is filed, Marshall v. National Provincial Bank, 61 L. J., Ch. 465.

9. FURTHER ANSWER.

Summons for. ] - In a case where all the answers to interrogatories are properly objected to, the rule that a summons for a further answer ought to specify the interrogatories or parts of interrogatories to which a further answer is required, does not apply, and the summons may be in general terms. Furber v. King, 50 L. J., Ch. 496; 29 W. R. 536.

Where, on an application for an order for a further answer, the plaintiff in the court below has not asked for a qualified order, but has insisted on a full answer, the Court of Appeal will not give a qualified order, but will simply order the application for a further answer to be discharged. Parker v. Wells, 18 Ch. D. 477; 45 L. T. 517; 30 W. R. 392—C. A.

> - Form of Application. ]-The application to be made for further answers to interrogatories should be by summous in chambers and not by motion, and the particular answers objected to as insufficient should be specified. Chesterfield and Boythorpe Colliery Co. v. Black, 24 W. R. 783.

Time for Application.]—Although no time is mentioned in Ord. XXX1. r. 9, within which an order will be made requiring a further answer to interrogatorics, the application for such an order must be made within a reasonable time; and in considering what is a reasonable time, the court will have regard for the period (namely six weeks), limited by the former practice for taking exceptions for insufficiency, and in ordinary cases applications for a further answer should be made within such period of six weeks. Lloud v. Morley, 5 L. R., 1r. 74.

Order for further Answer vivâ voce. - When a person interrogated has answered insufficiently and has been ordered to further answer by viva voce examination, he can only be required to give vivâ voce such an answer to the particular interrogatories mentioned in the order as would have been sufficient if it had been given by his affidavit in answer to interrogatories. The costs of any examination exceeding these limits must be paid by the party examining. Litchfield v. Jones, 54 L. J., Ch. 207; 51 L. T. 572; 33 W. R. 251.

Costs. ] - An interrogating plaintiff having succeeded in obtaining an order for further answers to two only out of twelve interrogatories, costs of an adjournment into court were ordered to be costs in the cause instead of being auportioned according to the relative success of the parties. Sutcliffe, In re, Alison v. Alison, 50: L. J., Ch. 574; 44 L. T. 547; 29 W. R. 732.

Where, in consequence of the party interrogated answering insufficiently, an order was made by the master for his examination viva voce before a special examiner :- Held, that there was power under Ord. XXXI. r. 10, and Ord. LV. r. 1, or the general practice of the court to make it a term of the order that the costs of and occasioned by the application should be paid by the party interrogated "in any event." Vicary v. G. N. Ry., 51 L. J., Q. B., 462; 9 Q. B. D. 168.

10. THE DEPOSIT.

Dispensing with-Discretion of Judge. - A judge has no discretion to dispense with the deposit required by Ord, XXXI. r. 26, before application for discovery or delivery of interrogatorics. Boarder v. Lindsay, 34 W. R. 473.

A party to a cause is not entitled to obtain as a matter of right an order to administer interrogatories without making a deposit under Rules of the Supreme Court, Ord. XXXI. rr. 25, 26, merely because the other party consents to it. The judge at chambers has upon an application of that kind a discretion, and in the exercise of that discretion may order the deposit to be made, ther answer to interrogatories ought to specify notwithstanding that the party to be interrogated

C. A.

In an action where the defendants were charged with fraud, which the court considered to require strict investigation, and where the security for costs under Ord. XXXI. r. 26, on delivering interrogatories, would have amounted to between 45%, and 60%; the court, on proof of the plaintiff's want of means, dispensed with the security. Smith, In re, Smith v. Went, 50 L. T. 382; 32 W. R. 512.

A judge or master has, under Ord. XXXI. r. 25, a discretion to dispense with the deposit for 25, a discretion to dispense with the deposit for security for the costs of discovery prescribed by rules 25, 26. Novoman v. L. & S. W. Hy., 59 L. J., Q. D. 341; 24 Q. B. D. 454; 62 L. T. 290; 38 W. R. 348.

Several Defendants.]—Where in a co-owner-ship action, brought by a managing owner against his co-owners for an account to recover a balance, the plaintiff sought to interrogate the defendants, who were numerous, and to be dispensed from making the usual deposit, the defendants contending that a deposit ought to be made in respect of each defendant interrogated. the court ordered a deposit of 5l., and 10s. for each additional folio over five, and no more. The Whickham, 53 L. T. 236; 5 Asp. M. C. 479.

By Ord, XXXI, r. 26, "any party seeking discovery by interrogatories shall before delivery of interrogatories pay into court . . . the sum of 51."—The plaintiff in an action against several defendants delivered separate copies of the same set of interrogatories to the defendants respectively, each defendant being requires to another particular interrogatories only:—Held, that, in the particular interrogatories only:—Held, that, in the circumstances, the plaintiff need not pay into instances in which the right had been claimed and successfully resisted. Ib. burough, 58 L. J., Q. B. 311; 23 Q. B. D. 130; 60 L. T. 452; 37 W. R. 507.

- Severance of Defences-Different Solicitors.]-On application for discovery, whether by interrogatories or otherwise, against several defendants who have severed in their defences and appeared by different solicitors, the plaintiff must pay into court separate sums of 5*L* in respect of each debt. Erith v. Liverpuol Bread Co., 40 L. J., Ch. 153; [1891] 1 Ch. 367; 63 L. T. 677; 39 W. R. 296.

Non-Payment—Right to Apply to Strike out.]
-By the latter part of r. 26, the party from whom discovery is sought shall not be required to answer or make discovery unless and until the said payment of 51. has been made :-Held, that this provision does not, in the event of nonpayment of the 51., entitle the party from whom discovery is sought to apply for an order to strike out the interrogatories. Wilts and Berks Canal Navigation Co. v. Swindon Waterworks Co., 20 W. R. 353.

> Tending to Destroy Plaintiff's Case. ]-Interrogatories for the examination of a plaintiff are on a different footing from those for the examination of a defendant in this respect, that a plaintiff is not entitled to discovery of the defendant's case, but a defendant may ask any questions tending to destroy the plaintiff's claim. Hoffmann v. Postill, L. R. 4 Ch. 673; 20 L. T. 893 : 17 W. R. 901.

> Whether Fishing.]—A defendant who files interrogatories for the examination of a plaintiff is entitled to an answer with respect to all matters which tend to destroy the plaintiff's. ease, but not with respect to matters which tend to support the plaintiff's case. Sever's Commits-sioner's v. Glasse, 42 L. J., Ch. 345; L. R. 15-Eq. 302; 28 L. T. 433; 21 W. R. 520. When, therefore, a bill was filed to establish a

A defendant cannot compel a plaintiff to answer an interrogatory which in effect asks him what evidence he has in favour of his case. Each party may obtain discovery of all matters relating to his own case, and is entitled to know what the opponent's case is, but not what is his evidence of it. Ih.

Interrogatory by defendant asking for instances in which rights of common over lands within the manor had been exercised by persons residing without it. Answer, declining to set out instances. Exception overruled with costs. Ib.

Where Plaintiff has parted with Interest.] Where a defendant has reason to believe that the plaintiff had, before the institution of the suit, parted with all his interest in the subject matter, he should file cross-interrogatories to ascertain the fact, and if he simply takes the objection by answer, and no evidence is brought forward upon it, the court will not take notice of the objection. Clark v. Malpas, 10 W. R.

Imperial Mercantile Credit Association v. Gibbon, 12 Jur. (N.s.) 898; 15 L. T. 203; 15 W. R. 97.

Where a company or corporation is plaintiff in a suit, the defendant cannot, under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 19, file interrogatories for the examination of its officers, when they are not parties to the suit. Imperiul Mercantile Credit Association v. Whitham, L. R. 3 Eq. 89.

Duty to Answer fully.]—In answering inter-rogatories filed by a defendant for the examination of the plaintiff, the general rule applies that he who is bound to answer must answer fully. Hoffmann v. Postill, L. R. 4 Ch. 673; 20 L. T. 898 : 17 W. R. 901.

Specific Charges in the Bill.]-It is not necessary to introduce charges suggesting imagined facts to form an interrogatory; so that where a bill charged the existence of a mortgage known to the plaintiff, but did not charge that there were others, an interrogatory "whether there were others":—Held, to be correct. March v. Keith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 342; 30 L. J., Ch. 127; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1182; 3 L. T. 498; 9 W. R. 115.

It is not necessary now, in every case, to insert a charge of documents in a bill, as a foundation for the usual interrogatory concerning them. Perry v. Turpin, 1 Kay (App.) xlix.; 2 Eq. Rep. 669; 18 Jur. 594; 2 W. R.

Exceptions to an answer to the interrogatory concerning documents are now unnecessary, because the discovery may be enforced in cham-

Mertens v. Haigh, 1 John. & H. 231; 30 L. J., part of the interrogatories was unsupported by Ch. 33; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1288; 3 L. T. 368; 9 W. Grenfell, 3 Giff, 388: 8 Jur. (N.S.) 878; 5 L. T. 417.

When a defendant, after answer, has obtained an affidavit as to documents in the common form, if he finds that the inquiry in the common form is not sufficiently pointed to enable him to obtain discovery as to specific matters, his proper course is to file a concise statement of the specific matters, with respect to which he seeks discovery, with interrogatories, which it will be the duty of the plaintiff to answer fully ; and it will be no answer to the defendant to say that some of the matters given in the specific statement were comprised in, or that they were all referred to in, the answer, and that the first affidavit was sufficient. Newall v. Telegraph Construction Co., 35 L. J., Ch. 827; L. R. 2 Eq. affidavit was sufficient. 756; 14 W. R. 914.

A defendant having filed a concise statement, with interrogatories, under the above circumstances is not entitled, before the answer has come in, to take out a further summons for an affidavit of documents in the same special form as that in which he has interrogated; and such a summons will be dismissed as unnecessary.

A 'defendant will be required to answer an interrogatory which is pertinent to the case made by the bill, though it is not founded on any specific allegation in the bill, where the plaintiff has no knowledge on which to found such allegation. M' Garel v. Moon, 39 L. J., Ch. 367; L. R. 10 Eq. 22; 22 L. T. 355; 18 W. R. 568.

An interrogatory called for discovery of the names of the members of "the special committee appointed to transact the business in the plendings mentioned" :- Held, that this was sufficiently answered by denying that a special committee was appointed to transact the business in question; though there was a committee called a special committee, whose business it was to transact similar matters and which did, in fact, transact that particular business. Ib.

An interrogatory, if the discovery for which it calls may be material for the purposes of the suit, may be put, without introducing fictitious allegations or charges into the bill on which to found such interrogatory. Ib.

It is not necessary that there should be a distinct allegation in the bill upon which to found an interrogatory. It is sufficient if there is in the bill, and in the equities suggested by the bill, a sufficient statement to require the answer. Girdlestone v. North British Mercantile Insurance Co., 40 L. J., Ch. 230; L. R. 11 Eq. 197; 23 L. T. 392. When a question arises in a suit to which an insurance company is defendant, as to the meaning of a particular term used in a policy, the company will, in reply to interrogatories, be required to set out the particulars of other policies effected with them, for the purpose of shewing the practice of the office with regard to the term in question. Ib.

(App.) xx.

By the interrogatories of a bill, filed by a foreign merchant against his London agents. they were asked what were the powers and authorities given to them, and by what doen-ments they made out the same. They stated, that the powers and anthorities appeared from written correspondence, and that various letters had passed between the parties to which they referred :- Held, that the answer was insuffi-cient, and that they were bound to specify the documents containing their powers and authorities. Inglessi v. Spartali, 29 Beav. 564 ments, and the defendant, by his answer to that interrogatory, submitted that, inasmuch as the plaintiff might obtain discovery and production of documents by summons in chambers, he forebore to answer, whereupon the plaintiff excepted to the answer, the court made no order on the exceptions, except that the defendant's costs be costs in the cause. Ib.

Interrogatories to a bill having been filed. the defendant, by way of answer, after stating that the debt which was the subject-matter of the suit had been also the subject of an action, said that a considerable portion of the interrogatories filed in the suit was not only unsupported by any statement in the bill but were almost identical with interrogatories which had been filed in an action, and that he was advised he was not bound to answer such interrogatories, but if the court thought he was bound, then he craved leave to refer to his answer to the interrogatories at law. In answer to the interrogatories as to documents, the defendant said he was ready to make a full and complete discovery upon a summons being taken out by the plaintiff; and under these circumstances he abstained from further answering the last-mentioned interrogatories. Exceptions allowed with costs. Hudson v. Grenfell, 3 Giff. 388; 8 Jur. (N. S.) 878; 5 L. T. 417.

The court discourages the filing of interrogatories as to documents. If such interrogatories are filed it is a sufficient answer for the defendant to offer discovery according to the practice of the court by summons and affidavit in chambers. It has become the practice of the court to disallow exceptions to an answer in respect of such interrogatories, whether taken singly or together with other exceptions. Piffard v. Beeby, 35 L. J., Ch. 258; L. R. 1 Eq. 623; 14 L. T. 8; 14 W. R. 302.

When a defendant makes answer to an interrogatory as to documents, he is liable to

A plaintiff in a patent suit was required by interrogatories to set out a correspondence between himself and a third party, and also to Exceptions for insufficiency of answers to state the particulars of the infringement of his interrogatories as to books and papers under the patent on which he relied. He refused to answer these questions on the ground that the Landon Indisputable Life Policy Co., 10 Hare defendant might obtain an order in chambers to inspect the correspondence; and that he had sufficiently set out the particulars of the infringement in his bill :- Held that these answers were sufficient. Hoffmann v. Postill, L. R. 4 Ch. 673; 20 L. T. 893; 17 W. R. 901.

In determining whether a question is one of fact, and, therefore, to be answered, it makes no difference that it is asked with reference to a written document, Ib.

A defendant in a suit for infringement of a patent, in order to prove that there was no novelty in the plaintiff's patent, interrogated the plaintiff as to the inventions described in the specifications of previous patents, and asked him to shew in what respect they differed from his. The plaintiff declined to answer these interrogatories on the ground that the questions were not questions of fact, and that they related Therefore, where interrogatories upon a bill to the plaintiff's case; the defendant excepted comprised the common interrogatory for docuto the answer, and the exceptions were allowed.

The fact of a general affidavit as to documents having been filed is not a sufficient reason for refusing to answer an interrogatory inquiring as to particular documents. Catt v. Tourle, 22 L. T. 775; 18 W. R. 966.

A plaintiff is entitled to an answer as to whether or not certain documents (claimed by the defendant in his affidavit to be privileged) relate to a deed, and as to what are the grounds on which such privilege is claimed. Exceptions to answer for insufficiency allowed. Ib. The court ordered an examination on interrogatories to ascertain whether a party had purchased property with knowledge of a decree, - v. Falmouth (Lady), 2 Kel. 22 Ch. Amendment of Bill-Effect of ]-A plaintiff, without having required an answer to an original or amended bill, re-amended the bill by adding a co-plaintiff, but made no other alteration, and afterwards, within eight days of filing the re-amended bill, filed interrogatories going through the whole of the statements in the bill: -Held, that the interrogatories were irregular, and ought to be taken off the file. Southampton Boat and Pier Co. v. Rawlins, 3 N. R. 349; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 118; 9 L. T. 633; 12 W. R. 285.

After a defendant to an original bill had answered interrogatories, the plaintiff amended his bill, adding fresh statements and new defendants, but retaining most of the materials of the original bill. He then filed interrogatories, going through the whole of the statements of the bill as amended, and requiring each of the defendants to answer all the interrogatories:-Held, that an order made on the application of the original defendants, that interrogatories should be taken off the file, with liberty for the plaintiff to answer the new interrogatories within a limited time, had been rightly made. Drake v. Symes, 2 De G. F. & J. 81.

Semble, if a specific document is charged by a errogatory as to documents, he is many to security in the defendant's possession, and that alone, or accompanied by exceptions on specific information is required in respect of it, other grounds. But where a defendant declines and the answer is insufficient, exceptions would to answer such an interrogatory, submitting to be allowed, even though they might not be

A plaintiff filed no interrogatories to an original bill within the time in that behalf limited. The defendant put in a voluntary answer. Then the plaintiff amended the bill and filed interrogatories extending to the whole bill as amended, and not to the amendments alone. The defendant put in an answer to the interrogatories on the amendments only, and put in no answer to the interrogatories which went to the matter in the original bill, insisting that his voluntary answer must be taken to be a complete and sufficient answer to everything in the original bill. The plaintiff excepted :-Held, that the answer to the amendments only was sufficient. Denis v. Rochussen, 27 L. J., Ch. 368; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 298; 6 W. R. 265.

The court has power in such a case, on special application, to give the plaintiff leave to file interrogatories and compel a full answer to the original bill. Ib.

After exceptions for insufficiency to an answer had been allowed, the plaintiff obtained an order to amend his bill and interrogatories; and a new copy of the amended interrogatories, embracing much that was contained in the original interrogatories, was served upon the defendant :-Held, that as at the time of obtaining the order to amend the plaintiff had not had any answer to the bill, he was entitled, on such amendment, to serve the defendant with amended interrogatories; and a motion by the defendant to take tories; and a motion by the determine to case them off the file was refused. When a sufficient answer has been put in to interrogatories founded on the averments in an original bill, amended interrogatories which are substantially founded on those averments need not be answered, though the bill has been amended and some new charges introduced as foundation for the amended interrogatories, Hill v. Northern Ry. of Buenos Ayres, 41 L.J.,

At What Stage. |- Interrogatories for examination of defendant may be filed after a written copy, and before a printed copy, of a bill has been filed. Lambert v. Lomas, 9 Hare (App.), xxix.; 22 L. J., Ch. 12; 16 Jur. 1008; 1 W. R.

A plaintiff having let the time go by for filing interrogatories does not, by amending his bill, become entitled afterwards to file them to the old bill. The proper course is to apply to the court for an extension of time. Denis v. Rochussen,

27 L. J., Ch. 368; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 298; 6W. R. 265. A plaintiff having omitted to file interrogatories for examination of the defendant within the time limited by the 16th order of the 7th August. 1852, moved, according to the 20th order, on notice, for leave to file interrogatories, with an affidavit, that, through press of business, the plaintiff's solicitor had neglected to file them in due time :-Held, that the plaintiff must pay the costs of this motion. Dakins v. Garratt. 4 allowed if the interrogatory as to documents interrogatories should be delivered. Empson v. had been general and the defendant had not Boutley, 2 Sm. & G. (App.), iii. answered it. Westminster Brymbo Coal and Coke Co. v. Chayton, 3 N. R. 111.

A plaintiff is bound to file his interrogatories within the time limited by the general orders although the bill has been demurred to, Harding v. Tingey, 34 L. J., Ch. 13; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 872; 10 L. T 323; 12 W. R. 817.

A plaintiff in an original suit failing to file interrogatories within the time limited for that purpose will, if the plaintiff in the cross-suit file interrogatories in due time, lose his right to an answer before he answers the cross-bill. Garwood

v. Curteis, 10 Jnr. (N.S.) 199; 10 L, T. 26; 12 W. R. 509.

Interrogatories having been filed too late, the defendant's solicitors refused to receive them. on the ground that the suit was a very hostile one, and that no indulgence would be given or expected. The defendant afterwards obtained an extension of the time for answering, but omitted to serve the order upon the plaintiff's. solicitors, who subsequently obtained an order nisi for a sequestration. The court discharged the order nisi, and directed that both parties should pay their own costs. Bignold v. Cobbold, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 152; 11 L. T. 665,

Leave to File. 1-The judges' elerks have nower. with the consent of all parties, to make orders for leave to file interrogatories. Anon., 4 Jur. (N.S.) 579, n.

Service.]-Delivery of a copy of the interrogatories to a bill by leaving it at the office of the defendant's solicitors, without being served on the solicitor personally :- Held, sufficient under the 12th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. Bowen v. Price, 2 De G. M. & G. 899; 22
 L. J., Ch. 179. Reversing 1 Drew, 307.

Service of interrogatories upon the defendant's solicitor before he has entered an appearance is invalid; but where the appearance was afterwards entered, and the defendant took subsequent steps to extend the time for filing his answer, the court declared that the service should be deemed good. Sankey v. Alexander. Ir. R. 7 Eq. 407.

Taking off the File, ]-When a plaintiff has interrogatories and wishes to have the cause heard on motion for decree, he will be allowed to take such interrogatories off the file. Hammond v. Hammond, 18 L. T. 553.

And on his own ex parte application. Stephens: v. Louch, 18 L. T. 552.

Tendency to Criminate.]-A party declining to answer interrogatories on the ground that his answer would subject him to penalties must swear to his belief that his answer would so subject him. Scott v. Miller, Johnson, 220; 28 L. J., Ch. 584; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 858; 7 W. R. 561. S. P., Fisher v. Ronalds, 12 C. B. 762.

Sufficiency of Answer. ]-Defendants, husband and wife, having answered a bill, seeking the accounts of a business in question in the suit extending over upwards of thirty years, in which the plaintiff had been a partner with the defendant, the husband, for the last ten years, Jur. (3.8.) 579.

The time within which the interrogatories obtained access to all the documents. The cought to be delivered under the 17th order of plaintiff amended his bill, introducing interrothe 7th August, 1852, having expired, the court, un- gatories as to minute particulars of the dealings der the 20th order, upon a motion, of which notice and accounts. The defendants, by their answer was given, enlarged the time within which such to the amended bill, stated that they had no means of ascertaining the particulars inquired after, except by the books in the defendants' the books in the possession of plaintiff and the documents, and that the plaintiff's professional accountant had examined them and made many extracts therefrom; and also that the books were ordinary business books, kept with regular entries; and that to set forth the accounts as required would subject the defenclants to an oppressive amount of labour; and plaintiff's exception to this answer: Held, that, though the answer was technically insufficient, yet the court, having regard to the bill and answer, was bound to consider what object the plaintiff could gain by a more full answer; and in the absence of an allegation that anything had been fraudulently or erroneously inserted in or omitted from the accounts, the court could not see any object to be gained by the plaintiff by a more full answer, and overraled the excep-tion. White v. Barker, 5 De G. & Sm. 746; 17

A father gave real estates to trustees in trust for his son for life, with a gift over if he charged or incumbered them. One of the trustees filed a bill for the administration of the trusts of the will, and afterwards filed a supplemental bill against the defendants, who were in possession of part of the estates, alleging that they claimed under a charge made in their favour by the tenant for life, which operated as a forfeiture. The defendants were interrogated as to the particulars of all charges in their favour, if any, of the property of the testator. The defendants stated in their answer that they claimed under no charge made by the tenant for life, but under a lease at a rack-rent which he had granted to a who had mortgaged the lease to them. The plaintiff excepted to the answer because the defendants did not set forth the date of the lease :- Held, that the plaintiff, being a trustee, was entitled to know the particulars of those who claimed to be his cestuis one trustent; and the exceptions must therefore be allowed. Hurst v. Hurst, 44 L. J., Ch. 111; L. R. 9 Ch. 762; 31 L. T. 264; 22 W. R. 939.

A bill for specific performance of a contract to sell certain premises and machinery, alleged that the vendors had, since the date of the contract. let the premises to third parties, and the vendors were required by the interrogatories to set out the names of such persons, the particulars of the sales, and an account of the rents of the premises. and also to state whether the plant was not being deteriorated by the user thereof by the tenants. The vendors having refused to give the discovery sought by the interrogatory :-Held, on exception to the answer for insufficiency, that the vendee was entitled to know to whom the property had been let, and for what term. Dixon v. Fraser. L. R. 2 Eq. 497.

Where the bill alleges that the defendant, in the course of a correspondence between himself and others, made certain representations respecting the subject matter of the suit, and one of the interrogatories requires him to set forth a list of the correspondence, an answer which merely states that the correspondence contains no such discovery as to what they were. The bill prayed representation is insufficient. Rishton v. Grissell, an injunction to restrain an action which the 14 W. R. 578.

Where a defendant is required by an interrogatory to set forth a list of all correspondence possession, which were eighty in number, and relating to a negotiation, and answers that if he wrote or received any letters on the subject he defendant, which were sixty in number; and has not preserved them, and that he has none alleged that the plaintiff had had access to all except those in the schedule, the answer is insufficient. S. C., 14 W. R. 789.

An interrogatory asked whether certain shares did not still remain unsold, and were they not still standing in the name of the defendant, or shares had been sold and that the certificates of some of them were in the possession of the they submitted that they were not bound to defendant, but did not state farther as to whose answer such interrogatories in detail. Upon the name they were standing in. An exception to name they were standing in. An exception to the answer for insufficiency allowed. Eusey v. Webber, 18 W. R. 1064.

The plaintiffs, by the interrogatories of their bill, which was to restrain an alleged piracy, required the defendants to set forth "whether the defendants employed any and what persons, and who, by name and address, in making personal inquiries for the purpose of obtaining original information for their directory, and to place against the name of each such person the name of each town, village and place visited by each such canvasser and agent, and the time during which he remained at each such town and village and place making personal inquiries for the purposes of the defendants' directory.' answer that "upwards of fifty persons had been employed as canvassers, &c., but did not set out the names and addresses of the canvassers. or the towns visited, &c., is insufficient. Kelly v. Wyman, 20 L. T. 300; 17 W. R. 399.

Where a defendant's acts of ownership and possession of land are denied, and he is interrogated as to the time and circumstances of such acts of ownership and such possessions, he will not be allowed, on the ground of desiring to avoid disclosing the evidence of his title, to answer by merely alleging acts of ownership from time immemorial and possession generally. Bute (Marquis) v. Lewis, 16 L. T. 82; 15 W. R. 479.

B. had acted for the testator during the life of the latter, with full and unrestricted powers of management; the wife of B. was the testator's daughter and sole executrix. The testator's widow was entitled to a legacy of 1,500L under her husband's will, and also to the furniture, effects, &c., of the testator. The testator's will was extremely brief and informal; and she on that ground filed a bill for the administration of the testator's estate, praying the usual account. The defendants, in answer to an interrogatory of the plaintiff, furnished an account of all dealings with the testator's property up to the date of the suit from a date six years prior to his death, and claimed the benefit of the Statute of Limitations as to the period antecedent to these six years :- Held, that the defendant was a trustee, and could not avail himself of the Statute of Limitations. Gray v. Bateman, 21 W. B. 137.

The plaintiff was rector of a parish of which the defendants were patrons, and he filed a bill against them, alleging that they had demised to him a moiety of the tithes of the parish, and that he had subsequently discovered that the whole of the tithes belonged to him as rector. The bill also alleged that the defendants were in possession of lands which belonged to the plaintiff in right of his living, and that they refused him all defendants had commenced against him for rent, lands part or parcel of the rectory, and that the defendants might be ordered to deliver up possession of the lands to the plaintiff, and deliver to him the documents relating thereto, and that they might account for the rents. The defendants answered as to the tithes, but declined to give any discovery as to the lands, or the documents relating to them. An exception to the answer on this point having been allowed by the vice-chancellor :-Held, that the defendants. not having demurred, could not protect themrelief as to them, was demurrable. Bates v. Christ's College, Cambridge, 8 De G. M. & G. 726; 26 L. J., Ch. 449; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 348; 5 W. R. 337.

Duty to Answer Fully, —A defendant objecting to answer a particular interrogatory merely states his ground of objection; but if he answers part of it, he must answer the whole. Gray v. Bateman, 21 W. R. 137.

A mortgagee in possession, defendant to a bill for redemption, admitting himself by his answer to be redeemable, cannot decline to answer interrogatories requiring him to set forth an account of the rents and profits of the mortgaged here-ditaments, the rule being that when a party answers he is bound to answer fully. Elmer v. Creusy, 43 L. J., Ch. 166; L. R. 9 Ch. 69; 29 L. T. 632.

The plaintiff's right to discovery and to production rest on the same principle. A defendant who submits to answer must answer fully; he cannot, by denial of the plaintiff's title, escape answering. Discovery of title-deeds, and of professional communications, forms an exception. Dissent from the doctrine laid down in Adams v. Fisher (3 Myl. & Cr. 526). Swinborne v. Nelson, 16 Beav. 416: 22 L. J., Ch. 331: 1 W. R. 155.

A defendant is not exempted from the duty of answering fully by the fact that, if he should answer the interrogatories in detail, he would be merely repeating statements contained in the affidavits and depositions previously filed in the cause. Turner v. Juck, 23 L. T. 800; 19 W. R.

The plaintiffs filed their bill, claiming to be entitled to the profits of a partnership as from a certain date, when, as they alleged, the defen-dants fraudulently attempted to dissolve the partnership; and they sought discovery of the profits of the partnership from such time, and the production of the books and documents relating thereto. The defendants put in their answers, alleging that the partnership had been legally dissolved, and that the plaintiffs had no further interest therein; and they refused to give discovery of the profits subsequently realised, or to produce the books and documents. Upon exceptions to the answers for insufficiency: -Held, that the defendants, having answered, must answer fully; and the exceptions were allowed. Clegg v. Elmondson, 22 Beav. 125; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 824.

Where a defendant, neither pleading nor demurring, answers the bill, he must answer fully; but there are exceptions to the rule, and and it prayed also that it might be declared that which he swears establish his own title and do the plaintiff was entitled to all the tithes and not establish that of the plaintiff. Cases where not establish that of the plaintiff. Cases where the discovery would subject the defendant to penalties and forfeitures are also exceptions to the rule. Ib.

The expression "tending to make out the plaintiff's title" means his title to the relief which he seeks by his bill. Ib.

Questions of insufficiency of answer and production of documents rest on the same grounds, and must be dealt with in the same way. Ib.

A defendant electing to answer is bound to answer fully; and therefore, where an answer scless from giving discovery as to the lands on the ground that the bill, so far as it sought for effectual bar to the plaintiffs title, and the relicit as to them, was demurable. Bates v. defendant, upon the assumption that this deer Christ's College, Cumbridge, 8 De G. M. & G. was valid, claimed to be relieved from answering interrogatories as to the state of investment of funds, the subject of the suit :- Held, that, for the purpose of exceptions no part of an answer could be assumed as true, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to a full answer. v. Sutton, 1 Hem. & M. 514; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1321; 9 L. T. 711 ; 12 W. R. 124.

A defendant answering must answer fully, and he cannot, by denying the plaintiff's title, refuse a discovery of the accounts which are consequential on a decree being made against him. Great Luxembourg Ry. v. Magnay, 23 Beav. 646.

A railway company, under the advice of the chairman and directors, bought up another line in which the chairman was principally interested, and the chairman was furnished with a number of paid-up shares to effect the object. In answer to a bill by the company, impeaching the transaction, on the ground of suppression and misrepresentation, and of ignorance on the part of the company of the chairman's interest, he insisted on the validity of the transaction on various grounds, and declined to set forth how he had dealt with the shares :- Held, that the answer was insufficient. Ib.

The rule that where a defendant submits to answer he must answer fully, does not apply where the matter of discovery is immaterial to the relief sought by the bill. Woodv. Hitchings, 3 Beav. 504: 10 L. J., Ch. 257.

The rule that a defendant who answers is bound to answer fully is not affected by the decision in Adams v. Fisher (3 Myl. & C. 526; 7 L. J., Ch. 289; 2 Jur. 508). Lancaster v. Ecors, 1 Ph. 349; 13 L. J., Ch. 269; 8 Jur. 133.

A plea of privilege of attorney having been overruled by the answer, the defendant not permitted to avail himself of his privilege from answering fully. Sheeles v. Shearley, 4 L. J., Ch. 5

A plaintiff, as personal representative of a deceased testator, stated by his bill that F., a defendant, had acted as his solicitor, and had in that character received various sums on account of the testator's estate; for which he had not accounted to him; and alleged that he had lately discovered, as the fact was, that the defendant F. had some time since prevailed upon him (the plaintiff) to execute a power of attorney to estate, and to employ another attorney under him; and the plaintiff charged that this power of attorney was a contrivance between F. and P., to enable F, to receive the assets without being where the defendant sets up a distinct and inde-pendent title in himself, which, if established, will destroy the plaintiff sittle, in that case he is not bound to produce or set out any documents attorney; and that the defendants had in their possession books and papers relating to the matstances under which, the alleged payment took ters mentioned in the bill, and by which the place.  $Hill_{\rm F}$ , Wates, 43 L. J., C. P. 380; L. B. truth of such matters would appear. The defendant F, by his answer, set out a power of attorney from the plaintiff to P., authorising him (P.) to get in the testator's estate, and to employ an attorney under him; and stated that he (F.) had never been employed by the plaintiff, but had been employed as an attorney and solicitor, solely by P., acting under the power of attorney; and had, in the course of such employment, received various sums on account of the testator's He denied the charges of contrivance and misrepresentation. He admitted the possession of certain documents relating to the testator's estate and affairs: but submitted that he was accountable to the plaintiff:—Held, that F. a banking company carrying on business in cocould not be compelled to produce the documents partnership, under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46. M.Kewan v.
Admitted to be in his possession. Adams v. R. M. 44 H. & N. 738; 28 L. J., Ex. 380; 5 Jun.

(N.S.) 714; 7 W. R. 601. Jur. 508.

Exceptions to Answer. ]-One interrogatory contained six questions. The defendant answered five; but the answer to the sixth question was insufficient. The plaintiff excepted to the answer, the exception including not only the unanswered question but all the other questions which, it was admitted, had been answered :-Held, that the exception was wrong in form. Higginson v. Blockley, 25 L. J., Ch. 74; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1104.

The ordinary questions as to particulars, in an interrogatory asking for an account of personal estate, are not to be regarded as separate questions; and an exception to the answer in respect of such an interrogatory need not specify which of them is unanswered. Zumbuco v. Cassarctti.

38 L. J., Ch. 503.

Where an interrogatory is too sweeping in its terms, an exception to the answer overruled on a mere technicality will be overruled with costs. Simpson v. Charlesworth, 14 L. T. 699; 14 W. R. 857.

Where an interrogatory, mixing up subject matters which could and ongo to be distinct, and exceptions to the answer are allowed only as to some portion of the answer to an interrogatory, or an exception is partly allowed and partly overruled, the defendant will not be made to pay the costs of those exceptions. Lunaton v. Waite, 15 L. T. 204; 15 W. R. 53.
After exceptions had been allowed to an answer to an information, the court, being of opinion that the interrogatories were more extensive than the purposes of the suit required, referred it to the attorney-general to consider what course ought to be taken with respect to the exceptions, and stayed all proceedings in the snit in the meantime. Att.-Gen, v. Carlisle Corporation, 4 Sim. 275.

Dickson v. Neath and Brecon Ry., 38 L. J., Ex. 57; L. R. 4 Ex. 87; 19 L. T. 702; 17 W. R. 501.

Clerk to Commissioners.] - Interrogatories: were allowed against the clerk to commissioners, for negligence by the commissioners. Mason v. Wythe, 3 F. & F. 153.

Town Clerk. ]-In an action against a corporation for malicious arrest, false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, the plaintiff proposed to exhibit interrogatories to the town clerk, asking whether he caused the plaintiff to be arrested, and if so, under what anthority he acted :-Held, that the interrogatories should be allowed; and if the answers to any of them would disclose anything tending to make the party interrogated criminally liable, or anything which he would be privileged on any other ground from disclosing, he must avail himself of such privilege by objecting to answer such interrogatories. M. Fadzen v. Liverpool Corporation, 37 L. J., Ex. 193; L. R., 3 Ex. 229; 18 L. T. 611; 16 W. R. 1212.

b. Principles for Allowance or Disallowance,

According to Practice in Equity. ]-In allowing interrogatories a court of common law is not confined within the same limits as a court of

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 51, is limited to the cases where a discovery would be given in equity; and semble, that it applies to eases only where the matters inquired into would be evidence in the cause, and does not give one party the power of asking the other how he intends to shape his case. Edwards v. Wakefield, 6 El. & Bl. 463; 2 Jnr. (N.S.) 762; 4 W. R. 710.

Interrogatories may be delivered as to such matters as may be interrogated to by a bill of discovery in a court of equity. Whateley v. Crawford, 5 El. & Bl. 709; 25 L. J., Q. B. 163;

2 Jur. (N.S.) 207; 4 W. R. 121.

In allowing a party to deliver interrogatories to the opposite party, the court will take as a guide the rules and principles acted upon in the courts of equity as to bills of discovery, although it will not consider itself to be fettered by those rules. Pye v. Butterfield, 5 B. & S. 829; 34 L. J., Q. B. 17; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 220; 11 L. T. 448; 13 W. R. 178.

The court allowed a plaintiff to interrogate a defendant as to allegations in his plea, the interrogatories being on matters in respect of which, according to the practice of the Court of Chanocry, discovery would be granted in equity, Hawkins v. Curr., 6 B. & S. 995; 35 L. J., Q. B. 81; L. R. 1 Q. B. 89; 12 Jur. (N.s.) 334; 13 L. T. 321; 14 W. R. 138.

Quære, whether the right to deliver interrogatories is limited to matters respecting which a discovery can be obtained in a court of equity. Martin v. Hemming, 10 Ex. 478.

As to Documents. ]-An interrogatory delivered under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 51, and inquiring as to documents relating to the matters in dispute in an action, need not be limited to documents in the possession or control of the person interrogated, but may be extended to such as he has had at any time in his possession or control-to such, that is to say, as he may have parted with though he has once had them in his possession or power. Lethbridge v. Cronk, 44 L. J., C. P. 381; 33 L. T. 171; 23 W. R. 703.

- Lost Document. ]-If it be shewn prima facie that a document is lost, the defendant may be examined upon interrogatories as to the contents of it, but the answers are not available at the trial unless it be shewn in the usual way that the document cannot be then produced. Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co. v. Hawksford, 7 W. R. 244.

Contents of Written Instruments. ]-Interrogatories will not be allowed which ask for the contents of written documents. Herschfield v. Clark, 11 Ex. 712; 25 L. J., Ex. 113; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 4 W. R. 292.

Interrogatories which are put for the purpose of contradicting a written instrument are inadmissible. Moor v. Roberts, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 671; 26 L. J., C. P. 246; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1221; 5 W. R. 693.

If a party interrogated as to whether he has in his possession any deeds or writings relating to the lands in dispute, answers on oath that he has, but that such deeds relate exclusively to his own title to the lands, and do not shew any title in the opposite party, he cannot be compelled to state the contents of the deeds, or to describe them, his oath as to their effect being conclusive. Adams v. Lloyd, 3 H. & N. 351; 27 L. J., Ex. 499; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 590; 6 W. R. 752.

Where a defendant having been examined on interrogatories under s. 51 of the C. L. P. Act, 1854, as to letters in his possession relevant to the issues joined in the action, and having been required to set forth copies if he had them, submitted that he was not bound to set forth copies, the plaintiff could not compel the defendant to deliver copies under that section, but must apply to inspect and take copies under s. 50. Scott v. Zygomalas, 4 El. & Bl. 483; 24 L. J., Q. B. 129; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 63; 3 W. R. 163.

Common to Plaintiff's and Defendant's Case. Whatever is common to both a plaintiff's and a defendant's case may be inquired into by either party, though the answers may disclose the ease of his opponent; but neither party can interrogate the other as to matters which relate exclusively to his opponent's case. Whateley v. Crawford, 5 El. & Bl. 709; 25 L. J., Q. B. 163; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 207; 4 W. R. 121,

But where interrogatories administered relate as much to the plaintiff's case as to the defendant's, the latter is bound to answer them, although the answers may disprove his case. Bayley v. Griffiths, 1 H. & C. 429; 31 L. J., Ex. 477; 10 W. R. 798.

Relating Exclusively to Case of Interrogating Party.]—In actions against a land surveyor for negligence in the valuation and survey of estates, and against an attorney for negligence in not defending actions brought against the plaintiff : -Held, first, that the plaintiff might deliver interrogatories asking what steps the defendant Davies, 5 El. & Bl. 709; 25 L. J., Q. B. 163; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 207; 4 W. B. 121.

Held, secondly, that interrogatories asking the defendant what steps it was his duty to take under his instructions were not admissible, being matter of law. Ib.

It is no objection to interrogatories that they seek to obtain from the plaintiffs admissions of conversations relating to the subject matter of the action with a servant or an agent of the defendant. Rew v. Hutchins, 10 C. B. (N.S.)

Interrogatories, cross-examining the plaintiff upon the terms and conditions of various prior transactions between the same parties, and not connected directly with the contract sued upon, were not allowed. Ib.

Nor as to the terms of any contract between the plaintiff and other persons. Ib.

Nor, in cross-examination of the plaintiff, to disprove a custom on which the defendant supposes the plaintiff will rely. Ib.

Interrogatories asking whether the plaintiff has had a correspondence relating to the subjects in dispute, and asking for the dates and names of the places and the correspondence, are allowable. Ib. The court will allow any interrogatories which are relevant to the matter in issue, and which the party interrogated would be bound to answer if in the witness box. Zychlinski v. Maltby, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 838.

Interrogatories ought to be such as tend bona fide to support the ease of the party interrogating and to favour a complete inquiry into the truth of the issue which the court has to decide. The Mary or Alexandra, 38 L. J., Adm. 29; L. R. 2 Adm. 319; 18 L. T. 891; 17 W. R. 551. Fishing.]—The court will not allow In an action for breach of an agreement to interrogatories, the tendency of which is to discover how the plaintiff intends to shape his case, without furthering any case which the defendant terrogatories to the plaintiff as to the solvency has to set up. of a cause of action shewn to the court, and will 3 Q. B. 778; 16 W. R. 1010. be refused where the object is to ascertain what the plaintiff's cause of action is, or whether he has any. Morris v. Parr, 6 B. & S. 203; 34 L. J., Q. B. 95; 13 W. R. 337.

In trover, by the assignees of a bankrupt, the defendant obtained a rule nisi to administer interrogatories to the assignees to discover what case they intended to set up at the trial, and on what acts of bankruptcy they intended to rely: -Held, that the interrogatories were inadmissible; at all events, on the ground that Jur. (N.S.) 283; 13 L. T. 600; 14 W. R. they were fishing interrogatories, asking for a disclosure of the evidence in support of the plaintiffs' case. Edwards v. Wakefield, 6 El. & Bl. 463; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 762; 4 W. R. 710.

 Title.]—In trover a defendant will not be allowed to interrogate the plaintiff as to the nature of the title by which he claims the goods. Finney v. Forward, 4 H. & C. 33; 35 L. J., Ex. 42; L. R. 1 Ex. 6; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 878; 13 L. T. 296; 13 W. R. 85.

In trover for cotton, the defendant interrogated the plaintiff how and when he first became possessed of the cotton, and when and in whose hands it was when he first became possessed of This interrogatory was disallowed. Ib.

He also interrogated the plaintiff as to his dealings with the person from whom the defendant had obtained the cotton, but did not shew by his affidavit that any such dealings had taken place, or that he had made any inquiries of that person. This was disallowed. Ib.

- As to Damages. ] - In an action on a policy of assurance on a cargo of wheat, claiming for a total loss, the pleas denying the policy, the interest, the loading, and the loss, and also setting up an unreasonable delay in sailing, interrogatories were allowed, which went to support the latter plea, and also such as were directed to the question of damage, but not such as were merely calculated to disclose the case which the plaintiff would have to prove under the plea in denial. Zarji v. Thornton, 26 L. J., Ex. 214; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 72.

A defendant may interrogate a plaintiff for the purpose of ascertaining the damage he has the purpose of ascerdanting the damage he has sustained, so as to enable him to pay the real amount into court. Wright v. Goodlake, 3 H. & C. 540; 34 L. J., Ex. 82; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 14; 13 L. T. 120; 13 W. R. 349.

When money has been paid into court by a defendant in an action to recover damages for 265. personal injuries caused by the negligence of the defendant, interrogatories as to the nature and extent of the injuries sustained, and generally as to the damages, are permissible. Frost v. Brooke, 32 L. T. 312; 23 W. R. 260.

When a defendant's object is to pay money into court in satisfaction of the plaintiff's cause of action, he will be allowed to interrogate the plaintiff as to the particulars of the damage sustained by him. Horne v. Hough, 43 L. J., C. P. 70; L. R. 9 C. P. 135; 22 W. R. 412.

court allowed the defendant to administer inof the company and the amount of damage of the company and the domain of damage of 1; 26 L. J., C. P. 246; 3 Jur. (N. 25 L. 25), which he had sustained by reason of the non-5 W. R. 693. Interrogatories will only be allowed in support 9 B. & S. 516; 37 L. J., Q. B. 261; L. J.

> - Validity of Patent. ]-In an action for the breach of an agreement to pay the stamp duty on letters patent, whereby they became void, and the plaintiff lost the profits thereof, the court refused to allow the defendant to administer interrogatories to the plaintiff for the purpose of shewing that the letters patent were of no value. Jourdain v. Palmer, 4 H. & C. 171; 35 L. J., Ex. 69; L. B. 1 Ex. 182; 12

> ---- Opponent's Case.]-Interrogatories will not be allowed where they relate wholly to matter which tends to support the case of the opposite party. Stewart v. Smith, L. R. 2 C. P.

293; 15 L. T. 580.

In an action for a malicious prosecution on a charge of stealing books, the court allowed interrogatories requiring the plaintiff to state whether or not certain books described were in his possession, and when, where, and from whom he bought them, and the price he paid for them. Ib.

In an action against a bank to recover damages for refusing to honour the plaintiff's acceptance, a cross-interrogatory was administered to the plaintiff, who resided abroad, asking whether he agreed with the particulars stated therein respecting the state of his balance, to which he simply replied, "I do not admit this to be correct." An application was made that the course might be postponed until the following term, on the ground that the answer was not satisfactory: -Held, that the information sought was within the knowledge of the bank, and could be shewn by their own books, and the application was therefore refused. De Faria v. Lawrie, 17 L. T.

Action for Wrongful Detention of Document. -In an action for wrongful detention of a document the plaintiff applied for liberty to deliver interrogatories with the declaration, upon a suggestion that defendant must have obtained a copy of the original from plaintiff's elerk, as he had shewn it only to him; and a paragraph had appeared on the following day in defendant's newspaper, containing matter leading to the inference that the writer had used the document in writing the paragraph :- Held, that there was not sufficient foundation for the application. Atter v. Willison, 7 W. R.

Settlement of Accounts. ]-In an action on common counts brought by surviving partners, to which the defendant pleaded a settlement of accounts with the deceased partner, and receipt of a bill of exchange by him according to the terms of that settlement, interrogatories may be put to the defendant as to the particulars of that settlement, and the time when and the place where it was entered into. Hawkins v. Carr, 6 B. & S. 995. .

Authority-Practice. ]-In an action on a bill of exchange by an indorsee against the acceptor, he was not allowed to interrogate the defendant as to whether or not on one previous occasion he had not authorised his bankers to pay a similar bill. Marris v. Bethell, 38 L. J., C. P. 377; L. R. 4 C. P. 765; 17 W. R. 736.

In an action for assault and false imprisonment against a county inspector of constabulary and two constables, the court allowed interrogatories to be administered to the inspector, to ascertain if the constables had acted under his command, or by his authority. O'Connell v. Barry, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 648.

Superfluous.]—The court will not allow in-terrogatories for the purpose of obtaining from the plaintiff information which the defendant has the means of obtaining from his own agents. Bird v. Malzy, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 308.

Tending to disclose Trade Secrets. ]-It is no ground for refusing to answer interrogatories in an action for the infringement of a patent, that the answers may expose the defendant's customers to actions. Tetley v. Euston, 18 C. B. 643; 25 L. J., C. P. 293.

It is no ground for refusing, in answer to interrogatories, to produce a correspondence which has taken place upon the subject-matter of the action, that the production of such correspondence would disclose the secrets of the trade of the party interrogated. The Don Francisco, 31 L. J., Adm. 205; 6 L. T. 133.

A plaintiff complained that the defendant had sold, under the plaintiff's name, sewing machines which had not been manufactured by him, and he sought a discovery of all the machines sold by the defendant, the price, the profit, the names of the purchasers, and other particulars. The defendant refused to answer, saying that he would thereby disclose the names of his customers and the secrets of his trade:—Held, that he was bound to answer. Howe v. M'Kernan, 30 Beav. 547.

And see cases, infra, D. II.

When privileged from Answering.] - The court will not, on a motion for leave to deliver interrogatories, entertain the objection that they are such as the party to be interrogated is privileged from answering. Such objection must be taken when the interrogatories are administered. Chester v. Wortley, 17 C. B. 410; 25 L. J., C. P. 117; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 287; 4 W. R. 325. S. P., Osborn v. London Dook Co., 10 Ex. 698; 3 C. L. B. 313; 24 L. J., Ex. 140; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 93 ; 3 W. B. 238.

Imputing Criminal Misconduct.]-It is no ground of objection to interrogatories that the answers, if given in the affirmative, would render the party interrogated liable to a criminal prosetion, though it may be ground for refusing to answer. Bartlett v. Lewis, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 249; 31 L. J., C. P. 230; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 202; 6 L. T. 388

In an action for a libel imputing a grave offence to the plaintiff, the court refused to allow the plaintiff to deliver interrogatories to the defendant, some of which the defendant was defendant, some of which are detendant was not bound to answer. Tupling v. Ward, 6 H. & N. 749; 30 L. J., Ex. 222; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 314; 4 L. T. 20; 9 W. R. 482. And see cases Interrogatories are sometimes disallowed, on the ground that they tend to impute illegal conduct to the party interrogated. Baker v. Lane, 3 H. & C. 544; 34 L. J., Ex. 57; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 117; 11 L. T. 638; 13 W. R. 293.

Interrogatories in an action for libel, pointing to the publication of the alleged libel by the defendant in a newspaper as to which no declaration had been registered in pursuance of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, ss. 6, 7, at the stamp office, were disallowed as tending to shew that the party interrogated had committed a criminal offence.

In an action against D. & B., as attorneys and solicitors, for not investing in a proper manner moneys intrusted to them, the plaintiff proposed to administer interrogatories to B, with a view of shewing that there was a partnership between him and D. in the business of attorneys and solicitors. B. objected to the interrogatories, on the ground that he had never been admitted as an attorney or a solicitor, and that they might. therefore, tend to criminate him, and expose him to an indictment under 6 & 7 Viet. c. 73, s. 2, for the misdemeanour of practising without a certificate. The interrogatories were allowed, the court considering that they were bona fide put to aid the action. Bickford v. D'Arcy, 4 H. & C. 534; 35 L. J., Ex. 202; L. R. 1 Ex. 354; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 816; 14 L. T. 629; 14 W. R. 900.

It is no objection to the delivery of interrogatories that the answers would criminate the party interrogated, but he may on that ground refuse Where, however, it appears to answer them. that interrogatories are not put bona fide, but with some sinister object, the court will in the exercise of its discretion disallow them.

The court will not refuse leave to deliver in terrogatories on the ground that the attorney of the party proposed to be interrogated swears that the questions, if answered, may tend to criminate his client. If they have that tendency, the objection must be taken by the client on oath. Osborn v. London Dock Co., 10 Ex. 698; oath. Osborn v. London Dock Co., 10 Ex. 598; 3 C. L. R. 313; 24 L. J., Ex. 140; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 93; 3 W. R. 238.

In the exercise of its discretion the court refused, in an action for libel, to allow interrogatories to be administered to the defendant where the direct tendency of them was to make the defendant criminate himself, and there were no special circumstances for allowing them to be put. Edmunds v. Greenwood, 38 L. J., C. P. 115; L. R. 4 C. P. 70; 19 L. T. 423; 17 W. R. 142.

Interrogatories, the answers to which may criminate the person interrogated, will not be allowed upon the common affidavit. Special circumstances must be shewn which render them necessary, and it is a matter for the discretion of the judge whether there is sufficient ground for allowing them to be put. Villeshoisnet v. Tubia, 38 L. J., C. P. 146; L. R. 4 C. P. 184; 19 L. T. 693; 17 W. R. 322.

When it was objected that certain interrogatories tendered by the plaintiff were of a criminatory nature, in a suit in the Admiralty Conrt, it was ordered that the interrogatories should be administered, but that, if the defendant stated upon oath his belief that an answer to any particular interrogatory would subject him to a penalty, he should not be compelled to answer it. The Mary or Alexandra, 38 L. J., Adm. 29; L. R. 2 Adm. 319; 18 L. T. 891; 17 W. R. tiff upon a common affidavit. Such affidavit

- Fraud. - It is no objection to interrogatories, that the answers, if given in the affirmative, will shew that the execution of a deed npon which the defence is founded was obtained by fraud. Goodman v. Holroyd, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 839.

c. In Particular Cases.

Ejectment.]-A tenant withholding possession of demised premises after the termination of his lease, and defending an action of ejectment by his lessor, will not be allowed to administer interrogatories to him which seek to ascertain the fact that the title of the latter has expired. Wallen v. Forrest, 41 L. J., Q. B. 96; L. R. 7 Q. B. 239; 26 L. T. 290.

In an ejectment for overholding, on the expiration of a lease for three lives and forty-one years from the death of the survivor, where the point in dispute was when one of the lives in the lease had died, the plaintiffs were permitted to interrogate the defendants as to the date of the death of the cestui que vie, and also as to the reputation in the family on the subject. Read v. M'Jennett, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 267.

In ejectment on the title, the court will allow the defendant to exhibit interrogatories to the plaintiff as to the links through which he claims to be heir. Kettlewell v. Dyson, 9 B. & S. 300;

18 L. T. 285 : 16 W. R. 851. Semble, however, that the plaintiff will not be allowed to exhibit similar interrogatories to the defendant. 1b.

A defendant held a dry dock and premises of Ex. 41; L. R. 9 Ex. 45. the plaintiff under a lease, which contained a provise empowering the plaintiff, if he should be desirous of building on the premises, and of closing the dock, "and should bona fide determine so to do," to put an end to the demise by giving notice in the way therein provided for. The plaintiff having put an end to the demise by giving notice according to this proviso, and brought ejectment, the defendant was allowed, with the view of testing the bona fides of the plaintiff's intention to build, to interrogate the plaintiff as to whether he had obtained from his the plaintiff was permitted to administer interroessors, the freeholders, any licence or authority to close the dry dock, and to build thereon. Winn v. Rose, 36 L. J., C. P. 306.

The statute applies to actions of ejectment.

Fliteroft v. Fletcher, 11 Ex. 543; 25 L. J., Ex. 1b.

94; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 191; 4 W. R. 268.

A defendant in ejectment is entitled to interrogate the plaintiff as to the character in which he snes, and the nature of the pedigree on which he relies, and as to links through which plaintiff claims to be heir. 1b.

A defendant in ejectment may be allowed to deliver interrogatories to the plaintiff as to the character or right or title under which he claims to be entitled to the premises claimed by him in the action; yet the defendant in ejectment cannot be ordered to answer interrogatories of a similar character on the part of the plaintiff. Horton v. Bott, 2 H. & N. 249; 26 L. J., Ex. 267; Jur. (X. 5) 568; 5 W. R. 792. See this case referred to in Lyell v. Kennedy, 52 L. J., Ch. 385; 8 App. Cas. 217; 48 L. T. 585; 31 W. R. 618—H. L. (E.)

A defendant in ejectment cannot obtain an order to administer interrogatories to the plain- 18 W. R. 526.

must allege special circumstances. Pearson v. Turner, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 157; 33 L. J., C. P. 224;

10 Jur. (N.S.) 731; 10 L. T. 461; 12 W. R. 801. In ejectment by landlord against lessee to recover possession of premises, and enforce a forfeiture by reason of his having underlet, the court will not allow the landlord to deliver interrogatories to the lessee where the answers might subject him to a forfeiture of his interest. Pye v. Butterfield, 5 B. & S. 829; 34 L. J., Q. B. 17; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 220; 11 L. T. 448; 13 W. R. 178.

In ejectment a defendant will not be allowed to deliver interrogatories inquiring into the title upon which the claimant relies, unless it is made to appear that the defendant is ignorant of the nature of the claim which the claimant intends to set up, and is unable otherwise to prepare his defence. Staate v. Rew, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 209; 32 L. J., C. P. 160; 11 W. R. 595.

In ejectment on a forfeiture for breaches of the conditions in lease, the court granted leave generally to deliver interrogatories to the defendant as to the existence of the lease and the extent of the demised premises, subject to any objection, if valid, which might be taken by him to answering any of the interrogatories when administered, on the ground of their tending to disclose a forfeiture of his estate. Chester v. Wortley, 17 C. B. 410; 25 L. J., C. P. 117; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 287; 4 W. R. 325.

Although interrogatories as to the means by which a defendant proposes to establish an adverse title to a hereditament are not admissible, yet interrogatories seeking only to ascertain the character of his title and the quality of his possession may be allowed. Towne v. Cocks, 43 L. J.,

The rector of a parish claimed, in an action for money had and received against the patron of the living, one-half of the rent of the churchyard. and of the tithe rent-charge which had been received by the patron since his induction. The defendant having pleaded a title by prescription, and also, as to the rent-charge, an agreement under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, whereby it was agreed that the tithes should be commuted, and that the substituted rent-charge should be received in equal shares by the then rector and himself, gatories as to the period for which the defendant and his predecessors had received the rents and tithes, or tithe rent-charge, and as to the circumstances under which they had so received them.

Bill of Lading.]—Barley was consigned by A. to B., and was delivered by the shipowners to B. without production of the bill of lading. The plaintiffs (who were B.'s bankers), as indorsees of the bill of lading from him, three months afterwards (B. having in the meantime become bankrupt) brought trover against the shipowners. Upon an affidavit suggesting that the bill of lading was indorsed to the plaintiffs after the delivery of the barley to B., or that they, having the bill of lading in their possession, knowingly suffered the shipowners to deliver the barley to B.: the court allowed interrogatories to be administered to the plaintiffs as to the time when, and the circumstances under which, the indorsement of the bill of lading to them took place. Derby Commercial Bank v. Lumsden, 39 L. J., C. P. 72; L. R. 5 C. P. 107; 21 L. T. 673;

Libel.]—A defendant interrogated whether he upon R. dismissed the plaintiff, without other the publisher of the newspaper in which the cause assigned:—Held, that the plaintiff could is the publisher of the newspaper in which the libel appears is protected from answering, on the ground that he might criminate himself, since 32 & 33 Viet. c. 24, abolishes the statutory declaration as to the publisher, and re-enacts 6 & 7 Will, 4, c. 76, s. 19, which provides for the discovery of the publisher by bill, and his Bowden v. Allen, 39 L. J., C. P. 217; 22 L. T. 342; 18 W. R. 695.

To an action for libel, in sending to the "Times" newspaper a libellous extract from a letter, the defendant pleaded the general issue and a justification; a judge, upon the usual affidavit, allowed the plaintiff to administer to the defendant the following interrogatory: "Did you write and send to the 'Times,' for publication, a letter signed Z., accompanied by what purported to be an extract from the letter from a Halifax merchant?" The defendant had obtained a commission to Nova Scotia to examine witnesses upon an affidavit, which stated that the extract was from a letter he had received from a person in Nova Scotia with whom he had since communicated, and on whose information, believing the statement to be true, he had pleaded a justification, in support of which it was necessary to examine witnesses in Nova This affidavit was not before the judge. Scotia. but it did not appear whether the facts had or had not been stated to him. On a motion to set aside the order allowing the interrogatory :-Held, that whether such an interrogatory should be allowed or not was a matter for the discretion of the judge, with which the court would not interfere, unless he was shewn to have been clearly wrong; and that though some special circumstances should be shewn to the judge before he would be justified in allowing such au interrogatory, yet the circumstances appeared to be sufficiently special, and were, at any rate, not shewn not to be so. Inman v. Jenkins, 39 L. J., C. P. 258; L. R. 5 C. P. 738; 22 L. T. 659; 18 W. R. 897.

In an action for libel, a judge refused to allow interrogatories to be administered to the defendant, the object of the plaintiff being to rebut the possible defence of privilege by proving malice in the defendant :—Held, that the refusal was right. Davis v. Gray, 30 L. T. 418.

Interrogatories in libel will not be allowed where the answers would enable the plaintiff to abandon the civil and institute criminal proceedings against the defendant. Ib. The discretion vested in a judge will not be reviewed by the court except on very strong grounds. Ib.

In order to be able to interrogate a defendant as to the contents of an alleged libel, it is necessary that the plaintiff should shew, first, that defamatory matter has been published; and, secondly, that he has been injured there-by. Stein v. Tabor, 31 L. T. 444.

by. Stein v. Tabor, 31 L. 1. 111.

The plaintiff, in leaving the employ of the German master, was furnished by the defendant with a testimonial describing him as "an able, painstaking master," who had always "conscientiously fulfilled all the duties which had devolved upon him." Upon the strength of this, among other testimonials, the plaintiff was appointed private secretary to R. The defendant, hearing of the appointment, wrote a letter not interrogate the defendant as to the contents of the letter to R.'s wife. Ib.

In an action for libel, the plaintiff interrogated the defendant as to the contents of a written communication made by the defendant a justice of the peace, to the lords commissioners of the great seal, concerning the plaintiff, who was also a justice of the peace; the defendant, by his answer, admitted that he had made a privileged communication, concerning the plaintiff, to the lords commissioners, but declined to answer as to its contents; the court, in the exercise of its judicial discretion, refused to compel the defendant to answer the interrogatory. Fitzgibbon v. Greer, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 294.

If, in an action for libel, the plaintiff puts an interrogatory to the defendant as to the contents of an existing written document, which he objects to answer upon the ground of the doenment being a privileged communication, the defendant's proper course is to move to discharge the order allowing the interrogatory to be put. Ib.

In an action for libel alleged to be contained in a letter, which, since it had been received by the person to whom it had been addressed, had been returned to and was in the possession of the defendant who had written it, the plaintiff applied at chambers for inspection of such letter, in order to enable him to declare in the action. The judge made an order for such inspection, upon the defendant declining to make an affidavit that the production of the letter would tend to eriminate her :- Held, that the judge had no power to make such order, inasmuch as, although the plaintiff might have obtained such inspection if he had proceeded under the C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 50, he was not entitled to it under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6 (under which the application must be considered as made), as a court of equity would not have granted discovery in this case, and the power of the common law courts under that section is limited to cases in which discovery could have been obtained in equity, and that section is not altered or extended by the C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 50. Hill v. Campbell, 44 L. J., C. P. 97; L. R. 10 C. P. 222; 32 L. T. 59; 23 W. R. 336.

In an action for libel, an application was made, no application having been previously made for discovery, for inspection of a letter written by the defendant said to contain the libel; the defendant refused to state on oath that the production of the letter would tend to criminate her :- Held, that such an application could only be made under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 91, s. 6, and that, as inspection under that section was confined to cases in which discovery would be given in equity, the fact that a court of equity would not in such a case give discovery, prevented the common law courts from granting the inspection desired. Ib.

In an action for libel, on an affidavit that the libel was in a printed handbill to which there was no printer's name; that the plaintiff could not ascertain who was the printer, and that the defendant had been seen with a person who affixed some of the handbills, and was also seen posting one himself, the court allowed interrogatories to be administered to the defendant as to whether he had not been justrumental in to R.'s wife, withdrawing the testimonial, where- printing and publishing the libel. Greenfield v.

notice or handbill, on which the name of the printer did not appear. The defendant had been seen with the person who distributed the notices. and had himself posted up one of them. On an application to administer interrogatories to him directed to ascertain if and to what extent he gave instructions for the printing and circulation of the handbills :- Held, that the special circumstances took the case out of the ordinary rule that interrogatories which tend to criminate will not usually be allowed in an action of libel. 1b.

Slander.]-The court, in the exercise of its discretion, refused to allow a plaintiff in an action for slander, where the alleged slander consisted of various and wide imputations, to deliver interrogatories, interrogating the defendant as to whether he had spoken the words, or any and what other words conveying similar imputations, and when, where, and to whom he mpudations, and which, where, and to whom he had spoken them. Stern v. Sevastopulo, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 737; 32 L. J., C. P. 268; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 317; 8 L. T. 538; 11 W. R. 862.

In an action for slander, a defendant may be compelled to answer interrogatories as to the words uttered, if it is made out to the satisfaction of the court that the plaintiff cannot othertion of the court limit the plantiff earthof otherwise obtain redress. Atkinson v. Fosbroke, 35 L. J., Q. B. 182; L. R. 1 Q. B. 628; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 810; 14 L. T. 553; 14 W. R. 832.

Negligence.] — A passenger on a railway, having been hurt by a train, was accompanied to her home by two of the company's servants under the direction of a third, an inspector, Subsequently bringing an action for damages in respect of the injury received, she sought to administer interrogatories to the company: Held, that they might be interrogated as to the names of their inspector, of their other servants who accompanied her home, and of the driver of the engine drawing the train by which she was a passenger, but might not be asked whether any of the servants of the company witnessed the accident, and, if so, what were their names. Potter v. Metropolitan District Ry., 28 L. T.

In an action against a railway company for damages sustained by a passenger from a collision on the line, through the alleged negligence of the company's servants, he was not allowed, without an affidavit disclosing special circumstances, to administer interrogatories to the company as to what was the cause of the accident, or as to whether they possessed or had the care of that with which the train came into collision. Bechevraise v. G. W. Ry., 40 L. J., C.P. 8; L. R. 6 C. P. 36; 23 L. T. 808; 19 W. R. 229.

In an action for injury by the alleged negligence of the defendant, the court will not allow interrogatories to be administered to the plaintiff as to the circumstances under which the accident happened, the extent of injury, the medical attendance, and charges for it. Peppiatt v. Smith, 3 H. & C. 129; 33 L. J., Ex. 239; 11 L. T. 139.

> Seduction. - In an action for seduction, the plaintiff may interrogate the defendant as to whether he had not had connection with the daughter, whether he had not been informed by her that she was pregnant by him, whether he was not the father of her child, whether he had not offered to maintain the child, and whether he had not stated, in the presence of other persons, that he had no reason to believe she had had connection with any other man. Hodsoll v. Taylor, 43 L. J., Q. B. 14; L. R. 9 Q. B. 79; 29 L. T. 534; 22 W. R. 89.

> In an action for seduction, it is not allowable to interrogate the defendant as to his present means or what property he is possessed of. But it is allowable to interrogate him with a view of obtaining admissions from him as to his having had sexual intercourse with the plaintiff's daughter. Ib.

> Trespass. - In an action of trespass to a several fishery, the plaintiff was allowed to interrogate the defendant before defence filed. for the purpose of ascertaining whether the defendant, or any person authorised by him, had fished in the waters over which the several fishery was claimed. Acheson v. Henry, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 496.

> By Companies against Shareholders.]—Inter-rogatories were allowed to be delivered on behalf of a company sning for calls, to a defendant, whom they sought to prove to be a shareholder, whether he had executed the subscription contract of the company, the company having madeout a prima facie case of its loss; but it was. made part of the rule that the answers were not to be used at nisi prins, unless the loss was. proved. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co. v. Hawksford, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 703; 28 L. J., C. P. 198; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 736; 7 W. R. 244.

d. Form.

Discretion of Judge.]—When interrogatories appear to a judge to be framed carelessly, and with too much latitude, so as in reality to throw upon him the trouble of settling them, he is not bound to select the one or two which he may think proper and to reject the others only, but in sending the whole of them back to be reformed he exercises a reasonable discretion with which the court will not interfere. Phillips v. Lewin, 34 L. J., Ex. 37; 11 L. T. 512.

The court or a judge at chambers ought not to In Valuation. |- A defendant was engaged as settle interrogatories for parties. If, therefore, the court or judge ought to refuse the whole, even though some of them may be unobjectionable. Robson v. Crawley or Cooke, 2 H. & N. 766; 27 L. J., Ex. 151; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 75; 6 W. R.

This, however, must not be taken so strictly as to mean that the court or a judge will not alter a word here or there, or the like, in order to render perfect a series of interrogatories correctly drawn in general. 1b.

The court will, on a rule to allow a party to settled at chambers. Zarifi v. Thornton, 26 L. J.,

Utility of Interrogation.]-The court or a judge should exercise the discretion given by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 51, so as to take care that interrogatorics should be useful as well as relevant. Alexandra (Newport) Dock Co. v. Elliot, 23 L. T. 847.

On an application to the court for leave to administer interrogatories the affidavit must amminster interrogatories the anianty must shew, with greater particularity than is always requisite at chambers, the object for which the questions are to be asked. Ib. It is not necessary that all the plaintiffs should join in an affidavit to ground a motion for liberty to administer interrogatories. Read v. M. Jennett, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 267.

Though there is no rule to preclude a defendant from being allowed to deliver interrogatories to the plaintiff before he has pleaded, yet if he seeks to be allowed to deliver them before plea, he must first disclose the nature of his defence, in order to shew that the interrogatories are for the purpose of supporting such defence. Genriey v. Plimsell, 42 L. J., C. P. 244; L. R. 8 C. P. 362; 29 L. T. 130.

Where, therefore, in an action for a libel the defendant pleaded a justification in a general form, he was not allowed to deliver interrogatories to the plaintiff until, either by affidavit or by particulars, he had first disclosed the matters on which his justification was founded. Ib.

A party, applying for leave to deliver interregatories, must shew the nature of his case so far as to enable the judge or the court to form

There should be an affidavit verifying the interrogatories. Ib.

Where there are several defendants the court will not allow the plaintiff to administer interrogatories to them unless the affidavits upon which the motion is grounded contain the averment that the plaintiff has a good cause of action against all. Doolin v. Diwon, 16 W. R.

By whom, ]-The facts that the plaintiff is, exhibit interrogatories, determine any question and always has been, residing in England and is of principle as to the right to exhibit them, but of very advanced years, are not such "unavoid-will leave the particular form of them to be able circumstances" as will enable the court to dispense with the affidavit of the plaintiff, and his agent or attorney, and to act upon one made by the plaintiff's attorney and his son, who has always had the management of the property in Adair v. Simpson, Ir. R. 1 C. L.

> An affidavit in support of an application by a plaintiff for leave to deliver interrogatories to the defendant must show that he has a good eause of action upon the merits. May v. Hun-kins, 11 Ex. 210; 3 C. L. R. 895; 24 L. J., Ex. 309; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 600; 3 W. R. 550.

> And must state that the party will derive benefit in the cause from the discovery which he seeks. But where a party sucs or defends in person, an affidavit of an attorney or agent will be dispensed with, Oxlade v. N.-E. Ry., 12 C. B. (N.S.) 350.

> In an action by an attorney, the application was made upon an affidavit of the plaintiff, describing him as attorney. The application had been heard before a judge, when the summons was indersed, by consent, "Disallowed, without prejudice to any future application": the objection that the attorney of the plaintiff ought to have joined in the affidavit, not having been taken at chambers, was waived. The court will not allow a defendant to deliver and court will not allow a defendant to deliver interrogatories before plea, except under special circumstances, as, for instance, where he makes out a case of urgent necessity. Martin v. Hemming, 10 Ex. 478; 24 L. J., Ex. 3; 18 Jur. 1002; 3 W. R. 29.

But interrogatories will be allowed to be administered to a defendant immediately after declaration, with leave to amend the breaches assigned in an action for infringement of a patent. Jones v. Platt, 6 H. & N. 697; 30 L. J., Ex. 305; 7 Jur. (N.s.) 978; 4 L. T. 411; 9 W. R. 696.
After appearance, but before declaration, the plaintiff not knowing the precise cause of action, applied for leave to administer interrogatories, in order that he might be enabled correctly to de-clare. The court refused the application. Morris clare. The court refused the application. v. Parr, 6 B. & S. 203; 34 L. J., Q. B. 95; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 388; 11 L. T. 706; 13 W. R. 337.

A summons to deliver interrogatories to a plainan opinion on the propriety of the proposed interrogatories: Crownes v. Morrison, 6 El. & judge having disallowed some, the determinant of the proposed of the counsel, on the last day of Hilary Term, moved for a rule to allow them. The court, in order to spring assizes, made it part of the rule that it should not operate as a stay of proceedings. Zarifi v. Thornton, 26 L. J., Ex. 214; 3 Jur. (N.S.)

The court will allow interrogatories to be delivered by a plaintiff, after the defendant has pleaded, without a special affidavit. James v. Barnes, 17 C. B. 596; 25 L. J., C. P. 182.

When a plaintiff seeks to deliver interrogatories before a declaration, he must, for this purpose, do more than produce an affidavit in the terms prescribed by s. 2. Croomes v. Morrison, 5 El. & Bl. 984; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 163; 4 W. R. 282.

Rule for.]-The rule for leave to deliver interrogatories is only a rule to shew cause. Thol v. Leaske, 24 L. J., Ex. 142; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 47.

g. Answer.

Sufficiency. 1-The answers to interrogatories may be insufficient by reason of containing, in addition to the information asked for, impertment or otherwise objectionable matter. Peyton v. Harting, 43 L. J., C. P. 10; L. R. 9 C. P. 9; 29 L. T. 478; 22 W. R. 61.

An order directing that a person interrogated shall be orally examined as to the matters concerning which he has refused or omitted to make an affidavit is sufficient. Ib.

In an action by a principal against his agent, for negligence in the purchase of goods for the principal, the agent being interrogated touching certain matters connected with such purchase not within his own knowledge, but known to his partner at New York, declined to answer on the ground of ignorance as to such matters. Further interrogatories being administered, touching the same matters, he answered, stating that since action certain communications had passed between him and his firm at New York, with a view to his defence to the action, and that all his information as to the matters in question was derived from such communications, and submitting that he was privileged from disclosing such communications :- Held, on an application to the court to compel him to make further answer to the interrogatories, that he was so privileged, and that the application must be refused. Phillips v. Routh, 41 L. J., C. P. 111; L. R. 7 C. P. 287; 26 L. T. 845; 20 W. R. 630.

Where a party objects to the sufficiency of the answers, and seeks to have a vivâ voce examination, he must apply promptly. Chester v. Wortley. 18 C. B. 239.

The jurisdiction of the court, in case of omission without just cause to answer sufficiently written interrogatories, to direct an oral examination of the interrogated party, as it is a jurisdic-tion to be exercised at the discretion of the court, will be exercised with caution, and with due regard to the nature and circumstances of the action. Swift v. Nun, 26 L. J., Ex. 365.

Where a party was sucd as administrator, and answered to written interrogatories that he had not taken out administration in this country, nor administered nor intermeddled with any of the effects in this country, the court refused a rule that he should be orally examined, there being no affidavit in support of the application, although he shewed cause in the first instance, and waived the objection. Ib.

Where a party has substantially answered inprevent the plaintiff being thrown over the terrogatories, but there are defects or flaws in any of his answers which render them formally insufficient, but which the court has no reason to think were intentional, the proper course is to apply to have them amended at chambers : and a rule for his oral examination will be discharged. and the costs will be made his costs in the cause. Bender v. Zimmerman, 29 L. J., Ex. 244.

If a party does not answer interrogatories in due time, but the court sees that (although there is in strictness no sufficient excuse) there has been no intention to disobey the court, and the answers are ready for delivery, a rule for an attachment Windle v. Lane, 29 will not be made absolute.

L. J., Ex. 245.

When a defendant has to answer interrogatories in support of the plaintiff's right of action, he cannot excuse himself from answering by swearing to some matter of fact which involves the existence of the right of action; for that is the very question to be tried upon the whole of the evidence, and upon his answers to the interrogatories. Geary v. Buxton, 29 L. J., Ex. 280.

Oral Examination. - Where a party has neglected to answer at all without just cause, it may be advisable to apply for an order for his oral examination, instead of proceeding by way of attachment for contempt, at all events where there is a question whether, by reason of illness, or on account of co-parties to the action having sufficiently answered, or otherwise, the neglect is not altogether without just cause, and certainly is not wilful or contumacious in the sense of a defiance of the authority of the court. Turk v.

Syne, 27 L. J., Ex. 54.

The rule for an oral examination is only nisi in the first instance. Ib.

A defendant having answered interrogatories in a voluminous manner, introducing many additional and irrelevant topics to those contained in the intervogatories, the judge made an order directing him to appear and answer orally before the master, under the C. L. P. Act. 1854, s. 53: -Held, that where the answers contained such an amount of irrelevant matter as to amount to an importinent excess, the section was applicable. Peyton v. Harting, 43 L. J., C. P. 10; L. R. 9 C. P. 9; 29 L. T. 478; 22 W. R. 61.

In making an order under that section, it is not necessary to specify in detail the points as to which an oral examination is to take place. Ib.

The C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 46, enacts that upon the hearing of any motion or summons, it shall be lawful for the court or a judge at their or his discretion from time to time to order the production of documents or the oral examination of witnesses, before such court or judge or before a master:—Held, that the terms "hearing of any motion" included the application for a rule nisi and, consequently, that an order for the examination of witnesses might be made upon a motion for an attachment against a defendant for not answering interrogatories. Morganv. Alexander. 44 L. J., C. P. 167; L. R. 10 C. P. 184; 32 L. T. 34; 23 W. R. 321.

C. and P. contracted with a company to construct a railway in Tasmania, receiving as part payment the greater part of the share capital of the company. The plaintiff, as executor, claimed payment for surveys alleged to have been per-formed by his testator for the company in 1870 and 1871, and he had sued C. and P., as well as the company, in respect of such claim. Interrogatories administered to the company, with the view plaintiff to be answered within ten days. The of ascertaining their relations with the test-order with the interrogatories was served on the fator, were answered, but quite insufficiently, plaintiff sattorneys; and an order for further time by the secretary of the company, who had not become such secretary until March, 1872. Those persons who had been directors of the company in 1870 and 1871 had ceased to be such directors. and the present directors had no personal knowledge of the transactions forming the subjectmatter of the action. It was by the court ordered that C. and P. should be orally examined, and produce all documents in their possession having reference to the motion, and that the decision in the motion should stand over until the result of such oral examination should be ascertained.

Moline v. Tasmanian Ry., 32 L. T. 828. See Cockerell v. Van Diemen's Land Co., 16 C. B. 256: 3 C. L. R. 789.

When an oral examination is required of the interrogated party for having omitted, without just cause, to answer sufficiently written interrogatories delivered under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 51 and 53, semble, the proper course is to apply to a judge at chambers in the first instance as to the sufficiency of the answers to the interrogatories. Meadows v. Kirkman, 2 L. T. 251.

Attachment.]-When a rule had been granted, calling on a defendant to shew cause why an attachment should not issue against him for not answering interrogatories, the clerk to the plaintiff's attorney swore that on his calling at the defendant's residence he was told he was within, but would see no one; and that on its being explained that the object was to serve him with the rule, he was heard to say that it would not be seen, for that the plaintiff had got him tight enough. The court was of opinion that the contempt was complete on his neglecting to answer the interrogatories within the time mentioned in the statute, and made the rule absolute without requiring personal service. Scaffeld (Lord) v. Pratt, 5 L. T. 674. See S. C., 580.

A rule for an attachment for disobedience of the order for not answering interrogatories may be granted on the application of a party interested in the suit in which the order was made, though he is not the person upon whose application it was granted originally. Madrid Bank v. Bayley, 36 L. J., Q. B. 15; L. R. 2 Q. B. 37; 15 L. T. 292; 15 W. R. 159.

- Discharge of Rule where Answers ready.] -Interrogatories were delivered to the defendant under a judge's order; and the time for answering the same was cularged until a peremptory order was made that the defendant should answer upon a certain day. A rule nisi for an attachment for not so answering having been obtained, upon canse being shewn, the answers being ready to be filed, the rule was ordered to be discharged if the answers should be filed within twenty-four hours; costs to be plaintiff's costs in the cause in any event. Rainsford v. Campbell, 2 L. T. 432.

Jurisdiction.]—A superior court has jurisdiction, under the Common Pleas at Lancaster Amendment Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 37), to issue an attachment upon the omission to answer interrogatories ordered by the prothonotary in an action commenced in the Lancaster Court. Coston v. Blackburn, L. R. 8 Q. B. 54; 27 L. T. 117. In a cause in the Court of Common Pleas at to answer obtained by them. The interrogatories not having been answered within the further time, a rule was obtained in the Court of Queen's Bench for an attachment against the plaintiff, on the ground that he had by not answering the interrogatories been guilty of a contempt; and that by force of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 37, ss. 6, 7, and 15, the proper mode of proceeding was by rule in any one of the superior courts. On cause being shewn, the court held the proceedings regular. and made the rule absolute. Ib.

Waiver of Right to have them answered. ]-Interrogatories having been delivered to a defendant, in an action of detinue, and still remaining unanswered, a judge's order was made by consent, whereby the plaintiff was to be at liberty to sign final judgment for damages and costs, on the terms that execution was not to issne if the goods detained were delivered up within a certain time. The plaintiff signed final judgment, and, the goods not being delivered up, obtained an order for the issue of execution for return of the chattels detained. An application under these circumstances having been made for an attachment against the defendant for not answering the interrogatories :- Held, that the consent to the final judgment was an abandon-ment by the plaintiff of his right to have the interrogatories answered, and that the application must therefore be refused. Hayne v. Pratt, 40 L. J., C. P. 119; L. R. 6 C. P. 105; 28 L. T. 809; 19 W. R. 437. See Dunn v. Moonan, 18 W. R.

h. Using.

Examined Copy-Proof. ]-In an action by the administratrix of a wife to recover a sum of money from the defendant which he had recovered from a third person to hold at her disposal, in order to prove the amount the plaintiff offered in evidence an examined copy of his answers to interrogatories in a previous action in which the plaintiff had sued the representative of the husband, but which was discontinued :- Held, first, that the answers were admissible without proof of the iu-terrogatories. Fleet v. Perrins, 9 B. & S. 575; 37 L. J., Q. B. 283; L. R. 3 Q. B. 536; 19 L. T. 147. Held, secondly, that an examined copy of the answers was admissible without proof of his. handwriting to the original answers. 1b.

At Trial.]—When interrogatories have been administered they cannot afterwards be used on the trial with a view to contradict the person to whom they were administered on his examination in court; on the ground that such would be an inquiry into the client's instructions to his attorney, which are privileged communications. Carwell v. Gees, 15 L. T. 217.

i. Costs.

Discretion. ]-The costs of orders for interrogating the opposite party are in the discretion of the judge making the order. If the order is silent, they will not be allowed as costs in the v. Blackburn, L. R. 8 Q. B. 54; 27 L. T. 117.

In a cause in the Court of Common Pleas at successful. Smith v. G. W. Ly, 6 El. & Bl. 405; Lancaster an order was granted by the district 2 L. J., Q. B. 279; 2 Jur. (8.8). 668. S. P., prothonotary to administer interrogatories to the Elstob v. Honeywell, 20 L. T. 227.

Where the bill was for discovery, and to per petuate testimony, and plaintiff amended by striking out the discovery and relief, but the bill, in praying process, prayed that defendant might abide such order and decree as the court should think proper, it was held a bill for relief, and a demurrer was allowed. Rose v. Gannel. 3 Atk. 439,

A bill praying discovery, and concluding with the prayer for general relief, is a bill for relief: but if words adapted to a bill for relief are used. in the prayer of process only, it is a bill of discovery. Angell v. Westcombe, 6 Sim. 30.

A demurrer allowed to a bill of discovery containing a prayer for an injunction, on the ground that the prayer for an injunction was a prayer for relief, and therefore fatal to the bill as a bill of discovery. Andrews v. Lupton, 13 L. J., Ch. 201.
Bill by underwriters for discovery and commission to examine abroad, and injunction to stay proceedings at law against them on policy in meantime, praying relief, is not a bill for discovery merely, but for relief, and not demurrable as a bill for discovery praying relief for which there was no equity. Allan v. Copeland, 8 Price, A bill for discovery concluded with a prayer that such other orders might be made upon the said defendants as the nature of the case might require:—Held, that notwithstanding the prayer, it was a simple bill for discovery, and that it was not necessary to come to the court to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution: but the prayer being nunsual, a motion to dismiss was refused, without costs. S. E. Ry. v. Nuhmarine Talegraph Ch., 18 Beav. 429; 2 Eq. Rep. 19; 23 L. J., Ch. 183; 17 Jun. 104; 3 W. R. 31; J. J. T. 104; 3 W. R. 31; 31 Jun. 104; 3 W. R. 31;

Amendment of Bill.]—No instance of a bill of discovery being allowed to be amended by adding parties as plaintiffs. Cholmondeley v. *Clin*ton, 2 Mer. 74; 16 R. R. 167.

On a plea to a bill of discovery, the vice-chancellor, being of opinion that a cestul que trust could not file such a bill without the trustee in whom the legal estate was vested, directed a case for the opinion of a court of law, on the question where the legal estate actually was, and ordered the plea to stand over till the return of the judge's cortificate. The parties not being able to agree on the case, a motion for leave to amend the bill by adding the trustee as a plaintiff, pending the vice-chancellor's order, refused. Z. 2. Mer. 71: 16 B. R. 167.

Before answer to a bill of discovery, motion to expunge amendments made with a view to converting it into a bill for relief allowed. Purker v. Furd, 1 Coll. 506.

After answer to a bill of discovery, motion to amend the bill by adding a prayer for relief, refused with costs. Butterworth v. Bailey, 15 Ves. 358.

Leave given to convert a bill of discovery into a bill for relief. Where, after answer, a bill for discovery and for a commission is allowed to be converted into bill for relief, the defendant is entitled to have leave to part in such an answer to the amended bill as he might have filed, if there had been no answer to the bill of discovery. Lonsadav. Templer, 2 Russ, 561.

Dismissal of Bill.]—If a cause comes to a hearing on a bill of discovery, it must be struck out of the paper; but the bill cannot be dismissed, not praying relief. Anon., Mos. 185. But see Gurish v. Donoran, 2 Att. 166; Barnard, 428.

Where a bill is for discovery merely, you cannot move to dismiss it for want of prosecution, but pray an order only on the plaintiff to pay defendant the costs of the suit to be taxed. Windloads v. King 1 At 12 288

Woodcock v. King, 1 Atk. 286.

A motion to dismiss a bill of discovery for want of prosecution is irregular.

Bennett v.

Harrap, 22 L. T. 647.

A bill for a commission to examine witnesses abroad in aid of an action at law, cannot be dismissed under the 93rd general order. Parr v. Howlin. San. & Sc. 124.

Plea.]—Plea of payment to bill of discovery overruled as issue triable at law. Hindman v. Taylor, Dick. 651.

Bill not suggesting wilful usury, but that defendant had miscomputed interest received by him, and praying discovery as to the fact; plea thereto overruled. Ann., 2 Eq. Abr. 70. S. P., Boscarquet v. Dashvood, id. 534; Cas. t. Talbot 32.

Plea of fine and long possession under it, is a good har to bill brought for discovery of deeds, declaring the uses of such fine. Holt v. Lowe, 5 Bro. P. C. 569.

Plea to discovery must deny possession of documents which would support the plaintiff's title, Yonge v. Stiekey, 2 Jur. 104.

Plea that a writ of right has been tried, and determined against the plaintiff, a good plea for a bill of discovery of matter relating to the title.

Leicester v. Perry, 1 Bro. C. C. 305.

If the bill pray discovery only, a plea to the discovery and relief is bad. Asyill v. Dawson, Bunh. 70.

A plea that the plaintiff has no interest in the subject of the suit, is a good plea to a bill for discovery and a commission. Mendisabel v. Machado, 1 Sim. 68; 5 L. J. (0.8.) Ch. 20. And see S. U., 8 L. J. (0.8.) Ch. 57.

It is not by the practice of Exchequer required of a party charged by a bill to have deeds and documents, &c., in his possession, material to the case on the other side, that he should protect himself from producing them by plea. The court will take eare that he be not called on without good reason to produce his securities, for they watch with jealousy proceedings instituted for that purpose, and will require an unanswerable case to warrant their interference in making an order for their production. Vansittart v. Barder, 9 Price, 641.

A plaintiff has no right to a discovery of circumstances as evidence in support of his title, which is denicd by plea, unless in his bill he expressly charges those circumstances as evidence of his title. Britten v. Britten, 8 L. J. (0.8.) Ch. 150.

Relief, ]—On a bill to discover assets, equity can also give relief by decreeing payment of debt. Heath v. Pervival, 1 Stra. 408.

Defendant voluntarily entered into a bond to pay 5004, or marry M. within a twolvemonth. Under pretence of reading it, he carried it off without her consent. M. brought her bill, which, upon her death, was revived by her mother, the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff is not only entitled to a discovery here, but rellef, by payment of the money with interest from the day of filing the original bill. Afkiss v. Flarr, I Atk. 287.

On a bill to obtain evidence for a defence at law, when the evidence is obtained, the court cannot proceed to give relief, although the party cannot have the effect of the evidence at law from objections of form. Lee v. Shoutbred, 1 Austr. 83.

The necessity of subig in equity for a discovery nucle the circumstances, will affect the court in the exercise of its jurisdiction to give relief also, but does not necessarily entitle the party to relief. But where the right to discovery or production of documents, in aid of an action, involves the same question as the right to recover at law, the court will give the relief as well as the discovery. Pearce v. Cresuick, 2 Hare, 288; 12 L. J., Ch. 25; 7 Jur. 340.

Upon a mere bill of discovery, filed in aid of

Upon a mere bill of discovery, filed in aid of proceedings at law, a court of equity will not, except in a very clear case, decide upon the legal right of the party seeking the discovery. Thomas v. Tyler, 3 Y. & Coll. 255; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 4.

Other Matters.]—Bill of discovery must state for what purpose discovery is sought, or demurable. Cardale v. Wathins, 5 Madd. 18.

Exceptions nune pro tune may be filed to answer to bill of discovery. Baring v. Prinsep, 1 Madd. 526.

Plaintiff in a bill for discovery only is not entitled as of course to two terms, to except to the answer filed in the vacation. Hewart v. | with the order to amend. Corentry v. Bentley, Semple, 5 Ves. 86. Scripte, 5 Ves. 86.

On a bill for discovery, the answer of the party interested cannot be dispensed with, though an infant; and although the person from whom his father purchased the right has answered, and denied any knowledge of the circumstances. Hardenatic v. Shafto, I Anstr.

A defendant to a bill of discovery is not entitled to the usual orders for time to answer, if the plaintiff is thereby deprived of an opportunity to try the action at law. A defendant is entitled to two orders for a month's time to answer an original bill, seeking relief. Bennett 272. v. Fitzpatrick, 1 Hog, 227.

Where a bill is brought for the discovery of concealments of a bankrupt's estate, the court will not allow defendants to look into their depositions taken by the commissioners before they nut in their answer. Boden v. Dellow. 1 Atk. 280

Abatement after answer to bill of discovery, suit cannot be revived. Gould v. Barnes, Dick. 133

The 125th order applies only to a bill of discovery, filed by a defendant in aid of his defence to an existing suit. As to all other bills of discovery the old practice is still applicable. Dingwall v. Hemming, 2 Ph. 212; 16 L. J., Ch. 267; 11 Jur. 177.

Costs.]—On bill for discovery and injunction, and commission abroad, defendant held entitled to costs of discovery and injunction as incidental thereto, but costs refused to either party as to commission. London Assurance Co. v. Hunkey, 1 Anstr. 9.

Bill by disinherited heir-at-law to have inspection of deeds dismissed without costs. Leman v. Alie, Ambl. 163.

If heir-at-law bring bill for discovery, it is not of course that he shall pay costs, but shall be allowed to amend and pray inspection of deeds.

Plaintiff pays the costs upon a bill of discovery. Simmonds v. Kinnaird (Lord), 4 Ves.

Rule that plaintiff in bill of discovery shall pay costs in all cases, is too general; he ought only where he files a bill in the first instance; not where compelled to it by defendant's refusal.

Weymouth v. Boyer, 1 Ves. J. 423.

The bill praying discovery and a commission, the defendant cannot have the costs of the discovery till the return of the commission. Anon., 8 Ves. 69.

Practice, that if the defendant to a bill of discovery and a commission examines in chief, instead of confining himself to cross-examination, he shall not have costs. Anon., 8 Ves. 70.

The proper time to pray for costs of discovery is after the commission is returned. Banbury -, 9 Ves. 103.

Abatement by marriage of feme plaintiff to bill of discovery, after answer:—Held, that defendant cannot have his costs. Dodson v. Juda, 10 Ves. 31.

Defendant to a bill of discovery is entitled to the costs of the discovery, immediately on putting in a full answer, and his right to these costs is not waived by his subsequently accepting the costs of an amendment, nor by his neglecting to not made such a case as entitles him to such dis-

2 Mer. 677.

Plaintiff on bill of discovery must pay all expenses of defendant in resisting motions in cause made by plaintiff. Noble v. Garland, 1 Madd. 344.

Costs of discovery refused, a commission having gone out, and defendant having taken the benefit of it, cannot have all the costs. S. C., 19 Ves. 376; G. Coop. 222.

Where plaintiff's bill in equity is ancillary to his legal title, and he fails at law, though defendant benefited by bill, plaintiff must pay costs in equity. Meyrick v. Whitshaw, 4 Madd.

Where bill prays relief against all defendants but one, against whom it only prays discovery, he cannot after answer obtain order for costs; such order discharged. Att.-Gen. v. Burch, 4 Madd. 178.

After answer put into a bill of discovery, the defendant does not waive his right to costs by entering a rule to dismiss. Hickey v. Duffey, Hayes, 353.

The landlord, having lost his counterpart, has a right to a discovery from his tenant; and the tenant, refusing to permit a copy of his lease to be made on the landlord's application, and at his expense, shall pay the costs of the bill of discovery. Perry v. Nanonham, 1 Moll. 72.
Order obtained by defendant in bill of discovery for payment of his costs is regular, though plaintiff had previously become bank-rupt. Hibberson v. Fielding, 2 Sim. & S. 371. A defendant to a bill for discovery, and to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, is entitled to his costs of the discovery, although he has examined witnesses in chief. Shrine v. Powell, 15 Sim. 81; 9 Jur. 1054.

The costs of a motion for injunction on a bill for discovery only, if unsuccessfully opposed, must be paid by the defendant. Lovell v. Galloway, 3 W. R. 156.

An original cause and cross-cause for discovery were attached to V.-Ch. Knight Bruce's court. The original cause was heard before an answer to the cross-cause had been obtained. The defendant to the bill of discovery then put in his answer, and obtained at the Rolls an order of course for his costs, suppressing the fact that the bill of discovery was a cross bill. It was discharged for irregularity. Watts v. Penny, 11 Beav. 435; 18 L. J., Ch. 150; 13 Jur. 578.

2. DISCOVERY AND RELIEF.

Demurrer to Relief.]-Where a bill for discovery and relief is demurrable for want of equity as to the rollef, discovery cannot be granted. Mollish v. Richardson, 12 Price, 530. So settled by Lords Thurlow, Alvanley, and Eldon, in a variety of decisions. See also the Treatises of Lord Redesdale, and Cooper.

In a bill for discovery and relief, a plaintiff not entitled to relief is not entitled to discovery. The converse of the rule will not hold. Att. Gen. v. Brown, 1 Swanst. 294.

Plaintiff not entitled to relief cannot have discovery. Hodle v. Healey, 1 Ves. & B. 539; 22 R. R. 270.

Demurrer to discovery, for that plaintiff has serve the plaintiff with the order for costs of covery; on arguing the demurrer, the court discovery, until after he has himself been served being of opinion the plaintiff was not entitled to Demnrer to bill for discovery and relief, if good as to the relief, is good as to the discovery also. Williams v. Steward, 3 Mer. 202.

General demurrer lies, the plaintiff being entitled to discovery but not to relief. Barker

v. Daeic, 6 Ves. 686.

Demurrer, both to the discovery and relief, if good as to the latter, shall be allowed as to both, though the plaintiff may be entitled to the discovery. East India Co. v. Neare, 5 Ves.

The rule that if the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief, though entitled to discovery, a general demurrer holds, does not preclude the defendant from demurring to the relief and answering as to the discovery. Hodgkin v. Longden, 8 Ves. 2.

General demurrer lies where the plaintiff, though entitled to discovery, is not entitled to relief. Speer v. Crawter, 17 Ves. 216.

The rule that the plaintiff being entitled to discovery only, and not to the relief, a general demurrer lies, does not prevent a demurrer to relief giving the discovery. Todd v. Gee, 17 Ves. 273; 11 R. R. 76.

Demurrer good to relief is good to discovery sought with a view to the relief. Baker v. Mellish, 10 Ves. 544.

Where specific relief is prayed, the ground for which fails, the plaintiff, under the prayer for general relief, can have such relief only as is consistent with the facts clearly and fully stated in the bill. King v. Rossett, 2 Y. & J. 33.

Where relief is prayed, and discovery as auxiliary only to that relief, if the ground for relief fails, the discovery cannot be obtained.

If a bill prays relief and discovery, plaintiff cannot waive the relief and insist on the discovery. Anderson v. Dowling, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 590.

A plaintiff cannot by one bill obtain specific relief, and also a discovery on a matter distinct from that specific relief. Wood v. Hitchings, 3 Beav. 504; 10 L. J., Ch. 257.

A bill for a receiver pending a litigation as to probate, ought not to seek discovery in reference to the merits on that litigation. Ib.

Demurrer to a bill by the heir-at-law for a discovery, seeking also relief, allowed; the relief sought being, first, that an issue might be directed to try the question in a different county, on an allegation of undue influence, an heir-at-law not being entitled to any issue, except by consent, and a bill in equity not lying to change the venne; secondly, for the production of title-deeds, without its being shewn how they can be of service in assisting him to recover at law; thirdly, to restrain the defendant (devisee) from setting up outstanding terms, unsupported by allegation that there are any outstanding terms which may be set up; fourthly, for an injunction to stay waste, &c., and for a receiver, there being no instance of the court so interfering as between heir-at-law and devisee, where their adverse rights are in litigation, and on the ground of negligence and delay, the bill having been filed more than two years after the death of the presumed testator, and no action yet brought, although the commission of the alleged acts of waste and destruction stated to have been would appear, prayed for a discovery, for a immediately after his death; fifthly, that the declaration that the clearing warrants amounted relief, allowed the demurrer, though it was to the | plaintiff may be let into possession of copyholds discovery only. Jefferys v. Baldwin, Ambl. unsurrendered to the use of the will, that being mere legal relief, although he might have been entitled to the discovery, whether there were any copyholds unsurrendered. The bill also going on to pray, in the character of one of the next of kin, for an injunction from interfering with the personal estate and a receiver, the injunction asked being for an indefinite period, and no allegation of a suit depending in the Ecclesiastical Court. And although some of the discovery sought might have been proper to be obtained on a bill for discovery only, yet the demurrer allowed as to that also, upon the ground, that, to support a general demurrer to a bill seeking discovery and relief, it is sufficient to show that the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief he prays. Jones v. Jones, 3 Mer. 161.

General demurrer allowed to a bill praying discovery and relief where the relief is at law. Price v. James, 2 Bro. C. C. 319; Dick. 697.

A. having dealings with B., C. and D., who traded under the firm of B. & Co., and having become indebted to them on several transactions, entered into a covenant with them for payment of the whole amount, B. and D. afterwards died, and C. retired from the firm, and assigned her interest to E. The business of the firm was eontinued by E. and F. under the firm of B. & Co., and A, continued his dealings with that firm, and made various payments to them. Upon a bill brought to restrain an action on the covenant brought by C. against A :- Held, that the subsequent payments by A, to E, & F, could not be applied in reduction of the money secured by the eovenant, unless it could be shewn that C. had assented to that arrangement, and that the bill, not being good for equitable relief, was not good for discovery in aid of the defence to the action. Jones v. Maund, 3 Y. & Coll. 347.

Bill for discovery, and a delivery of a settlement under which plaintiff claimed, and other title-deeds, and possession of the estate; demurrer to all the relief, and all the discovery, except of the settlement, for want of equity, and answer admitting the settlement, and offering to produce it, and denying that defendant had any other relative to plaintiff's title, the title being legal, the court would only order the settlement to be produced at the trial; the demurrer, therefore, going to all the relief, the defendant had leave

A demurrer to the relief will not extend to the discovery sought by the bill, although the specific relief prayed may be improper, if the bill states a clear case for equitable relief, to which the discovery sought may be ancillary, and likewise concludes with a prayer for general relief. An infor-mation having been filed by the attorney-general against A., for an account of his dealings and transactions with the government as an army agent, A. pleaded, in bar of the information, a settled account, by means of certain clearing warrants. This plea having been overruled, A. files his eross-bill against the the attorney-general and the secretary at war, alleging that the clearing warrants had been invariably treated as a settled account, but that he had only recently, and since the plea, been acquainted with the proceedings at the War Office, by which the clearing warrants were rendered conclusive. The bill then charging that the defendants had divers papers, &c., by which the truth of the several matters alleged to a settled account, and for a perpetual quietus from all proceedings by the defendants. To this bill the defendants having demurred, on the ground that they were public officers, and also for want of equity, the demurrer was overruled. Dearer v. Alt. Gen. 1 Y. & Coll. 197.

A plaintiff may obtain a decree for discovery alone, in all of an action or of proceedings in another court; but if by his bill he prays for discovery, as incident to some further relief, and falls in obtaining such relief, he will not be entitled to discovery. Evan v. Acon Portveere, 6 Jun. (x.s.) 1361; 3 L. T. 347; 9 W. B. 347; 9 in the proceeding of the control of the control

A plaintiff filed a bill on behalf of himself alone as one of a corporation, against the corporation, their solicitor, and the attorney-general, praying an injunction against the corporation, for an account, and for discovery. The bill did not disclose a case of trustee and cestul que trust as between the plaintiff and the corporation. The corporation demurred to the bill for want of equity and for want of parties:—Held, that the demurrer must be allowed. Ib.

Plea. ]—If a bill pray discovery only, a plea to the discovery and relief is bad. Asgill v. Dausson, Bunb. 70, Plea allowed as to the relief, therefore good to discovery also, according to general rule. Sutton v. Scarborough (Lord), 9 Ves. 71.

Where a defendant pleads to the relief only, he must give the discovery. King v. Heming, 9

Bill for account of goods landed at a certain quay, the plaintiff claiming a right of toll by prescription. Defendant denied plaintiffs title, and refused to discover the goods:—Held, he was not compellable till plaintiff land established his right at law. Northleigh v. Luscombe, Ambl. 612.

Where a defendant, to avoid putting in an account, pleads to all the relief and some of the discovery sought, if the plannith may be entitled to some relief which the plea does not specifically meet, it covers too much, and will simply be overruled. Hewitt v. Hewitt, 8 L. T., 630; 11 W. R. 849.

When a plea was in terms to the relief only, and the defendant by his answers did not give all the discovery sought by the bill, the plea was overruled. Juckson v. Ward, 22 L. T. 699.

Where bill is for discovery in aid of defence at law, and for equitable relief, plea of title in defendant in equity to whole bill is bad. Guit v. Osbaldeston, 5 Madd. 428. But overruled on appeal. S. C., 1 Russ. 158.

To bill to stay proceedings in action, brought by defendant as landlord, or account of dilapidations of buildings by plaintiff as tenant, and for discovery, whether defendant has not, since commencement of action, assigned his interest in buildings, defendant cannot protect himself from discovery by plea, that when dilapidations were committed defendant was entitled, and that they ever since continued out of repair. Badford (Dike) v. Macumana, I Price, 208.

Lost Deed—Oath.]—In what cases a man must make oath of the loss of a deed, when he brings a bill for relief or discovery touching the deed. Anon., 1 Vern. 59. Anon., id. 180. Godfrey v. Turner, id. 247. Nicholson v. Pattison. id. 310.

These and many other cases are conflicting on this point. See 1 Ch. Ca. 11, Id. 231.

3. DISCOVERY IN AID.

When it lies in Aid of Proceedings in Courts of Special Jurisdiction.]—Demurrer allowed to a bill of discovery in aid of the defence to a suit in a foreign court. Bent v. Young, 9 Sim. 180; 7 L. J., Ch. 151; 2 Jur. 202. And see Crowe v. Del Rio, id. 185. n.

This court will not compel a discovery in aid of an inferior court, nor in favour of a court which has itself the power of compelling a discovery. It.

Every foreign court is considered an inferior court; and semble, this court will not lend itself to compel a discovery in aid or defence of an action in a foreign court. ID.

The court will not entertain an action for discovery only in aid of proceedings in a foreign court. Bent v. Young (9 Sim. 180) considered and followed. Crowe v. Dol Rio (9 Sim. 185, n.) observed upon. Dreglas v. Perucian Gawo Cu, 58 L. J., Ch. 471; 41 Ch. D. 151; 60 L. T. 216; 37 W. R. 394.

A plaintiff filed a bill of discovery to obtain presention of documents in the defendant's possession in England, in aid of proceedings about to be taken for the recovery of land in India:—Held, that the property claimed being in India, and the defendant being capable of being sued in India, an English court was not the proper tribunal to decide upon the plaintiffs claim, and a bill of discovery could not be maintained in aid of such a claim. Releier v. Stilisbury (Maryuis), 2 Ch. D. 378; 24 W. R. 843.

A foreign judgment cannot be questioned in the courts in this country. Therefore, a bir for a discovery, and a commission to examine witnesses abroad, in aid of the plaintiff's defence to an action brought in this country on a foreign judgment, is demurrable. Martin v. Nicholits, 3

Denurrer allowed to discovery sought concerning the proceedings before the delegates, and held, that the sentence in the delegates could not be read, as the demand was for real estate, and they proceed there by different laws, and in matters too relative to the personal estate only. Baker V. Pritchard, 2 Ath. 837.

Under an act, certain moneys were to be distributed on petition. A reference being directed to ascertain the persons entitled, one who was not a party to the reference went in thereunder and failed. He afterwards filed a bill, on the ground that he was in want of discovery and evidence, which he could not obtain in the reference. The court, though it held that the bill was not demurrable, nevertheless stayed the proceedings therein until the master had made his report. Hyde v. Etwards, 12 Beav, 253. Aftirmed, 1 Mac. & G. 410; 1 H. & Tw. 552.

Semble, the order of reference ought to have contained a direction for production of documents, and for the examination of parties. Ib.

Courts of equity will not be ancillary to arbitrators, by permitting the party to take relief from them, coming to court for discovery. Street v. Rigby, 6 Ves. 821.

Courts of equity have jurisdiction to entertain a bill for discovery merely, in aid of a compulsory reference to arbitration, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 3, and this jurisdiction is not affected by the powers given by the 7th section, of compelling discovery independently of the assistance of courts of equity. British Empire Skipping

A submission made a rule of the Court of Chancery under s. 17 of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, is not within the provisions of s. 50, as to discovery. Anglo-Australian Bank, In re, 10 L. T., 369.

A bill of discovery in aid of the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court is not admitted, because they are capable of coming at that discovery themselves. Dunn v. Coates, 1 Atk. 288.

A will was proved in spiritual court, but executor of former will brought his bill in equity to discover by what means the latter will was obtained, and whether testator was not incapable, &c., and for account. Demurrer to jurisdiction overruled. Andrews v. Powys, 2 Bro. P. C. 504.

The old rule that the court would not admit a bill of discovery in aid of the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court is not applicable to a bill for discovery in aid of proceedings in the Probate Court, that court not having the same power of compelling discovery as the Ecclesiastical Court had. Fuller v. Ingram, 28 L. J., Ch. 482; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 510; 7 W. R. 302.

An heir-at-law having been cited to see proceedings commenced in the Probate Court for the purpose of proving the testator's will in solemn form, filed several pleas denying the validity of the will, and filed a bill of discovery in aid of his pleas, and moved for an injunction to stay proceedings until answer. Interrogatories not having been filed, the motion was refused, with costs, but leave was given to move on a future day, after the interrogatories should have been filed. 16.

A court of equity will compel a discovery and production of documents in aid of proceedings at law to try a disputed right under the Tithe Commutation Act, notwithstanding special provisions are contained in that act for those pur-Morris v. Norfolk (Duke), 9 Sim. 472; 9 L. J., Ch. 273; 4 Jur. 1007.

Whether a party who has presented an appeal to the Privy Council, can sustain a bill for discovery of further evidence of the matters to be adjudicated upon by the Privy Council, quere. Wood v. Hitchings, 3 Beav. 504; 10 L. J., Ch. 257.

When it Lies in Aid of Proceedings at Law.]

—Money paid in part; receipts lost. The whole recovered at law. No discovery after a verdict. Barbone v. Breut, 1 Vern. 176.

Bill to discover who is tenant of the freehold in order to bring a formedon, will not lie. Stapleton v. Sherrard, 1 Vern. 212; 2 Ch. R. 255.

Bill of discovery lies to aid proceedings here or at law, as to a civil right, not indictment or information, nor by a lord for discovery whether this or that person is capable to answer an heriot. Montague (Lord) v. Dudman, 2 Ves. 398.

Bill to discover who was owner of a wharf and lighter to enable the plaintiff to bring action of damages his goods had sustained by the negligence of the lighterman, defendant demurred; demurrer overruled. Heathcote v. Fleete, 2 Vern. S. P., Morse v. Buchworth, id. 443.

A demurrer will not lie to a bill merely for a discovery to enable the plaintiff to go to law, on the ground that the plaintiff had not brought his action. Moodalay v. Morton, 1 Bro. C. C. 469; Dick. 652.

Company and their secretary, praying a com- treasury of Portugal, came into the possession of Co. v. Somes, 3 Kay & J. 433; 26 L. J., Ch. 759; mission to examine witnesses in India, and that the defendants might discover by what authority plaintiff was dispossessed of a lease for supplying Madras with tobacco (the plaintiffs intending to bring an action), overruled. Ib.

Bill for discovery of fraud in a policy of insurance, to defend an action at law, and that the policy might be declared void, and be delivered up to be caucelled. Demurrer thereto overruled. French v. Connelly, 2 Anstr. 454.

After judgment by default in an action upon a dividend under a commission of bankruptcy, the assignees filed a bill for discovery, and to have the proof of the debt expunged. Demurrer allowed, the course being by petition. Clarke v. Capron, 2 Ves. J. 666.

Bill for an account under covenant upon sale of good-will not to carry on the trade. The usual course a bill of discovery for purpose of an action, Scott v. Macintosh, 1 Ves. & B. 503.

After an order in bankruptcy, for liberty to bring an action, with special direction for a production of papers, and not to set up the bank-ruptey, a bill of discovery cannot be filed. Cooke v. Marsh, 18 Ves. 209.

Demurrer of a married woman to a bill of discovery against her and her husband, in aid of an action for debt on her account, allowed. Barron v. Grillard, 3 Ves. & B. 165.

A plaintiff at law may be forced, in equity, to make a full discovery, with respect to the different items that make up the sum for which he brings his action at law. Lumpridaye v. Rutt, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 13.

After a verdict at law, a bill, with proper charges, may be sustained for the discovery of documents necessary to a fair decision. Field v. Beaumont, 1 Swanst. 209.

A., being in possession of an estate, under a decree, in 1783, B. filed a bill against him to recover the estate, and brought a writ of right for the same purpose; A. then filed a cross-bill against B., seeking for a discovery of matter relating to B.'s pedigree, and praying that B. might elect whether he would proceed at law or in equity, and that, if he elected the former, he width the novatually restricted from prehe might be perpetually restrained from proeeeding at law to recover the estate. B. demurred, because the bill sought a discovery of matters constituting his ease at law, and because the order for putting him to his election ought to be obtained on motion and not at the hearing. Demurrer overruled. Loundes v. Daries, 6 Sim.

Bills of discovery are permitted for the purpose of obtaining from the adversary at law a discovery of matters which, being admitted by him, may aid the defence to the action, but not for the purpose of obtaining evidence; accordingly a bill of discovery does not lie against a person who may be a witness for the defendant in the action. Portugal (Queen) v. Glyn, West, 258; 7 Cl. & F. 466. Reversing Glyn v. Soares, 1 Y. & Coll. 644; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 49.

Don Miguel, when de facto King of Portugal, effected a loan, for the purposes of his government, by issuing scrip or bonds, for which certain bills of exchange were drawn upon the plaintiffs, bankers in England, by whom, as the agents of one R., the first parts of those bills were accepted. The second parts having been indorsed "to the treasurer-general of the Royal Treasury of Portugal, value in account of the negotiation of the Demurrer to a bill against the East India royal loan of Portugal," and remitted to the the government of Donna Maria, after her estab- | were directed to admit that the plaintiff was the lishment as queen. Her government repudiated assignee of the patents, and that they (the dethe loan, but the bills, purporting to be indorsed fendants) had used the alleged inventions, and by the individual who was treasurer under Don the plaintiff was ordered to produce certain Miguel were presented for payment by one of her agents in England, and he, on payment being refused, brought an action against the acceptors :-Held, that the acceptors could not sustain a bill that bill had reference only to the acts by which for a discovery in aid of their defence against the it was alleged that the patents had become void Queen of Portugal. Ib.

In a suit for an account and to restrain an action, the plaintiff is not entitled to inspect any portion of books, &c., which do not relate to the matters in question in the suit. If he requires to inspect any part with a view to his defence in the action, he must file a bill of discovery. Rawson v. Samuel, 9 Sim. 442; 4 Myl. & C. 330; 8 L. J., Ch. 71. And see S. C., 3 Jur. 6, 54, 603, 947. Semble, that a bill of discovery in aid of an action for a mere personal tort cannot be sustained. Glyn v. Houston, 1 Keen, 329; 6 L. J., Ch. 129.

A, having accepted a bill payable at his country bankers' town agents, deposited with the former an acceptance of a third party, with a note stating that it was intended to meet his own acceptance. The country bankers not communicating the fact to their town agents, the bill was dishonoured. A. became bankrupt, and his bankers received the money on the second acceptance, and applied it to their own use. The against the country bankers for the amount they had received, but his only witness dying, he made default in going to trial, whereupon the defendant moved for judgment as in a case of a nonsuit, which was refused by the court, unless he could produce the note delivered by A. when the bill was deposited. The defendant then gave notice of proceeding to trial by proviso, upon which the plaintiffs filed a bill for an injunction and a discovery, to which the defendant demurred, on the ground that the plaintiffs had not made out such a case as would entitle them to a discovery in equity :- Held, that inasmuch as the plaintiffs had made out such a case as afforded a reasonable ground for argument in a court of law, it was properly filed, and the demurrer was overruled. Thomas v. Tyler, 3 Y. & Coll. 255; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 4.

Upon a mere bill of discovery, filed in aid of proceedings at law, a court of equity will not, except in a very clear ease, decide upon the legal right of the party seeking the discovery. Ib.

It makes no difference in the principles upon which the court deals with a motion for the production of documents, that, the bill being filed for discovery in aid of a defensive proceeding, the case made by it consists not in assertion of an affirmative title in the plaintiff, but solely in the suggestion of specific defects in the title of the defendant, Smith v. Beaufort (Duke), 1 Ph. 209; 13 L. J., Ch. 33; 7 Jur. 1095. Affirming 1 Hare, 507.

A bill having been filed by an assignee of certain alleged patent inventions for an injunction to restrain the infringement of the patents, and for an account of the profits made by their use; the defendants by their answer, insisted that the patents were originally invalid; and also that if originally good, they had been made void by subsequent acts of the patentee. By the decree made at the hearing of the cause, the bill decree made at the hearing of the cause, the bill 42 L J., Ch. 45; L. R. 15 Eq. 142; 27 L. T. 410; was retained for three years, with liberty for the 21 W. R. 157.

The defendants then filed a bill of discovery against the plaintiff, but the discovery sought by subsequently to their creation. The defendants, afterwards, finding the necessity of a discovery as to the original invalidity of the patents, applied to the court for permission to file another bill of discovery which would relate to such original invalidity; and the court granted the permission desired. Whether it was regular to file the first bill of discovery, without leave of the court, quære. Few v. Guppy, 1 Myl. & C.

Where, at the hearing, the bill is retained, and liberty is given to the plaintiff to establish his right at law, it is not the practice to direct, by the order, a production of the books and papers in the parties' possession relating to the matters, nor to give leave to the defendant to file a bill of discovery in aid of his defence. The rule is the same when the order directs certain admissions to be made on points not in controversy, but it is different in the case of an issue being directed. Semble, Few v. Guppy, 13 Beav. 457.

Where, at the hearing, liberty is given to a party to establish his right at law, the defendant must obtain the leave of the court to enable him to file a bill of discovery. Semble. Ib.

Where an action is brought in the name of a party having the legal title, a bill of discovery in aid of defence must be filed against the party alone. Semble. Ib.

The province of discovery in equity is not to compel a defendant there, who is a plaintiff at law, to discover in what manner he intends to make out his case at law; the plaintiff in equity is entitled to the discovery only of anything in the possession of the defendant in equity which will enable him to establish his own case. Ingilby v. Shafto, 33 Beav. 31; 32 L. J., Ch. 807; 9 Jur. (N.s.) 1141; 8 L. T. 785.

Executions for insufficiency to an answer to a bill of discovery in which a defendant was interrogated as to the grounds upon which he rested his claim at law, and as to documents "relating to matters in the bill mentioned," were overruled with costs. Ib.

Though a party may now at law examine his opponent, he is still entitled to a discovery in equity in aid of his case at law. Where the plaintiff in a bill of discovery in aid of a defence at law has a bonâ fide case, verified by affidavit, shewing that information may be given by the answer, which may assist him in wholly or par-tially destroying the case made against him at law, he is entitled to that discovery, and to an injunction until the discovery is given. Lovell v. Galloway, 17 Beav. 1.

A bill for discovery only (in aid of an action) to obtain from persons, who were mere overholding tenants, certain underleases alleged to be in their possession, or in that of some "one or other" of them, and from the descriptions contained in which documents the plaintiff desired to identify his property, is not demurrable on the ground of multifariousness. Brown v. Wales, Gaming Transactions. ]- Equity has no jurisdiction under 9 Anne, c. 14, or 18 Geo. 2, c. 24, to enforce discovery, prayed by common informer, of money won at play. Holloway v. Eq. R. 590. Shakspeare, 1 Smith, 121.

Bill for discovery of money won at play, under 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 3, does not lie at suit of common informer suing for penalties. Orme v. Crockford, M Clel. 185; 13 Price 376; 27 R. R. 719.

Action on bills of exchange ; bill to have them delivered up as being given on a gaming transaction; demurrer was overruled. Newman v.

Franco, 2 Anstr. 519.

In a bill of discovery to support an action by a common informer, for money won at play, it is sufficient to state that the defendants, or some of them for the benefit and on account of all, played and won. In such a bill it is not necessary to state the nature of the action brought; it is enough to say that an action was brought on the statute 9 Anne to recover the money, and to show by the facts that an action on the statute lay. Cowan v. Phillips, 3 Anstr. 843. But see Orme v. Crockford, 13 Price, 376; McClel. 185. Upon an action brought to recover a sum of money lent upon the security of an I O U, and upon a bill filed to discover whether the money had not been lent for the purpose of gaming :— Held, that the defendant was bound to state by his answer whether it was so lent, it still being a question open to argument in a court of law whether money lent at play, or for the purposes of play, is recoverable in an action at law. Wilhinson v. D Eungier, 2 Y. & Coll. 363.

The enforcing the Gaming Acts is not confined to the interest of private persons, but is of great consequence to the public; and though gamesters call gaining debts debts of honour, the merit belongs to the informer. Fleetwood v. Jansen, 2

Against whom. ]-A bill of discovery in aid of the defence to an action at law cannot be maintained against a person interested in the action, unless he is a party to the record at law. Kerr v. Rew, 5 Myl. & C. 154; 9 L. J., Ch. 148; 4 Jur. 525.

In an action on a policy on marine insurance brought by the agent in whose name the policy was effected, the person named in the declaration as the real person assured is not to be considered a party to the record at law, so as to be liable to a bill of discovery. Ib.

A., a foreign merchant, caused an insurance of a ship to be effected by B., a broker in London, in his (B.'s) name. The ship was lost. An action was brought against the underwriters by B., stating in the declaration A.'s interest. The defence was, that the ship was unseaworthy; and in aid of that defence, a bill of discovery

A bill of discovery in aid of a defence at law will not lie against one who is not a party to the record at law. Anderson v. Dowling, 11 Ir.

A bill for a discovery in aid of a defence at law, cannot be sustained against a person for whose benefit the action is brought, if he is no Party to the record at law. Portugal (Queen) v. Glyn, 7 Cl. & F. 466; West, 258. Reversing Glyn v. Soares, 1 Y. & Coll. 644.

A foreign prince admitted to sue in the name of an agent in a court of law in this country, for a discovery in aid of the defence at law. Ib.

Bills filed by or against underwriters, as they pray some relief, do not form an exception to the rule. Ib.

A person who may be a witness for the defendant in an action cannot be made a party to a bill of discovery. Ib.

If in a bill for discovery in aid of the defence to an action, a plaintiff who is not a party to the record at law be joined with co-plaintiffs, the defendants in the action, the bill is demurrable, Certain bills of exchange, the second parts of which were made payable to the order of the treasurer of the Royal Treasury of Portugal, were accepted by bankers in London, on behalf of a customer who was substantially interested in such bills as one of the subscribers to a loan raised by the government of Portugal under the regency of Don Miguel. After the expulsion of Don Miguel, and the establishment of Donna Maria as Queen of Portugal, the second parts of the bills in question were indorsed by the treasurer of the Royal Treasury of Portugal (the same individual who filled that office at the time when the bills were drawn) to an agent of the Queen of Portugal, and by that agent were presented for payment to the bankers. The bankers refused payment, on the ground that they had reason to doubt whether the indorsee was the officer to whose order the bills were meant to be payable, and whether he had any property or interest in the bills; an action was thereupon brought by the indorsee against the acceptors to recover the amount. To a bill filed by the bankers, the acceptors, and by the customer on whose behalf they accepted the bills, against the indorsee, and the Queen of Portugal, praying for a discovery in aid of the defence to the action, a commission to examine witnesses abroad and an injunction, a demurrer was allowed on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs who were defendants in the action, but who had no interest except as agents in the subject matter of the suit, with a plaintiff who was no party to the action, but substantially interested in the subject matter of the snit. Whether the bill was not demurrable, on the ground of the Queen of Portugal having been improperly made a defendant, quere, Glyn v.

A person complaining of a libel in a newspaper may file a bill against the printer and publisher to ascertain the names of the proprietors, for the purpose of bringing his action against the proprietors alone. Dixon v. Enoch, 41 L. J., Ch. 231; L. R. 13 Eq. 394; 26 L. T. 127; 20 W. R. 359.

H. & S. insured their factory and its contents with a fire assurance company for 5,098L, and, on a fire happening in February, 1875, sent in a claim for 14,4051., which the company, suspecting fraud, refused to pay. Shortly afterwards H. & S. filed a liquidation petition, and W. was appointed trustee. In May, W. commenced an action on the policy against the company, and the trial was set down for July 17. On June 30 the company, having pleaded to the action, filed a bill of discovery against W. and H. and S., and for an injunction, restraining W. from prosecuting his action. The bills stated the grounds on which the company suspected the claim to be fraudulent and excessive, and that H. & S. had insured the same property with other companies for 8,000%, and that, without the discovery prayed for, the company could not defend the action :- Held, that the bill could not be sustained against H. & S., because they were not parties to the action but were witnesses, and that to grant the motion against W., who had no information to give, and against whom no case was made, would be in effect to restore the old common injunction. Manchester Fire Assurance Co. v. Wykes, 33 L. T. 142; 23 W. R. 884.

Plea.]-Plea of matter, which would be a good plea to the action at law, is not a good plea to a bill for discovery leading to legal relief. Hindman v. Taylor, 2 Bro. C. C. 7.

Bill of discovery in aid of an action of covenant; plea, a clause in the articles that any dispute should be referred. Plea overruled, discovery being of course while an action is brought and can be maintained. Mitchell v. Harris, 2 Ves. J. 129; 4 Bro. C. C. 311.

A plea to a bill of discovery in aid of an action, which confesses and avoids some of the facts stated in the bill as the grounds of the action, and traverses others, will be overruled. Robertson v. Lubback, 4 Sim. 161; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 138.

Bill of discovery in aid of an action of ejectment. Plea, that the plaintiff had contracted to purchase the estate, and that the defendant had a lien on it for the unpaid purchase-money. Semble, that the plea is no defence to the discovery; but that the proper mode of protecting the equitable interest of the defendant is for a cross-suit for relief. Drake v. Drake, 3 Hare, 523; 13 L. J., Ch. 406; 8 Jur. 642.

Plea to a bill for discovery filed after a demurrer to a plea at law allowed. Stewart v. Nagent (Lord), 1 Keen, 201; 6 L. J., Ch. 128.

Defendant brought an action for a libel against the plaintiffs; the plaintiffs pleaded a justifica-tion, and filed a bill of discovery, and a commission to examine witnesses abroad in support of their plea. certain articles of plate for her life, pawned them with B., who kept an open pawnbroker's shop. Bill was filed by the representatives of the testator, after the death of A., against B., for a discovery of the particular articles pawned in order to enable the plaintiffs to proceed in an action at law for the recovery of them. To this discovery the defendant pleaded, that certain articles of plate were deposited with him for certain sums of money bona fide lent and advanced thereon to A.; but he did not by his plea (though he did by his answers) aver that he had no other articles of plate in his possession. For this defect in point of form the plex was overruled. The defendant then insisted on the same point by his answer in bar to the discovery, but the court thought, that where a plea to a bill of discovery was overruled, the defendant could never insist on the same thing by answer. Houre v. Parker, I Cox, 224; I Bro. C. C. 578.

Extent and User of Discovery.]-Where a bill of discovery in aid of a defence to an action at law contains a prayer for relief, in addition to the ordinary prayer, the defendant is not bound to give any further discovery than that which is incidental to the relief sought by the bill. Desborough v. Curlewis, 3 Y. & Coll. 175; 2 Jur. 740.

On a bill for relief in equity, which seeks also to restrain an action at law, the plaintiff is not entitled to a discovery in aid of his defence to the action, but only to a discovery incidental to the relief in equity. Rawson v. Samuel, 8 L. J.,

A defendant to a mere bill of discovery in aid of an action at law, will not be ordered to produce, upon the trial of the action, or upon any proceeding incident thereto, documents which he admits by his answer to be in his possession. Brown v. Thornton, 1 Myl. & C. 248; 5 L. J., Ch.

Where bill seeks relief, as well as discovery, the court will not, on motion, aid the plaintiff in proceeding at law without authority and control of court; any such proceedings must be under a decree: therefore, in such a case, a motion that defendant should produce deeds, &c., at the trial of ejectment was refused. Aston v. Exeter (Lmd), 6 Ves. 288. S. P., Hylton v. Morgan, Id.

D. OBJECTIONS TO DIS-CLOSURE.

I. IRRELEVANCY OR IMMATERIALITY.

1. GENERALLY.

a. Questions.

The true tests as to whether questions are to be answered or not are whether the answers might eriminate the defendants, and whether they are relevant and material to the plaintiff's ease. Mant v. Scott, 3 Price, 477.

A party ought not to be compelled to answer interrogatories as to matters not relevant to the issue in the action, even though such matters might be admissible in cross-examination as going

L. J., Ch. 127; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1182; 3 L. T. 498; 9 W. R. 115.

A defendant cannot protect himself from answering a particular interrogatory on the ground that the whole bill is demurrable. Ib.

The original bill sought to set aside an appointment on the ground of frand. The plaintiff then amended his bill, and inquired as to the mode in which the appointment was executed and attested :- Held, that the plaintiff's case being one of legal validity and equitable invalidity the inquiries were irrelevant, and therefore need not be answered. Codrington v. Codrington, 3 Sim. 519.

Upon quare impedit brought against the plain-tiff, he filed the present bill to discover whether the clerk presented to him by defendant had not given a general bond of resignation in order to set up that bond as a defence at law for having refused him institution. To this bill defendant demurred, first, on account of legality of such bond; secondly, that the discovery was immaterial. Demurrer overruled, London (Bishop) v. Fytche, 1 Bro. C. C. 96.

The answer need not set forth an account where the ground upon which it is prayed is denied, as where the bill charged a dealing in pictures by commission, and the answer denied that, and stated that the defendant sold them to the plaintiff in the course of his trade.

Donegal (Marquis) v. Stewart. 3 Ves. 446.

Questions respecting proceedings in a foreign court relating to infringements of the plaintiff's patent, are immaterial. Hoffmann v . Postill, L. R. 4 Ch. 673; 20 L. T. 893; 17 W. R. 901.

When discovery of particular fact sought by bill would not, from general denial in answer of circumstances on which that fact would depend. avail plaintiff if set forth, defendant need not answer it. Askam v. Thompson, 4 Price, 330.

To bill (also praying discovery), stating that partnership subsisted between plaintiff in equity and deceased, principal of a banking firm, in another concern, in which plaintiff was chief manager, and that cheques were drawn under special circumstances, founded on mutual understanding, &c., answer denying privity of defendants, or that they were in any way concerned with plaintiffs as partners, or otherwise, sufficient to prevent injunction to stay defendant's proceeding at law to recover amount of cheques paid by them on account of plaintiff in equity, Ib.

A company filed a bill against a solicitor and a mining agent, seeking to make them account for profits alleged to have been made by them on the sale to the company of a collicry, which was sold in the name of W., while it really belonged to the defendants, who were alleged to be in a fiduciary relation to the company. defendants were interrogated as to the cheques drawn by them on a banking account opened for the purposes of the purchase of the colliery, and as to the profits made on the sale :- Held, that they ought not to be compelled to answer these interrogatories, as they were immaterial to the real question in the suit, namely, whether a fiduciary relation existed between them and the company at the date of the purchase of the colliery by the defendants, Great Western Colliery Co. v. Tucker, 43 L. J., Ch. 518; L. B. 9 Ch. 376; 30 L. T. 781 answering on the ground that the information in partnership. A, one of the partners, died, sought is immaterial to the relief sought against having by his will appointed B, one of his that particular defendant. March v. Keith. 30 partners, and H. S. and T. B. S., executors, and L. J., Ch. 127; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1182; 3 L. T. 498; J. S. one of his residuary legatees. After his death, H. S., one of his executors, was admitted into the partnership. J. S., one of the residuary legatees, filed a bill against B., and H. S., and T. B. S., for the administration of the testator's estate. Interrogatories, but not founded on the necessary and pointed allegations, were contained in the bill, whether the business had not been carried on with A., the testator's, capital : what were the profits gained since his death : what was the present capital : and what had been drawn out since A.'s death. The third partner in the firm was not a party to the suit :—Held. that B. and H. S., the new partner and executor of A., were not bound to answer those interrogatories. Simpson v. Chapman, 20 L. J., Ch. 88; 15 Jnr. 714.

Action for Infringement of Patent. ] - Au interrogatory was filed in support of a bill to restrain an infringement of patent rights, whereby the defendant was required to set out the names and addresses of all persons from whom he had received sums of money as licences for using articles which, the plaintiff alleged, were infringements of his patent. It was admitted that he had received sums of money from various persons. some of whom resided abroad :- Held, that the interrogatory was pertinent to the relief sought by the bill, and as such ought to be fully answered. Crossley v. Stewart, 1 N. R. 426; 7 L. T. 848.

When a plaintiff's right to relief at the hearing is clear, assuming the title stated by the bill, the defendant, by his answer denying that title, is in certain cases protected from discovery. De La Rue v. Dickinson, 3 Kay & J. 388.

In a suit to restrain an alleged infringement of a patent, the defendant, by his answer denying the fact of the infringement, is protected from making any discovery immaterial to that question, and which, when that question is decided, would be given under the decree. Ih.

It is not necessary to set up a defence of this nature by plea. Ib.

b. Documents.

The court accepts the oath of a defendant whether documents are relevant; but the plaintiff has a right to judge for himself whether they will assist his ease, and is entitled to the production of all relevant documents, except such as the court can clearly see to have no bearing on the issue. Munsell v. Feeney, 2 John. & H. 320; 4 L. T. 437; 9 W. R. 610.

A defendant, by his plea to a bill for establishing a partnership in a newspaper, denied the alleged partnership, and it was accompanied by an answer admitting documents, which he desired to protect from production. He also admitted that the books of the business were in his possession :- Held, that such documents were not protected from production. Ib.

The answer, in addition to admission of documents, raised the question of lapse of time under the statute and other issues :- Held, that the plea was bad in substance and form, and was overruled. Th.

Forrier v. Atwool, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 365; 14 L. T. 278; 14 W. B. 597—L.J.J.
A. filed a bill against B., alleging an agreement by B. to pay him a sixth of the profits of B.'s business, and praying for an account of such profits, and for payment of such share, B, by his answer admitted an agreement to pay to A. a twelfth of the profits, but alleged an agreement by A. to accept B.'s statement of the profits, and not to investigate B.'s books and accounts :-Held, that upon these pleadings A. was not entitled to the production of B.'s books and accounts before the hearing. Turney v. Bayley, 3 N. R. 695; 4 De G. J. & S. 332; 33 L. J., Ch. 499; 10 L. T. 115; 12 W. R. 633. Reversing 34 Beav. 105.

Motion by defendants to a bill for partnership account for a production of the accounts before answer, refused. Pickering v. Righy, 18 Ves. 484.

A witness had been served with a subpoena duces tecum to attend an examination before the master, and bring with him certain documents which were in his possession. He was examined. but refused to produce the documents, swearing that they were not properly in his enstedy. a motion to the court for an order for their production, the court considered that it was bound to exercise a discretion not so to order, unless some reason was shewn for thinking it probable, that they would be evidence between the parties; and, in this instance, not so supposing, it refused to compel the documents of a third party to be produced, in a state of uncertainty whether they could be so for any valuable purpose between the parties. Phelps v. Prothero, 12 Jur. 667.

A defendant, who is called upon by the bill to set forth a list of papers, relating to "the matters aforesaid," need not set forth a list of papers relating to transactions which are mentioned in the bill only by way of inducement, but do not form any part of the case made by the bill. Agar v.

Bective, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 132.

The plaintiffs in a suit to set aside a lease were held entitled to an answer as to the defendant's receipts from the property,-notwithstanding that the defendant denied the plaintiff's title to any relief at all, and that the accounts sought were not material to the plaintiff's ease at the hearing. Robson v. Flight, 3 N. R. 183.

Tithe collector's books admitted by the answer of the rector to be in his possession or power, and to relate to the matters in the bill mentioned, but which, as he stated, would not in any manner assist or make out the plaintiff's case, ordered on motion to be produced for the usual purposes.

2. WHERE MATERIALITY DEPENDS ON RESULT OF OTHER ISSUES.

Generally. -- When the materiality of discovery depends upon the determination of a question in dispute, and the discovery sought is calculated to cause considerable trouble, or to prove oppressive and vexations to the party from whom it is to the hearing, when the answer denies the

r. 19, and postpone the discovery until the question has been determined. Wood v. Anglo-Italian Bank, 34 L. T. 255.

In an action claiming an account of profits made by the defendants as agents of the plaintiffs, where the defendants denied the agency, the court declined to order production of the invoices of goods sold by third parties to the defendants, and re-sold by them to the plaintiffs, until after trial of the question of agency. Verminch v. Edwards, 29 W. R. 189.

A person having filed his bill to establish his title by heirship to real estate, and being entitled to production by the defendant of a pedigree by which the descent of both parties from a common ancestor was traced, was held entitled to see only such parts as were material to his title. Kettlewell v. Barstow, 41 L. J., Ch. 718; L. R. 7 Ch. 686; 27 L. T. 258; 20 W. R. 917.

The defendants objected to produce other documents on the ground that they did not relate to any issue or matter to be tried at the hearing, but were documents to the production of which the plaintiff would be entitled by way of consequential relief if he succeeded on the trial of any of the issues, but not in any other event:-Held, that these documents were protected. Ib.

The widow of a testator carried on his business under a direction in the will that the executors should allow her to carry it on, and to have, while carrying it ou, the use of the capital employed in it, and of his other personal estate. After her death, the plaintiffs, who had supplied her with goods for the purposes of the business. filed a bill against the testator's personal repre-sentative, claiming a lien on the funds employed in the trade, and by their interrogatories asked for accounts of the testator's personal estate and of the personal estate employed in the business. The executor declined to set forth the accounts. on the ground that if it should be decided at the hearing that the plaintiffs had no such lien as they claimed, the discovery would be useless :-Held, that the executor was bound to give the account. Thompson v. Dunn, L. R. 5 Ch. 573; 18 W. R. 854.

A bill was filed to set aside an agreement which, according to the allegations in the bill, had been entered into upon the representation of the defendant that the value of a plaintiff's share in a business was but 10,000L, and that a debt of 32,000l. owing to the firm was of no value whatever. One of the interrogatories required the defendant to state what sums he had received in respect of the debt of 32,000%. to which he answered that, although he had received from the debtors more than that amount, he had not received it in respect of that debt. Another interrogatory required him to set out fully the assets and liabilities of the partnership at the date of the agreement, which he answered by referring the plaintiff to the books of the partnership. The plaintiff excepted to both these parts of the answer:—Held, as to the first of these interrogatories, that it was sufficiently answered, and, as to both interrogatories, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the accounts until he had established his right to open them. Lockett v. Lockett, 38 L. J., Ch. 290; 17 W. R. 96.

An answer expressed in general terms to an interrogatory as to accounts is sufficient if it shews enough for all the purposes of the suit up the trial of that right is one of the objects of the plaintiff. 1b. A plaintiff filed a bill to establish that a business carried on by three of the defendants in partnership belonged to the estate of her late husband, having been commenced and carried on with assets which the first two of them, who had carried on her husband's business in partnership with her till they commenced the new business, had abstracted from the old business. The interrogatories required these defendants to set forth whether they, or any of them, had drawn out of the new business any money for their or his own account in respect of capital advanced, profits, or otherwise, and to set forth the particulars of the moneys so drawn out. The third defendant declined to answer this interrogatory, submitting that the plaintiff was not entitled to this discovery till she had established her right to a decree :-Held, that the interrogatory must be answered. Stull v. Browne, 43 L. J., Ch. 568; L. R. 9 Ch. 364; 30 L. T. 697; 22 W. R. 427.

Where a bill prays alternative relief, and the plaintiff would only be entitled to the discovery asked for under one of the alternatives, which is not the one principally relied on by the bill, and the information desired could not be material for the purpose of determining to which of such alternatives the plaintiff is entitled, such discovery will not be compelled before the hearing. Lett v. Parry, 1 Hem. & M. 517.

The court will make interlocutory orders for production only for security or discovery, and will not anticipate the decree. Lingen v. Simpson, 6 Madd. 290.

A defendant cannot excuse himself from answering fully on the ground that the giving the discovery sought would anticipate the decree, such discovery being the same as that which would be ordered at the hearing if the plaintiff obtained a decree. Chichester v. Donegul (Marquis), L. R. 4 Ch. 416; 17 W. R. 544; 20 L. T. 44.

Jurisdiction of Court under Ord. XXV. r. 2.] The court has jurisdiction under Ord. XXV. r. 2, to make an order for an action to be set down for the determination of certain points of law, and can postpone inspection of documents under an order obtained therefor until after such points have been determined. De Carteret v. Land Securities Co., 7 R. 16; 70 L. T. 323; 42 W. R. 104-C. A.

Semble, that Ord. XXXI. r. 20, is not to be construed so narrowly as to mean that the right to discovery or inspection is determined by the making of the common order, or that the court is by the order for discovery or inspection made in the common form rendered powerless to make a subsequent order for questions of law to be determined before inspection. Ib.

Postponed until prima facie Case made out. In a suit by an alleged next of kin to an intestate, against the solicitor to the Treasury, to whom administration had been granted :-Held, that the defendant was not bound to make an affidavit of documents until a prima facie case had been made out by the plaintiff. Lane v. Gray, 43 L. J., Ch. 187; L. R. 16 Eq. 552.

Until Title established.]-A., claiming to be right of the plaintiff to have an account; and refused, because he had not established his title. Llayd v. Wait, 12 Sim. 103.

Bill by one co-heir against another, who set up testator's will in his favour, but acknowledged the deeds to be in his hands. He shall produce the deeds to plaintiff, though the validity of the will has not yet been tried at law. Floyer v. Sydenham, 9 Mod, 99; 2 Ch. Ca. 4; Sel. Ch.

Before Questions of Fact determined. - In an action to restrain the sale of goods under an alleged infringement of plaintiff's trade-mark, and claiming damages for false representations by defendant that his goods were goods of the plaintiff's manufacture, or in the alternative an account of profits, it was ordered that the questions of fact arising in the action should be tried by a special jury before a judge :-Held, that the plaintiff, who had not made his election between damages and profits, was not entitled, before he had succeeded in establishing his title to relief. by the verdict of the jury upon the questions of fact in the action, to discovery as to the sales effected by the defendant and production of his books for that purpose. Fennessy v. Clark, 57 L. J., Ch. 398; 37 Ch. D. 184; 58 L. T. 289

Documents relating to Amount of Damages only.]-Where it is possible to deal separately with the questions of the liability of the defendant and of the amount of damages, the court will not order the production of documents which will assist the plaintiff in establishing the amount of damages only, and which do not bear upon the question of the defendant's liability, until the question of liability has been deter mined. Schreiber v. Heymann, 63 L. J., Q. B. 749.

Upon an application to inspect documents in an action for work and labour, it appeared that the questions in the cause were, whether the defendant was liable to pay commission to the plaintiff, and, if so, to what amount. The documents of which inspection was sought related to the second question only. The defendant had offered, in the event of the first question being decided against him at the trial, to refer the question of damages, granting an inspection of the documents at the reference :- Held, that as the question of liability was severable from that of the amount of damages, and the discovery related to the latter question only, inspection ought not to be granted. Elkin v. Clarke, 21

W. R. 447. A person who had acted as the foreman of a manufacturer's business filed a bill against the manufacturer, alleging that under an agreement between them the plaintiff was to have a weekly salary of 30s., and in addition one-sixth of the profits of the business, and praying an account and payment of one-sixth of the profits of the business to him accordingly. The defendant, by his answer, denied the truth of the plaintiff's case, but admitted a right on his part, under a different agreement, however, to that set up by him, to a weekly salary of 30s. (originally) and to one-twelfth of the profits of the business, coupled, however, with an agreement on the part of the plaintiff that the latter should take the statements of the defendant as to the profits to be true, and should not demand or question heir to a mortgagor, filed a bill to redeem. The the business transactions, or be entitled to exanswer denied that he was heir. A motion by amine or investigate the business books. The him for production of the mortgage deed was defendant made the usual affidavit as to documents, in which he admitted the possession of by an affidavit in answer, admitted that he had documents relating to matters in the cause, but declined to produce them for the reasons appearing on his answer :-Held, that he was not compellable to produce them upon an interlocutory application before the hearing, their production not being relevant to the issue whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to a decree or an account, although their production might be material on the question of the amount payable to him if the account was directed. Turney v. Bayley, 4 De G. J. & S. 332.

When Question as to Damages only. ]-A defendant is entitled to inspect documents in the plaintiff's possession bearing upon the amount of Jamages, though there is no issue to be tried. Pap. v. Lister, 40 L. J., Q. B. 87; L. R. 6 Q. B. 242; 24 L. T. 70; 19 W. R. 455.

A defendant, in an action for breach of promise of marriage, applied for leave to inspect letters written by him to the plaintiff. The defendant admitted the promise to marry, and said he was advised and believed that it was necessary for him on the trial, and to prepare for the trial, to have the letters produced, and that he would derive advantage from the production. The plaintiff objected to the production of the letters on the ground that the defendant might refer to some of the letters in mitigation of damages:— Held, that he was entitled to inspection.

After Judgment-Discretion. ]-In an action for breach of promise judgment for the plaintiff had gone by default, and the question of damage had been referred to the master. The plaintiff claimed the right to inspect and take copies of her letters to the defendant, as being material to the question of damages :- Held, that the matter was one for the discretionary jurisdiction of the court or judge, and not of right. Ludds v. Walthew, 32 W. R. 1000.

Comparison of Handwriting.]—In a suit involving a question of disputed handwriting, the hearing of a summons for production of documents is not the proper stage for ordering the production of writings for purposes of comparison, inasmuch as by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 27, disputed writings may be compared only with writings "proved to the satisfac-tion of the judge to be genuine," and this proof can only be furnished at the hearing. Wilson v. Thornbury, 43 L. J., Ch. 356; L. R. 17 Eq. 517; 22 W. R. 509.

II. INJURY OR OPPRESSION.

Difficulty—Documents Numerous.]—Discovery by a railway company of the contents of books, in the possession of themselves and their agents, extending over a series of years, to shew the receipt of goods specifically described, delivered to them for carriage, ordered. Hall v. L. & N. W.

Ry., 35 L. T. 848.

In a suit by a contractor against a railway company in respect of works done for them, a motion was made by the defendants, that the plaintiff should produce all written communications which had passed between certain persons, naming them, and all account books, documents, papers, and writings relating to the contracts in the bill mentioned. The defendants' solicitor in the bill mentioned. The defendants' solicitor plaintiff's patent, and asking for an account of made an affidavit in support of the motion, that his dealings and transactions, and seeking to he believed that the plaintiff had documents as make him answerable for the profits received by stated in the notice of motion; and the plaintiff, him in consequence of the infringement:—Held, in his possession a great mass of documents relating to the works in question, but stated, that to ascertain which of them came within the terms of the motion would be productive of great expense and inconvenience to him. The vicechancellor made an order according to the terms of the motion, but upon an appeal by the plaintiff against that order, the Lords Justices varied it, by directing that the plaintiff should, on or before the 20th March, 1853, make affidavit of all documents, &c., in his possession or power, and that the rest of the appeal motion should stand over, with liberty to apply for an extension of the time. Inquisitorial. |-Policies of insurance having been effected by a certain firm, on goods alleged to have been purchased and shipped by them in September, 1829, and an action having been brought on these policies, the underwriters filed a bill of discovery against the firm, alleging that no such purchase had been made; and afterwards obtained an order to amend their bill, upon a suggestion supported by affidavit, that the firm had not sufficient capital to make the purchase. The underwriter has a right to the most extensive discovery relative to the particular transaction which is impeached, but the court will interpose to prevent him from making general inquisitorial inquiries. Janson v. Solarte, 2 Y. & Coll. 132; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 75.

Where all the parties (including the plaintiff) interested under a will and in the partnership of a deceased relation finally settled their respective claims by a deed of arrangement, and more than twenty-four years afterwards the plaintiff, as next of kin to one of the parties, and upon the ground of his mental incapacity at the time of the execution of the deed, filed a bill for a discovery of all the partnership accounts antecedently to the arrangement, and for a declaration that the deed was not binding as against such party :- Held, upon exceptions to answer. that the plaintiff was not entitled to the discovery sought. Kay v. Hargreares, 14 L. T. 281.

Vexatious.]-The court will take care that the production of documents by a defendant, by which discovery is sought, shall not be vexatious and improper. Mansell v. Feeney, 2 John. & H. and improper. 320: 9 W. R. 610: 4 L. T. 437.

Application to Produce after Interrogatories fully Answered.]—Where the parties to an action are rivals in trade and interrogatories are administered by the one to the other of them, if the court or a judge is satisfied that such interrogatories have been fully and sufficiently answered, and that it would be oppressive and vexatious to compel production of books of account, no order for that purpose will be made. Att.-Gen. v. North Metropolitan Tramways, 72 L. T. 340-C. A.

As to Dealings and Transactions.]-Upon a bill charging the defendant with infringing the that the defendant must answer the interroga-; tories, though he disputes the title of the plaintiff, and insists that the discovery will be an act of oppression upon him, and that there was little probability that the court at the hearing would direct an account upon the facts if disclosed. Swinborne v. Nelson, 22 L. J., Ch. 331; 1 W. R.

Bankers required to set out particulars of certain bills and notes which they claimed to include in their mortgage security, and also of securities received from a debtor alleged to be primarily liable upon the bills; but they were not required to set out dealings between themselves and the latter to support a charge in the bill of secret partnership between themselves and him. Bridguater v. De Winton, 3 N. R. 24; 9 Jur (N.S.) 1270; 9 L. T. 568; 12 W. R. 40.

Names of Customers. ]-Although in considering whether the rule that a defendant who submits to give discovery must make full discovery is to be applied, the court does not in general weigh nicely the materiality of the discovery sought; still, if the discovery is such as might be used for purposes prejudicial to the defendant irrespectively of the suit, the court will look narrowly to the question whether there is a reasonable prospect of its being of material service to the plaintiff at the hearing. Currer v. Pinto Leite, 41 L. J., Ch. 92; L. R. 7 Ch. 90; 25 L. T. 722; 20 W. R. 184.

The defendants in a suit to restrain the infringement of trade-marks having scaled up certain parts of entries and letters admitted to relate to the matters in question in the cause, were ordered by the duchy court of Lancaster to unseal the names of customers and of places, and the prices, forming parts of such entries, and to unseal the portions of letters and copies of letters which contained the names of the writers and of which the letters were sent, and the places to and from which the letters were sent, and the places to and from which the letters were sent, and the description placed, on the goods referred to in such letters : -Held, on appeal, that they ought not to be compelled to disclose the names of customers, or the names of persons to or from whom letters were sent or received, or any prices, inasmuch as such discovery might be used in a manner prejudicial to them in their trade, and was not likely to assist the plaintiffs in making out their case

The court ought not to compel discovery of matters useless to the plaintiff for any purposes of the hearing, but which may be injurious to the defendant in case the plaintiff fails at the hearing. Heugh v. Garrett, 44 L. J., Ch. 305; 32 L. T. 45—L. JJ.

at the hearing. Ib.

The defendant was agent to the plaintiffs for the sale of patent ruffles according to the terms of an agreement. The plaintiffs believed that of an agreement. The pathens of the agreement, and accordingly filed a bill against him for an account. The defendant, by his answer, submitted that the inquiries made by the interrogatories as to the names of the persons to whom he had sold the goods, and as to the quantities and particulars of such sales, were wholly immaterial to the questions at issue. The plaintiffs took out a summons for the production of documents, and the defendant ad-mentioned in the first part of the first schedule to his affidavit as relating exclusively to these transactions with the plaintiffs, but declined to produce certain other documents mentioned in the second part of the first schedule, on the ground that in them were contained the whole of his business transactions, except those contained in the documents he had agreed to produce. The plaintiffs accordingly took out a further summons to produce the documents contained in the second part of the first schedule, upon which the chief clerk made an order to produce the documents required. On this summons being adjourned into court it was held, that the defendant was bound to produce all the docu-ments in question :- Held, on appeal, that the defendant must be allowed to seal up the names and addresses of his customers, and was only bound to produce the entries shewing the quantities of goods sold, and the prices. Ib.

Where a defendant who was the surviving partner in a firm of commission wine merchants, being required to set out in his answer an account of the partnership assets, liabilities, and dealings for the six mouths preceding the death of the deceased partner, set out the account in a book which he referred to in his answer, but refused to set it out in his answer, on the ground that he would thereby disclose private matters, and the plaintiff excepted for insufficiency, the court allowed the exception, and held that the defendant ought to have set out the account in a schedule to his answer, and that the objection, that the names of the customers were privileged. did not apply to such a case. Telford v. Ruskin, 1

Dr. & Sm. 148; 20 L. J., Ch. 867; 8 W. R. 575. A plaintiff complained that the defendant had sold, under the plaintiff's name, sewing machines which had not been manufactured by him, and he sought a discovery of all the machines sold by the defendant, the price, the profit, the names of the purchasers, and other particulars. The defendant refused to answer, saying that he would thereby disclose the names of his customers and of the marks to be placed, or which had been the secrets of his trade :- Held, that he was bound to answer. Howe v. McKernan, 30 Beav, 547.

In an action against licensee under a patent for account and royalties, defendant was held bound to answer plaintiff's interrogatory as to names of enstomers. Ashworth v. Roberts, 60 L. J., Ch. 27; 45 Ch. D. 623; 63 L. T. 160; 39 W. R. 170.

Private Matters.]-Where a plaintiff files a bill founded on the alleged agency of the defendant, which is in question in the suit, the defendant will not be compelled to answer interrogatories as to what appear to be his private transactions. Great Western Colliery Co. v. Tucker, 43 L. J., Ch. 518; L. R. 9 Ch. 376; 30 L. T. 731.

A., being indebted, conveyed lands to his son, who was then living with him, in fee, for an expressed consideration of 11,000%. A bill was afterwards filed to have this conveyance set aside as a fraud on A.'s creditors, and alleging that no money was ever paid by the son; and interrogatories were exhibited to him, asking whether he had at that time any resources of his own, and what they were, and the amount and value and annual income thereof. He stated that he had private resources, partly his own and partly his wife's, consisting of farming stock, furniture, &c., but mitted the possession and relevancy of the without stating the value or annual income :—

As to Practice of Insurance Company. ]-1862, a policy was granted upon the life of A., who about the same time went to reside in India, On account of his bad state of health an additional premium was charged, but the Indian extra rate was not charged by the company, who alleged that they did not know of his departure for India. In 1868, the days of grace having expired, the company declined to reinstate the policy except upon the terms of payment of the Indian extra rate for the period that had elapsed since the policy was effected, relying upon the condition contained in the policy, that it should be void if the assured should go beyond Europe without obtaining permission of the directors on payment of a premium adequate to the extra The assured filed a bill in equity, praying a declaration that he was entitled to the benefit of his policy upon payment of the premium originally charged, with liberty to reside in India without extra premium: and interrogated the company as to their practice with regard to similar cases at the time his policy was issued, calling upon them to take ten policies immediately preceding and immediately subsequent to the date of his policy, upon the lives of persons about to start for India in the Civil Service, and to state whether any such licences and extra payments were given or made in such cases, and the form of the respective policies :- Held, that the company was bound to give the discovery sought by the interrogatory, for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to establish the ease of conduct and waiver in similar cases raised by the equity of his bill. Girdlestone v. North British Mercantile Insurance Co., 40 L. J., Ch. 230; L. R. 11 Eq. 197; 23 L. T. 392.

III. TENDENCY TO CRIMINATE.

1. General Principles.

Protection in every Stage of Proceedings.]. Protection generally, in every stage of the procooding, against answering any question having a direct tendency to criminate the party, or subjeet him to penalty, &c., or forming one step-towards it. Paxton v. Douglas, 19 Ves. 225; 16-Ves. 239; 12 R. R. 175.

Fact forming Link in Chain of Evidence. -Toa bill stating defendant's marriage with a partieular woman, plea, she is his sister, protects him. from discovery of any fact forming a link in the chain. Claridge v. Hoare, 14 Ves. 65.

Transfer of stock under an agreement to satisfy the deficiency in the accounts of a banker's clerk, though he is not a party, amounts to a composition of felony, to prevent a prosecution. Defendant, therefore, may protect himself by plen from discovering not only the broad leading fact, but any fact, the answer to which may form a step in the prosecution. S. C., 14 Ves. 59.

The protection extends not only to the question which directly may tend to criminate, but to every link in the chain of proof. Macvallum v. Turton, 2 Y. & J. 183.

A defendant is not bound to discover the principal fact or any one of a long series or chain of facts which may contribute to establish a criminal charge against himself, and he cannot waive his right by any agreement. Lee v. Read, 5 Beav. 381; 12 L. J., Ch. 26; 6 Jur. 1026.

Bill by an ecclesiastical rector against an occupier for an account of tithes : the defendant, by his answer, not only insisted on a modus, but alleged that the plaintiff was simoniacally presented, and stated certain facts as evidence thereof. The occupier afterwards filed his crossbill against the rector, to establish the modus, and for a discovery of various matters with reference to the purchase of the advowson by the rector's father, and calculations made of the value of the tithes and moduses: a lease alleged A foreign government employed K. & F., as to have been granted by the preceding incumbent objected to make answer, would, if confessed, furnish evidence, or lead to evidence, in support of a charge of simony, or would aid the proof of the charge, and would subject the defendant to forfeiture and penalties. Exceptions being taken to the answer for insufficiency, they were, on argument, overruled, on the ground that a party protecting himself from a discovery which may subject him to a penalty is not bound to answer a single link in the chain of evidence. Southall -, Younge, 308.

On a bill to set aside a usurious contract, defendant may demur to a discovery of what interest he agreed to take, for he cannot set forth that without discovering the very interest he has taken. Chauncey v. Tahourden, 2 Atk. 393.

Legal and Illegal Matters mixed together. ]— Where a plaintiff by his bill seeks a discovery of matters which might subject the defendant to a criminal prosecution, and also seeks other legitimate discovery, it is his duty to separate the two: for if they be so mixed up or connected, that, either by inference or exclusion, they may lead to a disclosure which might subject the defendant to prosecution, he is not bound to answer any portion of it. Lichfield (Earl) v. Bond, 6 Beav, 88; 12 L. J., Ch. 329; 7 Jur. 209.

A bill sought, as against stock brokers, a discovery of certain sales of stocks and shares. The defendants, by their answer, stated that some of them were illegal time bargains, and refused to give a discovery of any of the transactions :-Held, that they were bound to answer as to the legal matters. Fisher v. Price, 11 Beav. 194; 18

L. J., Ch. 235.

The whole object of a bill of discovery being criminatory, a general demurrer does not cover too much, because some of the interrogatories, separately considered, may relate to matters not directly criminatory. Glyn v. Houston, 1 Kecn, 329; 6 L. J., Ch. 129.

Refusal to Discover not an Admission. ]-Party demurring to the discovery, or witness refusing to answer facts tending to criminate himself, no admission to the truth of the fact. Lloyd v. Passingham, 16 Ves. 59.

Refusal to answer, on the ground that it tends to criminate the witness, does not amount to an admission. Symes, Ex parte, 11 Ves. 523.

How claimed.]-A party cannot protect himself from producing a document on the ground that its production would tend to criminate him. unless he pledges his oath that, to the best of his belief, its production would tend to criminate him. Webb v. Etsat. 49 L. J., Ex. 250; 5 Ex. D. 108; 41 L. T. 715; 28 W. R. 336; 44 J. P. 200—C. A. Party not bound to make discovery which punishment. Selwyn v. Honeywood, 9 Mod. 419. Where, in aid of defence to action for libel, discovery would subject plaintiff at law to indictment, he is not bound to answer; but because bill sought commission to examine abroad, to which plaintiff in equity was entitled, demurrer to whole bill was overruled, with liberty to amend. Thorpe v. Macauloy, 5 Madd. 219.

A bureau delivered for the purpose of repairs to a person who discovered money in a secret drawer, which he converted to his own use : this amounts to a felony, and upon that ground a demurrer to a bill of discovery was allowed. Cartwright v. Green, 8 Ves. 405; 7 R. R. 99.

Bigamy. ]-Plea to discovery tending to convict of bigamy, allowed. Hatfield v. Hatfield, 5 Bro. P. C. 103.

Perjury. ]—The bill alleged that the defendant had procured an order vesting the legal estate of certain lands in himself, by false statements, and that the Master's report in his favour had been obtained on evidence untrue, and fraudnlently concocted. The bill interrogated the defendant as to the tenancies of the lands in question, requiring him to set forth the names, terms, rents, &c.; and it also prayed a discovery of the alleged fraudulent documents. The defendant refused to discover the precise terms of the tenancies, or to state what documents he had employed; he admitted that he had let the premises, and that an order of the Court of Chancery had been made vesting the legal estate in him; he denied all fraud; denied the plaintiff's beneficial title, and affirmed his own; and declared that the documents which he had made use of had been prepared with a view to litigation, but not to this litigation, and after litigation had commenced: and that they did not support, or tend to support the plaintiff's title, but that, on the contrary, they supported his, the defendant's, title. The defendant also, at the bar, insisted that the effect of the diseovery of documents would be, on the plaintiff's own showing, to expose the defendant to a prosecution for perjury:—Held, that the answer was insufficient on both points. Chadwick v. Chadwick, 16 Jur. 1060.

— In the Cause.]—It is no answer to a motion for production of documents in the custody of a defendant, that they tend to support an indictment pending against the defendant for perjury committed in the eause. Rice v. Gordon, 13 Sim. 581; 13 L. J., Ch. 104; 7 Jur. 1076.

Fraud. ]-The court will not compel a defendant to answer allegations which may subject him to penalties. Where the chairman of a joint-stock company, with a knowledge that the company had been dissolved, and that the managing committee had determined to buy up the shares, sent his shares into the market, and sold them as good and available shares, the court protected him from answering the allegations, noon the ground that there existed a reasonable probability that he might be indicted for the fraud. Maccallum v. Turton, 2 Y. & J. 183.

Discovery compelled, whether devise was obtained or prevented, by undertaking of devisee or heir to do certain acts in favour of individuals, and relief upon the ground of fraud.

Stickland v. Aldridge, 9 Ves. 519; 7 R. R. 292.
The bill stated that a testator intended to republish his will, but was prevented from so doing by the fraud of the heir-at-law. A deniurrer to so much of the bill as required him to discover whether the testatator did not intend to republish his will, was, under these circumstances, overruled. Dixon v. Olmius, 1 Cox, 414. See 9 R. Bill to be relieved against fraud, defendant must answer discovery. Manningham v. Bolingbroke, Dick. 533.

Conspiracy. ]-Bill against a corporation, trustees for a charity, for a discovery and injunction against a resolution depriving the plaintiff of his office of schoolmaster, charged to have been proonice of scholamster, charged to may been pre-cured by five of the members, including the bailiff, from improper motives, with reference to a parliamentary election. Demurrer by those five, on the ground that no title was shewn to discovery against them, and ore tenus, that the charge would be the subject of a criminal prose-cution overruled. Dummer v. Chippenham Cor-poration, 14 Ves. 245.

Under Foreign Enlistment Act. ]-An incorporated company demurred to a bill, because the discovery thereby sought might subject it to criminal prosecution under the Foreign Enlistment Act, 59 Geo, 3, c. 69 (to prevent the enlisting of his majesty's subjects for foreign service, and the fitting-out, in his majesty's dominions, wessels for warlike purposes without his licence). The court held that a corporation was not liable to be indicted under that act, and overruled the demurrer. Sicilies (King) v. Wileox, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 334; 19 L. J., Ch. 488; 14 Jur. 751.

Barratry.]-Bill by a certificated conveyancer to enforce an agreement by the defendant, an attorney and solicitor, to pay the plaintiff a commission equal to half the net profits upon all matters of professional business introduced to him by the plaintiff; the bill averting part performance of the agreement and charging (in effect) that after introducing matters of (in effect) that after introducing matters of spanish subjects resident in Spania. Scott v. Miller, 1 Johns. 220; 28 L. J., Ch. 584; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 858; 7 W. R. 470.

> Misconduct as Attorney.] - Discovery was refused in an action against an attorney for alleged negligence and misconduct as attorney for the plaintiff; the object of the application being to compel the production of his books for the purpose of inspecting entries therein, upon which it was surmised were founded the items of a bill of costs which had been delivered by the attorney to the plaintiff. Con v. Brockett, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 241.

> Assault and False Imprisonment. ]-Demurrer to a bill for discovery, in aid of an action, brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for an assault and false imprisonment, allowed, the whole object of the bill being to obtain a discovery of matters, which, if established, would have subjected the defendant to penal consequences, Glyn v. Houston, 1 Keen, 329; 6 L. J., Ch. 129.

Act of Bankruptoy.]—Demurrer to a discovery of trading overruled. A demurrer good, if confined to questions as to having committed an act of bankuptey. Chambers v. Thompson, 4 Bro.

Discovery from Wife of Party Liable. ]-A married woman may demur to a discovery that may subject her husband to a charge of felony. Curtwright v. Green, 8 Ves. 406; 7 R. R. 99.

Offence under Foreign Law. ]-A. and B. were to enforce the agreement. A pleaded that the agreement was illegal and void by the laws of Spain, as, at the time it was entered into, B. held an office of trust and confidence under the Spanish government, and the plea averred that the entering into the agreement was a crime against the laws of Spain, subjecting the parties to pains and penalties, and a criminal prosecution. The plea was allowed, though B. was dead, and therefore no longer subject to pains and penalties. Heriz v. Riera, 11 Sim. 318; 10 L. J., Ch. 47; 5 Jnr. 20.

Discovery tending to forfeiture not enforced. Firebrass's Cuse. 2 Salk. 550.

An interrogatory embracing two points: as to one, it was answered; as to the other, not. exception to the whole may be sustained. Where deeds existed in which, in the event of the court deciding one way, the plaintiff would have no interest, but if it decided another way he would, the defendant cannot protect himself against discovering in whose possession they are; nor can he, because discovery might have the effect of making estate go over away from him. Hambrook v. Smith, 17 Sim. 209; 21 L. J., Ch. 320 : 16 Jur. 144.

The rule that no man is obliged to accuse himself, implies, also, that he is not bound to discover a disability in himself. Smith v. Read,

Of Lease. - Where in any action the sole issue raised is whether there has been a forfeiture of a lease by breach of covenant, the court will not grant discovery of documents or leave to adgrant discovery of documents of leave to ac-minister interrogatories. Where in any action that issue is raised together with other issues, the court will make no order either for the discovery of documents or the administration of interrogatories with regard to that issue. Seaward v. Dennington (44 W. R. 696) overmled. Mexborough (Earl) v. Whitwood Urban Council, 66 L. J., Q. B. 637; [1897] 2 Q. B. 111; 76 L. T. 765; 45 W. R. 564—C. A.

The bill alleged that an estate was devised under a power to the defendant for life, or until he should alienate by forfeiture or otherwise, that the execution of the power was invalid, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the estate in default of appointment. One of the inter-rogatories to the bill was, whether the defendant had not in his possession the title-deeds of the estate; and if not, in whose possession were they? The bill also asked that the defendant might set forth a schedule to the deeds in his possession, and that he might state in whose possession those deeds were which he had parted with. The defendant admitted that some of the deeds were in his possession, and set forth a schedule of them; and he stated that he had had other deeds, but refused to answer in whose possession they now where, as it might subject him to a forfeiture of the estate :- Held, that as in one event the documents might assist the plaintiff at the hearing, he was entitled to production: held further, that the estate having been given to the defendant until alienation, he could not protect himself from discovery, on the ground of forfeiture. Hambrook v. Smith, 17 Sim. 209; 21 L. J., Ch. 320; 16 Jur. 144.

A., by will, gave an estate to his wife dur. vidnit., with a limitation over in case of her second marriage; the remainderman brought a bill of discovery of her second marriage, to which she demurred as subjecting her to a forfeiture. Demurrer overruled; for this is not a condition but a limitation over of an estate, and, therefore, no forfeiture. If it had been a condition for a breach of which a forfeiture would have been incurred, such a demurrer would have been allowed. Chauncey v. Tahourden, 2 Atk. 392.

On a bill by executor for discovery of defendant's marriage, who demurred, as it would be a forfeiture of his legacy, which was given conditionally if she married with consent of trustees under the will. Demurrer allowed, as he cannot answer the marriage without shewing at the same time it was against consent. Ib.

Under Marriage Act.]—The husband charged with procuring his marriage with a minor, by falsely swearing that the consent of her parent had been given, cannot be compelled to discover the facts relating to such charge, upon an information under the Marriage Act (4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 23), seeking the forfeiture of his interest in the wife's property, and a settlement of the same upon her and her issue. Att. Gen. v. Lucus, 2 Hare, 566; 12 L. J., Ch. 506; 7 Jur. 1080.

Under 13 Eliz. c. 5, and 27 Eliz. c. 4.]—The penalty and forfeiture clauses of the 13 Eliz. c. 5, and 27 Eliz. c. 4, cannot be used by defendants in equity who are parties to deeds which it is sought to impeach under those statutes, as exempting them from giving discovery, or from the necessity of making the common affidavit as to documents, even though among such documents may be the deeds sought to be impeached. of Seat in Parliament.]—S. gave a bond to the action, the Court of Chancery before those pay 800% a year to H. during S.'s enjoying the acts would not have allowed interrogatories to -, or whilst anybody held it in trust for him. H. puts the bond in suit; S. brings a bill for injunction, and a cross-bill is brought by H. to discover whether E. held the office in trust for S. S. insisted, in his answer, he was not obliged to discover what would subject him to incapacities of the several acts to vacate a seat in parliament on a member's accepting a place : he is not obliged to make the discovery; and he did right in answering, for he could not have demurred to this matter, because then he would have admitted the facts to be true. Honeywood v. Selwin, 3 Atk, 276.

Where Liability Statute barred. ] - Where Statute of Limitation had run against recovery of penalty for usury, the usurer cannot protect himself from discovery by demurrer founded on liability of subjecting himself to forfeiture.

Tulbot v. Smith, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 360.

Protection does not extend to Collateral Matters.]—Plea on the ground of forfeiture must be confined to protect against a discovery of the aet causing it, and not extend to matters collateral. Weaver v. Meath, 2 Ves. 108.

Though the forfeiture is not waived, a copyholder cannot by demurrer protect himself from answering those parts of the bill which do not allege acts or circumstance tending to produce forfeiture. Durham (Bishop) v. Rippon, 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 32.

In Foreign Country.]—A plea of penalties to which the defendant's answer may expose him in a foreign country, is a good plea to the discovery, if the law of the foreign country clearly appears. United States of America v. M. Pac, 57 L. J., Ch. 129; L. R. 3 Ch. 79; 17 L. T. 229; 19 W. R. 377.

The United States of America, under an act of Congress, took proceedings in America for the seizure and confiscation of the real estate there of a defendant, an agent in this country of the late Confederate States; and, pending those proceedings, they filed a bill here for the recovery of moneys and goods which had come to his hands as such agent, alleging that all property of the late Confederate States was now vested in the plaintiffs. The defendant pleaded, in bar to the discovery and relief sought by the bill, that the acts alleged in the bill were identical with those in respect of which the proceedings had been instituted abroad, and that his answer to the interrogatories would expose him to the confiscation of his estate abroad under such proceedings :-Held, that the plea was good as to the discovery sought by the bill. Ib.

Held, that the plea was bad as to the relief; there being no connection between the subjectmatters of the suit here and the proceedings abroad. Ib.

Possibility of Liability Sufficient.]—The rule of law is, that a man shall not be obliged to discover what may subject him to a penalty, not what must only. Harrison v. Southcote, I Atk.

A man is not bound to discover what may subject him to the penalty of an act of parlia-ment. Bird v. Hardwicke, 1 Vern, 109,

Admission of Liability.] - If a defendant makes statements in his answer sufficient to shew that he has incurred penalties, he cannot refuse to produce documents referred to in it, on the ground that they afford evidence of his being subject to the penalties. Ewing v. Osbaldiston, 6 Sim. 608

Penalty Imposed by Covenant. - If a party covenant not to do a particular act, he cannot protect himself from discovery, if he has done the act, by alleging that there was a penalty attached to the performance of such act. French v. Macale, 2 Dr. & War. 269; 1 Con. & L. 459; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 568.

By indenture a farm was demised at yearly ent, with a covenant by tenant, that if, during the last three years of the term, he should sow more than seventy acres of clover in one year, he should pay an additional rent of 101. a year for every acre above seventy, for the remainder of the term:—Held, that the additional rent was in the nature of stipulated damages, entitling plaintiff to a discovery in aid of an action at law; and a plea that the discovery would subject defendant to penalties, was over-ruled. Jones v. Green, 3 Y. & J. 298.

Waiver—Of Penalty.]—In a bill to stay waste, a plaintiff is not entitled to discovery unless he waives the double penalty. Boteler v. Allington, 3 Atk. 457. And see Att.-Gen, v. Conroy, infra, col. 904.

— Of Right of Refusal.]—The right not to discover for fear of penalties attaching, may be waived by agreement. East India Co. v. Athyns, 1 Comb. 346; 1 Str. 168. South Sea Co. v. Bumsted, 1 Eq. Abr. 77.

b. In Various Cases.

Pound-breach-Treble Damages.]-An action ; for pound-breach and rescue of chattels distrained for nonpayment of tithe rent-charge, in which the plaintiff claims treble damages: under 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 4, is a penal action, and the plaintiff is therefore not entitled to an affidavit of documents. Jones v. Jones, 58

Fraudulent Removal of Goods by Tenant-Double Value.]—An action for double the value of goods fraudulently removed by a tenant, Effect of Judicature Acts. ]-The Judicature brought under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, is a penal action, Acts and Rules have only altered the procedure and the plaintiff is not entitled to administer and not the rights of parties, and discovery of interest parties of the defendant. Hobbs and not the rights of parties, and discovery of interrogatories will not be allowed [Halon, 9 L.J., Q. B. 562; 25 Q. B. D. 232; 63 in cases where, as when a penalty is the gist of [L. For Breach of Dramatic Copyright.]—By 3 & 4 Will, 4, c. 15, s. 2, if any person shall, during the continuance of the sole liberty of representing's dramatic piece, represent such piece without the consent of the author, every such offender shall be liable for each and every such representation to the payment of an amount not less than 40s. :- Held, that this section did not impose a penalty upon the offender so as to puse a penarry upon the offender so as to preclude the plaintiff, in an action to recover the specified amount, from administering interrogatories to him. Adams v. Batley, 56 L. J., Q. B. 393; 18 Q. B. D. 625; 56 L. T. 770; 35 W. R. 437—C. A.

Pollution of River-Proceeding to Restrain. ]-An application by a sanitary authority to a county court judge for an order under s. 10 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876. requiring a person to abstain from the commission of an offence under the provisions of that act, is not a penal proceeding, inasmuch as until the order has been made and has been disobeyed no question of penalty can arise, and the proceeding is therefore civil and not criminal, and one in which discovery and interrogatories may be allowed. Derby Corporation v. Derbyshire County Council, 66 L. J., Q. B. 701; [1897] A. C. 550; 77 L. T. 107; 46 W. R. 48; 62 J. P. 4—H. L. (E.)

Proceedings by Common Informer.]—In an action for penalties by a common informer, leave will not be granted to a plaintiff to call upon the defendant for discovery of documents, Whiteley v. Barley, 56 L. J., Q. B. 312.

The general rule is that in an action for penalties by a common informer, leave will not be given to the plaintiff to administer interroga-tories. Martin v. Treacher, 55 L. J., Q. B. 209; 16 Q. B. D. 507; 54 L. T. 7; 34 W. R. 315; 50 J. P. 356-C. A.

Broker's Qualification. ]-A broker in the city of London must answer a bill of discovery in aid of an action brought against him by his employer, for misconduct, although the discovery will subject him to the penalty of a bond given by him to the corporation on his admission. Green v. Weaver, 1 Sim. 404; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 1; 27 R. R. 214.

The fact of persons assuming to act as brokers in the city of London, induces a belief in parties employing them that they are duly qualified, and they cannot protect themselves from a discovery of dealings between themselves and their principals by alleging that they may be subject to penalties for acting as brokers without having to penature for aging as of occas we was the first been admitted uncler the provisions of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 60. Robinson v. Kitchen, 21 Beav. 365. Affirmed, 8 De G. M. & G. 88; 25 L. J., Ch. 441; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 294; 4 W. R. 344.

For Evading Customs or Duties. ]—An information charging a distillation of larger quantities of spirits than the distillers acknowledged, or spirits than the distincts action age, prayed for an account of all duties due to the Crown, the attorney-general waiving all penalties and forfeitures:—Held, that the defendants were bound to answer all the charges fully. Att.-Gen. v. Conroy, 2 Jones, 791.

An information for an account of spirit duties, charged a distiller with having claudestinely abstracted spirits from his distillery, which he afterwards sold to certain persons at a reduced price, no duty having ever been paid in respect of such spirits:—Held, that the defendant was bound to answer fully the statements in the information, and could not protect himself on the ground that the disclosure might tend to criminate him. Att.-Gen. v. Daly, Hay. & J. 379.

Where bill on policy of insurance charges exportation of prohibited goods absolutely, and no others, and in interrogatory inquires what goods were exported, plea of penaltics attaching on such exportation allowed. Duncalf v. Blake, 1 Atk. 52.

For False Return to Income Tax Commissioners. ]-A bill sought a discovery of the returns made by the defendant to the commissioners of property tax, the object of the plaintiff being to shew that the defendant represented that the profits of his business were less than what he had stated to the plaintiff, who had purchased it. A demarrer was allowed. Mitchell v. Kvecker, 11 Beav. 380; 12 Beav. 44; 18 L. J., ## d. Under Stock-Jobbing Acts.

Extent of Discovery.]—Plea of the Stock-Jobbing Act to a bill for discovery of stock transactions overruled, as the 2nd section of the act requires parties to make a discovery whereon to found an action. Bancroft v. Wentworth, 3 Bro. C. C. 11.

Discovery in support of an action to recover money under the Stock-Jobbing Act, statute 7 Gco. 2. c. 8, confined to those clauses, as to which it is expressly given, with protection from the penalties, and therefore not extended to the 5th and 8th sections. Bullock v. Richardson, 11 Ves.

The 7 Geo. 2, c. 8, s. 8, imposed a penalty of 5001, upon parties buying or selling stock of which the sellers are not possessed at the time of the contract; and by s. 9, every broker shall keep a to penaltics under 7 Geo. 2, c. 8; they also book of his transactions in the public stocks, and claimed the benefit of the Statute of Francis: shall produce it when thereunto lawfully re-quired. A broker having, as indorsee of a bill, agreement, must answer the allegations in the brought an action upon it against the acceptor, he, before pleading, moved upon an adelpton, the before pleading, moved upon an adelpton that the bill was believed to have been indorsed that the bill was believed to have been indorsed to the broker in payment of differences in respect to the broker in payment of differences in respect of illegal agreements in stocks; and that he should be ordered to produce his book for the should be ordered to produce his book for the defendant's inspection. The court refused the rule, on the ground that the defendant had no defendants, by their answer, stated that some of interest in the book, and also, that its production them were illegal time-bargains, and refused to might expose the broker to penalties. Demurrer railway companies, filed a bill against him accusing him of fictitious and fraudulent sales, and other transactions with respect to the shares. Simony.] — Upon quare impedit brought The defendant refused to answer the interrogaagainst the plaintiff, he filed the present bill to tories on that subject, on the ground that the tories on that subject, on the ground that the transactions charged were illegal, and might subject him to penalties under the Stock-Jobbing Act, 7 Geo. 2, c. 8 :- Held, first, that shares in railway companies are not included in the abovementioned act. Secondly, that as no penalties could be incurred by the defendant in consequence of answering the bill, he could not protect himself from answering by the fact that the transactions in question were illegal, or that the demand was a purely legal one. Williams v. Trye, 2 Eq. R. 766; 23 L. J., Ch. 860; 18 Jur. 442; 2 W. R. 314. And see Billing v. Flight, 1 Madd. 230; Roberts v. Alliatt, 1 M. & M.

> Claim of Protection-Sufficiency.]-The defendants who were stockbrokers, being interrogated as to the particulars of certain transactions between them and the plaintiff, declined to answer, on the ground that, by reason of the Stock-Jobbing Act, and of their having been the brokers of the plaintiff, they were advised and believed that the discovery of any of the parti-culars inquired after would tend to subject them to the forfeiture and penalties imposed by that act :- Held, that this statement was sufficient toprotect the defendants from discovery. Short v. Mercier, 3 Mac. & G. 205; 20 L. J., Ch. 289; 15 Jur. 93. Affirming 2 De G. & Sm. 635

An allegation, in answer to a bill against brokers, partners, for an account of dealings in stock, that discovery would expose the defendants to penalties under the Stock-Jobbing Act, is sufficient to protect the defendants from the discovery. Robinson v. Lamond, 15. Jur. 240.

Only some Transactions Illegal. ]-The plaintiff made a verbal agreement with the defendants, who were stockbrokers, for the allowance of a portion of the commission to be received from customers whom he should introduce; disputes arose, and the plaintiff filed his bill asking for discovery, for an account of all transactions, and for payment of such share of the commission as he should be declared entitled to. The defendauts, by their answer, admitted that business had been done for the plaintiff, and for other persons introduced by him; that part of it was real, and that other part was fictitious, and consisted of time-bargains, that discovery would subject them bill relating to it, notwithstanding they sug-

e. Gaming.

The forfeiture of securities under the statute 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, for moneys lent at play, is not a penalty of such a nature as to protect a party from discovering whether the consideration of the security on which he brings his action was not moneys lent at play. Sloman v. Kelly, 4 Y. & Coll. 169.

To a bill charging that certain securities were given for money lent at play, and interrogating as to the consideration given for the same, the defendant, without insisting on any protection from answering, stated that they were given for money lent :--Held, that the answer was insufficient. S. C., 3 Y. & Coll. 673; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 17.

Equity has no jurisdiction, under 9 Annc, c. 14, or 18 Geo. 2, c. 24, to enforce discovery prayed by common informer of money won at play. Holloway v. Shakspeare, 1 Smith, 121.

Upon an action brought to recover a sum of money lent upon the security of an IOU, and upon a bill filed to discover whether the money had not been lent for the purpose of gaming Held, that the defendant was bound to state by his answer whether it was so lent, it being still a question open to argument in a court of law, whether money lent at play, or for the purposes of play, is recoverable in an action at law. Wilkinson v. L' Eaugier, 2 Y. & Coll. 366.

On allegations that on several occasions since 1846 the defendant induced the plaintiff to pay to him large sums of moncy without any legal consideration, or for a consideration which was invalid and failed, and that the plaintiff had since that time been induced by the defendant, without any legal consideration, to accept, indorse and sign bills of exchange and promissory notes, I O U's, and cheques for large sums of money, and on numerous other allegatious, interrogatories were founded, the second of which was, whether it was not the fact that on several occasions since 1846 the defendant induced the plaintiff to pay to him, and whether or not he obtained and received from the plaintiff large sums of money, and whether or not without any legal consideration, or for some and what consideration, which was invalid or wholly failed. The defendant answered three of the interrogatories, not including the above, and stated that if he were to answer further than he had done. he should subject himself to a criminal prosecution, and to penalties or punishment, and there-fore he declined to answer further. On exceptions to the answer for insufficiency, the court allowed them, with costs. Sidebottom v. Adkins, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 631; 5 W. R. 748. Where a bill charges a defendant with acts which would subject him to a criminal prosecution for gaming, under a statute, the defendant need not plead the statute, but may demur to the bill. Flenning v. St. John, 2 Sim. 181.

f. Under Regulations of Companies.

Demurrer to information as subjecting defendant to pains and penalties. East India Co. v. Campbell, 1 Ves. 246.

Bill by the East India Company, claiming from a part owner of a ship, freighted by them, the command, to be paid or allowed under the King v. Burr, 3 Mer. 693.

charter-party and a by-law, to the company, one moiety to their use, the other to be paid or returned to the person who shall give the company information, and make proof; the deed being, on settling the account, cancelled through ignorance of the fact, demurrer to the discovery, because it might subject the defendant to penalty, covering not only the direct charge, but also circumstances of mere inducement, as the execution and cancellation of the deed, and to the relief generally for want of equity, and for defect of parties, viz., the other part owners, particularly one who executed, and the informer, was overruled. East India Co. v. Neave, 5 Ves. 173.

African company hires the defendant's ship to freight. Defendant covenants not to trade in any of the goods in which the company deal, and in such case covenants to pay double the value for all such goods, with liberty to the company to deduct the same out of the freight. The company bring a bill to discover whether the defendant did trade in any of the said goods. Though this be a penalty, yet it being the defendant's own agreement, the defendant is bound to discover. African Co. v. Parish, 2 Vern. 244.

Party agreeing not to plead or demur to discovery, bound by it, though it tends to subject him to penalty. South Sea Co. v. Bumsted, 1

Eq. Abr. 77.

The right not to discover for fear of penalties attaching, may be waived by agreement. East India Co. v. Athyns, 1 Com. 346; 1 Stra. 168.

g. Lapse of Time, Effect of.

Although it is a settled rule that a court of equity will not compel a defendant to make a discovery which will subject him to pains and penalties; yet if between the filing and hearing of the plea, the time for string for the penalties expires, the plea will be overruled. Trinity House Corporation v. Burge, 2 Sim. 411; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 44; 29 R. R. 126.

Where the Statute of Limitations had run against the recovery of the penalty for usury, the usurer cannot protect himself from discovery by demurrer founded on liability of subjecting himself to forfeiture. Tulbot v. Smith, 1 Ridgw.

L. & S. 360. If bill be for discovery of matters penal at common law, or by statute, the defendant need not demur or plead, but it will be admitted on exceptions; but when the time for suing a penalty expires between the first and second answers, and exception is taken to the second answer for not discovering, the exceptions shall be allowed, and the party is bound to discover. Williams v. Farrington, 3 Bro. C. C. 38; 2 Cox,

5. ILLEGAL TRANSACTIONS.

Not generally an Objection to Discovery. ]-This court will entertain a bill for a discovery, and to perpetuate evidence in aid of a defence to an action at law on a contract, although the discovery and evidence are to establish that the contract was void, as corrupt, illegal, and unconstitutional, and that both parties were in pari delicto. Longfield v. Andrey, 1 Hog. 300.

Demurrer to bill of discovery, in support of an action to recover the expenses of the entertainment given by the plaintiff under an agreement with the defendant, to introduce him to a woman double the sum received by him for the sale of of fortune, with a view of marriage, allowed.

A covenanted servant of the East India Company, being senior merchant, and acting as agent of the company, as resident or chief at one of their factories, is incapable of forming any con-tract whatsoever in which the company is interested, so as to derive profit to himself or any otherwise however than for the advantage of the company; and if such contract be actually made between him as a merchant dealing for himself and the company's board of trade in India, in which undue advantage is taken by him, by means of his knowledge and influence as resident at the factory, he cannot demur generally for want of equity to bill by company for discovery and relief. Henchman v. East India Co., 1 Bro. P. C. 85.

This court will not compel nor enforce any discovery respecting a contract made in evasion, and contrary to the intent and meaning or policy of a statute. Where the bill stated several distinct matters of agreement, all of which might be described as partnership transactions, and the prayer was "for an account of all and every the said several co-partnership transactions and that the defendant might be decreed to pay the sum found to be due," the defendant having demurred to the prayer for an account of "all and every the said co-partnership transactions, &e," to several of which the defendant had fully answered, and did not pretend that an account should be refused:—Held, that the demurrer covered too much and was overruled by the answer; but as the court would not enforce any discovery in respect of the contract, called in the bill "the partnership," it being against the policy of the law, and the plaintiff being particeps criminis, it was ordered that the defendant should be at liberty to file another demurrer, confining it to so much of the bill as sought relief or discovery touching the partnership, and that the parties should abide their own costs. Fitzgeruld v. Arthure, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 184. And see id. 189, n.

Demurrer allowed to a bill for discovery and injunction against an action, the effect being a contract for participation in an illegal transaction, the result of combination of wholesale grocers, by the title of the "Fruit Club," acting by a select committee, of which the defendants were members, to purchase all imported fruit, though not strictly forestalling, regrating, or monopoly. Consins v. Smith, 13 Ves. 542; 9 R. R. 217.

When a defendant inears no penalties, he cannot resist a discovery by alleging the illegality of the transaction. Williams v. Trye, 18 Beav. 366; 23 L. J., Ch. 860; 18 Jur. 442; 2 W. R. 314.

Fraud of Agent.]-O. had been formerly a clerk of G. & Co., wool-brokers, and in that position had acquired information, and made extracts from the accounts, shewing that G. & Co. had misbehaved in their business, to the injury of persons employing them; and one person who had so employed them had recovered before an arbitrator substantial damages on the evidence of O. G. & Co. filed a bill to restrain O. from making further disclosures, on the ground that he acquired his information when occupying a confidential relation to them. O, in defence, filed an answer, and also a cross-statement, setting out the fraud in distinct terms, and exhibited interrogatories, on which he required a discovery from G. & Co. They refused to All communications pass answer; but held, that they might be compelled torney and his client, with relation to business to to give the discovery sought. Gartside v. Ontram, 26 L. J., Ch. 113; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 39; 5 W. R. 35.

There can be no confidence in an iniquitous secret. Ib.

A. B. being sued at law by the trustee of a woman to whom he, A. B., had granted an annuity in consideration of future illicit cohabitation, pleaded the illegal nature of the contract, and filed his bill against the trustee for discovery in aid of his defence :-Held, overruling the denurcer of the trustee, that A. B. was entitled to such discovery. Benyon v. Nettlefold, 3 Mac. & G. 94; 20 L. J., Ch. 186; 15 Jur. 209. Reversing 17 Sim. 51.

6. MAINTENANCE AND PRETENDED TITLES.

Maintenance is an indictable offence at common law, and the defendant in an action in which he is charged with supporting a previous plaintiff in litigation in which he had no common interest is entitled to refuse to answer interrogatories on the ground that they may criminate him. Alabaster v. Harness, 70 L. T. 375.

Demurrer allowed to bill of discovery tending to show maintenance of suit on the part of the defendant. Wallis v. Portland (Duke), 8 Bro. P. C. 161; 3 Ves. 494; 4 R. B. 78.

The bill prayed a discovery whether the defendant had not contributed to the expenses of a suit to try a general question against them. It appeared that by the course of that suit in evidence, no general right could be bound by it. A demurrer was allowed. London Corporation v. Ainsley, 1 Austr. 158.

Bill for tithes, praying discovery whether defendants had not associated together in their defence; demurrer was allowed. Haywood, 1 Anstr. 82.

A defendant not bound to answer that which tended to accuse him of maintenance or of buying pretended rights within 32 Hen. 8, c. 9. Sharp v. Carter, 3 P. W. 375.

Plea of the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, s. 3, against buying and selling pretended titles; and also that there was not any mortgage as mentioned in the bill, to a bill that the defendant might redeem a mortgage upon a covenant in a lease from the defendant to the plaintiff:—Held, good, though a negative plea. Hitchins v. *Lan*der, Coop. 34; 14 R. R. 214.

IV. LEGAL PROFESSIONAL CONFIDENCE.

1. GENERALLY.

Privilege belongs to Client. ]-A witness not compelled to discover matters of which he obtained knowledge in professional confidence. The privilege not of the attorney but the client, its principle and limitation. Parkhurst v. Lowten,

All communications passing between an at-privileged, such privilege being the privilege of the client and not of the attorney. Herring v.

Cloberry, 11 L. J., Ch. 149.

Distinction between the extent of privilege as to discovery of the solicitor and that of the elient. There are cases where the solicitor would and client would not be protected. Greenlaw v. King, 1 Beav. 137; 8 L. J., Ch. 92.

A solicitor, in the presence of his client, objected to produce a document, on the ground of professional confidence. The court, being of opinion that the document was not privileged as regarded the client himself, ordered its production. Cameron's Coalbrook Ry., In re, 25 Beav. 1.

The privilege of not disclosing communications between solicitor and client belongs to the client alone and his representatives, as against third parties, not inter se. Gresley v. Mousley, 2 Kav & J. 288; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 156.

All the communications between the plaintiff's ancestor and his solicitor, viz., the defendant's testator, being asked for :-Held, that if the executors, being served, would consent, an order should be made for production. Ib.

In an action for libel contained in a circular, the defendants justified, giving full particulars of the justification. The plaintiff administered interrogatories as to certain communications referred to by the defendants, which they objected to answer upon the ground that by so doing they would disclose facts and information obtained by them in confidence, and acting in their capacity as solicitors for a client :-Held, that the defendants were not bound to further answer the interrogatories, the privilege claimed not being their privilege, but that of their clients. Proctor v. Smiles, 55 L. J., Q. B. 527—C. A. It is the privilege of the client and not of the attorney. Wilson v. Rastall, 4 Term Rep. 754, 8; 2 R. R. 515.

Presumption from Claim of Privilege.]-There is no presumption of fact to be made against a party who enforces the rule against the disclosure, by his solicitor, of knowledge professionally acquired. Wentworth v. Lloyd, 10 H. L. Cas. 589; 33 L. J., Ch. 688; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 961; 10 L. T. 767.

The refusal of a client to allow his solicitor to disclose professional communications, is not to be treated in the same manner as if he had kept a material witness out of the way, Ib.

Legal Adviser, Who is-Pursuivant of Heralds' College.]-A pursuivant of the Heralds' College is not in the position of a legal adviser, and communications passing between him and the person employing him in reference to pedigrees in the Heralds' College are not privileged, and he is entitled to be examined in reference thereto. Stude v. Tucker, 49 L. J., Ch. 644; 14 Ch. D. 824; 48 L. T. 49; 28 W. R. 807.

___ Ex-Judge giving Opinion as a Friend.]

The opinion of an ex-lord-chancellor given by him as a friend, and confidentially, was ordered to be produced on the ground that it was not a professional communication. Smith v. Daniell, 44 L. J., Ch. 189; L. R. 18 Eq. 649; 30 L. T. 752; 22 W. R. 856.

Demorrer to bill for the discovery of a case which the defendant had stated to his own counsel for an opinion, overruled. Stanhope v. Roberts, 2 Atk. 214.

Defendant must discover as to his own admissions, though contained in case stated by him for the opinion of counsel. Clegg v. Legh, 4 Madd. 206.

A petitioner, claiming a portion of the bankrupt's property, has no right to call for the production of a case stated by the assignces for counsel's opinion, for the purpose of shewing that the bankrupt has prevarieated in his statement. Collier, Ew parte, 4 Deac. & C. 364.

The bill required the plaintiff to discover the contents of cases laid before counsel relative to certain claims therein mentioned, and the opinion of counsel thereon; but there was not any averment that such discovery would support the plaintiff's case :- Held, that a demurrer lay to the discovery. M. Cunn v. O' Conor, 1 Hog. 341.

An order for the production of cases, opinions, and some letters described in the answer as confidential communications which have passed between the defendants' solicitor and others, with reference to the subject-matters of the suit, was refused. Willson v. Leonard, 7 L. J., Ch. 242.

Cases stated for the opinion of counsel, whether of old date, or made with reference to or in contemplation of an existing suit or action, are not evidence against the party on whose behalf they are stated, or whose interest they affect ; therefore, if they tend to impeach that party's title, he is not compellable by suit in equity to produce them. Knight v. Waterford (Marquis), 2 Y. & Coll. 37.

Letters written, or cases stated for the opinion of counsel by a party or his solicitor, with a view to a suit then in contemplation, are privileged from production, not only in that suit, but in 77

Privilege as to cases and opinions anterior to any ligitation. Penruddock v. Hummond, 11 Beav. 59.

There is no essential difference between cases stated for the opinion of counsel and other communications, with respect to the privilege of professional confidence. Walsingham (Lord) v. Goodricke, 3 Hare, 122.

Instructions by a purchaser to his counsel for the preparation of the draft agreement to purchase though given long ante litem motam: -Held, to be privileged in a subsequent suit which sought to impeach and set aside the sale, on the ground that the vendor was a trustee who had no power to sell. So also were the draft agreement itself, as approved by counsel, and the opinion of counsel upon alterations in the draft. Walsingham (Lord) v. Goodriche, (3 Hare, 122) distinguished. Manser v. Dia., 1 Kay & J. 451; 24 L. J., Ch. 497; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 466; 3 Eq. R. 650; 3 W. R. 318.

A defendant claimed privilege for cases submitted to counsel, and their opinions thereon. The plaintiff filed an affidavit to show that the eases and opinions had been published, and were not privileged :- Held, that the evidence was same subject-matter as the present dispute, and after it had arisen, is privileged from production. Jenhyns v. Bushby, 35 L. J., Ch. 820; L. R. 2 Eq. 547; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 558; 15 L. T. 310.

The attorney of the plaintiffs in an action communicated to the plaintiffs in another action against the same defendant, and involving substantially the same question, a case and opinion taken on behalf of the plaintiffs in the former action, with permission to copy it. The defendant in the actions filed a bill of discovery against the plaintiffs, to whom the case and opinion had been lent:—Held, that they could not be compelled to produce the copy which they had made. Entheren v. Cobb, 2 De G. M. & G. 632; 17 Jur. 81.

A suit was instituted to administer to the estate of P., and counsel's opinion was taken, and certain letters passed in relation thereto. Another suit was instituted to stay proceedings in the first suit, and charging fraud. A summons was taken out for the production of the cases and opinions of counsel, and the letters which passed on that occasion. Production ordered. Phillips v. Holmer, 15 W. R. 578.

From copies of letters written before the litigation by a plaintiff to one of the defendants, it appeared that the former had taken opinions of counsel, and the friendly opinion of Lord Westbury, when an ex-chancellor, on points which afterwards became part of the subjectmatter of the litigation. The plaintiff, in answer to an application to produce these opinious and the eases on which they were founded, objected, on the ground that "they were written in anticipation of and in relation to the litigation." He did not say they were confidential communi-cations:—Held, that he was bound to produce both classes of documents, Smith v. Daniell, 44 L. J., Ch. 189; L. R. 18 Eq. 649; 30 L. T. 752; 22 W. R. 856.

Instructions to counsel for the purpose of obtaining legal advice, and his notes or opinion thereon, are privileged from inspection, whether written before or after litigation was commenced, or in contemplation. Mostyn v. West Mostyn

Coal and Iron Co., 34 L. T. 531.

Upon a summons by the defendant that the plaintiffs-a corporation-might be ordered to produce the documents comprised in their affidavit of documents :- Held, that the opinions of counsel with reference to these proceedings, whether taken before or after the commencement of the action, were privileged; and the fact that the defendant was a ratepayer, and the opinions might have been paid for out of the parish rates, gave the defendant no special claim to inspection. Bristol Corporation v. Cox, 53 L. J., Ch. 1144; 26 Ch. D. 678; 50 L. T. 719; 33 W. R. 255.

____ Action by Pauper.]—The defendant in an action where the plaintiff is suing as a pauper is not entitled to inspection of the ease laid before counsel and his opinion thereon upon which the permission to sue as a pauper was obtained. Stoane v. British Steamship Co., 66 L. J., Q. B. 72; [1897] 1 Q. B. 185; 75 L. T. 542; 45 W. R. 203—C. A.

A case for the opinion of counsel, stated in aside a purchase of the trust property, made reference to a separate litigation about the thirty years before by the trustee, the trustee same subject matter as the present dispute, and insisted on the knowledge of the transaction and long acquiescence therein by the cestui que trust. and in his answer to a cross-bill the cestui que trust admitted that he had an opinion of counsel on his right, which he had taken many years before. The court held the opinion to be a privileged communication, and refused to order its production. Woods v. Woods, 4 Hare, 83.

Case and opinion submitted and taken by trustees in contemplation of the litigation :-Held, privileged as against the cestuls que trustent. Brown v. Oakshott, 12 Beav. 252.

Surviving executor, who has not acted in the testator's affairs, protected from the discovery of cases and opinions stated and given on behalf of the deceased executor who had acted, such cases and opinions having relation to a claim against the deceased executor of the same nature as the claim made against the surviving executor. Adams v. Barry, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 167.

A trustee is not bound to produce to his cestuis que trustent cases laid before counsel with the view of resisting a claim by such cestuis que trustent, although the trustee is not personally interested. Thomas v. Secretary of State for India. 18 W. R. 312.

A trustee taking counsel's opinion to guide himself in the administration of his trust, and not for the purpose of his defence in a litigation against himself, is bound to produce them to his cestui que trust, but the relation of trustee and eestui que trust must for that purpose be first established. Wynne v. Humberston, 27 Beav.

A mere claimant to an estate is not entitled to the production of eases and opinions taken by a trustec. Ib.

Documents accompanying a case for the opinion of counsel are privileged. Ib.

A testatrix gave estates to trustees, upon trust to receive the rents for a period of fifteen years, and apply the same as in the will mentioned; and she directed that in case any person should within the above period establish his title to the estates as theheir-at-law of her nucle, to the satisfaction of her trustees, her trustees should deliver the possession of the estates to such person; but in case no such person should so establish his claim, she devised the estates to the plaintiff; and the testatrix, in order to assist the trustees in coming to a correct conclusion, authorised them to consult three barristers as to the validity of any claim that should be made; and the judgment of the rustees, sanctioned by the opinion of two of such barristers, was to be conclusive. After the expiration of the fifteen years the plaintiff filed a bill against the surviving trustee and A. and B., two persons who had put in their claims to the estates within the fifteen years, praying a declaration that he was entitled to the estates. notwithstanding the claims of the defendants :-Held, that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust did not subsist between A, and the trustee, so as to entitle A. to the production of the cases submitted by the trustee to the counsel for their opinions, with their opinions thereon, and the copies of documents and papers sent with such cases. S. C., 28 L. J., Ch. 281; 5 Jur. (N.S.)

Cases and opinions of counsel taken by trustees, As between Trustee and Cestui que as such merely, are not entitled to protection in Trust.]-In a suit by a cestui que trust, to set a suit by the cestuis que trustent against the trustees, or their representatives. Devaynes v. supra. Lambe v. Orton, 1 W. R. 207; 1 Drew. Robinson, 20 Beav. 42.

The same rule applies to cases and opinions taken before the time when the defendant (the representative of a trustce) admits having first representative of a crusce) aumits naving irst heard of the questions raised by the bill. Ib. Trustees took counsel's opinion as to whether they should exercise a discretionary power to advance part of their trust fund for the benefit of some of the cestuis que trustent; and others of the cestuis que trustent having filed a bill to restrain them from exercising such discretion, they took a second opinion as to their defence in the suit. Upon summonses for production by the plaintiffs :- Held, that the first case of opinion having reference to the dealings with the trust estate, all the cestuis que trastent had a right to inspection, and the court ordered them to be produced, but that the second case and opinion being after suit instituted, the plaintiffs had no right to production. Tulbut v. Marshfield, 2 Dr. & Sm. 549; 6 N. R. 288.

b. Briefs.

When Protected. ]-J. B., a lunatic, was tenant in tail in possession of an estate of which C. B., his committee, was tenant in tail in remainder. An action having been brought after the death of J. B. without issue and without barring the entail, against C. B. to enforce an agreement made in lunacy in respect of the estate, into which it was asserted that C. B. had entered in her private capacity as well as in that of committee, a summous for production of documents was issued against her, asking that she might be ordered to produce, among other documents, counsel's briefs upon the proceedings in lunacy :-Held, that these documents were not privileged, and must be produced. Brown, In re, Tyas v. Brown, 42 L. T. 501; 28 W. R. 575.

On summons to produce documents used by defendant in a former litigation in which the same matters were in question :- Held, 1st, that drafts of answers, affidavits, &c., filed were pro-tected :-Held, 2nd, that connsel's briefs, except instructions and observations for counsel, and remarks by counsel, were not protected, but would not be ordered to be produced so far as they contained copies of documents otherwise produced. Advertisement ] - A successful plaintiff in a chancery action, brought to restrain the infringement of his trade-mark, drafted an advertisement of the proceedings in and result of the action for publication in a trade journal; before publication the draft was submitted to counsel, and the advertisement as settled by him was published. One of the defendants in the chancery action, alleging the advertisement to be libellous, brought an action for libel in respect of its publication, and sought to obtain inspection of the draft advertisement :-Held, that the document was privileged from production within the rule as to professional privilege adopted in Minet v. Morgan (L. R. 8 Ch. 361). Wheeler v. Le Marchant (17 Ch. D. 675) commented on, Lowden v. Blakey, 58 L. J., Q. B. 617; 23 Q. B. D. 332; 61 L. T. 251; 38 W. R. 64; 54 J. P. 54.

3. COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN SOLICITOR AND CLIENT.

a. Direct.

With reference to Litigation. |- The court will not order a defendant to produce letters which passed between him and his solicitor, in the relation of solicitor and client, in the progress of the cause, or with reference to it previously to its being instituted, or which contain legal advice. Garland v. Scott, 3 Sim. 396.

A defendant will not be ordered to produce papers containing confidential communications between him and his solicitor, in the relation of solicitor and client, during the progress of the snit, or with reference to it, previous to its com-mencement. Hughes v. Biddulph, 4 Russ. 190; 28 R. R. 46.

Where it is sworn that documents are confidential communications, relating to the partienlar suit, or to another suit which, though not actually in the matter of the same litigation, involves or embraces the same issue, they are privileged, although they do not directly relate to the particular suit. Thompson v. Falk, 1 Drew, 21.

A bill of discovery was filed in aid of a defence to an action at law which, at the hearing of the cause, the plaintiff had liberty to bring :- Held, that the defendant, a solicitor, and afterwards also a trustee, was not bound to produce letters or documents relating to the trial, written preparatory to the action at law or the suit. Semble, Few v. Guppy, 13 Beav. 457. Sec Foakes v. Webb, ante, col. 825.

After Dispute.]-Letters written before suit, but after the dispute arose:—Held, to be privileged. Bushnell v. Bushnell, 2 Jur. 774.

To entitle confidential communications to protection, it is not necessary that they should have been made in contemplation of the suit; it is sufficient if they relate to and were made in the course of the dispute which is the subject of the suit. Clagett v. Phillips, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 82; 7 Jur. 31.

A plaintiff is not entitled to the production of possession, but which the defendant states was written by him to his solicitor, and directed the solicitor to take the opinion of counsel upon the question in dispute between the parties. Vent v.

Pacey, 4 Russ. 193.

Where communications and statements are made by a client to his confidential adviser touching the matter in dispute, before any suit has been instituted, they are not entitled to protection except there are some extraordinary circumstances. Bluck v. Galsworthy, 2 Giff. 453; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 91; 3 L. T. 399.

But the court will not order the production of documents which contain advice given to a client confidentially upon those statements. Ib.

The court will not order the production of confidential communications between solicitor and client which took place either in the progress of the suit, or with reference to the suit at its commencement. Confidential communications between attorney or counsel and client anterior to the suit, and without reference thereto, are not privileged. In a suit for specific performance, cases submitted to counsel subsequently to the contract relating to the sale, the objections taken by the purchaser to the vendors' title, the steps taken by the vendors to clear up the objections, &c.:-Held, to be communications made with reference to the dispute, which resulted in the litigation. Flight v. Robinson, 8 Beav. 22; 13 L. J., Ch. 425; 8 Jur. 888.

Communications between solicitor and client as to a contract which may lead to litigation are privileged. Wilson v. Northampton and Banbury Ry., L. R. 14 Eq. 477; 27 L. T. 507; 20 W. R.

Before Prospect of Litigation.] - Upon a motion that the defendant might produce documents in the schedule to his answer :- Held, that written communications, which passed between the defendant and his solicitor before any dispute between the parties to the suit, were privileged so far as they contained legal advice or opinions, but not otherwise, although relating to matters which formed the subject of the suit. Walsingham (Lord) v. Goodricke, 3 Hare, 122.

Letters relating to the subject-matter of a suit, written by the defendant's solicitor to the defendant's agent, are not protected from production, nuless they were written with reference to the dispute between the parties to the suit, and with a view to the defence of the suit. Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Moon, 30 L. T. 585

A plaintiff will not be compelled to produce confidential correspondence between himself or his predecessors in title and their respective solicitors with respect to questions connected with matters in dispute in the suit, although made before any litigation was in contemplation. Minet v. Morgan, 42 L. J., Ch. 627; L. R. 8 Ch. 361; 28 L. T. 573; 21 W. R. 467.

A claimant, who deposed that "obstacles having arisen in granting a second lease, one only was granted," was asked on cross-examination. was asked on cross-examination, whether the obstacles were suggested by him to his solicitor, or by his solicitor to him :-Held, not bound to answer, though the communication was before any litigation was in contemplation. Turton v. Barber, 43 L. J., Ch. 468; L. R. 17 Eq. 329; 22 W. R. 438.

And see Hampson v. Hampson, post, col. 938.

Non-Contentious Business. ]-Where A. had employed B., an attorney, with reference to the preparation of certain deeds of settlement, and also of an agreement in writing, of prior date to the deeds, and afterwards a bill was filed by A. and others against B, and C. (C. being interested in supporting the deeds), to have the deeds rectified, and made consistent with the agreement in writing :- Held, that communications which had passed between A. and B., her attorney, at the time of the preparation of the deeds and agreement in writing, and having relation thereto, were not admissible in evidence against A. objecting thereto. Harring v. Cloberry, 1 Ph. 91; 11 L. J., Ch. 149; 6 Jur. 202.

Generally, it seems that a solicitor cannot be compelled, at the instance of a third party, to disclose matters which have come to his knowledge in the conduct of a professional business for a client, even though such business had no reference to legal proceedings, either existing or in contemplation. Greenough v. Gashell, 1 Myl. & K. 98; Coop. t. Brough. 96.

In a suit for specific performance, cases submitted to counsel by the vendors and correspondence with their solicitors, previously to the sale, not protected as having no reference to the dispute which resulted in the litigation. Flight v. Robinson, 8 Benv. 22; 13 L. J., Ch. 425; 8 Jur. 888.

All communications between a client and his legal adviser for the purpose of quieting the client's doubts as to his title or otherwise. whether before a suit or after, and whether in contemplation thereof or not, will be protected from discovery by the client in the same manner as they would be protected in the case of the legal adviser. Pearse v. Pearse (1 De G. & Sm.) (8 Beav. 22). Manser v. Dir, 1 Kay & J. 451; 3 Eq. Rep. 650; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 466; 3 W. R. 313.

The privilege of communications between solicitor and client extends to all matters within the scope of the ordinary duties of a solicitor, and the sale of estates being one of such matters, it was held that a solicitor was not at liberty to disclose what had passed in conversations which he had had, either with the client or the agent of the client, relative to the amount of the bidding to be reserved upon the sale of an estate in which he had been concerned for him, or to other matters connected with such sale. But, semble, if the agent had been examined he would have been bound to answer. Carpuael v. Powis, 1 Ph. 687; 9 Beav. 16; 15 L. J., Ch. 275. Upon settling interrogatories for the examination of a vendor in the Master's office, on a question of title between vendor and purchaser :-Held, that the vendor was not compellable, at the instance of the purchaser, to state his motive for making a certain appointment, or to disclose confidential communications made by him to his solicitor and counsel respecting the property, although such communications were made merely on behalf of the consulting person singly, and were not made during a suit, during a dispute, or after the threat of a suit. Pears v. Pearse, 1 De G. & Sm. 12; 16 L. J., Ch. 153; 11 Jur.

Correspondence between a client and his solicitor acting in his professional capacity is protected from production, even though it does not relate to the matters in question in the suit. Boyd v. Petrie, 20 L. T. 934; 17 W. R. 903.

A bill was filed by one of two residuary legatees, to set aside the purchase by the executors of certain shares of a ship, which were part of the testator's assets. The defence was that the purchase by the executors was made at the special desire of the residuary legatees, who sent their solicitor to the executors to overcome their objections to make the purchase. The defendants examined the solicitor to prove these facts. An objection being made to his depositions, they fessional confidence. Lodge v. Prichard, 4 De G. & Sm. 587; 15 Jur. 1147.

Letters written to the defendants by their solicitors, in that character merely, are privileged. Goodall v. Little, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 155; 20 L. J., Ch. 132: 15 Jur. 309.

Letters written by a client to his attorney are privileged communications, and although they may contain matter necessary for the proof of the plaintiff's case, the court will not enforce their production. Harrey v. Kirwan, 7 L. J., Ex, Eq. 50.

Right of Solicitor to refuse Disclosure.]-Serivence not bound to disclose evidence obtained in professional confidence. Harrey v. Clayton, 2 Swanst. 221; 19 R. R. 66.

A solicitor may, by answer to a bill against A solution may, by answer to a bitt against him and his clients, refuse to discover any deeds or facts confidentially communicated to him. Stratford v. Hogan, 2 Ball & B. 164.

The plaintiff having been interrogated as to his knowledge, information, and belief upon matters relevant to the defendant's case, answered that he had no personal knowledge of any of the matters inquired into; that such information as he had received in respect of those matters had been derived from information procured by his solicitors or their agents in and for the purpose were suppressed, as being in violation of pro- of his own case: Held, that the answer was sufficient. Ib.

> As to Residence of Wards concealed from Court. ]-A solicitor is bound to give to the court any information which may lead to the discovery of the residence of a ward of the court whose residence is being concealed from the court. although such information may have been comauthors as the information may have been communicated to him by his client in the course of his professional employment. Rumsbotham v. Senior, L. R. 8 Eq. 575; 17 W. R. 1057.

Direction to Sheriff. ]-A direction given by a client to his attorney, or his clerk, to send a particular person, not a sheriff's officer, with the sheriff to point out the person to be arrested under a capias ad satisfaciendum, is not a privileged communication. Caldbeck v. Boon, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 32.

Not Privileged as against Solicitor's Partner.] Semble, in a suit for taking a partnership account between solicitors, the plaintiff is entitled to the discovery and production, in the usual way, of papers material to the account, though such papers relate to professional business transacted for their clients. Perkins, 2 Hare, 540; 8 Jur. 186.

As against Party having a Right of Property in the Communications. ]-A plaintiff in a shareholder's action against a company is entitled to discovery of professional communications between the company and its legal advisers relating to the subject-matter of the action, when such communications are paid for out of the funds of the company. Gourand v. Edison Gower Bell Tele-phone Co., 57 L. J., Ch. 498; 59 L. T. 813.

Scotch Solicitor. ]-The same privilege with respect to the non-production of confidential communications as between an English solicitor and his client, is extended to like communications as between a Scotch solicitor and law agent practising in London, though not admitted an English solicitor, and his client in Scotland. Lawrence v. Campbell, 4 Drew. 485; 28 L. J., Ch. 780; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1071; 7 W. R. 336.

Must be Confidential as well as Professional.]

b. Through Agents.

Confidential letters which after the matters in a suit arose, and with reference thereto, were sent by a plaintiff resident abroad to his agents in England to be communicated to his solicitor: —Held to be privileged. Hooper v. Gumm, 2 John. & H. 602; 6 L. T. 891; 10 W. R. 644.

In order to establish privilege as to letters sent by the agent to the plaintiff:—Semble, that they must appear to have been sent in consequence of communications from the solicitor. Ib.

The same practice applies as to the production of books, whether abroad or in England. Ib.

Documents passing between the defendants or their agents and their solicitor ante litem motam are protected from production. Macfarlane v. Rolt, 41 L. J., Ch. 649; L. R. 14 Eq. 580; 27 L. T., 305; 20 W. R. 945.

Instructions submitted to solicitors or counsel for the purpose of obtaining legal advice, and their notes or opinions thereon; correspondence between a party to an action, or his predecessor in title, or persons acting on their behalf, and their legal advisers, are privileged from inspec-tion, whether written before or after litigation was commenced or in contemplation. Mostyn v. West Mostyn Coal and Iron Co., 34 L. T. 531.

4. DOCUMENTS OR INFORMATION PREPARED OR OBTAINED BY SOLICITOR.

a. Documents Prepared by Solicitor.

Circumstances under which documents which had been prepared with a view to an action were deemed to be of a confidential nature, and so not liable to production at the requisition of the other party, and this confidentiality held to protect not only the writer to the signet who had conducted the legal proceedings, but also a mining engineer employed in the business. Bar-gaddie Coal Co. v. Wark, 3 Macq. H. L. 467.

These documents clearly may be privileged as having been written with a view to the information of the defendant under instructions of counsel previously to raising an action, just in the same way as a brief prepared for a trial or a case for counsel's opinion would be privileged. Ib.

Copies - Deposition before Receiver of Wrecks.] -In a collision action, the plaintiffs' solicitors. for the purpose of the action, obtained from the Board of Trade copies of depositions made before the receiver of wrecks by the master and crew of the plaintiffs' ship as to the circumstances of the collision:—Held, that the copies, having been obtained by the solicitors for the purposes of the action, were privileged, and that the court depositions were made. The Palermo, 53 L. J., P. 6; 9 P. D. 6; 49 L. T. 551; 32 W. R. 403; 5 Asp. M. C. 165-C. A.

- Public Records.]-Although primâ facie privilege cannot be claimed for copies of or ex-tracts from public records or documents which are publici juris, a collection of such copies or extracts will be privileged when it has been made or obtained by the professional advisers of a party for his defence to the action, and is the result of the professional knowledge, research and skill of those advisers. Lyell v. Kennedy, 51 L. J., Ch. 937; 27 Ch. D. 1; 50 L. T. 730—

K.'s solicitor had, for the purpose of K.'s defence in the action, procured copies of and extracts from certain entries in public registers, and also photographs of certain tombstones and honses to be taken, for which K. in his affidavit of documents claimed protection:—Held, that although mere copies of unprivileged documents were themselves unprivileged, the whole collection, being the result of the professional know-ledge, skill, and research of his solicitors, must be privileged—any disclosure of the copies and photographs might afford a clue to the view entertained by the solicitors of their client's case, Ib.

- Of Letters. ]-A correspondence had taken place between the defendant in an action and persons other than the plaintiff which was material to the questions at issue in the action. The defendant had not preserved the letters received by him or copies of the letters written by him in the course of such correspondence, but after action brought his solicitor, for the purposes of the defence to the action, procured through such third persons copies of the letters so written and received :—Held, that such copies were not privileged against inspection by the plaintiff. Chadwick v. Bowman, 16 Q. B. D. 561; 54 L. T. 16.

Shorthand Notes. - See infra, cols. 935, 936.

Notes of Solicitor on.]—The notes of a solicitor on a copy of the shorthand notes of a trial in the Probate Court will be protected from production. Nicholl v. Janes, 2 H. & M. 588; 5 N. R. 361; 13 W. R. 451.

Bill of Costs.]—The clerk of a solicitor, who was the solicitor of the mortgagor and the mortgagee in the creation of the security, and who copied the bill of costs of the solicitor in the transaction of making an appointment of the estate comprised in the security, and of pre-paring the mortgage deed, which was founded on the title created by the appointment, may be received as a witness to depose to the handwriting on the document (which proof alone does not make it evidence), but he cannot be received to depose further as to the contents of the bill of costs, or the subject to which it relates, for an attorney's bill of costs is his history of the transaction, and the attorney could not be himself permitted to give evidence of the transaction against his client, or against those claiming under his client. Chant v. Brown. 9 Hare, 790; 16 Jur. 606.

b. Information through Agents.

Where the circumstances of the case render it necessary for a party or his solicitor to employ an agent to collect evidence in support of legal proceedings, the communications of such agent to his principal relating to such evidence are privileged. Steele v. Stewart, 1 Ph. 471; 14 L. J., Ch. 34; 9 Jur. 121. Affirming 13 Sim. 583.

The reports of an accountant employed by a defendant's solicitor to investigate books are privileged from production. Walsham v. Stainton, 2 Hem. & M. 1; 3 N. R. 241; 9 L. T. 603;

12 W. R. 119.

So also are drafts of pleadings and observa-tions made upon briefs, though the briefs themselves are not privileged when they consist of matter publici juris. Ib.

Where production was sought of so much as consisted of copies of, or extracts from, or references to documents or records in a public registry of a report made by a third person at the instance of the defendant's solicitor, for the purpose of his advising the defendant, and which report itself, it was admitted, was protected, the court refused to order production, on the ground that the extracts or copies were so mixed up with the protected parts of the report, that it would be difficult, and almost impracticable, to exhibit the one portion without disclosing the other portion. Churton v. Frewen, 2 Dr. & Sm. 394; 12 L. T. 105; 13 W. R. 490.

c. Communications between Solicitor and Third Party.

In Anticipation of Litigation. ]-Correspondence between the solicitor of one of the parties to an action and a third person for the purpose of ascertaining facts, with a view to the action which was afterwards brought and was then anticipated, and for the purpose of guiding the party as to the mode of carrying it on, is privileged from inspection. M'Corquodale v. Bell, 45 L. J., C. P. 329; 1 C. P. D. 471; 35 L. T. 261; L. J., C. P. 3: 24 W. R. 899.

Before Dispute. |- In an action for specific performance of a building contract to take on lease building land from the defendants, the defendants sought to protect from production letters which had passed between their solicitors and their surveyors:—Held, by Bacon, V.-C., that the letters were privileged. But held, on appeal, that the defendants must produce the letters, except such of them (if any) as the defendants should state by affidavit to have been prepared confidentially after dispute had arisen between the plaintiff and the defendants, and for the purpose of obtaining information, evidence, or legal advice with reference to litigation existing or contemplated between the parties to the action. Wheeler v. Le Murchant, 50 L. J., Ch. 793; 17 Ch. D. 675; 44 L. T. 632; 45 J. P. 728-C. A.

d. Communications at Instance of Soligitor

Letters and communications written at the instance, either directly or indirectly, of the solicitor to either party to an action, and for his use, for the purposes of the legal proceedings in such action, are privileged from inspection by the opposite party. Priend v. L. C. & D. Ry., 46 L. J., Ex. 696; 2 Ex. D. 437; 36 L. T. 729; 25 W. R. 735—C. A.

Answers to inquiries addressed by defendants to their agent in the Falkland Islands, by direction of their solicitor, for the purpose of pro-euring evidence in support of defendants' case, are within the rule as to protection. Lafone v. Fulkland Islands Co., 4 Kay & J. 34; 27 L. J.,

Ch. 25; 6 W. R. 4.

The true test in such cases is, not whether the person, who is at a distance and transmits the information, is the agent of the solicitor, and sent out by him, but whether, in transmitting that information, he was discharging a duty which properly devolved on the solicitor, and which would have been performed by the solicitor had the circumstances of the case admitted of his performing it in person. Ib.

Protection will not be withheld from communications made in apprehension of litigation. on the ground that the precise form which the litigation afterwards assumed was not foreseen. An affidavit in support of a claim to seal up certain passages in a book, not being sufficiently explicit, the court inspected the disputed passages in order to determine their right to-protection. 1b.

5. DOCUMENTS OR INFORMATION PREPARED OR OBTAINED BY CLIENT.

a. Reports.

By Officials of Railway and other Com-

dent, and guard of the train in the ordinary course of their duty, but refused such order as to reports from scientific men consulted by the company as to the cause of the accident. Woolley v. North Landon Hy. 38 L. J. C. P. 317; L. R. 4 C. P. 602; 20 L. T. 813; 17 W. R. 650, 797.

The court allowed inspection by the plaintiff of a copy of a report made by the company's general manager to the Board of Trade as to the accident, pursuant to 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 3; also of a guarantee given some years before the accident of materials for locomotives, part of which at the time of the accident formed a portion of the engine in question; also of such entries in the minute-books of the directors of the company and their professional advisers or the result thereof. Ib.

Documents which are written in answer to inquiries made by a railway official to the head office of the company after threat of litigation, and which, in the discretion of the judge, appear to fall short of notes of the case to be laid before the legal advisers of the company, and were not in the nature of proofs for the trial, are not privileged from inspection, notwithstanding that the documents were not made in the ordinary course of the duty of the person writing them, but in answer to special inquiries. Fenner v. L. & S. E. Ry., 41 L. J., Q. B. 313; L. R. 7 Q. B. 767; 26 L. T. 971; 20 W. R. 830.

In an action against a railway company for liberty to inspect reports as to the accident made by servants and officers of the company to their employers shortly after it took place; although the company alleged that the documents contained statements made by various persons for the purpose of giving the company such information as would enable them to judge whether or not they could be made responsible to the plaintiff or any other persons by reason of the matters stated therein, and were made in consequence of a custom requiring such state-ments to be made in cases of any accident cansing or being likely to cause personal injury to any passenger, and that the same constituted the instructions to the company's advisers, as to defending the action, and could not be produced without disclosing the grounds of their defence..

Parr v. L. C. & D. Ry., 24 L. T. 558. In an action against a railway company for work done and materials supplied at their request, the defendant company objected to produce for the plaintiff's inspection-(a) their engineer's report to the board of directors with reference to the subject of claim; (b) correspondence between the defendant's servants and agents with reference to the defence of the action; (c) extracts of minutes of private proceedings of the board at meetings with reference to the litigation, then contemplated though not actually commenced-claiming that all these documents were privileged. It was not alleged in the affidavit of discovery that the engineer's report related solely to the defendant's case, or that it was prepared for the purpose of being laid before their legal advisers:—Held, that the reports as to the accident made respectively by between them and their solicitors, but were the company's inspector, locomotive superintendent, and guard of the train in the ordinary minutes. Worthington v. Dublin, Wicklow and Wexford Ry., 22 L. R., Ir. 310.

In an action for damage caused by the negligence of the defendants or their servants in the use of an engine, whereby sparks and red-hot cinders escaped from the engine and set fire to the plaintiff's building, the plaintiffs administered the following interrogatory: "Have the defendants or any of their servants or agents any knowledge, information, or belief as to the eause of the fire in respect to the happening whereof this action is brought? If yea, set out the same fully, with dates and full particulars. If any of the said servants or agents have communicated to the defendants such knowledge, information, or belief, let the defendants set out the company relating to the accident which were not entries of communications between dates and particulars." To this the defendants answered: "We have no information at all on the subject, save such as appears in the reports set out in the schedule to our affidavits, filed in this cause on the 28th May, 1884, and which by the judgment of the Divisional Court of the 7th July last were held to be privileged from production, which we decline to produce":—Held, that the answer was sufficient, as a further or better answer could not be given without disclosing the contents of privileged reports made to the defendants by their servants, which reports the defendants were not bound to disclose. London, Tilbury and Southend Ry. v. Kirk, 51 L. T. 599,

A document is not protected from inspection on the ground that it was made for the purpose, injuries to a passenger from an accident, the in the event of litigation, of being laid before court made an order for the plaintiff to have the defendants' solicitor to be used by him for the defendants' solicitor to be used by him for the purposes of the defence to any action, if any action should be brought. Cook v. North Metro-politan Tramway Co., 54 J. P. 263.

A report made by the conductor of an omnibus when litigation was reasonably apprehended for the purpose of enabling the solicitor of the omnibus company to conduct the defence of any action which might be brought is privileged from inspection, though no action has been commenced or even threatened. Collins v. London General Omnibus Co., 63 L. J., Q. B. 428; 5 R. 355; 68 L. T. 831; 57 J. P. 678.

By Medical Men-To Railway Company. Action by executors for the benefit of the widow and children of B., whose death was occasioned by the negligence of a railway company. Plea, that the company paid to B. in his lifetime 75%. in satisfaction and discharge of all claims. Upon an order for discovery of documents relating to the matter in dispute obtained by the plaintiffs : -Held, that reports of a clerk in the office of the secretary of the company sent by them to the deceased to communicate with him respecting the accident, and of the medical officer of the company employed by them to visit the deceased, respecting his examination of the deceased, connected with the accident, were not privileged communications. Baker v. L. & S. IV. Ry., 8 B. & S. 645; 37 L. J., Q. B. 53; L. R. 3 Q. B. 91; 16 W. R. 126.

A bill was filed against a banking company to compel them to replace a sum of money alleged to have been improperly transferred by them from one account to another at their branch bank in Oregon. Before the bill was filed, but after litigation had become highly probable, the manager in London telegraphed to the manager in Oregon to send full particulars of the whole transaction. On an application by the plaintiff in the suit for production of documents, the bank resisted production of the letter sent in answer, as being privileged :-Held, that the letter was not privileged, and must be produced. Ib.

The cases where it has been held that communications with persons other than legal advisers are privileged, may rest on the principle that a party is not bound to disclose his counsel's brief, or the materials obtained for the brief. Ib.

It may be that a party is not bound to disclose notes of evidence obtained from proposed witnesses. Ib.

In an action to restrain the defendant company from making or using any brake apparatus similar to the "continuous brake apparatus" of which the plaintiff was the inventor and patentee, the defendant company sought to with-hold from production certain letters which had passed between the officers of the company and between them and other persons. This correspondence, it was alleged, had arisen in consequence of a claim made by the plaintiff regarding his patents, in a letter addressed to the secretary of the company, which was taken by them to be an intimation that the plaintiff intended to proeccd against them for infringement of his various patents. The letter was handed to the company's solicitors, with instructions to advise the company as to the merits of the plaintiff's elains, and thereafter the matter had been conducted with the view of getting materials for a contest if necessary, Bacon, V.-C., was of opinion that the plaintiff's letter did not contain any threat of litigation, and held that the correspondence which the plaintiff desired to inspect could not he treated as privileged from discovery, and must be produced:—Held, on appeal, that assuming the plaintiff's letter to amount to a threat of litigation, the affidavit setting out the above reasons for not producing the documents did not disclose a sufficient ground of privilege, Westinghouse v. Midland Ry., 48 L. T. 462-

The plaintiffs sued the defendants for money paid to the defendants' use, as their agents, for the sale of goods in Australia. The plaintiffs' manager and sole representative in England, in an affidavit made pursuant to Ord. XXXI, r. 12, stated, "The plaintiffs have in their possession or power the documents relating to the matters in question in this action, set forth in the first and second schedules hereto." Certain documents were set forth in the second schedule as follows: "Letters and other communications from the plaintiffs' house in Melbourne to the London house, and press copy letters and other communications vice versa, and I say that such plaintiffs, and not to the case of the defendants, sional confidence to his solicitor," approved. The plaintiff, a merchant in Germany, on the ground that he did not understand English, wrote in German certain letters both before and after the issuing of the writ, to his agent in London in reference to the action "for the purpose of obtaining advice, information, or evidence with reference to and for the purpose of such litigation, in order that the contents thereof might be communicated by the agent in English to his solicitor, who did not understand German":-Held, that such letters were not privileged, and that the defendant was entitled to inspection. Vetter v.

Schreiber, 53 J. P. 39.

A trading company, having become embarrassed, appointed three of its members, A., B. and C., to act as a committee for the shareholders in winding up its affairs, and they were empowered to send out agents to India for that purpose; and they were empowered by the directors to manage and arrange the affairs of the company. They appointed D. and E. agents to go to India. The plaintiffs brought several actions on certain debentures against A., B. and C., as shareholders. A., B. and C. filed a bill for an injunction, and to have the debentures delivered up. The present plaintiffs then filed a bill against A., B. and C. for discovery. A., B. and C., in their answers, admitted the possession of certain documents, consisting of communica-tions which passed between them and the directors, the secretary of the company, and the agents in India, and which were alleged to be confidential communications after the matters in question in this suit had arisen, and in contemplation of or pending proceedings in respect of various matters, and in particular of the claims of the plaintiffs, and for the purpose of communicating to the persons to whom they were addressed the proceedings adopted in respect of such claims, and the opinions of the legal advisers consulted by the defendants, or for the purpose of being submitted to such legal advisers and the shareholders; and they claimed protection from production :- Held, that the documents were not privileged, with the exception of such parts thereof as contained the opinions of the legal advisers, it being no ground of privilege that they relate to the matters in dispute, and arose ont of communications between the parties themselves with a view to their defence in the Glyn v. Caulfield, 3 Mac. & G. 468; 15 suit. Jur. 807.

Professional privilege, as a ground of exemption from production of documents, is adopted simply from necessity, and ought to extend no further than absolutely necessary to enable the client to obtain professional advice with safety.

Declaration alleging breaches of an agreement made between a banking company carrying on business, amongst other places, at Bombay, and the defendant, who had been their agent there. Upon an order for discovery of documents relating to the matter in dispute obtained by the defendant, the secretary of the bank made an affidavit that the letters specified in a schedule attached to the affidavit consisted of communications between the head office of the bank in London and their officers at Bombay, not forming part of the res gestae, but written after the defendant had left the service of the bank and the dispute in question in the cause had arisen, being on the one part instructions given and inquiries made with the view of obtaining the information required to enable the bank to decide as to the mode of proceeding against the defendant, several of them having been written under the immediate direction and advice of the attorney for the bank; and on the other part, their officers' reports and replies specifying the evidence which could be addreed in Bombay to prove the breaches of contract complained of, and that the same could not be material to the defendant with a view of establishing his case. The defendant made an affidavit of his belief that the correspondence in the schedule was material to the defence of the action :—Held, that all this correspondence was confidential communication, which the defendant was not Australia and China v. Rich, 4 B. & S. 73; 32 L. J., Q. B. 300; 8 L. T. 454; 11 W. R. 830.

c. Correspondence with co-Defendant.

Letters by a co-defendant to his co-defendant in England, though for communication to the latter's solicitor with a view to his defence, are not privileged. Goodall v. Little, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 155; 20 L. J., Ch. 132; 15 Jur. 309.

Though a defendant in a suit is not compellable to produce letters and copies of letters, between himself and his solicitor, subsequently to the institution of the suit and in relation thereto, yet where there are more defendants than one, they, are bound to produce letters and copies of letters which have passed between them with respect to their defence of the suit. Whithread v. Gurney, Younge, 541.

Communications made by one defendant to another in reference to enabling them to defend the suit are not privileged. Betts v. Menzies, 26 L. J., Ch. 528; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 885; 5 W. R. 767. Quære, whether such communications would be ordered to be produced if they were dupli-cates of what had been sent to the defendant's solicitor. Ib. A letter written between co-defendants respecting a matter in litigation, with direction to forward it to their joint solicitor, is privileged. Jenkyns v. Bushby, 35 L. J., Ch. 820; L. R. 2

Eq. 547; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 558; 12 L. T. 310. The correspondence between co-defendants after the institution of a suit is not, as a general rule, privileged from production; but where one defendant, being a solicitor, has acted as agent for the solicitor on the record, to collect evidence in the suit, the letters passing between him and the rule of professional confidence, the defendant

Eq. 112.

In a suit in which the bill charged fraud against all the defendants, two of them were ordered to produce all letters written to them, in reference to the subject of the suit and before the dispute arose, by a co-defendant who had been their solicitor in the original transaction, save only such letters as they should shew by affidavit to contain legal advice or opinions. Sunkey v. Alexander, Ir. R. S Eq. 241.

d. Documents Prepared as Evidence.

The usual order having been made in chambers to answer and produce documents, one of the defendants objected to produce documents, on the ground that they had been obtained by him for the defence of himself and the other defendant since the institution of the suit, and did not relate to or evidence the title of the plaintiff or his predecessors :- Held, that the word "title" might refer to the property, the subject of the suit, the relief asked, or the designation of the plaintiff's character, and that the defendant was bound to produce the documents. Felkin v. Herbert (Lord), 30 L. J., Ch. 798; 9 W. E. 756. A person who effected an assurance upon another's life commenced an action against the trustees of the insurance company, for the recovery of the amount insured. The trustees filed a bill of discovery against him in aid of their defence to the action, charging that the declaration upon the basis of which the assurance had been effected was untrue, and that the defendant entitled to inspect. Chartered Bunk of India, had in his possession various documents, by which the truth of the matters alleged in the bill would appear, and requiring him to produce them. The defendant, by his answer, stated he had in his possession the documents which he enumerated in the first schedule to his answer, but that, from a certain period after the death of the person whose life was insured, he considered it possible that the insurance company had in contemplation to dispute their liability; and therefore from that period he contemplated the necessity of bringing the action; and he added, that the documents mentioned in the first schedule contained information furnished to him, as to evidence which could be procured or given on his behalf against the company; and that producing the same might disclose the names of witnesses intended to be examined, and evidence intended to be given, on his behalf, in the action, and in the present suit; and he submitted that he ought not to be compelled to produce any of the documents mentioned in that schedule. He admitted the possession of certain other documents, mentioned in the second schedule, and then added, that excepting the particulars mentioned in the two schedules, he had not in his possession any documents relating to the matters mentioned in the bill, whereby the truth thereof would appear :- Held, first, that the admissions in the answer, coupled with the description of some of the documents given in the first schedule, were sufficient admissions that the documents were such as under the ordinary rule the plaintiffs were entitled to inspect:-Held. secondly, that the statement of the possible effect of the discovery was not a sufficient ground for withholding it :—Held, thirdly, that with respect to such of the documents as did not fall within from producing them by the circumstance of their having come into existence after litigation was contemplated, masmuch as, in the opinion of the court, that ground of defence was not sufficiently raised by the answer. Whether, as to such documents, that ground of defence, if properly taken, could have been made available, quære. Storey v. Lennox (Lord), 1 Myl. & C. 525: 6 L. J., Ch. 99.

Where the plaintiff and defendant, a feme covert, and others, were tenants in common, and the bill was filed to establish a partition which had been made by agreement, or to effect one by the usual commission, the defendant having admitted the possession of deeds, &c., but alleged that they related merely to the title, &c., of the subject in dispute, and had been prepared with a view to the defence in the suit, but did not connect therewith her professional advisers :-Held. not privileged; held, also, that the plaintiff had an interest in deeds showing the mode in which the defendant had dealt with her share, the plaintiff having an interest in knowing who were the tenants in common with him. Maden v. Veevers, 7 Beav, 489. And see 5 Beav, 503; 12 L. J., Ch. 38,

Before the institution of a suit against assignces of a bankrupt for the purpose of establishing a security given by him, prior to his bankruptcy, to the plaintiff, the plaintiff had been examined before the commissioner in bankruptey respect-ing the subject-matter of the suit. Upon a ing the subject-matter of the suit. Upon a motion by the plaintiff for the production by the assignees of the office copies of the examination of the plaintiff before the commissioner, Romilly, M.R., ordered such production. Upon appeal, the court discharged the order, being of opinion that the documents ought not to be produced until the hearing of the cause. Gandee v. Stansfeld, 28 L. J., Ch. 436; 5 Jnr. (N.S.) 778; 7 W. R. 297.

e. Shorthand Notes.

Notes made by a shorthand writer employed by one of the parties were ordered to be produced so far as they merely described what took place in open court, but with liberty to seal up all notes or observations thereon, and all such parts thereof, if any, as did not relate to the proceedings in court. Nicholl v. Jones, 2 Hem. & M. 588; 5 N. R. 361; 13 W. R. 451.

The court will not order a defendant to produce the transcript of the shorthand writer's notes of proceedings had at a trial at law. Rap-son v. Cubitt, 7 Jur. 77.

J. B., a lunatic, was tenant in tail in possession of an estate, of which C. B., his committee, was tenant in tail in remainder. An action having been brought after the death of J. B. without issue, and without barring the entail, against C. B. to enforce an agreement made in lunacy in respect of the estate, into which it was asserted that C. B. had entered in her private capacity, as well as in that of committee, a summons was issued against her for production of, inter alia, the shorthand writer's notes of the proceedings in lunacy:-Held, that the notes were not privileged, and must be produced. Brown, In re, Tyas v. Brown, 42 L. T. 501; 28 W. R. 575.

was not entitled to contend that he was protected executed a certain agreement, the defendant. while the action was pending, commenced an action against other persons whom he charged with a conspiracy to defraud him, and to utter the agreement as binding upon him, knowing it to be a forgery. After the commencement of the second action the defendant caused shorthand notes of the evidence, speeches and summing up at the trial of the first action, as he deposed for the purpose ["amongst others"] of his case in the second action :- Held, upon the above facts, that the shorthand notes were privileged from inspection in the second action, and that the affidavit need not shew that the notes came into existence exclusively for the purposes of such action. Nordon v. Defries, 51 L. J., Q. B. 415 : 8 O. B. D. 508 : 30 W. R. 612 : 46 J. P. 566.

Transcript of shorthand notes of proceedings in open court are not privileged. Nordon v. Defries observed upon. Worsnold, In re, Hobson v. Worsnold, 58 L. J., Ch. 31; 38 Ch. D. 370; 59 L. T. 399; 36 W. R. 625.

The corporation of P. took compulsorily some of R.'s land, and at an arbitration to ascertain the sum to be paid, R. claimed a right of way over other land to a river, and such alleged right had to be considered in regard to the sum to be assessed. R. employed a shorthand writer to take notes of the evidence and arguments, and afterwards had them transcribed for his own purposes, Subsequently he brought an action for a mandatory injunction to compel the corporation to remove materials which they had put on the land over which he claimed the right of way. The relevancy of the notes was admitted. On motion by the corporation for the production of the transcript, R. objected on the ground that it was privileged, as the notes were taken at his expense: and in anticipation of other proceedings against the corporation :- Held, that the transcript of the notes was not privileged, and that it must be produced. Rawstorne v. Preston Corporation, 54 L. J., Ch. 1102; 30 Ch. D. 116; 52 L. T. 922; 33 W. R. 795.

Examination in Bankruptcy.]—A trustee in bankruptcy had, under s. 27 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, obtained an order for the examination of certain persons for the purpose of enabling his solicitor to advise him as to bringing the present action :- Held, that the transcript of the shorthand notes of the examination of those persons was privileged. Learoyd v. Halifaw Joint Stock Banking Co., 62 L. J., Ch. 509; [1893] 1 Ch. 686; 3 R. 252; 68 L. T. 158; 41 W. R. 344.

Trustees, under a creditor's deed, caused the directors of a company and others to be examined in the Court of Bankruptcy with a view to taking the opinion of counsel as to the institu-tion of a suit:—Held, that they ought not to be ordered to produce a copy of the examination at the instance of the company. Evolution v. Queen's Every Wire Rope Co., 38 L. J., Ch. 263; 17 W. R. 585.

f. Other Documents.

Books of Corporation. ]-Upon a summons by the defendant, that the plaintiffs-a corporation -might be ordered to produce the documents comprised in their affidavit of documents :-Held. that minutes of the corporation and sub-committees appointed by them to report as to Types v. Matters connected with the litigation were An action having been commenced to deterprivileged. Bristol Corporation v. Cos., 53 L. J., mine whether the defendant had or had not Ch. 1144; 28 Ch. D. 678; 50 L. T. 719; 38 W. R.

Compromise of former Action.]—The plaintiffs were the owners of goods shipped on board the defendants' vessel, the B., and their case was, that the goods had been lost through a collision between the B. and the H., owing to the defendants' negligence. A suit and cross suit had previously been commenced in the Court of Admiralty between the owners of the two vessels, and these suits were compromised by a private agreement in writing :- Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to inspection of this agreement with an average statement attached to it; for that without deciding that such an objection would be material, it did not appear that the owners of the H. objected to the inspection; and the document clearly related to the matter in question, as it might contain an admission of liability on the part of the defendants. Hutchinson v. Glorer, 45 L. J., Q. B. 120; 1 Q. B. D.

Gas Explosion. - In an action against a gas company for negligently allowing the escape of gas from their main through an open window into the plaintiff's premises, where it ignited and exploded and caused a fire, which consumed them:—Held, that inspection by the company of a model made for the plaintiff from memory after the destruction of his premises, which had since been rebuilt, was not to be allowed. Morley v. Great Central Gas Co., 2 F. & F. 373,

6. DOCUMENTS PREPARED BY THIRD PARTIES.

With intention of being laid before Solicitor.] -Documents prepared by a third party, in relation to an intended action, whether at the request of a solicitor or not, and whether ultimately laid before the solicitor or not, are privileged, if prepared with a bona fide intention of being laid before him for the purpose of taking his advice; and an inspection of such documents cannot be enforced. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. v. Quick, 47 L. J., Q. B. 258; 3 Q. B. D. 315; 26 W. R. 341—C. A. Affirming 38 L. T. 28.

Anonymous Letters to Solicitor, Counsel and Party to Action.]—The plaintiff sued to recall probate on the ground that the testator was not of sound mind, and that the will was obtained by the undue influence of the defendants. Afterthe commencement of the action four anonymous letters relating to the matters in dispute were received—two by the plaintiff, one by her solicitor, and another by her counsel in the action :- Held, that the letters to the plaintiff must be produced, but that the letters to the solicitor and counsel were privileged, for they must be taken to have been sent to them for the a suit to rectify a mistake in a marriage settle-

255. And see Worthington v. Dublin, Wicklow purposes of the action and by reason of their and Wexford Ry., ante, col. 928. and the privilege was not lost because they were not sent in consequence of any request by the solicitor and counsel, nor obtained by their exertions. Holloway, In re, Young v. Holloway, 56 L. J., P. 81: 12 P. D. 167; 57 L. T. 515; 35 W. R. 751—C. A.

Confidential Letter to Party.]—A confidential letter to one of the parties to an action containing mere matter of opinion volunteered by a non-legal agent who has no personal knowledge of the facts beyond that possessed by the party applying for production is not within the rule as to professional or quasi-professional privilege, and is therefore not protected. Bustres v. White, 45 L. J., Q. B. 642; I Q. B. D. 423; 34 L. T. 835; 24 W. R. 721—C. A.

7 COMMUNICATIONS RETWEEN THE LEGAL ADVISERS.

Members of Firm.]--Correspondence between members of a firm of solicitors as to matters about which they have been consulted by their elients are privileged from inspection, whether written before or after litigation was commenced or in contemplation. ## a. Married Women.

A solicitor, who was examined as a witness in ment, declined to produce certain letters, on the ground that he had received them in his character of confidential solicitor to the intended wife; and he declined to produce certain books, because they contained particulars of confidential matters between him and his clients:-Held, that the grounds alleged for the non-production were insufficient. Walsh v. Trevanion, 15 Sim. 577; 16 L. J., Ch. 330; 11 Jur. 360.

Wherever husband and wife have distinct interests, and the wife is induced, in dealing with those interests, to act under the advice of an attorney employed and paid by the husband, the attorney must be deemed to act as the attorney of both husband and wife, and each of them has a right to call for the production, and to have full inspection, of all documents that may come into the possession of the attorney during such employment relating to the transactions and to the advice given to the wife. Warde v. Warde, 3 Mac. & G. 365; 21 L. J., Ch. 90; 15 Jur. 759. Reversing 1 Sim. (N.S.) 18.

Correspondence of a married woman (living apart from her husband) with her solicitor, in reference to a divorce, which was afterwards obtained by collusion between husband and wife, held not to be privileged from production to the husband, or parties claiming through him. Ford v. De Pontes, 29 L. J., Ch. 883; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 993; 32 L. T. 383; 7 W. R. 299.

But otherwise with respect to correspondence of the wife subsequent to the divorce, when she was acting as a feme sole, and not in relation to the matter of the divorce. Ib.

A solicitor being examined as a witness in a suit to establish a claim upon a widower in respect of property, alleged to have been fraudulently received by the deceased wife of the widower during coverture, was not compelled to produce letters written to him by the wife at the time of the alleged fraud, he having received those letters in his professional capacity, and not having been implicated in the frand. Charlton v. Chambes, 1 N. B. 547.

h. Trustees.

Disputes arose between two cestuis que trustent in respect of the trust matters, and the trustee acted as solicitor for one :--Held, that the communications between such solicitor and cestui que trust were not privileged as against the other. Tuguell v. Hooper, 10 Beav. 348; 16 L. J., Ch. 171.

In a suit to which trustees were defendants production was sought of letters which had passed between the trustees and their solicitors with reference to the trust, and of memoranda and instructions to counsel prepared by the solicitors on behalf of the trustees. Some of these documents related to a former spit which had sought to set aside a deed of release impeached in the present suit. None of the documents had been charged to the trust estate :- Held, that all these documents were privileged. Bacon v. Bacon, 34 L. T. 349.

In an action by cestuis que trustent against their trustees to compel them to make good a breach of trust:—Held, that the trustees must produce letters and copies of letters from and to their solicitors in relation to matters in question in the action ante litem motam. #### c. For Two Clients.

A., the defendant, wrote to his solicitor, who was also the solicitor of E., the plaintiff: "You may make Mr. E. an offer of the T. hotel on certain terms." This letter was forwarded to the plaintiff, who at once wrote and accepted the offer. A subsequent letter from the defendant to the solicitor, expressing satisfaction that E. had accepted the offer, was tendered in evidence:—Held, that the letter was privileged.

Eadle v. Addism, 52 L. J., Ch. 81; 47 L. T. 548; 31 W. R. 320.

A solicitor acting for two clients in a matter is privileged, upon examination before the court, from disclosing to one client professional instructions given to him by the other. Ubsdell, In re, 27 L. T. 460; 21 W. R. 70.

d. Several Parties Claiming under the Client.

The reasons of the rule which protects from disclosure communications made in professional confidence, apply in cases of conflict between the client or those claiming under him and third persons; but do not apply in cases of testamen-tary disposition by the client as between different parties, all of whom claim under him. The privilege does not belong to the executors as against the next of kin, but, following the legal interest, is subject to the trusts and incidents to which the legal interest is subject. Russell v. Jackson, 9 Hare, 387; 21 L. J., Ch. 146; 15 Jur.

On a bill by the next of kin of a deceased party against his executors who were his residuary devisees and legatees, alleging that the gift of the property was made to them upon a secret trust for the foundation of a school, the solicitor of the testator, who was also after the death of the testator the solicitor of the defendants, the executors, was examined as witness for the plaintiff. On a motion by the defendants to suppress the depositions of the solicitor on the ground of professional confidence :- Held, that the communications between the testator and the solicitor might be read; and that the communications between the defendants, the executors, and the solicitor, after the death of the testator, were privileged. Ib.

A privilege given for the protection of the client cannot have the effect of excluding evidence of a trust which he had intended to create, and thus defeat a claim by the parties who accepted the trust, to hold the trust property beneficially. Ib.

9. SOLICITOR CEASING TO ACT OR PRACTISE.

A. had, up to the filing of the bill, acted as the defendant's solicitor, but had ceased to do so as to the subject matter of the snit since that event. At the defendant's request he wrote observations upon a copy of the bill, which, it was sworn, were treated as instructions for the defendant's answer. Quere, whether these observations were privileged. Mochay v. Trederwick, 9 Jur. 343.

Communications between a person and his legal adviser, who had been a solicitor, but at the time of the communications had without his knowledge ceased to practise, are privileged. Calley v. Richards, 19 Beav. 401; 2 W. R. 614.

The communications had reference to the validity of a will, and passed between the plaintiff and his legal adviser between the date. of the will and the death of the testator. It his client, on the ground that he has a lien for was objected that they could not have taken costs, even when the plaintiffs in the suit cap hace in contemplation of a suit respecting the under his client. plaintiff, a former solicitor of the plaintiff, he was asked whether he did not, in the spring of 1859, procure a survey to be made of a ship mentioned; and he replied that he did not, but that he then made an application to certain parties in the city upon the subject, and he did so as the solicitor of the plaintiff. The witness was then asked this question:—"To whom did you make the application?" and refused to answer it on the ground that it was a privileged communication between solicitor and client. A 32 L. J., Ch. 4 motion, on behalf of the defendant, that the 11 W. R. 324. witness might be ordered to attend before the examiner and answer the question was refused with costs. Marriott v. Anchor Reversionary Co., 3 Giff. 304; S Jur. (N.S.) 51; 5 L. T. 545.

Protection of confidence between solicitor and client, extends to all communications made by client for professional assistance, but not where solicitor employed in matters not professional, Walker v. Wildman, 6 Madd. 47; 22 R. R. 234.

Confidential communications between solicitor and client, in a suit to carry into effect an indenture for the benefit of the client's creditors: -Held, not to be privileged, the solicitor having taken upon himself the office of trustee under such indenture. Pritchard v. Foulkes, C. P. Cooper, 14.

An action was brought by the registered owner Avice. Sankey v. Alexander, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 241. in 1883 and 1884, for infringement of both A solicitor who is a defendant in a suit eandefendants then delivered interrogatories as to paration of the specifications filed under both patents. The plaintiff declined to answer, on the ground that they were confidential communications between himself and his solicitor and counsel, and that such documents were privi-leged; and that as regarded any documents relating to the patent of 1884, the interrogatories were irrelevant to the issue. The plaintiff's solicitor had also acted as his patent agent :-Held, that the plaintiff's answer as to documents was insufficient, as it did not distinguish between the communications between him and his soli-1 Sim, (3.8.) 3; 20 L. J., Ch. 65; 15 dur. 118. citor as such, and communications between him and his solicitor in his character of patent agent, the former class only being privileged : and held, that the defendants had a right to inspect communications between the plaintiff and his patent agent which related to the preparation of the specification of the patent of 1884, both the inventions patented being so closely connected that evidence material to the issue might be disclosed by such inspection. Moseley v. Victoria Rubber Co., 55 L. T. 482.

A defendant filled the character of solicitor only, and afterwards the double character of trustee and solicitor for others:—Held, that he was bound to produce all the documents and communications between him and his client, except those which had taken place pending the illigation. Communication not protected where professional adviser consulted merely as a confidential friend. Wilson v. Rustall, 4 Term Rep. 754, 8; 2 R. R. 515.

13. FRAUD, EFFECT OF.

A solicitor ordered to be examined against his client in a case of fraud. Cutts v. Pickering. 3 Ch. Rep. 66.

On a bill which sought to charge a solicitor with a fraud practised on the plaintiff in the course of proceedings on his client's behalf, the court refused to order the production of entries and memorandums contained in the defendant's books, or of written communications made or received by him, relating to those proceedings and admitted by the answer to be in the defendant's custody. And generally it seems that a solicitor cannot be compelled, at the instance of a third party, to disclose matters which have come to his knowledge in the conduct of professional business for a elient, even though such business had no reference to legal proceedings, either existing or in contemplation. Greenough v. Guskell, 1

Myl, & K. 98; Coop, t. Brough, 96, The plaintiff sought to have a deed set aside on the ground of the fraudulent insertion of a particular clause therein. One of the defendants, by answer, insisted that the plaintiff had notice of the clause in question at a specified time, and examined the plaintiff's solicitor in support of this issue, and inquired what passed at an alleged interview between the solicitor and the defendant at the time specified. To this interrogatory the solicitor demurred to answer, on the ground that it inquired respecting matters about which he had obtained information by means of confidential communications, made to him in the course of his agency as solicitor for his client, the plaintiff :- Held, that the selicitor was bound to answer the interrogatory. Gore v. Bowser, 5 De G. & Sm. 30. S. C., nom. Gore v. Harris, 21. L. J., Ch. 10; 15 Jur. 1168.

A bill impeached a deed on the ground of documents in his possession relating to the pre- fraud, and interrogated the defendant as to the contents of certain letters which had passed between her and her solicitor, and which, it stated, showed that the deed was prepared and executed for the alleged fraudulent purpose. The defendant, in her answer, declined to set forth the contents of the letters, as being privileged communications. The court held that the transaction, according to the account of it given in the bill and answer, was not a fraud, and therefore that the defendant was not bound to set forth

Communications between a solicitor and his client relative to a fraud contrived between them, are not exceptions to the general rule; they do not fall within the rule itself ; for the rule applies, not to all that passes between a solicitor and his client, but only to what passes between them in professional confidence ; and no court can permit it to be said that the contriving of a fraud forms part of the professional occupation of an attorney or solicitor. Ib.

The existence of an illegal purpose would prevent any privilege from attaching to the communications between solicitor and client, semble. Russell v Jackson, 9 Hare, 387; 21 L. J., Ch. 146: 15 Jur. 117.

A. purchased an advowson in June, 1845, and, in August following, mortgaged it to B. In 1850, B. filed a hill against A., and the solicitor employed by him in the purchase and the mortgage, for a sale of the advowson, alleging that the mortgage was an insufficient security, and that he was induced to lend his money upon it by misrepresentation made to him by A, and his solicitor as to the value of the advowson. A., in his answer, denied the alleged fraud; but admitted that he had in his possession letters which had passed between him and his solicitor in reference to the purchase and the mortgage, and added that they were confidential communications made to him by his solicitor in that character, and therefore were privileged; but he did not state that any of them contained legal advice or oninions, or were written post litem motam. The court ordered him to produce all the letters, Hawkins v. Gathercole, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 150; 20 L. J., Ch. 303; 15 Jur. 186.

Bill filed to set aside a sale by the plaintiff's ancester to the defendant's testator, on the ground of the sale having been made to the confidential solicitor of the vendor at an undervalue; answer admits possession of documents, but says they relate to the purchaser's title exclusively, and not in any manner to the plaintiffs title. They included copies of conveyances from the purchaser to other purchasers from him of parts, and a valuation of the estate:

—Order for their production. Also, order for production of mortgages on the estate scheduled, it being alleged in the bill that the vendor had been in embarrassed circumstances. The court always in such eases assumes the truth of the statements in the bill, in order to test the materiality of the evidence which the documents will furnish, because it will be too late to inspect after the hearing. In this case :- Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to see all documents to which he would be entitled, on the assumption that the vendor was his ancestor, and everything which might assist in proving that the estate was sold at an undervalue. Gresley v. Mousley, 2 Kay & J. 288; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 156.

The defendants, suggesting that the executors had been the mortgagor's only professional of the vendor, who were also defendants, had an adviser in the transaction. Dacies v. Parry, 27 interest in some of the scheduled documents:— L.  $J_{\gamma}$ , Ch. 294; 4 Jur. (x.S.) 431; 6 W. R. 171. Held, that they should be served. Ib.

A. B. wrote the draft of a letter to his solicitor, in order that such solicitor might write a similar one to him, to be shown to C. D., and thereby induce him to enter into a contract. On a bill to set aside the contract for fraud:-Held, that the solicitor was bound to produce the letter, but not the other correspondence between himself and his client. Reynell v. Sprye, 11 Beav. 618. The title of R. to an estate having been discovered by B., R. agreed to give B. a moiety of the estate for his exertions, &c., and B. was to prosecute the claim at his own risk. B., through his solicitor, afterwards took the opinion of counsel upon the case, and instituted the suit of R. v. R., in the name of R., under a power of attorney given by R. for that purpose :- Held. in a suit by R, to set aside the transaction, that B. was bound to produce the opinion and the doenments in R, v. R, for R,'s inspection, the same not being privileged. In the same case, B., wishing to purchase the remaining moiety, procured his solicitor to write him a letter to show to R., and calculated to induce him to sell. R. agreed to sell :- Held, in a suit to set aside the sale, that the letter was not a privileged communication. S. C., 10 Beav, 51; 16 L. J., Ch. 117.

A bill to set aside leases for fraud made the solicitor who had prepared them a defendant, charging him with being a party to the fraud, and praying costs against him, and interrogating him as to his being privy to the fraud, and as to transactions regarding the preparation of the leases. The solicitor pleaded that he knew nothing as to the matters, save as the attorney of the other defendant, and therefore was privileged from giving discovery. The plea did not deny the fraud or the facts stated in the bill as evidence of it :- Held, that the plaintiff, being entitled to relief, was also entitled to the discovery as incidental to the relief. Kelly v. Jackson, 13

Ir. Eq. R. 129.

The privilege of a solicitor is confined to confidential communications with his client, and does not extend to his own acts, though done in the character of solicitor. Ib.

Confidential communications, involving fraud, are not privileged from disclosure. Gartside v. Outram, 26 L. J., Ch. 113; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 39; 5

In answer to a bill filed in equity for an injunction to restrain a former clerk of the plaintiffs from disclosing any of their dealings and transactions, the defendant stated that the plaintiffs were in the habit of conducting their business in a fraudulent manner, and specified a particular instance. In suppport of his answer the defendant filed interrogatories for the examination of the plaintiffs as to the fraudulent transactions, which they declined to answer. On exception to the answer :- Held, that there was no privilege to protect them from answering, the discovery being material to support the defendant's answer, which, if proved, would be a complete defence to the bill. Ib.

Where a suit was instituted by a mortgagor to set aside the mortgage deed, on the ground that it was obtained by the mortgagee under eirenmstances of pressure and surprise, which, however, the mortgagee denied, the court, upon motion, ordered the production of the deed, it appearing that the mortgagee was a solicitor, and that he a deceased client, of whom there was no legal a party, nor charged with fraud:—Allowed, Charitan v. Chambes, 4 Giff. 372; 1 N. R. 547; 32 I. J., Ch. 284; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 534; 8 L. T. 81;

A. bequeathed the interest of certain moneys to M. (a widow) for life, but in case she should marry again without the previous consent of both his executors, the interest, and all other benefit given to her by his will, should cease and determine, and in lien he gave her 50l. for life. M. intermarried with C. without consent, and died in 1862. The executors then discovered that she had been married to C., and they filed a bill for a declaration as to the fraud committed, and for an account against C. In the course of the proceedings the solicitor of M. was examined as a witness before one of the examiners, and he declined to produce his book containing entries relating to her second marriage, and also certain letters written by her on the same business, on the ground, that although his client was dead, such entries and correspondence were privileged. The solicitor was not a party to the suit, and there was no allegation connecting him with the alleged frand :-Held, that the entries and letters were protected from production by the privilege between the solicitor and his client. Ib.

A bill averred that the defendant procured the execution of a jointure-deed under a power by pressure in fraud of the power, but there was no allegation that the solicitor who prepared the deed was a party to the fraud :- Held, that the alleged fraud was not such as to exclude the instructions given by the defendant to her solicitor for the preparation of the deed from privilege. Mornington v. Mornington, 2 John. & H. 697.

The bill was framed for the purpose of setting aside this deed : and among the communications as to which privilege was claimed were letters dated a considerable time before the transaction which the bill songht to set aside, but which the defendant, in her answer, described as having been written for the purpose of obtaining professional assistance as to, and with a view to, her defence against any claim that the plaintiff might make against her. It appeared, however, on the face of the bill and answer, that a contest had previously existed as to matters intimately mixed up with the transaction which the bill sought to set aside :- Held, that the dates were not sufficient to rebut the privilege claimed. Ib.

The defendant was interrogated as to the instructions given to her solicitor for the deed, and also as to communications with reference thereto between herself or any persons on her behalf, and any persons acting on behalf of the grantor of the jointure. In her answer she ignored "save as herein and in the schedule hereto appears." By a subsequent clause as to documents generally, she claimed privilege for letters written by and to her solicitor; but in other parts of the schedule, as to which privilege was not claimed, were some documents which might satisfy the description of communications with third parties :- Held, that the form of the answer was no bar to the privilege claimed. Ib. Where a solicitor was charged with fraud, and documents bearing on the transaction, whether his own or those of the deceased client. Feaver v. Williams, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 902; 13 L. T. 270.

An action was brought for an account of profits in respect of a purchase of trust property, on allegations that the sale was secretly made for the benefit of R., one of the trustees, with the comivance of T., another trustee, who was a solicitor. The representatives of R. claimed privilege from production for letters from T. to R, and for T.'s bill of costs, on the ground that the communications were made by T. acting as solicitor to R. in his private capacity. Production was ordered because the communications passed between two trustees, and because the solicitor and his client were charged with fraud. Postlethwaite, In re, Postlethwaite v. Rickman, 56 L. J., Ch. 1077; 35 Ch. D. 722; 56 L. T. 733; 36 W. R. 563.

The plaintiff, in a debenture-holder's action brought against the company and their agents, alleged that the company when in fact insolvent had created a charge in favour of their agents with a view to defeat and delay the debentureholders, and impeached the priority of such charge. In an affidavit of documents the liquidator now claimed privilege for copies of or extracts from opinions of counsel and advice of the company's solicitor with reference to the charge at the time of its creation :- Held, that the claim of privilege could not be sustained, having regard to the allegation of fraud. Wil-liams v. Quebrada Railmay Lend and Copper Ch., 65 L. J., Ch. 68; [1895] 2 Ch. 751; 73 L. T. 397; 44 W. R. 76.

14. PRIVILEGE IN SUBSEQUENT ACTION.

A correspondence took place between a client and his solicitor during the progress of a suit. A compromise was effected, but afterwards a second suit was instituted to set it aside, and to prose-cute the original suit:—Held, that the correspondence was privileged in the second suit. Hughes v. Garnons, 6 Beav, 352.

In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendant for not unloading at the port of discharge a cargo of rice purchased by the defendant from the plaintiffs, whereby the plaintiffs who had entered into a charter-party upon the terms as to the discharge of the ship similar to those contained in the contract of sale, were sued by and had to pay damages to the shipowner :- Held, that the defendant was not entitled to inspection of the papers in the plaintiffs' possession relating to the action brought against them by the shipowner in-cluding correspondence between them and their solicitor, and between their solicitor and other persons; for such papers would have been privileged from discovery in the former action, and the fact that such action had terminated did uot deprive them of their privilege. Bullock v. Corry or Currie, 47 L. J., Q. B. 352; 3 Q. B. D. 356; 38 L. T. 102; 26 W. R. 330.

representative, was alleged to be a party to the ments partially prepared by his solicitors in an fraud :-Held, that the solicitor must produce action previously brought by him against one D. (a person other than the defendant) for future use in carrying on the said action, but which were, in fact, never completed or used owing to such action not proceeding in consequence of D.'s death, and that the whole of the said doenments were of a private and confidential nature between counsel, solicitor, and client:-Held, that the documents were privileged from dis-covery in the action. ## 15. Loss of Privilege.

Waiver. ]-The giving of an extract of a copy of an opinion of counsel, which a solicitor procured for his client on the subject-matter of the suit, to a solicitor engaged in litigation against him, does not necessarily prevent the opinion, or the case on which it was taken, from being privileged. Curey v. Cuthbert, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 599.

A waiver of privilege in respect of some out of a large number of documents for all of which privilege was originally claimed does not preclude the party from still asserting his claim of privilege for the rest. Lyall v. Kennedy, 53 L. J., Ch. 937; 27 Ch. D. 1; 50 L. T. 730-C. A.

Reference in Pleadings.] — The privilege claimed for documents is not lost merely by their being referred to in the pleadings. The penalty for non-production is that they cannot afterwards. L. J., Ch. 1148; 26 Ch. D. 724; 50 L. T. 729; 32 W. R. 654—C. A.

The draft of an answer prepared for a deceased defendant, but not put in, is a privileged docu-ment in the bands of his administratrix. But if the administratrix, by her answer, admit posses-sion of and set out part of the contents of the document, and erave leave to refer to the same, she loses the privilege as to the part so set out, but retains it as to the remainder. Belsham v. Harrison or Perceval, 15 L. J., Ch. 438; 10 Jur.

Solicitor becoming interested Personally. ]-Confidential communications as to the title of property to an attorney or connsel do not cease to be privileged by his afterwards becoming interested as devisee of the property; and where the attorney refused discovery, the court cannot regard the subsequent consent of the client to the disclosure of the matters inquired after. Chant v. Brown, 7 Hare, 79.

Information communicated to another Person. -In a suit to impeach the validity of a charge upon a living :- Held, that a correspondence between a deceased owner of the charge and his solicitor, and a case submitted on his behalf tocounsel, as to the validity of the charge, some years before the institution of the present suit, and also a correspondence in contemplation of the present suit between the defendant and the solicitor of the late owner, and which had come into the possession of the defendant, as his-

V. EVIDENCE OF PARTY'S CASE OR

1. Generally.

a. Discovery and Production of Documents.

General Rule-What Necessary to protect Documents. |-To protect a defendant from the discovery or production of a document relating to the subject in dispute, it is not sufficient that it should be evidence of his title, or contain evidence which he intends, or is entitled to use in support of his case; it must contain no matter supporting the plaintiff's title or the plaintiff's case, or impeaching the defence, and the defendant must aver by his answer, with a reasonable degree of distinctness, that the document does contain no such matter. Combe v. London Corporation, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 631; 6 Jur. 571.

Production of cases and opinions of counsel thereon relating to the matters in issue, refused.

The corporation of London claimed for the fellowship porters of that city a prescriptive right of measuring and carrying, for certain fees, all corn landed on either side of the river Thames, between Yantly and Staines bridge, and carried into or out of the city, and they filed their bill against C. & Co. to establish that right. The defence of C. & Co. was, that the right. The defence of C. & Co. was, that the tor was seised in fee. Upon motion to produce these documents, which, by the answer of the corporation, were admitted to be in their possession, but were insisted upon as part of their title and that of their grantees, the fellowship porters :-Held, that they were not part of their title, and must be produced. In a snit to enforce an agreement relating to land, made by the defendant's father, the defendant alleging that, under a certain deed, dated, &c.. his father was only tenant for life, and that he himself was tenant in tail under the same deed :- Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the production of it. Bill by legatees, whose legacies were charged on real estates, for a discovery and production of a deed, by which, as it was alleged, the real estates were limited to uses, under which the testator was tenant in tail only, but from which, as the plaintiff insisted, it would, if produced, appear that a small portion only of the estate was so settled, and that of the residue the testa-

In a suit by a vicar against occupiers for tithes, a motion was made by the plaintiff for production of deeds, papers and writings admitted by the answer of one of the defendants to be put in his possession or power. The defendant resisted the application on the ground that several of such documents related to and showed his title as lay impropriator to some of the tithes in question. The court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the production of such of them as related to the title of the defendant to the tithes in question. Collins v. Gresley, 2 Y. & J. 490.

As to how far a viear, plaintiff in a title cause, is compellable to produce for inspection, account, the right to which is disputed, and &c., vicar's books, and those of predecessors, cases in which it relates to the fundamental admitted by him, in his answer to cross bill by defendant, to be in his possession, and to contain entries relating to payments of sums of money, as compositions corresponding in amount ments, the right to the possession or inspection with the money payments set up by the defendent which is not necessary to the proof, and is dant as modus relied on. Foreman v. Cooper, 11 Price, 515. The plaintiffs claimed to be owners in fee simple of land, and the defendant alleged that they were freehold tenants of a manor, of which he was the lord; and that they had only cus-tomary rights over the land. A document, not put in issue by the plaintiff in his bill, which was for account of partnership dealings, but stated in the answer as part of defendant's defence, and admitted to be in his possession, and offered to be brought in, he cannot be compelled to bring in, if no partnership property is shewn in it. Shehan v. Glynn, 2 Moll. 387.

The defendants had brought an action against the plaintiffs, to recover a sum alleged to be due for town dues. The plaintiffs filed their bill, alleging that the defendants had in their enstody cases for the opinion of counsel, by which it would appear that the defendants had no right to levy the dues, and also various charters, deeds, &c., by which the truth of the statements in the bill would appear. The defendants admitted in their answer that they had in their custody several cases, two of which were prepared many years ago, and without reference to the existing proceedings, but which contained mistaken representations as to the nature of their title to the dues, and the rest of which were prepared pending, or in contemplation of the existing proceedings; and that they

Ib.

A plaintiff is entitled to the production of maps, rentals, &c., in the possession of and belonging to the defendant, which elucidate the right of the plaintiff. Potts v. Adair, 3 Swanst. 268.

Where an issue is, whether a piece of land called O. is or is not identical with or part of land called F., the plaintiff averring the negative is entitled to production of whatever documents may aid him in establishing his negative averment, notwithstanding such documents may also evidence the defendant's title. Earp v. Lloyd, 3 Kay & J. 549.

Therefore, in a case of this description, the defendant was ordered to produce all maps. plans, and terriers, and all deeds and other documents relating to the matters at issue, but with liberty to seal up such parts of the deeds and other documents as did not describe or also had in their custody charters, deeds, and relate to parcels. Ib.

Property in London was granted for a lease of of one, a different management was entered into ninety-nine years in 1763. At the expiration of between his executors (one of whom was the lease the reversioner found difficulty in surviving partner) and his widow, who was identifying a part of the property, which had beneficially interested under the will, by which and lying dispersedly in the common fields at Walworth, commonly called Lock's Fields." The property had, during the lease, been underlet and dealt with by instalments some of which tify the houses and lands now in the defendant's ments:-Held, that he was entitled to the discovery. Brown v. Wales, 42 L. J., Ch. 45; 15 L. R., Eq. 142; 27 L. T. 410; 21 W. R. 157.

In 1763, B. and P. demised to C. for ninety-nine years, at a rent of 50l., "seven acres and a-half of meadow or pasture land (more or less) lying dispersedly in the common fields of Walworth, commonly called Lock's Fields," together with other lands as to which no question arose. In 1862, the lease having expired, the sneeessor in title in fee to B, and P, obtained possession of all the land demised in 1763, except the seven and a-half acres. This seven and a-half acres had been underleased and repeatedly dealt with from time to time, and by reason of the whole property having been built over, he was unable to establish his right to them in an ejectment without obtaining from the defendants discovery of the underleases and assurances of the leasehold interests which had been carved out of the demise of 1763. A bill was then filed against persons who, according to the allegations in the first class, when he had received such debts, bill, were in wrongful possession of portions of the seven and a-half acres, for discovery of the documents in their possession which would clearly shew that the land occupied by them was included in the denise of 1743, the plaintiff intending at once to make all the defendants parties to the ejectment. The defendants demurred for want of equity and multifariousness :- Held, that, on the case made by the bill, the plaintiff was entitled to the discovery sought, and demarrer overruled. Ib.

The establishment of identity of parcels is as much an element in the right to discovery as devolution, and gives a lessor the right to discovery as against lessees holding over and their under-tenants. Ib.

A partition was made of part of a manor, and A, and B, were tenants in common of the parts not severed. In 1829 C., who was seised of four ancient tenements within the manor, obtained a conveyance from B, of all the rights, &c., over the ancient tenements and the adjoining waste. A. claimed to be tenant in common over these wastes; but B. set up an exclusive title thereto as attached to the four ancient tenements :-Held, under the circumstances, that C. was bound to produce the deed of 1829; for, having acquired the manorial rights conveyed to him by the deed of 1829, he had become subject to the liabilities to which he would not have been subject as owner of the ancient tenements. Att.-Gen. of the Prince of Wales v. Lambe, 11 Beav. 213; 17 L. J., Ch. 154; 12 Jur. 386.

The widow, by this bill, sought to set aside this arrangement for contained particular descriptions, which, as the frand, and to have an account of the partner-reversioner contended, would help him to idenship transactions, and of the profits subsequent. ship transactions, and of the profits subsequent to her husband's death:—Held, that the plainoccupation as his property, and he filed a bill tiff was entitled to the production of the for discovery of such underleases and instru-accounts of the business as carried on after the testator's death. Hue v. Richards, 2 Beav. 305.

One of two partners dying, it was agreed between the survivor and the executors of the deceased that the survivor should continue the business, and wind up the affairs of the partner-It appeared that the surviving partner divided the debts due to the firm into twoclasses. The first class he, without the concurrence of the executors, assumed to himself, and transferred to his new books, having debited himself with the amount of the same in the partnership books. The second class he did not assume; but having opened new accounts with some of the customers, when he received anything on account of such last debts, he entered the same in such new books, and also in the partnership books. He and his clerk swore that the entries in the partnership He and his books exactly tallied both in dates and sums with the entries in the new books :- Held, that he must produce for the inspection of the executors such new books, to see, as to the and what profits he had made of the same which the executors had a right to share; as to the second class, whether he had properly appropriated the payments made by such last debtors, in discharge of the old balances due to the firm, or whether first in discharge of his own advances. Toulmin v. Copland, 3 Y. & Coll. 655; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 5; 3 Jur. 1041.

On a defendant objecting to produce docu-ments, on the ground that he had procured the documents for another purpose, and that they were open to all, and to be procured in the same manner:—Held, that unless specially protected, he must produce them. Wright v. Fernan, 1 Drew. 344; 22 L. J., Ch. 447; 1 W. R. 138.

Assertion of Privilege-Sufficiency of Affidavit.]-A plaintiff will not be compelled to produce muniments of title which he swears do not, to the best of his knowledge, information and belief, contain anything impeaching his case, or supporting or material to the case of the defendant. Minet v. Morgan, 42 L. J., Ch. 627; L. R. 8 Ch. 361; 28 L. T. 573; 21 W. R. 467.

Where in an action for the recovery of land the defendant's affidavit of documents claims privilege for certain documents on the ground that they relate solely to his own title and do not tend to prove or support the title of the plaintiff, such affidavit is sufficient, though it does not go on to say that such documents do not impeach the defendant's title. *Morris v. Frankenstein v. not entried to inspect them. Francesseen V. Gazie's House-to-House Cycle-eleaning Co., 66 L. J., Q. B. 668: [1897] 2 Q. B. 62; 76 L. T. 747; 45 W. R. 547—C. A.

The expression "tending to make out the plaintiff's title" means his title to the relief

Bill for a discovery whether, in a mortgage made by A. to B., which had been assigned to the defendant, there was not some trust declared for the benefit of the plaintiff; defendant, by answer, denied that there was any trust declared for the plaintiff: the answer being replied to, the question at the hearing was, whether the defendant should be obliged to produce the deed, the court would not compel him to do it. Quare. Hall v. Atkinson. 2 Vern. 463.

It does not establish sufficient interest in a title-deed relating to real estate, to warrant an order for its production, that if its effect be such as is sworn to by the party claiming the estate under it, legatees will lose the benefit of legacies bequeathed to them by that party's ancestor, from whom he immediately derives title. Wilson

v. Forster, M'Clel. & Y. 274.

Defendant need not set forth an account of the transactions of a trade in which the plaintiff pretends to have been a partner, if there is a clear denial of the partnership. Jacobs v. Goodman, 2 Cox, 282.

A mere statement by a defendant that the production of the documents will not help the plaintiff's alleged title, will not protect them from being produced. Manuell v. Feenoy, 2 J. & H. 320; 4 L. T. 437; 9 W. R. 610.

Inaccurate Affidavit.]—Plaintiff made an affidavit of documents claiming privilege as to all documents in the schedule thereto, on the ground that they supported the plaintiff's title, and did not support the title of the defendant. Defendant took out a summons for production. notwithstanding the privilege claimed when the judge in chambers ordered production of one of the documents, and adjourned the hearing of the rest of the summons into court. On hearing the adjourned summons :- Held, that the inaccuracy of the affidavit as to one document did not of itself destroy the plaintiff's privilege as to the rest of the scheduled documents. Leslie v. Care, 56 L. T. 332; 35 W. R. 515.

Combe v. London Corporation, 15 L. J., Ch. 80; 10 Jur. 57.

In a snit instituted against the corporation of London for discovery in aid of a defence to a bill by them to recover alleged dues claimed by prescription, the corporation admitted the possession of certain charters, &c., relating to the matters in question, which they alleged formed part of their title, but which they did not with sufficient precision deny might form part of plaintiff's title, or contain matter respecting their own defence :- Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to production of such documents. S. C., 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 631 : 6 Jur. 74.

Where the bill charges that the defendant is in possession of documents which relate to the matters in question in the snit, the defendant cannot protect himself from setting out a list and description of such documents by merely alleging his belief that they do not contain evidence of or tend to show the plaintiff's title, but he is bound distinctly to negative the allegations in the bill. Att. Gen. v. Landon Corporation, 2 Mac. & G. 247; 2 H. & Tw. 1; 19 L. J., Ch. 314; 14 Jur. 205.

Where, on an information for tin dues, on the part of the Duke of Cornwall, raising the question whether certain lands were part of manorial wastes, it appeared that the defendant being seised of an ancient tenement, a party, tenant in common with the duke, conveyed to the defenarising within the manor, reserving the rights of tin and of shooting, &c.; the defendant, by his answer, set forth a portion of the deed of conveyance to him, and stated, as to the boundaries, that they would appear from the deed :- Held, that the defendant was bound to produce it, that it might be seen whether the answer set it forth correctly; and also because the Crown, being jointly interested with the party conveying to the defendant, might take advantage of his acts of ownership. Att.-Gen. v. Lambe, 3 Y. & Coll. 162; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 23; 2 Jur. 698.

The plaintiff was entitled to a legacy, which the testator had charged on his estates not in settlement. The defendant stated that the testator was tenant in tail of part of the estate, but did not specify it, and he admitted the possession of a copy of a deed creating the entail, but he stated that it did not make out the plaintiff's case :-Held, he was bound to produce it for the plaintiff's inspection, as tending to show what estates were in settlement. Ferrers, 4 Beav. 97; 10 L. J., Ch. 273. Herey v.

Time for Production—Not before Defence.]—
A plaintiff cannot generally be compelled to produce to the defendant a document relating to ins own title only, though such document is referred to in his pleadings, until the defendant has put in his defence. Lunatic Asylum-Statutory Entries. ]-In an action against the licensed keeper of a private lunatic asylum, under 8 & 9 Viet. c. 100, by a person who had been confined in it as a lunatic, for mismanagement and improper treatment of him while a patient there, the court on application by the plaintiff, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, directed inspection of the following books, required by the first-mentioned statute to be kept, i.e. "The Medical Visitation Book," "The Case Book," "The Visitors' Book," and "The Patients' Book" (that of the book of admissions and book of entries having been consented to); together with the order and medical certificate under which the plaintiff was admitted into the establishment as a patient. The inspection, however, was ordered to be conducted before the master, who should seal up, uninspected, all parts of the books not relating to the plaintiff's ease. Hill v. Philp, 7 Ex. 232; 21 L. Agreement for Lease-Specific Performance-Production of Lessor's Title—Easement—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874.]—The owners in fee of freehold land commenced an action for the specific performance of an agreement by the defendant to accept a lease of the land for a term of years. The agreement contained (inter alia) stipulations for the free use by the defendant of a certain "drive" as a means of access to the estate. By his defence the defendant denied that the plaintiffs had any power to demise the land, and alleged that it was subject to restrictive covenants:—Held, that, by virtue of s. 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, the defendant was not entitled to discovery and production from the plaintiffs of the documents in their possession relating to the freehold title, though, if he had raised specifically any particular objection to the title, he might have had discovery of the documents bearing upon that point:-Held, also, that the contract as to the "drive" was a contract to grant a lease of land, and that therefore the plaintiffs were protected from production of their title thereto by the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, s. 2. Jones v. Watts, 43 Ch. D. 574; 62 L. T. 471; 38 W. R. 725—C. A.

b. Interrogatories.

General Principles.]—A defendant who files interrogatories for the examination of a plaintiff is entitled to an answer with respect to all matters which tend to destroy the plaintiff's case, but not with respect to matters which tend to support the plaintiff's case, Swerre Commissioners v. Glusson, 42 L. J., Ch. 345; L. R. 15 En. 302, 92 L. T. 433, 21 W. R. 509.

Eq. 302; 28 L. T. 438; 21 W. R. 520. When, therefore, a bill was filed to establish a right of common, and the defendant filed interrogatories requiring the plaintiff to set forth any instance in which the right e latined by the bill had been enjoyed:—Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to answer. Ib.

Scuible, that the plaintiff would have been bound to answer interrogatories with respect to instances in which the right had been claimed and successfully resisted. Ib.

A defendant cannot compel a plaintiff to answer any interrogatory, which in effect asks him what evidence he has in favour of his case. Each party may obtain discovery of all matters relating to his own case, and is entitled to know what the opponent's case is, but not what is his evidence of it. S. C. it. 21, J. C. h. 34.

Exception overruled with costs. Ib.

Upon a bill of discovery in equity, in aid of an action, the plaintiff is only entitled to a discovery of such matters as make out his own title, and cannot compel a discovery of the particulars of his adversary's title, and how he makes it out. Ingilby v. Shafto, 33 Beav. 31.

A plantiff is entitled to discovery from the defendant, not only of that which constitutes his the plantiffs little, but also for the purpose of repelling what he anticipates will be the case set up by the defendant. This does not extend, however, to a discovery of the evidence upon which the anticipated case of the defendant is to be supported. Att.-Gen. v. Loudon Cuprartion, 2 Mac. & G. 247, 2 Hall & Tw. 1; 19 L. J., Ch. 314; 14 Jur. 205.

The object of the Act 21 Jac. 1, c. 14, was to put a defendant litigating with the Grown in the same situation as any other defendant; but this statute does not apply in equity, where, in the matter of discovery, the Crown and a subject litigating together are precisely on the same footing as ordinary parties. Ib. Semble, a defendant cannot protect himself from discovery on the ground of disclosing the ovidence of his title, where his only allegation of title is negativing the title of the plaintiff. Ib.

What must be Answered.]—Where discovery is sought in relation to matters in which the plaintiff has no interest, but as consequential or resulting from a character or title denied by the answer, and not otherwise appearing on the record, the plaintiff has no equity entitling him to discovery. If, however, the plaintiff is interest in the discovery sought results from a character and title alleged in the bill, and if the bill properly avers that the discovery will establish tacks are the discovery will establish a case the plaintiff's remedies, the defendant cannot 8 Hare, 116. withhold the discovery by generally denying the character and title claimed by the plaintiff.

1139. Affirming 13 Beav. 320.

Although a litigant party has no right to a discovery of the evidence of his opponent's title, yet he has a right to a discovery of the evidence in support of his own title, and in proof of any fraud which has been committed to his injury and the plaintiff's right to a discovery of material evidence in support of his own case and title is not repelled, because, by exercising that equitable right, the defendant may be compelled to disclose the evidence in support of his (the defendant's) case and title. Ib.

The plaintiff and defendant respectively deduced their title from the heir-at-law of A., who died intestate in 1768, equitably entitled to certain premises, the legal estate of which was outstanding. In 1842 the defendant obtained ex parte a conveyance of the outstanding legal estate under Sir E. Sudgen's Acts. The plaintiff then filed his bill, alleging that the defendant had obtained the conveyance of the legal estate to himself, as the heir-at-law of A., by false and fraudulent evidence. The bill contained interrogatories addressed to the discovery of the alleged false and fraudulent evidence. The defendant, having by his answer asserted his own title as heir-at-law of A., and having denied that of the plaintiff, refused to answer any of the interrogatories relating to the evidence on which he had obtained the conveyance, asserting that the discovery would disclose the evidence of his own title, and denying that the evidence was false or frandulent, or that it would establish any of the allegations of the bill :- Held, that he was bound to make the discovery. Ib.

Plaintiff having recovered indement at law for 1,400L against J. brings a bill, charging that J. had conveyed his estate to trustees, and lent might be liable to plaintiff's debts, defendant demurs, for that in his lifetime he was not bound to discover his personal estate, and demurrer overruled. It is not, by the practice of this court, required of a party charged by a bill to have deeds and documents, &c., in his possession, material to the case on the other side, that he should protect himself from producing them by plea. The court will take care that he be not called on without good reason to produce his securities, for they watch with jealousy proceedings instituted for that purpose, and will require an unanswerable case to warrant their interference in making an order for their production. Where a defendant appears to be a bare trustee for the plaintiff, and offers no explanation to the contrary, the court will compel the production of deeds and documents admitted by his answer to be in his possession. The court will not, upon the motion before the hearing, compel an incumbrancer to produce at the hearing deeds which are admitted by his answer, but which are his title deeds, even though the plaintiff may have an interest in such deeds : but, under circumstances, the court will direct them to be proved before the examiner. Sparke v. Montriou, 1 Y. & Coll. 103.

The mere circumstance of a defendant incorporating a deed in his answer, whether by referring to the schedule or otherwise, is not a ground for compelling its production, if in other respects such compulsion would be inequitable. Ih.

Mortgagee insisting, by his answer, that he is not bound to produce his title deeds, but admitting that he is mortgagee of part of certain estates, is not bound in answer to the inquiries of the bill to say what part, as that would be stating the contents of his title deeds. When Production Enforced. ] - In a snit instituted in aid of proceedings at law to establish plaintiff's title as the heir-at-law of a certain person, the defendants filed a plea to the whole of the relief, traversing the fact of his heirship, and put in an answer to a part of the discovery sought by the bill, merely stating their inability to set forth whether the plaintiff had descended from an ancestor of the person whose heir he claimed to be :-Held, that notwithstanding the plea, the plaintiff was entitled to have the usual affidavit as to documents made by the defendants. Kettleu 375: 24 L. T. 420. Kettlewell v. Barstow, 40 L. J., Ch.

A party claiming to be heir to the lunatic, permitted, after the possession of the estate had been given up to the parties reported to be the heirs, to inspect deeds and documents remaining in the master's office, which it seems may be retained till a proper investigation has taken place, En parte Clarke, Jac. 589: 23 R. A bill was filed on the 7th January, 1837, and stated that in 1773 T. M. devised some estates to be sold to pay certain charges, and subject thereto to his wife for her life, and after her death to "the incorporated society in Dublin for promoting English Protestant schools in Ireland," and their successors for ever, that the wife paid The settlors executed their the charges, and in 1801, assigned all her title in the estates to L. N. R., subject to the charges -Held, that the mortgagees could not, in a suit after her decease; that in 1801 the wife died; for redemption brought by one of the remainder-that afterwards the plaintiffs got possession of men, be ordered to produce the deed of settle-part of the estates, but that I. Where the respective titles alleged by the plaintiff and defendant were antagonistic, the plaintiff claiming the reversion in lands, alleged to be in the possession of the defendant as lessee. and the defendant claiming to be entitled in fee to such lands, but admitting that he derived his title under a person alleged by the plaintiff to have been lessee only, and that the parcels mentioned in the deed under which he claimed, in some respects, although not wholly, corresponded with the parcels described in the demise to such alleged lessee, it was held that the plaintiff was ontitled to a discovery of such parcels, and to a production of so much of the purchase deed as described them. A trustee, under the circumstances ordered to produce the title deeds (mentioned in the schedule to his answer) of an estate charged in the bill to have been purchased with the trustmoneys, though his answer alleged that it was purchased with his own money, and that the deeds constituted his own title. — Documents produced by Defendant to Defeat Plaintiff.]—The court does not usually compel a party to produce his title deeds as evidence; but where a party produces them to defeat his adversary, the opposite side is entitled to an inspection of them. Grange v. Cass, 2 Y. & J. 241,

By Interrogatories.] - In an action for the recovery of land the plaintiff is entitled to discovery as to all matters relevant to his own and not to the defendant's case. In an action for the recovery of land the plaintiff claimed as assignce of co-heiresses of a deceased intestate owner of the land, and the defendant relied on his possession and also set up the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to interrogate the defendant as to matters relevant to the pedigree and heirship of hisassignors and as to alleged admissions by the defendant that his possession of the land was as trustee for the intestate and her heirs, even though the plaintiff might have other means of proving the facts inquired after; and that the defendant must answer the interrogatories in substance, subject to any privilege against particular discovery which he might be entitled to claim. Lyell v. Kennedy, 52 L. J., Ch. 385; 8 App. Cas. 217; 48 L. T. 585; 31 W. R. 618.—H L. (E.). And see Wrentmore v. Hagley, 46 L. T. 741. G. alleged that no such contents of those instruments and the nature of their title, and to set forth a schedule of documents in their power, in the usual way. they were not bound to make this discovery, and, after admitting the possession of certain others relating in any manner to the title of the plaintiff :- Held, on exception to a report of the master, finding the answer sufficient, that the defendants were bound to set forth whether they had made the alleged representations as to their title, but not whether such representations were true, or to discover the nature of their title, and that they must set forth a schedule of all documents in their power. Potter v. Waller, 2 De G. & Sm. 410.

Bill prayed that the defendant might state the particulars of his pedigree as heir, and of the births, baptisms, marriages, deaths, or burials; demurrer allowed. Iry v. Kekewick, 2 Ves. J. 679: 3 R. R. 30.

brought by defendant, as landlord, on account of dilapidations of buildings by plaintiff as tenant, and for a discovery whether defendant has not since commencement of action assigned his interest in buildings, defendant cannot pro-tect himself from discovery by plea, that when dilapidations were committed defendant was entitled, and that they had ever since continued out of repair. Bedford (Duke) v. M'Numara 1 Price, 208.

In a suit by the owner of lands adjoining a manor to establish a right of common appurtenant to his tenement :—Held, that the defen-dant, though not a tenant of the manor, was entitled to require the production of all doenments which might support his claim. Minet v. Morgan, 18 W. R. 1015.

The defendants, before putting in their statement of defence, moved for the production by the plaintiffs of the conveyance under which they held their land, in order to ascertain whether it contained a reservation of minerals :-Held,

G. had been in undisturbed possession of lands the settlement and will, and to set forth the people as F. or W. had ever been interested in or connected with the property, and filed a bill of discovery against R., praying that the defendant might discover and set forth "in what character The defendants, in their answer, submitted that or right, and under or through what person or persons, he claimed to be entitled to the possession of the premises; or what was the nature of documents, denied having in their power any his claim, and how he made out the same"; and also praying for an injunction to restrain the action until the discovery given. Injunction granted until answer. Garle v. Rabinson, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 633.

Obligation of a party holding a fiduciary office over property under another to make a discovery of the particulars of an adverse title set up by him. The corporation of London, as conservators of the river Thames under the crown, claiming the freshold of the bed and shores:—Held, bound to discover the charters under which they held. Att.-Gen. v. London Corporation, 12 Beav. 8; 18 L. J., Ch. 314. Affirmed 2 Hall & Tw. 1: 13 Jur. 973.

A cross-bill for discovery of cvidence charged that the defendant was aware that the evidence. to be given in support of his pedigree in the original bill was not true, and sought for a discovery of the residence, profession, marriage, age and period of the death of each of his ancestors as stated in the original bill, and of the children of each, the nature and particulars of the evidence of the defendant's pedigree, what inquiries he had made of his witnesses, with the name and residence of each witness, together with the facts which each could prove, and when and where the defendant got possession of any deeds, &c., evidencing his poligree. A demnirer to a discovery of these and other similar matters was overruled; the court holding that a defendant in a cross-cause cannot resist a discovery of matter as to which he might himself have enforced a discovery in the original suit. A party defending a possession is entitled to more consideration in a court of equity than a claimant seeking to disturb it. A discovery of evidence is not confined to a disclosure of such facts only as will tend to establish affirmatively the case of a plaintiff in possession. A person in possession is not to be called upon by a claimant to disclose his title-deeds, unless it be shown that there is a common title, or that they will affirmatively establish the claim. O'Connor v. Malone, San. & Sc. 516.

A demurrer was allowed to be amended by confining it to so much of a cross-bill (not in aid of a defence at law) as sought for a discovery of the names and residence of the witnesses for the plaintiff in the original suit, and of the evidence which they could give. Id. 551.

A. being in possession of an estate under a decree in 1783, B, filed a bill against him to it contained a reservation of minorials.—Held, decree in 1783, B. filed a bill against lim to that, the land having been conveyed to the recover the estate, and brought a write of right plaintiffs in fee simple, they were prima facie for the same purpose. A. then filed a bill entitled to the land down to the centre of the lagainst B., seeking for a discovery of matters earth, and unless the defendants could shew relating to B.'s pedigree, and praying that B. that they were not so entitled, the plaintiffs might elect whether he would proceed at law or could not be compelled to produce their title in equity, and that, if he elected the former, that ing at law to recover the estate. B. demurred, because the bill sought a discovery of matters constituting his case at law, and because the order for putting him to his election ought to be obtained on motion, and not at the hearing. Denurrer overruled. Loundes v. Davies, 6 Sim. 468

Counterpart. ] - In ejectment on the title. where the question was, whether the lands in dispute were included in a lease which had been lost, but of which a counterpart was in the possession of the plaintiff, he was ordered to permit the defendant to inspect and take a copy of the counterpart. Barry v. Scully, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 449.

VI. PUBLIC POLICY.

Affairs of State. |- In an action against the secretary of the Board of Trade for acts done by the board's servants, an order having been obtained for discovery of documents, he made an affidavit stating that he had, as secretary to the board, certain official documents in his official enstody and control, and that he objected to state anything further with respect to them on the ground of public policy :- Held, that this was insufficient to establish the privilege claimed. Kain v. Farrer, 37 L. T. 469.

Semble, it is not enough to state, in a mere formal affidavit, that discovery is objected to on the ground of public policy ; but it should appear that the mind of a responsible person has been brought to bear on the question of the expediency to the public interest of giving or refusing the information asked for. Ib.

In such an action, the defendant not having denied his responsibility for the acts of the servants of the board, possession of documents by the board which are under his official control, is possession by himself. Ib.

When a collision occurs between one of the queen's ships and a ship belonging to a private owner, and the captain of the queen's ship makes (in accordance with the usual practice) a report to the lords of the admiralty, the court of admiralty will not, in a cause against the captain, in which an appearance has been entered by the queen's proctor by order of the lords of the admiralty, order it to be produced for inspection by the opposite parties if the secretary to the lords of the admiralty makes an affidavit to the effect that such production would be prejudicial to the public service. he might be perpetually restrained from proceed- production cannot be enforced in a court of law. M'Elveney v. Connellan, 17 Ir. C. L. R. 55.

In an action for libel the plaintiff, in his affidavit of documents, stated that he had in his enstedy, in his capacity of governor of a colony, copies of communications which had passed either between the secretary of state for the colonies and himself as such governor, or between the royal commissioner appointed to inquire into the affairs of the colony and himself as such governor, or between the commissioner and the secretary of state; and that the attention of the secretary of state had been directed to the nature and dates of the documents, and that he had directed the plaintiff not to produce them, and to object to their production, on the ground of the interest of the state and of the public service, and that the plaintiff, therefore, objected to produce them on those grounds :--Held, on motion for liberty to inspect the documents, that the motion must be refused. Hennessy v. Wright, 57 L. J., Q. B. 530; 21 Q. B. D. 509; 59 L. T. 323; 53 J. P. 52.

Documents belonging to Colonial Government.]-An action was brought against the agent-general to a colonial government by persons who had entered into a contract with that government and who claimed relief in respect of a sum of money which they alleged had been received by the defendant from that government as trustee for the plaintiffs, and afterwards, in breach of trust, repaid by him to that government. On an application by the plaintiffs for discovery of documents by the defendant, he made an affidavit specifying certain documents, but objecting to produce some of them on the ground that he had no property in them; that they were the property of the colonial government (which was not a party to the action), and had been acquired by him merely in his capacity of agent-general, and subject to the directions of that government; and that the prime minister of the colony had directed him not to produce the documents, except under an order of the court, and to object to their production on the ground of the interest of the state and of the public service. The plaintiffs then took out a summons to compel production of the documents, which the defendant objected to produce :-Held, that an official was only entitled to take copies for his own protection, and to use them for that purpose and not for ordinary purposes, and that it would be a dereliction of duty on the part of the defendant to produce documents which he knew his superiors objected to produce, and that the court had no jurisdiction to order him to do so. Wright v. Mills, 62 L. T. 558.

Affairs of East India Company. ]-A correspondence having passed between the court of directors of the East India Company and the commissioners for the affairs of India (in pursuance of the requisitions of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85), relating to a dispute which had arisen with respect to a commercial transaction in which the company had been engaged with a third party, is, on the ground of public policy, a privi-leged communication. Smith v. East India Cv., 1 Ph. 50; 11 L. J., Ch. 71.

An independent sovereign prince was possessed Official Communication.]—Reports made in the of two promissory notes of the East India Comdischarge of the duties of their respective offices pany. In the course of a war between this by government officials to the crown, or its sovereign and the company the notes were taken representatives, are state documents and their as spoils of war. The prince filed a bill in equity against the company for the recovery of the private dancing, not to public places only, notes; and upon the coming in of the answer, | Clarke v. Scarle, 1 Esp. 25. moved for the production of documents :- Held, that he was not entitled to their production, they being political communications, relating to matters of government and state affairs, which had passed between the company and their agents. Csorg (Rajah) v. East India Co., 25 L. J., Ch. 345; 4 W. R. 421; 8 De G., M. & G. 182; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 407.

The refusal to compel such production is grounded on the reason that such production would be prejudicial to the public interests, and therefore against public policy, and also that such matters are, from their nature, exempt from municipal jurisdiction. 1b.

Semble, that documents not in the nature of political communications are not protected from production by having been sent along with documents which are protected as having a political character. Ib.

Books of Bank of England. ]-To a bill for discovery of stock standing in the name of the plaintiff's late father, either alone or jointly, for twenty years before and at his death, and for an inspection of the bank books containing the entries of such stock, the bank, in their answer, set forth an account of the stock, but declined on public grounds to set forth a list of the books containing the entries :-Held, that they were not exempted from the production of their books, and therefore ought to set forth a list of them. Heslop v. Bank of England, 6 Sim, 192.

--- "Keeping" House for Occasional Use.]

A house is not "kept for public dancing or other public entertainment of the like kind" within the 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 2, if a concert to which the public is admitted on payment of money is given on one day in the year, although the house may be used on other days in the year for dramatic entertainments under a licence from L. But a mere temporary use of a room in a public-house for the purpose of dancing on a particular festival or occasion, does not subject the owner to the penalty of the statute. Shutt v. Lewis, 5 Esp. 128; 8 h. R. 140.

In an action to recover the penalty for keeping an unlicensed house for public dancing, it appeared that music, dancing, &c., had occasionally taken place at the defendant's house (a publichouse), that no money was taken by him for admission, but the rooms were let to persons who sold tickets and received money for admission at the door; but there was no direct evidence that the defendant knew of this practice :- Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury of a keeping of the house by the defendant for the purposes mentioned in the statute, and that the judge was wrong in directing a nonsuit. Programmes of the performance were laid about in different parts of the room. The company was respectable, and no money was paid for admission, nor any extra charge made for the articles consumed there. An action having been brought for a penalty under 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, the judge directed the jury to say whether the room was used for the purpose of supplying refreshments in the manner of an hotel, the music and singing being incidental merely, or whether it was used princi-pally for musical performances; and ultimately he directed them to consider whether the room was used for both purposes, in which latter case the informer would be entitled to the verdict. The jury found that the room was used for the purpose of an hotel, and found a verdict for A. : -Held, that although the verdict might be against the evidence, there was no misdirection.

> - Revocation of Licence. - By a local act for the government of Cardiff, no house or room shall be kept or used for public dancing or music without a licence from the justices on their general annual licensing day, and any house or room so kept and used without such licence shall be deemed a disorderly house, and the person occupying or rated as the occupier of the same, shall, on conviction before any two justices, be liable to a penalty. An inscription on the door or entrance is to be affixed, "Licensed pursuant to act of parliament." No house or room, although licensed, shall be opened for any of the said purposes except between the hours stated in the licence, and notice as to the inscription and the limitation of time was to be inserted in the licence. In case of a breach of these conditions the licence might be forfeited, and revoked by the justices at any subsequent annual licensing day. Provided that it shall be lawful for every person who shall think himself aggrieved by any order of such justices to appeal therefrom to the queen's bench. L. received from the justices a licence for a room in 1870, and in each subsequent year until 1873, when they refused a further renewal. The licence in 1871 contained no limitation as to time, but the others both before and after were for one year. In 1871, L. transferred all his interest in this room to H., and some of his performances were indecent. On these grounds the justices revoked the licence in 1873, and neither L. nor H. appealed. H. afterwards opened the room as before, and was convicted for so doing without a licence: —Held, that the conviction was right, Hoffman v. Bond, 32 L. T. 775.

- Grant of, by County Council. - See LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

Suing for Penalties.]—A person keeping a house open is (at all events during the same licensing year) liable only to one penalty, Garrett v. Messenger, 36 L. J., C. P. 337; L. R. 2 C. P. 583; 16 L. T. 414; 15 W. R. 164; 10 Cox, C. C. 498.

2. Brothels.

Meaning of. ]-A place where one woman has been accustomed to receive men is not a brothel, within the meaning of s. 13 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885. Singleton v. Ellison, 64 L. J., M. C. 123; [1895] 1 Q. B. 607; 15 R. 201; 72 L. T. 236; 43 W. R. 426; 18 Cox, C. C. 79:59 J. P. 119.

Prosecution for-Right of Informant to Reward.]-In an action upon 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, by one of the two inhabitants who has given information to the parish constable, of A. keeping a public entertainment of a like kind, the justices prosecuted to conviction, it is necessary, in order have a discretion to grant a licence for one of the purposes only, viz., music; and the keeper of a recover the reward of 10l. from the overseers, that the prosecution should have been conducted; that the prosecution should have been conducted. To render persons indictable for keeping a by the parish constable, Clarkev. Rice, 1 B. & Ald. common and disorderly house, it is not neces-694; 19 R. R. 422.

In an action upon 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 5, by one of the two inhabitants who had given information to the parish constable of A. keeping a disorderly house, in consequence whereof he was indicted at the next sessions and pleaded guilty, but was not brought up for judgment until some months afterwards :- Held, that A, was not convicted, "within the meaning of the statute, until sentence pronounced; and, consequently, that the action was well brought against the licensed victualler or licensed to sell beer by reoverseers who were then in office. Burgess v. Boetefeur, 8 Scott (N.R.) 194; 7 Man. & G. 481; 13 L. J., M. C. 122; 8 Jur. 621.

Held, also, that a demand upon the overseers, and a neglect or refusal by them to pay the reward, entitled the plaintiff to maintain an action that they have in fact met for purposes of prosagainst them for the penalty imposed by the act, notwithstanding no demand had been made upon the churchwardens. Ib.

The constable, under 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 5, or the overseers, under 58 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 7, must be the real and bona fide prosecutors of the indictment, Ib,

Removal of, by Certiorari. -No indietment for keeping a disorderly house can be removed by certiorari, whether the indietment is at the prosecution of a constable, or at the instance of a private individual. Reg. v. Sanders, 9 Q. B. 235; 15 L. J., M. C. 158; 10 Jur. 1080.

— Jurisdiction of Quarter Sessions.]—There is nothing in 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, which takes away or prevents the quarter sessions for a borough from having jurisdiction to try an indictment against a person for keeping a disorderly house.

Meg. v. Churles, 31 L. J., M. C. 69; 7 Jur. (x.s.)

1308; 5 L. T. 328; 10 W. R. 62; 9 Cox, C. C. 18.

Keeping-What amounts to.]-An owner of a house, proved to be a common bawdy-house, let it out to weekly tenants, but did not appear to have got any additional rent by reason of the purposes to which the house was applied. He was frequently remonstrated with as to the manner in which the house was conducted, and called upon to abate the nuisance, and was told that unless he did so, an indictment would be preferred against him. He, however, took no steps, and allowed matters to go on as before :-Held, that he was not guilty of keeping a common bawdy-house, or of being an accessory thereto. Reg. v. Barrett, 1 L. & C. 263; 32 L. J., M. C. 36; 7 L. T. 435; 11 W. R. 124; 9 Cox. C. C. 255.

A landlord was indicted for keeping and maintaining a common bawdy-house, and a disorderly house. The house was let out in apartments to young women, by distinct takings as weekly tenants, but the landlord did not occupy any part, nor keep the key, nor reserve to himself any right of entry. The tenants so occupied the house as to cause it to be a scandal to the neighbourhood. The only profit the landlord derived Non-gratuitous Entertainment — Action for was the increased rent. Complaints were made Penalties—"Keeper"—"Person managing or to the landlord, and he well knew the use to which the apartments were applied by his tenants, but he took no steps to remove the for dancing and music on week-days in his own lodgers :- Held, that the landlord did not keep name, and let it to a Sunday lecture society in longers:—Rea, one the infinition of the latest and the letter of the latest letter of the lat sary that the disorderly conduct should be seen from the exterior of the house. Evidence of men and prostitutes constantly meeting there for immoral purposes is sufficient to sustain the Infinitial purposes is studietine to sustain the indictment. Reg. v. Rice, 35 L. J., M. C. 93; L. R. 1 C. C. 21; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 126; 13 L. T. 382; 14 W. R. 56; 10 Cox, C. C. 155.

By a local act a penalty was imposed, recoverable before a justice, on any person keeping a shop where refreshment is sold, not being a tail to be drunk on the premises, if he knowingly permits disorderly conduct in such shop, or knowingly suffers prostitutes to meet together and remain there :- Held, that if the justice inferred from prostitutes coming together to such shop, titution or other disorderly conduct, he should, whether there has been actual disorderly conduct or not, convict the owner of the shop who has knowingly permitted this, but not otherwise. Greig v. Bendeno, El. Bl. & El. 133; 27 L. J., M. C. 294; 6 W. R. 474.

— Aiding and Abetting in keeping.]—A. was charged with aiding and abetting U. in keeping a disorderly house. A. was the head waiter in the establishment, and servant to C., and in the absence of C., against whom several warrants were out for keeping the establishment in a disorderly manner, A. acted as manager on certain nights, when it was conducted in a disorderly manner :-Held, that these facts would have been sufficient to justify the magistrate in finding A. guilty of the charge made against him : and that the existence of the relationship of master and servant between himself and C. constituted no defence to the charge. Wilson v. Stewart, 3 B. & S. 913; 32 L. J., M. C. 198; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1130; 8 L. T. 277; 11 W. R. 640; 9 Cox, C. C. 354.

Summary Proceedings against Keeper-Procedure.]-By s. 13 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, the directions contained in 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 6, for the arrest of a person accused by two inhabitants of a parish of keeping a disorderly house, are applicable to summary proceedings under the Criminal Law Amendment Act. Rey. v. Newton, 61 L. J., M. C. 121; [1892] 1 Q. B. 648; 66 L. T. 830; 40 W. R. 688; 17 Cox, C. C. 530 ; 56 J. P. 408.

In a prosecution of a brothel-keeper under s, 13 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, it is competent to the prosecutor either to proceed summarily under that act independently of the earlier acts, or he may, at his option, comply with the preliminary steps specified in s. 5 of 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, as amended by s. 7 of 58 Geo. 3 c. 70, and then become entitled to a reward Kirwin v. Hines, 54 L. T. 610; 50 J. P. 230.

a. Generally.

Must have Reversion of Interest.]-Where A, being seised in fee, leased premises to B. for 61 years, and afterwards granted a lease to C. of the same premises, to commence at the expiration of the 61 years:—Held, that by the lense to C., A. did not part with his reversion, so as to disentitle him to distrain for rent due from B. under his lease. Smith v. Day, 2 M. & W. 684; M. & H. 135; 6 L. J., Ex. 219.

Reversion severed.]—The plaintiff was tenant to six in number, who were joint-tenants of the reversion. Four executed a conveyance of the reversion to H.; the other two did not execute it. Afterwards the six distrained the plaintiff's goods for rent due to the six before the conveyance :- Held, that by the severance of the reversion the right to distrain for this rent was gone. Staveley v. Alevek, 16 Q. B. 636; 20 L. J., Q. B. 320; 15 Jur. 628.

Assignment of Term. ]-A lessee for years, who assigns his term, cannot distrain for rent, but must bring his action on the contract.

v. Cooper, 2 Wils, 375.
A., lessee of two farms, agreed with B. that he should have them during the leases; B. to remain tenant to A. during that period; and at the leaving the farms, B. was to be paid for the fallows and dung. B. took possession, and paid one year's rent to A., who afterwards distrained for your intervent. for rent in arrear :- Held, that he was not Taunt. 593; 20 R. R. 575.

One who had a term which expired on the a demise for the whole of his term, he had no distrain. Flesher v. Trotman, 6 L. T. 218—right to distrain. Freeze v. Corrie, 5 Bing. 24: | Ex. Ch. | Ex. Ch. |

Where a lease came into the hands of the original lessor, by an agreement entered into between him and the assignee of the original lessee, "that the lessor should have the premises as mentioned in the lease, and should pay a particular sun over and above the rent annually, towards the goodwill already paid by such assignce"; such agreement operated as a surrender of the whole term. The sum in the agreement is considered as a sum to be paid annually in gross, not as rent, and the assignee cannot distrain either for that or for the original rent; but he has a remedy by action for the sum reserved for the goodwill. Smith v. Mapleback, 1 Term Rep. 441; 1 R. R. 247.

By a deed of settlement a mortgage term of 1,000 years was created, and lands settled to R. for life, subject thereto, with divers remainders over. The deed contained a power to R. to lease for ten years, or for seven years, to commence from her death. She demised under the power for seven years from her death, reserving the rent to the person who should be entitled for the time being to the freehold or inheritance :-Held, that the trustees of the term for 1,000 years were the parties entitled to the reversion; and consequently, that their assignee might distrain on the lessee. Rogers v. Humphreys, 4 A. & E. 299; 5 N. & M. 511; 1 H. & W. 625; 5 J., K. B. 65.

Held, also, that the fact of the trustees having joined in the ejectment against the lessee, which was still pending, did not prevent such distress.

Tenant from year to year Underletting. ]-A tenant from year to year, underletting from year to year, has a reversion which entitles him to distrain. Curtis v. Wheeler, M. & M. 493.

Lessee against Agent in Occupation. -- Where A, took a lease in writing, in his own name, of premises, and subsequently occupied part only, and paid rent for so much as he occupied to B., as whose agent he, in fact, took the lease :-Held, that B. might distrain for the part so occupied, and that A. was precluded in replevin from disputing his title. Clarke v. Waterton, 2 M. & Rob. 87; 8 Car. & P. 365.

Husband and Wife. ]-The wife of a defendant in replevin had, at the time of her marriage, the equity of redemption in the locus in quo, which was then settled to her separate use. She was allowed to enjoy the property, and she and the defendant (or he in her name) let it to the plaintiff, she receiving the rents until she died. The defendant then distrained for rent subsequently accruing:—Held, that it was not lawful for him to do so, and that he was liable in replevin. Howe v. Scarrott, 4 H. & N. 423; 28 L. J., Ex. 325.

Apportionment of.]-C. occupied two parcels of land upon an understanding that he should gagee to the tenant to pay the rent does not entitled so to do, as the agreement operated as let off a portion of it when he could. He paid the an absolute assignment of all A.'s interest in the rent agreed upon for more than a year, and he Parmenter v. Webber, 2 Moore, 656; 8 then let off a portion of each parcel to A. and B. separately, who paid rent to D., and C, continued to hold the residue himself. The rent becoming 11th November, let the premises verbally from in arrear, the landlord distrained :- Held, that the 11th September to that day, for a certain there was evidence that the rent was apportion-rent payable immediately:—Held, that as it was able, and that the landlord was entitled to able, and that the landlord was entitled to

> No Lien on Replevied Goods. - Goods taken on distress for rent, and replevied, the distrainor has no lien on the goods, but is left to his remedy on the replevin bond. Bradyll v. Ball, 1 Bro. C, C, 427.

b. Mortgagees.

Tenant in Possession under Lease prior to Mortgage. ]-A mortgagee, after giving notice of the mortgage to the tenant in possession under a lease prior to the mortgage, is entitled to the rent in arrear at the time of the notice, as well as to what accrues afterwards; and he may distrain for it after such notice. Moss v. Gallimore, 1 Dougl. 279.

If a lease is granted by a mortgagor prior to the mortgage, the mortgagee has the same rights against the lessee and those claiming under him that the mortgagor had, and no other than he had; and his remedy must be on the lease as assignce of the reversion, so long as the lease is in existence and the tenant acknowledges his title. If, however, the lease is subsequent to the mortgage, then the mortgagee may treat the lessee and all those who may be in possession as wrongdoers, and may bring ejectment, but he cannot distrain or bring any action for the rent they have contracted to pay, as there is no re-lation of landlord and tenant between them. If the tenant chooses to pay the rent to the mortgagee, and he accepts it, a relation of landlord and tenant is created between the mortgagee and the tenant; and the remedy of the mortgagee will depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Rogers v. Humphreys, 1 H. & W. 625; 4 A. & E. 299; 5 N. & M. 511; 5 L. J., K. B. 65.

A lessee for a term sublet a house for a period less than his term to the plaintiff at a rent reserved and made payable by equal quarterly payments on the four usual quarter days. He after-wards mortgaged the premises to the defendants as security for money advanced by them for a term less than his own, but greater than the plaintiff's. Without knowledge of this mortgage, but after it was entered into, the plaintiff paid his lessor a sum of money for rent before it was due. Between the payment and the rent day the defendants gave the plaintiff notice of their mortgage, and required him to pay them the rent due upon his lease. Afterwards they distrained for this rent:—Held, that this payment was no discharge of the plaintiff's liability to pay rent when it became due, and therefore the defendants were justified in distraining.

Do Nicols v. Saunders, 39 L. J., C. P. 297;
L. R. 5 C. P. 58; 22 L. T. 661; 18 W. R.

- Under Lease subsequent to Mortgage.]-Where a lease is granted by a mortgagor after the date of the mortgage, notice by the mortfor rent in arrear after the notice. Esnas v. Elliott, 1 P. & D. 256; 9 A. & E. 342; 1 W.W. & H. 144; 8 L. J., Q. B. 51.

Where, after notice, the mortgagee distrained for half a year's rent, and rent was paid by the -Held that tenant subsequently to the distress :this did not constitute a tenancy by relation back, so as to entitle the mortgagee to distrain for the rent due previously.

Mortgagor Tenant to Mortgagee. - A mortgage deed, executed by the mortgagor only, contained, in addition to the usual clauses, the following: that "for better securing the interest, the mortgagor does attorn and become tenant of the premises to the mortgagee, at the rent of 40%, payable half-yearly, so long as the principal sum shall remain secured." The mortgagor having continued in possession of the premises, and having made several of these half-yearly payments, which, however, were described in the receipts given by the mortgagee as being for interest :- Held, that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, and that the former had the right to distrain for the amount of a half-year's arrears. v. Fritche, 3 Ex. 216; 18 L. J., Ex. 50.

By a mortgage deed it was provided that the mortgager in the event of his making default in payment of the moneys advanced to him, should immediately, or at any time after such default, hold the mortgaged premises as yearly tenant to the mortgagees from the date of the deed at a specified rent, and that they should have the same remedies for recovering the rent as if it had been reserved upon a common lease. The mortgagor having made default, the mortgagees, without having given him any notice of their intention thenceforward to treat him as a tenant, distrained, after the lapse of more than a year from default, as for a year's rent in arrear:— Held, that not having given him notice of their intention to treat him as a tenant, they were not entitled to distrain. Clowes v. Hughes, 39 L. J., Ex. 62; L. R. 5 Ex. 160; 22 L. T. 103; 18

B., in consideration of advances from his by a deed reciting that one portion was already mortgaged in fee upon trusts for the sale of the land and application of the purchase-money; and as a further security for the principal and interest for the time being due from him in respect of the advances, he attorned and became tenant to the bankers, their heirs and assigns, at and from the date of the deed, of such of the premises thereby conveyed " as were in his occupation for and during the term of ten years, if that security should so long continue, at and under the yearly rent of 800L, to be paid yearly on every 1st October in every year, the first yearly rent to be paid and payable on the 1st October then next, provided that notwithstanding anything therein contained, and without any notice or demand of possession, it should be law-ful for the mortgagees, their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, before or after the execution of the trusts of sale therein contained, to enter into and upon the mortgaged premises or any part, and to eject B. and any tenant or person claiming or to claim under him therefrom, and to determine the term of ten years, notwith to the defendant, at the yearly rent of 150%, for standing any lease or leases that might have which rent it should be lawful for the defendant constitute a tenancy between the mortgagee and | been granted by him." This deed was not exetenant, so as to enable the mortgagee to distrain ented by the mortgagees, the bankers, but B. continued his exclusive occupation of the premises until the mortgagees distrained upon them for arrears of rent. No rent had ever been paid: -Held, first, that the non-execution of the deed by the mortgagees was no objection to the right to distrain, as the effect of the deed was to create not a term of years but a tenancy at will. to which B. had assented by attorning and continning to occupy the premises. Morton v. Woods, 9 B. & S. 632; 38 L. J., Q. B. 81; L. R. 4 Q. B. 293; 17 W. R. 414—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that after having attorned and continued so to occupy he could not object that the deed shewed that he and his mortgagees had only an equitable interest in part of the premises mortgaged, or deny that the relation of landlord and tenant subsisted between himself and the mortgagees. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the deed was not void as against the assignees in bankruptcy of the mortgagor for want of registration as a bill of sale.

B., by deed of 23rd September, 1856, mortgaged his interest in leasehold premises, and goods therein to V. & Co., and thereby to the intent that they might "have, for the recovery of the interest accruing on the principal secured, the same powers of entry and distress as are by law given to landlords for the recovery of rent in arrear." B., attorned tenant to V. & Co. of the premises from year to year, at a fixed rent. On 18th February, 1857, he further mortgaged the same premises and goods to the defendant, the deed reserving a power of entry to the defendant, on default in payment by B. B. having made default in payment of principal and interest, the defendant, on 27th October, 1858, paid off V. & Co.'s mortgage, and took an assignment of it from them, containing the usual nower of attorney. On the same day the defendant took possession of the premises, B, continuing in occupation, with notice that the defendant had done so. On 12th November, 1858, the defendant gave B. notice to quit, with which he did not comply. On the following 20th November the defendant entered and seized and sold goods on the premises, for payment of interest by way bankers, conveyed to them two pieces of ground of rent in arrear due to V. & Co. before the assignment of the mortgage :- Held, that the attornment clause in the deed of 23rd September, 1856, did not justify such seizure and sale. That such clause created a tenancy, but gave V. & Co. a right to distrain only so long as such tenancy continued, and that such tenancy was put an end to by the assignment from V. & Co. to the defendant. Brown v. Metropolitan Counties Life Insurance Society, 1 El. & El. 832; 28 L. J., Q. B. 236; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1028.

Held, also, that such clause did not support a plea of leave and licence, for that the defendant could not justify as the servant of V. & Co., even if the clause amounted only to a personal licence to V. & Co. to seize chattels, such licence not being transferable, and V. & Co. having no power to act under it after the assignment.

- Sufficiency of Averments in Plea-Trespass.]-Trespass to goods. Plea, that by a deed, made in 1847, between Q, and the defendant, who was possessed of premises for an unexpired term, that Q. should hold the premises as tenant at will to distrain, as landlowls may, for rents reserved, on leases for years; that Q, held the premises under the deed; that three years and a partier arrears of rent became due during the time Q, held the premises as such tenant, and the defonant was possessed of them as a foresaid; and that the defendant distrained the goods for rent. The plaintiff set out the deed, from which it appeared that Q, having become, in 1847, the elsesse of the premises under M. for twenty-one years, wanting one day, and having borrowed money from the defendant, demised the premises to the defendant by way of mortgage at a peppercorn rent, and that the defendant redemised the same to Q, at a yearly rent of 1504, with power of distress:—Held, that the plea was bad in not shewing such an interest in the premises on the part of the defendant as entitled him to distrain. Pinhorn v. Sonster, 8 Ex. 763; 22 L. J. Ex. 18; 16 Jur. (8.8.) 1001; 1 W, R. 386.

For Arrears of Interest.]—A mortgager in possession may give a mortgage in fee a power to distrain for interest in arrear. Chapman v. Beecham, 8 G. & D. 71; 3 Q. B. 723; 12 L. J., Q. B. 42; 6 Jur. 968.

A mortgagee, under a power in a mortgage deed, embling him to distrain for arrears furcrest "in like manner as for rent," distrained after the date of the demise in the declaration, but for arrears due before such demise, the mortgagor having (without any express provision in the deed enabling him to do so) continued in possession:—Held, that such distress did not amount to a recognition of the mortgagor as tenant, so as to disable the mortgage from bringing ejectment. Doe d. Wilkinson v. Goodier, 10 Q. B. 957; 16 L. J., Q. B. 485.

Mortgagor on behalf of Mortgagoe.]—If a lessor, having mortgaged lits reversion, is permitted by the mortgagoe to continue in the receipt of the rent incident to that reversion, he, during such reversion is presumptione juris authorised, if it should become necessary to realise the rent by distress, and to distrain for it in the mortgagoe's name as his bailiff. *Trent v. *Linnt*, 9 Ex. 14; 22 L. J., Ex. 318; 17 Jur. 899; 1 W. R. 481.

Assignee of Equity of Redemption on behalf of Mortgages.]—Where a mortgage by demise has been paid off by the assignee of the equity of redemption, who takes from the mortgages an undertaking to exeeute a transfer of the mortgage, there is an implied authority to the assignee of the equity of redemption to distrain in the name of the mortgages. Suelt v. Einelt, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 351; 7 L. T. 47; 1 J. W. R. 341.

In Possession. ]—A mortgagee in possession is not chargeable as for wilful default, in declining to defend an action of replevin brought by the owner of property which was on the premises, and seized under a distress for rent Levied by the mortgagee. Cocks v. Gray, 1 Giff, 77; 26 L. J., Ch. 60; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1115; 5 W. R. 749.

c. Annuitants and Grantees of Rentcharges.

Rent-charges binding a Legal Interest in Land.]—An annuitant may distrain for arrears, though a term is vested in himself to secure the payment. Fairfax v. Gran, 2 W. Bl. 1326.

A distress may be taken for arrears of a rentcharge, created by will; although the testator does not in terms give a power to distrain. That power is a consequence drawn by law from the rent-charge. Rodham v. Berry, 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 202.

A devise of lands to A, for life, remainder to B, in fee, subject to and charged with the payment of 20*l*. a year to C, during her life, to be paid by A, as long as she should live, and after her decease to be paid by B, is a charge on the land, for which C, may distrain. Buttery v. Robinsan, 3 Bing, 392; ‡ L. J. (0.8.) C, f. 108; 28 R, R, 656.

A mortgagor who had the equity of redemption in fee, and the mortgagee the legal owner of lands in fee simple, conveyed the lands to and to the use of second mortgagees and their leirs, with a power of sale. There was a provise that, in the event of the second mortgagees, or of any one claiming under them, entering under that power, the land should theneforth for ever be charged with the payment to the mortgagor, his heirs and nesigns of an annual sum of 40th recoverable by distress. The deed was not executed by the second mortgagees. The latter in default of payment, entered the lands and sold them to A, subject to this annual sum. A, entered, and until he sold the land to the plaintiff, paid the mortgagor this annual sum. A land was conveyed by A, to the plaintiff, so far as the same might be legally chargeable on or affect the lands. This rent-charge of 40th afterwards vested in the defonant, who distrained for the same, the plaintiff neglecting to pay:—Held, that the defendant was justified in distraining, as the rent-charge was well created and valid at law under the Statute of Uses, and that it was not void as commencing at a period too remote, and so commencing the rule against perpetuities. Gill-bertson v. Richards, 5 H. & N. 453; 29 L. J., Ex. 213; 6 Jun. (N.S.) 672—Ex. Ch.

Ex. 215; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 612—Ex. Ct.
Replevin for taking goods and standing corn.
Cognisance, that by deed of 25th September, 1806. A. granted to B. an annuity, charged on the premises, with power to enter and distrain for the arrears and the distresses "to detain, manage, sell and dispose of, in the same manner in all respects as distresses for rents reserved on leases for years," and that C. as B.'s bailiff entered and distrained for arrears of that aunuity. Plea in bar, that by a (previous) deed of 7th May, 1806, A. granted to D. an annuity charged on the (same) premises; and for better securing the payment, granted, sold and denised them to E. for 99 years with power of distress; and that arrears had accrued and were due :-Held, first, that as no entry appeared by E., the first grantee, or by any person in privity with him, after the demise of 7th May, 1806, no estate vested in him at common law by that deed; secondly, that as no election appeared by E., the first grantee, to take under that deed as a bargain and sale, pursuant to the Statute of Uses, and as the plaintiff in replevin was not shewn to be other than a stranger to that deed, the court could not, at his request, make that election for E., which would defeat the distress by B. under the subsequent deed of 25th September, 1806. Miller v. Green, 2 C. & J. 143; 2 Tyr. 1; 8 Bing. 92; 1 M. & Scott, 199; 1 L. J., Ex. 51—Ex. Ch.

 created, except by a grant binding some legal; same verson, who is owner of the rent, becomes entitled to the whole legal estate in the land out of which it issues. Freeman v. Edwards, 2 Ex. 732; 17 L. J., Ex. 258.

The interest of a mortgagor in possession is not a legal estate at all, and consequently cannot support a rent-charge with powers of distress. Ib.

A grant purporting to be the grant of a rentcharge, with powers to distrain, made by a person having no legal estate in the land, may operate as an irrevocable licence by the grantor to seize such goods as may be on the land at the time the grantee seizes and to treat them as a distress : and may therefore instify the seizure of the goods of the granter himself, and give the grantee an interest in them after seizure; but it does not give any interest in the goods of the grantor before seizure, and does not justify the seizure of the goods of third persons at all. Ib.

In Lieu of Tithes.]-By an inclosure act, the tithes payable in respect of certain old inclosures were extinguished, and in lieu a corn rent substituted, which was directed to be paid for ever afterwards to the impropriator and vicar, by the person, who for the time being, should be in the possession or occupation of the land out of which the rent should be issuing; and a power of distress was given for its recovery, the same as for rent service, or other rent in arrear; for several years, part of such land remained antenanted and wholly unprofitable to the owner, who, during that time, resided else-where; the land was then demised to a tenant. who entered and brought it into cultivation :-Held, that the goods of the tenant, coming in under him, were liable to be distrained for such rent in arrear. Newling v. Pearse, 2 D. & R. 607; 1 B. & C. 437; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 140. And see Bendyshe v. Pearce, 4 Moore, 99; 1 Br. & B. 460.

By a local inclosure act titles were abolished, and yearly rents imposed in lieu, which rents it declared should be charged on the land, and should be paid at the rectory house. The rector, in addition to all present powers for recovery of tithes and compositions, was to have the same powers and remedies for recovering the yearly rents when in arrear, as by common law or statute are provided and given to landlords for the recovering of rack rent. Provision was made for the apportionment of the rent-charge on the division of the lands, which apportioned part was "to be recovered from the lands or hereditaments so charged therewith, or from the owners, in such and the same manner as the whole of the yearly corn rents" were thereby made re-coverable. The commissioner was to determine what yearly sums, according to the aggregate annual amount, were equivalent to the tithes of each proprietor's old inclosed lands within the parish, which yearly sums were to be charged upon the old inclosed lands of the proprietors as yearly rents payable thereout:—Held, that the statute did not authorise an action by the rector against the owner of inclosed lands in his parish for the nonpayment of such rent-charge. Bedford v. Sutton Coldfield, 3 C. B. (x.s.) 449; 27 L. J. C. P. 105; 4 Jur. (x.s.) 133.

Held, also, that a distress for the aggregate amount of a rent-charge imposed upon lands acquired before the act, and of a rent-charge imposed on lands acquired subsequently was illegal. Ib.

Held, however, that a distress on the occupier interest in the land, and ceases to exist when the for the amount of the whole rent-charge on all the lands in the parish of the same proprietor, though comprising lands not in the occupation of such occupier, was a legal distress. Ib.

> Under Lands Clauses Act, 1845.]—The owner of a rent-charge, granted under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 10, has no power of distress other than that given by s. 11, and it does not extend to goods which the railway company has assigned for the benefit of creditors. Eyton v. Denbigh, Ruthin and Corwen Ry., 38 L. J., Ch. 74; 16 W. R. 928.

d. Agents.

Authority given to Tenants to pay Rent to. ]-An authority to tenants to pay rent to S., whose receipt shall be their discharge, does not entitle S, to distrain, although he receives the rent for his own benefit. Ward v. Shew, 9 Bing, 638; 2

M. & Scott, 756; 2 L. J., C. P. 58.
S., a bankrupt, received from his assignces the following memorandum: "Mr. S. having completed an arrangement with H. & Co., his assignees, for the five houses in Chequer-alley, and the arrears of rent thereon, the tenants on the respective premises are hereby authorised to pay their rents to S., whose receipt shall be their discharge":—Held, that this memorandum gave S, no anthority to distrain in the name of the assignees. Ib.

Power of Attorney to appoint. - A power of attorney was executed to H. R., which contained authority to demand and recover rents, "and one attorney or attorneys under him, H. R., to depute," &c.:—Held, that H. R. had power to authorise another to make a distress for rent. Eagleton v. Gutteridge, 11 M. & W. 465; 2 D. (N.S.) 1053; 12 L. J., Ex. 359.

Authority to Act as Bailiff-Certificate—Company.]—By s. 7 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, no person shall act as builtiff to distrain for rent unless he is authorised to act as bailiff by a certificate in writing under the hand of a county court judge, and any person not holding a certificate under the section who levies a distress contrary to the provisions of the act is to be deemed to be a trespasser. The defendant, who was the managing director of a limited company, levied a distress upon the plaintiff's goods for rent due in respect of certain premises of which the plaintiff was tenant to the company. The defendant was not the legal owner, nor had he any statutory authority to levy the distress, and he held no certificate to act as bailiff as provided by s. 7:—Held, that as the defendant could not justify levying the distress in any other character than as bailiff to the company, and as he had no certificate, under s. 7 to act as bailiff, he was a trespasser within the meaning of the section. Hogarth v. Jennings, 61 L. J., Q. B. 601; [1892] 1 Q. B. 907; 66 L. T. 821; 40 W. R. 517; 56 J. P. 485—C. A.

Area of Authority .- A distress was levied upon a holding to which the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, applied by a person having authority to act as a bailiff under the act from a county court judge, but not from the judge of the county court district where the holding was situate :- Held, that the enactment of s. 52-that "no person shall act as a bailiff to levy any plaintiff to levy a distress for rent on the goods distress on any holding to which this act applies of distress on any holding to which this act applies of the plantiff is tenant for 13. Sergeant, Ex parte, Sanders, In re. 54 L. J., Q. B. 331; 52 L. T. 516; 49 J. P. 582.

Improper Act of Bailiff.]—A landlord employed an attorney to distrain for rent, who prepared a warrant of distress, which the landford The attorney instructed the bailiff not to receive the rent, but to refer the tenant to him; and the bailiff thereupon refused a tender of the rent and expenses. In trover by the tenant for the goods distrained:—Held, that the authority given by law to the bailiff to receive the rent could not be restrained by the landlord or his attorney. Hatch v. Hale, 15 Q. B. 10; 19 L. J., Q. B. 289; 14 Jur. 459.

A laudlord authorised bailiffs to distrain for rent due to him, from his tenant of a farm, directing them not to take anything except on the denised premises. The bailiffs distrained cattle of another person, supposing them to be the tenant's, beyond the boundary of the farm. The cattle were sold, and the landlord received the proceeds:-Held, that the landlord was not liable in trover for the value of the cattle, unless it was found by the jury that he ratified the acts of the bailiffs with knowledge of the irregularity. or that he chose, without inquiry, to take the risk upon himself, and to adopt the whole of their acts. Lewis v. Read, 13 M. & W. 234; 14

L. J., Ex. 295. A landlord distraining is primâ facie liable for the act of his bailiff in taking goods privileged from distress, though they never come to his hands. But if, when he knows the circumstances, he disclaims and repudiates the act, he is not bound by it, Hurry v. Richman, 1 M. & Rob, 126.

A landlord gave a warrant to a broker to distrain the chattels of his tenant for rent due from him as tenant of a house. The broker, after taking the furniture, removed a shed, used as a workshop, and sold the materials, as well as a copper, which was also a fixture. The landlord received the proceeds, but without knowledge that any portion thereof had been derived from property illegally seized:—Held, that the landlord was not liable in trespass. Freeman v. Rosher, 13 Q. B. 780; 18 L. J., Q. B. 340; 13 Jur. 881.

- Collateral Tortious Act. ]-The defendant delivered a warrant to bailiffs to levy a distress The tenant and others resisted the for rent. distress, and in the affray one K. was killed by the bailiffs or those assisting them. There was no evidence that the defendant authorised the bailiffs to distrain in an illegal manner :- Held, that the illegal manner in which the distress was effected did not render the defendant liable in an action under Lord Campbell's Act; that K.'s death was caused by an act collateral to the distress, and was not expressly or impliedly the result of the authority given to the bailiffs. Kinsella v. Hamilton, 26 L. R., Ir. 671.

costs and charges of distress, which was more than is allowed by 57 Geo. 3, c. 93; the tenant y intractive from the planes of any county on the plantiff paid his county court' in relation to a holding excessive distress, and the plantiff paid him recover from the defendant the amount the plaintiff had paid the tenant in satisfaction of his claim for excessive distress. Megson v. Mapleson, 49 L. T. 744; 32 W. R. 318.

> False Representation as to Right to Distrain by. |-Action against husband and wife for falsely representing to the plaintiff (a bailiff) that the wife was entitled to distrain certain goods for rent in arrear, whereby the plaintiff, who had distrained, was made the defendant in a replevin snit, and obliged to pay certain sums of money. Mrs. B. (the wife) signed a warrant of distress for rent, supposing herself entitled to do so, and banded it to the plaintiff who acted upon it, and had thereby been damnified, the legal estate in the property distrained upon not being in Mrs. B., but in her trustees :-Held, that it was properly left to the jury to say whether Mrs. B. signed the warrant in error or fraudulently; and that, the jury having found that she signed it in error and not fraudulently, the verdiet was properly entered for the defendants. Rawlings v. Bell. 1 C. B. 951; 14 L. J., C. P. 265; 9 Jur. 973. See Liverpool Adalphi Loan Association v. Fair-hurst, 9 Ex. 422.

Alleging Distraint was for Rent due to himself.]-The right of a person to do an act with regard to the property of another depends upon the authority or right which he really has to do the act, and not upon that which he says he has. Therefore, if a person having anthority to distrain for rent due to another, says at the time that he distrains for rent due to himself, he may nevertheless justify as bailiff of the other. Trent v. Hunt, 9 Ex. 14; 22 L. J., Ex. 318; 17 Jur. 899: 1 W. R. 481.

Exceeding Authority.]—An attorney distraining upon a tenant whom he had put into possession on the part of the owner, and contrary to an agreement he supposed he had authority in law to make in the owner's name, but which he had not, is not liable in trespass. Ovenham v. Smythe, 2 F. & F. 220. See S. C., 6 H. & N. 690; 31 L. J., Ex. 110.

By Mortgagor in his own Name. |- A mortgagor in possession has, in the absence of interference by the mortgagee, an implied anthority from the mortgagee to distrain upon the tenant of the mortgaged property for the rent due in respect thereof; and, although it may be necessary for the mortgagor to justify the distress as bailiff of the mortgagee, it is not necessary that the distress should be made in the mortgagee's name. Reece v. Strousberg, 54 L. T. 133; 50 J. P. 292.

Percentage-Who entitled to,]-In distress for rent under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), the landlord, and not Liability of Balliff to compensate Land-nder s. 49, and is therefore entitled to the lord.]—The defendant was employed by the "percentage" referred to in the 2nd schedule to

In a distress for rent the bailiff and not the landlered is entitled to the percentage fee for "levying distress" specified in the 2nd schedule to the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883. ### e. Other Persons.

Receivers of the Court of Chancery.] - A receiver appointed by the court of chancery has a right to distrain for rent, without any special authority from the court for that purpose, Bennetty, Robins, 5 Car. & P. 379. S. P., Brandon

v. Brandon, 5 Madd. 473.

In replevin a defendant made cognisance as bailiff of W. for rent in arrear from the plaintiff under a demise from W.; on the production of the lease under which the plaintiff held, W. was described as a receiver appointed by the court of chancery, and the rent was made payable to him or any future receiver:—Held, that W. was entitled to distrain for rent in arrear, and that the plaintiff was estopped by his own deed from pleading non tenuit. Danser v. Hustings, 12 Moore, 34; 4 Bing. 2; 5 L. J. (0.s.) C. P. 3; 29 R. R. 740.

. An attornment by a tenant of land to a re-ceiver appointed by the court of chancery to collect the rents, and payment of rent to such receiver, create a tenancy by estoppel between the tenant and the receiver, but do not enure to enable the person who is found ultimately to have the legal title to the land to treat the tenant as his tenant, and to distrain for rent. Erans v. Mathias, 7 El. & Bl. 590; 26 L. J., Q. B. 309; 3

Jur. (N.S.) 793.

- Outgoing Tenant-Sale under the Court.] -A farm was sold under the direction of the court, subject to such tenant-right as the outgoing tenant should possess. The day for completion was the 29th September, and the purchaser was on payment of his purchase money to be let into possession as from that date, and to pay all outgoings after that date. The purchase-money was paid, and the purchaser let into possession on the 13th October, but no conveyance had been executed. The property was in the occupation of a tenant whose tenancy determined on the 29th September. The rent which then became due not having been paid, the receiver on the 24th October, at the instance of the persons having the legal estate, distrained upon certain hay and straw produced during the last year of the tenancy. Under the tenancy agreement, the tenant was bound to leave on the premises hay and straw remaining unconsumed, receiving an allowance therefore at the spending or consuming price; he was also bound to (inter alia) stack corn and grain and hay, and for that purpose was to be allowed, so far as necessary the use of the barns and yards until the 25th March following the expiriation of the tenancy. The purchaser moved to restrain the receiver from remaining in possession of or selling the hay and straw distrained :- Held, that the persons who had the legal estate had a right at law to distrain, but that in equity they must be regarded the act. Coole v. Johns, 55 L. J., Q. B. 475; allowed to exercise their legal right in such a way 17 Q. B. D. 714; 55 L. T. 290; 85 W. R. 47; 51 as to prejudice the purchaser. Powers, In re. J. Other Receivers.]-By a deed executed contemporaneously with a mortgage which it recited, the mortgagor and mortgagee appointed a receiver, and constituted him their agent and attorney to receive the rents of the mortgaged property, and to use such remedies by way of entry and distress as should be requisite for that purpose. By the same deed the mortgagor attorned as tenant from year to year to the receiver, and there was a proviso that, if default should be made in payment of the mortgage money or interest at the times appointed, the mortgagee might enter and avoid the tenancy created by the attornment. There was also a proviso that nothing therein contained should lessen the rights, powers or remedies of the mortgagee under the mortgage. On the mortgagor being found bankrupt:—Held, that the relation of landlord and tenant had been ereated between the receiver and mortgagor by the receivership deed, and that the receiver was entitled to distrain, and take the goods which belonged to the mortgagor on the mortgaged premises. Jolly v. Arbuthnot, 4 De G. & J. 224; 28 L. J., Ch. 547; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 689; 7 W. R. 532.

When property over which a person claims a right to distrain is in the hands of a receiver the court of chancery will give leave to distrain, naless it is clear that the property is not within the power of distress. Eyton v. Denbigh, Ruthin and Corwen Ry., 38 L. J., Ch. 74; 16 W. R.

Executors.]—The executor of a person seised in fee of land, and demised by him for a term of years, reserving a rent, could not distrain for arrears of rent accrued in the testator's lifetime ; for the latter was not a tenant in fee-simple of a rent, within 32 Hen. 8, c. 37, s. 1. Prescott v. Boucher, 3 B. & Ad. 849. S. P., Jones v. Jones, 3 B, & Ad, 967.

Where a distress was made by command, and in the name of a landlord, but he died before the distress was actually made :- Held, that the bailiff might make cognisance as the bailiff of his executrix, under 32 Hen. 8, c. 37, s. 1, who ratified the distress, although before probate. Whitehead v. Taylor, 2 P. & D. 367; 10 A. & E. 210; 9 L. J., Q. B. 65; 4 Jur. 247.

One of three co-executors to whom land was devised in trust agreed with the others to pay a rent for it, and entered into possession, and paid rent :- Held, that the two might distrain for rent in arrear. Cowper v. Fletcher, 6 B. & S. 464; 34 L. J., Q. B. 187; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 780; 12 L. T. 420; 13 W. R. 739.

Tenants by Elegit.]—A tenant by elegit has a right to distrain without atternment. Lloyd v. Davies, 2 Ex. 103; 18 L. J., Ex. 80.

Tenants for Life.]-Where a tenant for life, having a power to lease for twenty-one years, leased for fifty-three years to the defendant, who nine years after the death of such tenant, underlet to the plaintiff, and, in the following year, the remainderman, after giving the plaintiff and defendant notices to quit, granted the former a new lease, and received the rent due thereon for as trustees for the purchaser, and could not be six years; at the expiration of which period, the defendant, who had acquiesced in the transaction and B., and C. had therefore a right to distrain during the interval, distrained on the plaintiff's for a molety of the rent, the effect of the repregoods for six years' rent :-Held, that such distress was illegal, and that, after such acquiescence, the plaintiff might plead non tenuit to the defendant's avowry under the lease which the plaintiff accepted from him, and thereby deny the title of the party under whom he derived possession. Neave v. Moss, 8 Moore, 389; 1 Bing, 360; 2 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 25; 25 R. R. 650.

Overseers and Churchwardens. ]-The 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17, enacts, that all buildings, lands, &c., purchased or taken on lease by the churchby the authority and for the purposes of that act, shall be conveyed, demised, &c., to the churchwardens and overseers of every such parish and their successors, in trust for the parish; and such churchwardens and overseers are empowered to take and hold in the nature of a body corporate all buildings, lands, &c., belonging to such parish:—Held, that the act made the churchwardens and overseers a corporation of a peculiar kind, differing from ordinary corporations, the object of it being the care and proper management of the parochial property, and that it was competent for any one of the churchwardens or overseers to authorise a distress for rent in arrear, Gouldsworth v. Knights, 11 M. & W. 337; 12 L. J., Ex. 282.

Joint-tenants.] - One of two joint-tenants may demise his part to the other, with the usual incidents of a reversion and right to distrain. Cowper v. Fletcher, 6 B. & S. 464; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 780 ; 12 L. T. 420 ; 13 W. R. 739.

One of several joint-tenants may sign a warrant of distress, and appoint a balliff to distrain for rent due to all, if the others do not forbid him; and if, when applied to, they merely decline to act, that will not prevent him from proceeding. Robinson v. Hoffman, I M. & P. 474; 4 Bing, 562; 3 Car. & P. 284; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 113; 29 R. R. 627.

A rent-charge may be divided by will, or by deed operating under the Statute of Uses, so as to make the tenant liable, without attornment, to several distresses by the devisees or cestuis que use, Ricis v. Watson, 5 M, & W. 255; 9 L. J., Ex. 67.

By a deed of the 7th of August, 1832, a farm was conveyed to A. for life (subject to a term of 1,000 years), with power to lease for three lives, with a remainder over, which ultimately become vested in B. and C. The term of 1,000 years was created for the securing 3,000l, and was at the time of such settlement vested in two trustees, one of whom was A., the tenant for life. In exercise of the leasing power, A. granted a lease of the farm for three lives, under which lease the plaintiff became tenant, subject to the rent thereby reserved, and which rent was paid by the plaintiff to B. and C. (or to R. and D., their attorneys) upon their coming into possession of the property. Subsequently R. and D., as the attorneys for B. and C., wrote to the plaintiff, stating that the legal estate under the term for 1,000 years was in S., and directing him to pay the rent to S.; and in consequence of that communication, the plaintiff allowed S, to recover judgment against him in an action for rent under the lease. B. and C. afterwards distrained for rent as due to them, whereupon the plaintiff brought replevin:—Held, that, as the term of 1,000 years had (as to one moiety) merged in A. | Ex. 6.

sentation by R. and D. would not estop B. and C. from recovering rent which the plaintiff had not paid in consequence of such representation, or had not made himself liable to pay under the judgment obtained against him by S. Greenish v. White, 11 C. B. (x.s.) 209; 31 L. J., C. P. 93; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 563.

Tenants in Common.]—A tenant in common, demising his share to his companion, may distrain the goods and chattels of such companion. Brennan v. Hood, 4 Ir. C. L. R. 332.

A terre-tenant, holding under two tenants in common, cannot pay the whole rent to one, after notice from the other not to pay it; and if he does, the other tenant in common may distrain for his share. Harrison v. Barnby, 5 Term Rep. 246; 2 R. R. 584. And see Die d. — v. Mitchell, 1 Br. & B. 11.

Land was demised by four persons (whose original title did not appear), at one entire rent, to be divided and paid separately, in equal portions; and one of the four distrained upon the tenant for her own share of the rent :- Held, that the distress was regular, for whatever might have been the interest of the landlords as between themselves, as between them and the terretenant they were tenants in common, and entitled each to a separate distress. Whitley v. Roberts, McClel, & Y. 107.

Co-Heirs in Gavelkind,]-One of several co-heirs in gavelkind may distrain for rent due to himself and his co-helts, without an express authority from them. Leigh v. Shepherd, 5 Moore, 297; 2 Br. & B. 465; 23 R. R.

Railway Company-Tolls.] - A tender of a certain sum as being "all that is due" is bad, and a demand of a certain sum, made up of two sums claimed on two distinct grounds, is not a demand of either; and, therefore, where a railway company entitled to distrain for tolls, demanded a sum in gross made up of two sums, the one due for tolls, the other not so due, and the party tendered the amount due for tolls as being all that was due :-Held, that the comprecluded by the tender from recovering the toll, Field v. Newport Ry., 27 L. J., Ex. 396; 3 H, & N. 409.

For Duties-Ramsgate Harbour Act. ]-By the Ramsgate Harbour Act, certain duties are to be paid by the master or owners for every ship or vessel of a certain burthen passing from, to or by Ramsgate. By the act, masters or owners eluding payment shall stand charged and be liable to the payment of the same, and the same shall be levied and recovered by the same method. by which fines and penalties are by that act recovered, namely, by distress. The defendant, against whom the action was brought for the duties under the act, was the owner of a vessel which, during the year, made frequent voyages in ballast to Jersey, bringing back cysters which he laid in beds at Milton:—Held, that he was liable to be sued under the statute for the duties, and that the remedy by distress was merely cumulative. Shepherd v. Hills, 11 Ex. 55; 25 L. J.,

2. FOR WHAT RENTS.

a. Ordinary.

Demise must be Certain.]—A landlord cannot distrain unless there is an actual demise at a specific rent. Dunk v. Hunter, 5 B. & Ald. 322; 94 R R 390.

A., by a contract in writing demised to B., at a yearly rent of 1451, from the 14th May, 1851, premises, including a cottage occupied by C., at the rental of 5l. a year. B. took possession of all the premises included in the demise except the cottage, as C. refused either to go out or attorn to B. Before the day fixed for the first half-yearly payment of rent, A. and B. verbally agreed that A. should receive from C. some arrears of rent, and that A. should pay B. 70l. on the 14th November, 1851, and 70% on the 14th May, 1852:—Held, that this was a new demise, and that A, was cutitled to distrain for the 701, due on the 14th November. Watson v. Ward, 8 Ex. 335; 22 L. J., Ex. 161; 1 W. R.

An owner of a factory, consisting of several rooms, was in the habit of letting standings therein for lace-machines, himself supplying the power for working them, there being no demise of the room :-Held, that the weekly payments could not be distrained for as rent. Handwork v. Austin, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 634; 32 L. J., C. P. 252; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 77; 8 L. T. 429; 11 W. R. 833.

A proprietor of a house, and of a marl pit and brick mine, demised the house by an unwritten agreement to D, from a day named; and it was at the same time agreed between them, without writing, that D. should take the marl pit and bricks that he made. D. took the marl and made bricks accordingly, and paid the stipulated sums for a time, but they afterwards fell into arrear :- Held, that the agreement for the marl pit and brick mine was a demise of the land from year to year, at a rent capable of being ascertained with certainty, and for which, therefore, the lessor might distrain. Daniel v. Gracie, 6 Q. B. 145; 13 L. J., Q. B. 309; 8 Jur.

Half a room in a factory partitioned off from the rest, with a supply of sufficient steam power to drive certain lace-machines, was let to A. at a fixed annual rent, subject to deductions for hindrances to the working of the steam-engine: -Held, a sufficient demise to give a right of distress. Selby v. Greaves, 37 L. J., C. P. 251; L. R. 3 C. P. 594; 19 L. T. 186; 16 W. R.

A tenant of a small labourer's cottage, standing upon a close containing more than an acre of land, which was partly cultivated as a garden and partly sown with corn or planted with potatoes, is a tenant of a farm or lands and has a claim to emblements within 14 & 15 Vict. c. 25, s. 1, and the succeeding landlord, upon the death of the preceding lessor, who is entitled by that section to recover and receive a proportion of rent from the tenant, is justified in obtaining such rent by distress. Haines v. Welch, 38. L. J., C. P. 118; L. R. 4 C. P. 91; 19 L. T. 422; U7 W. R. 163.

Lessor assigning Interest. ]-See Parmenter Webber, col. 977.

Lessor's Title Defeasible.] - A defendant having only a defeasible title, demised to the plaintiff for years. Before the first quarter's rent was due, the plaintiff was evicted by title paramount to the defendant's, and remained out of possession for some weeks: he then entered again, under a new agreement with the person who had evicted him by title paramount:-Held, that the defendant was not entitled to distrain. Hoperaft v. Keys, 9 Bing. 613; 2 M. & Scott, 760.

Agreement for Lease.]—If, under an agreement for a lease at a certain rent, the tenant is let into possession before the lease is excented, the lessor cannot, during the first year, distrain for rent, for there is no demise express or implied. Hegan v. Johnson, 2 Taunt. 148.

A, entered into an agreement with M, that a valid lease in law should be forthwith prepared, to be duly executed by A. and M., of a house and premises, to A., to hold for the term of three years at the yearly rental of 841. The agreement specified how the rent should be paid, and what covenants should be inserted in the lease, and then contained this clause; "And it is mutually agreed that these presents shall operate as an agreement only, and that, until a lease shall be executed, the rents, covenants and agreements to be therein reserved and contained shall be paid and observed, and the several rights and remedies shall be enforced in the same manner as if the same had been actually executed," A. entered into possession of the premises, and remained till rent became due, when he fraudulently conveyed away his goods :- Held, that a tenancy was created which gave M, a right to the brick mine, and should pay quarterly, at the distrain the goods, and consequently, to follow usual quarter-lays, 8d, per solid yard for all the after and take possession of them at the place mart that he got, and 1s.8d, per 1,000 for all the to which they were taken. Anderson v. Midtand. distrain the goods, and consequently, to follow Ry., 3 El. & El. 614; 30 L. J., Q. B. 94; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 411; 3 L. T. 809.

A. entered a farm under an oral agreement for a lease for ten years; and though the time for paying rent was settled, it did not appear what was the amount to be paid; the lease was never executed, but A. occupied according to the terms of the proposed lease, and paid a certain rent for two years :- Held, that the lessor might distrain, Knight v. Bennett, 3 Bing. 361; 11 Moore, 227; 4 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 94, 95; 28 R. R. 640, 643.

-With Condition.]-A tenant entered under an agreement, containing stipulations for a lease at 251. a year, and an engagement by the landlord to complete certain erections. The erections were never completed, and the tenant never paid any rent; but, being called on after some years' occupation, said he was ready to pay what was due, provided the erections were completed, and an allowance made him for the expense of some repairs :- Held, that a demise at a rent certain could not be implied so as to entitle the landlord to distrain. Regarrt v. Portor, 7 Bing. 451; 5 M. & P. 370; 9 L. J. (0.8.) C. P. 168.

M. agreed verbally with W. to take a house of the latter, furnished, at 170. a year rent, payable quarterly and in advance. The house was furnished only in part, but W. promised that it should be completely furnished, not specifying any time. M. was let into possession within a month after the treaty. After the expiration of a quarter, W. distrained for rent. The furniture not having been sent in as proposed, M. brought trespass:—Held, that it was a question for the iury, whether the agreement was absolute, or on advance," in an agreement of tenancy is to make condition only of the furniture being sent in ; the rent payable a quarter in advance throughthat there was evidence for the jury to find that it was conditional, and therefore that the distress was not justifiable. Meckelan v. Wallace, 7 A. & E. 54, n.: 6 N. & M. 316.

Payable in Advance.]—By an agreement for the sale of a house and land, 75L, part of the purchase-money, was payable on signing the agreement, and 1,500L, the remainder of the puragreement, and thouse, the claims many claims money, was payable, with interest, on a day certain; and after stipulating for the delivery of an abstract of title and the time within which the title should be deemed accepted, the agreement stated that, as the purchaser was to be let into immediate possession, and for the purpose of securing the due performance of the several agreements therein contained, the purchaser admitted himself to be a tenant from L. J., C. P. 48. week to week to the vendor of the hereditaments thereby agreed to be sold, at the weekly rent of 801., payable in advance :- Held, that the agreement gave a right of distress to the vendor for the sum payable as a weekly reut. Yeoman v. Ellison, 36 L. J., C. P. 326; 17 L. T. 65,

Forehand rent may be distrained for by the landlord, although he is aware that an execution is about to be put in, at the suit of a judgment creditor. Harrison v. Barry, 7 Price, 690; 21 R R 781

A landlord let premises to a tenant from the 15th of June for five years at a yearly rent of 100%, to become due and pavable in advance (if demanded) by equal quarterly payments on the 15th of September, December, March and June in every year: provided always, that if the yearly rent reserved or any part thereof shall be in arrear and unpaid for twenty-one days next after any of the days appointed for payment thereof in advance, being first lawfully demanded upon or at any time after the twenty-one days, and not paid when demanded, then the lessor shall have power to re-enter. No rent was demanded until August, 1852, when upon its not being paid the landlord distrained:—Semble, that the construction of the demise was that the rent was payable in advance, but was not to be actually paid until demanded, and therefore that the landlord was cutitled to distrain. Williams v. Holmes, 8 Ex. 861; 22 L. J., Ex. 213.

Premises were let under an agreement that the yearly rent should be 1101, from the 15th of October, 1847, and that "the rent should be payable in advance if the landlord required the At the expiration of the first quarter the landlord demanded 271, 10s, for a quarter's rent then due; and as it was not paid, he distrained for the 1101. :- Held, that after such demand he had a right to distrain for the 271, 10s., but not for the 1101. Clarke v. Holford, 2 Car. & K. 540.

It was a condition in a lease of a farm that the tenant should pay the last half-year's rent in advance, which last half-year's rent should be considered as reserved and due on the 29th September preceding, if the landlord should see cause for such demand :-Held, that the landrent, and to distrain for it at any time between the 29th September and the expiration of the tenancy, without demand previous to the 29th September. Witty v. Williams, 10 L. T. 457;

The effect of the words "rent payable quarout, and the landlord is entitled to payment, or, in default, to distrain for the rent of the current quarter at any time during the currency of the onarter on giving reasonable notice of his demand. The question of the reasonableness of the notice is one of fact, and must depend upon the particular of fact, and that depend upon the particular circumstances of the case. London & West-minster Loan Co. v. L. & N. W. Ry., 62 L. J., Q. B. 370; [1893] 2 Q. B. 49; 5 R. 425; 69 L. T. 320; 41 W. R. 670.

Optional Periods of Payment. |- Rent being reserved, payable quarterly, or half-quarterly, if required : the landlord, having received the rent quarterly for a twelvemonth, cannot, without notice, distrain for a half-quarter's rent. Mallam v. Arden. 10 Bing, 299; 3 M. & Scott, 793; 3

After a tenant had signed a written agreement. not under seal, for hiring premises at an annual rent, he was asked by the landlowl how he would like to pay his rent, and replied, quarterly. Quarterly payments of rent were proved. The landlord having distrained for a quarter's rent, the distress was held illegal, as the original taking was not altered, and no new terms of letting had been agreed on between the parties. Turner v. Alldan, 1 Tyr. & G. 819.

Rent not Payable till after it becomes Due-Ordinary Course of Dealing.]—By s. 44 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, a landlord can-not distrain for rent which became due for more than a year before the distress, provided that, where according to the ordinary course of dealing, payment of the rent has been allowed to be deferred until the expiration of a quarter or halfyear after the rent legally became due, for the purpose of the section the rent shall be deemed to have become due at the expiration of such quarter or half-year, and not when it legally became due :- Held, that in a case within the proviso the landlord was entitled to distrain for rent then legally due, but not yet payable according to the course of dealing, and also for rent which had become legally due more than a year previously, but had become payable according to the course of dealing less than a year previously, although the total amount distrained for exceeded one year's rent. Bull, Ex parte, Bew, In re, 56 L. J., Q. B. 270; 18 Q. B. D. 642; 56 L. T. 571; 35 W. R. 455; 4 Morrell, 94; 51 J. P. 710.

Separate or Entire Rents.]-Replevin for goods taken in a dwelling-house, and for garden produce taken in a garden, and for corn taken in a close. Avowry, as to taking the goods in the dwelling-house and the garden produce in the garden, that the defendant took the same for rent of the house and garden in arrear. Avowry, as to taking the corn in the close, that the defendant took it for rent of the close in arrear. Pleas in bar, that the defendant did not make a separate and a distinct distress in and upon the dwelling-house and garden for and in respect of the rent alleged to have been in arrear for and in respect of the dwelling-house and garden, and also a separate and a distinct distress in and upon the close for and in respect of the close: but illegally made and took one joint distress as for and in respect of the several arrears of rent in and upon the dwelling-house and garden, and terly, and always, if required, a quarter in also in and upon the close,-are bad. Phillips

In replevin, avowry, that the avowant was entitled to a rent-charge of 300L, payable halfyearly, and avows for 751., parcel of one halfyearly payment. Plea in bar, that, before the seizure, the avoyant distrained in another part of the lands out of which the rent issued, for the same half-yearly payment, and took goods enough to satisfy the whole. Replication, that the first distress was for the half-yearly pay-ment, less the 791, distrained for :- Hold, that the grantee of the rent-charge could not divide the demand, and distrain for part on one part of the land, and afterwards for the residue on the other, Owens v. Wynne, 4 El. & Bl. 579; 3 C. L. R. 766; 3 W. R. 183.

A demise not under seal, of tithes, and also of a corporeal hereditament, at an entire rent, will not justify a distress for the rent reserved. Gardiner v. Williamson, 2 B. & Ad. 336; 9 L. J.

(0.S.) K. B. 233.

Rent of Furnished Lodgings. ]-A landlord may distrain for the rent of ready-furnished lodgings. Newman v. Anderton, 2 N. R. 224.

After Notice to Quit.]—A landlord has no right to distrain for double rent upon a weekly tenant who holds over after a notice to quit. Sullivan v. Bishop, 2 Car. & P. 359.

A tenant holding over after notice to quit given by the landlord, is not liable to a distress, without some evidence of a renewal of the tenancy. Jenner v. Clogg, 1 M. & Rob. 213.

After Serving a Writ of Ejectment. ]-A landlord, having treated an occupier of his land as a trespasser, by serving him with an ejectment, cannot afterwards distrain on him for rent, although the ejectment is directed against the claim of a third person who comes in and defends in lieu of the occupier, and the occupier is aware of that circumstance, and is never turned out of possession. Bridges v. Smyth, 5 Bing, 410; 2 M. & P. 470; 7 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 143; 30 R. R. 681.

Where there was a lease for a yearly rent payable quarterly, with a clause of re-entry in case the rent should be in arrear for twenty-one days, and the three quarters' rent was due at Michaelmas, for which a distress was put in on the 2nd October, and on the 2nd November the landlord served a writ of ejectment, there being no suffi-cient distress on the premises:—Held, that the distress affirmed the continuauce of the tenant's estate up to Michaelmas, and therefore that a half-year's rent not being in arrear at the time of the writ served, the laudlord could not recover. Cotesworth v. Spokes, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 103; 30 L. J., C. P. 220; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 803; 4 L. T. 212; 9 W. R. 436.

After erroneous Allowance of Taxes. ]landlord's receiver allowed the tenant to make a deduction in respect of a payment for land-tax every year, for seventeen years, greater than the landlord was liable to pay, the landlord knowing or having the means of knowing all the facts :-Held, that he could not distrain for the amount

Rent Service.]—Replevin: avowry, that the plaintiff held the land as tenant to the defendant under a demise, subject to certain rents, provisions, conditions and stipulations, that is to say, that the plaintiff should not nor would, during the continuance of the tenancy, sell any hay produced during such continuance upon the premises of the same, under the penalty of 2s. 6d. for each yard of the hay sold, to be recovered by distress as for rent in arrear; and that the plaintiff sold off the premises 800 yards of hay, contrary to the stipulations and provisions, by reason whereof 1001, being at the rate of 2s. 6d. for each yard of the hay sold, became due, and recoverable by distress :- Held, first, that the 2s. 6d. per yard was not a penalty but a rent-service, and distrainable on nonpayment, as of common right. Polllitt v. Forest (in error), 11 Q. B. 949; 16 L. J., Q. B. 424; 11 Jur. 1032.

Held, secondly, that this being in the nature of a licence by the tenant to the landlord, in whom the reversion was remaining, the right to distrain was sufficiently granted by an instru-ment not under scal. Ib. S. C., 1 Car. & K. 560.

Where a tenaut holds premises by the service of cleansing the parish church, without any pecuniary render, such service is a rent for which a distress may be made within 3 & 4 Will. c. 27, ss. 1, 8. Doe d. Edney v. Benham, 7
 Q. B. 976; 14 L. J., Q. B. 342; 9 Jur. 662.

So the service (under the circumstances) of ringing the church bell at stated hours from Michaelmas to Christmas. Doe d. Edney v. Billett, 7 Q. B. 978; 14 L. J., Q. B. 343; 9 Jur. 663.

The right of distress is not so inseparable an incident to rent service, that it cannot be postpoued. Giles v. Spencer, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 244; 26 L. J., C. P. 237; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 820; 5 W. R. 883.

Therefore where A., a mesne landlord, let premises to an under-tenant by a written agreement which provided that no distress should be made till after A. had produced the receipt of the superior landlord, and A. afterwards distrained for his rent without producing such receipt:-Held, in an action by the under-tenant against the broker who executed the distress, that A.'s right was postponed, and that the broker was liable as a trespasser. Ib.

Some time after the first agreement A, and his under-tenant agreed by parol to substitute other premises for those originally taken, to be held on the same terms, and the under-tenant entered :-Held, that the taking of the second premises was a new contract, and not an alteration of the terms of the first. Ih.

Rent Seck.] — In replevin, the defendant avowed that Henry the Eighth was seised in fee, in right of his crown, of the shop in which, &c., and by letters-patent granted it to W. in tail male, to be held by knight's service, paying to the king an annual rent of 41. 11s. 4d. at Michaelmas in every year. The avowry traced the title to the reversion through the successive sovereigns down to Charles the Second. That he, by letters-patent (made after the 22 Car. 2, c. 6, and 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 24, and before the 24th of June, 1672, and referring to the lettersparent services and blowed, though the receipt given erroneously allowed, though the receipt given year showed the amount paid and the smount deducted. Brandard v. Robins, 4 Bing. 11:12 Moore, 68; 5 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 13; 29 b. 408 an indenture, for a money consideration, granted within this statute. the rent to the dean and chapter of St. Paul's, and their successors, for ever; that the rent was duly paid for three years within the space of twenty years next before the session of parliament holden in the fourth year of George the Second, and because 277, 8a, of the rent for six years, ending the 11th of October, 1845, was due and in arrear to the dean and chapter the defendant well avowed: - Held, that the rent, being reserved upon an estate, the reversion whereof was in the Crown at the passing of 22 Car. 2, e. 6, and incident to that reversion, the grant of Charles the Second did not operate under that statute, or under 22 & 23 Car. 2, c, 24. Vigers v. St. Pant's Dean, 14 Q. B. 920; 19 L. J., Q. B. 84; 14 Jar. 1017—Ex. Ch.

Held, also, that the grant by Charles the Second was good, independently of those statutes, and converted the rent service into a rent seek, which could be distrained for under 4 Geo. 2, e. 28. Ih

If a mere termor affects to grant a lease for a term exceeding his own term in duration, and to reserve an annual rent, that would operate as an assignment of his term, and there would be no estoppel between him and the party to whom he assigned, and accordingly it would be doubtful whether the assignor would have any remedy for recovering the rent, and the 4 Geo. 4, c. 28, does not give power to distrain for such a rent. Langford v. Selmes, 3 Kay & J. 220; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 859

Chief Rent. ]—The 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 5, gives the remedy by distress in eases of chief rents which have not been duly paid for the space of three years within the space of twenty years before the first day of the then session of parliament. In replevin, a defendant made cognizance as bailiff of B., alleging that B., deceased, was seised as of fee in a fee-farm rent of 11.9s. 3d. issning out of the dwelling-house in which, &c., and after deducing title down to the parties under whom he made cognizance, averred that the fee-farm rent had been duly paid for the space of twenty years next before the first day of the parliament holden the 28th of January, 1727. Plea, traversing the allegation of the rent having been paid for the space of three years within the space of twenty-six years before the 28th of January, 1727:—Held, after verdict for the de-fendant, first, that it was sufficient, if, for the remain, ms., time it was same ent, in, for the space of three whole years, within twenty years before the passing of the act, the rent was paid, though those years were not consecutive. Mustice of the passing of the act, the rent was paid, though those years were not consecutive. grave v. Emerson, 10 Q. B. 326; 16 L. J., Q. B. 174; 11 Jur. 732.

Held, secondly, that the allegation of a seisin in fee of the rent was a proper description, and that it was too late after verdict to take the objection that the avowry ought to have shewn the origin of the rent. Ih.

Held, thirdly, that the rent was brought within 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 5, and, therefore, might be distrained for. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that an old book of rentals which was not signed, and an account for the same years, in which the person signing debited himself in certain sums of rent received, corresponding nearly with the amount in the book, were admissible. Ib.

Bradbury v. Wright, 2 Dougl. 624,

- Sent for Sale to Coachmaker. ] - A carriage sent to a coachmaker and commission agent for the sale of carriages, for the purpose of being sold by him, is not liable to be distrained for the rent of the premises upon which it is so exposed for sale. Findon or Finden v. M'Laren, 6 Q. B. 891; 14 L. J., Q. B. 183; 9 Jur. 369.

Goods delivered to Auctioneer for Sale. ]-The privilege from distress of goods delivered to an anctioneer for sale is confined to goods on the premises of the auctioneer, and does not extend to goods sold on the premises of the owner of the goods. Lyons v. Elliott, 45 L. J., Q. B. 159; 1 Q. B. D. 210; 33 L. T. 806; 24 W. R. 296.

A sale by auction of V.'s goods on his premises having been advertised, the plaintiff delivered some plate to the auctioneer to be sold along with V.'s goods. The auctioneer placed the plate on V.'s premises, where it was distrained during the auction by the landlord for rent in arrear; Held, that the plate was not privileged, and the distress was valid. 1b.

Goods deposited on the premises of an anctioneer, for the purposes of sale, are privileged from being distrained for the rent of those premises. Adams v. Grane, 3 Tyr. 326; 1 C. & M. 380; 2 L. J., Ex. 105.

So goods sent to an auctioneer to be sold in a room hired by him from one who has no authority to let, are privileged from distress, while they are in that room for the purpose of, being sold by auction. Brown v. Arundell, 10 C. B. 55; 20 L. J., C. P. 30.

The fact of such room never having been used as an anction-room before, and only being hired for the occasion, is immaterial as regards the privilege of the goods from distress, Ib.

So goods deposited in an open yard belonging to premises in the occupation of an auctioneer for the purpose of being sold by public auction are privileged from distress. Williams v. Holmes, 8 Ex. 861; 22 L. J., Ex. 283; 1 W. R. 391.

Of Principal—In Hands of Factor.]—Goods of a principal in the hands of a factor for sale are privileged from distress for rent due from such factor to his landlord, on the ground that the rule of public convenience, out of which the privilege arises, is within the exemption of a landlord's Fee-farm Rent.]—Distress is not incident to general right to distrain; and therefore such a fee-farm rent as such except the case is brought goods are protected for the benefit of trade, Gilman v. Elton, 6 Moore, 243; 3 Br. & B. 75; 23 R. R. 567.

Placed in Warehouse, I-Goods landed at a wharf, and consigned to a broker as agent of the consignor, for sale, and placed by the broker in the wharfuger's warehouse over the wharf for safe custody, until an opportunity for selling them should occur, are not distrainable for rent due in respect of the wharf and warehouse; as they were brought to the wharf in the course of trade. Thompson v. Mushiter, S Moore, 254: Bing. 383; 1 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 104; 25 R. R. 624. Corn sent to a factor for sale, and deposited by him in the warehouse of a granary keeper, he not having any warehouse of his own, is under the same protection against a distress for rent, as if it was deposited in a warehouse belonging to the factor himself. Matthias v. Mesnard, 2

Cor. & P 353

In replevin the defendant avowed for rent in arrear as landlord of the granary or warehouse in which the goods on which he levied the distress were found. In his plea in bar to the avowry, the plaintiff alleged that the goods in question were deposited in the granary or warehouse with one W. J., the keeper or proprietor of the said premises, which were then a public granary or warehouse, to be safely kept for purposes of trade. On special demurrer upon the ground that goods merely deposited with the keeper or proprietor of a public warehouse or granary, unless he exercised a public trade or received them for the purposes of that trade, were not privileged from distress for rent. The court advised an amendment in the pleading. Farrant v. Robson, 3 L. J., C. P. 146.

Goods at Furniture Depository. ] - Goods warehoused in the ordinary course of business at a furniture depository are privileged from distress for rent. Miles v. Furber, 42 L. J., Q. B. 41; L. R. 8 Q. B. 77; 27 L. T. 756; 21 W. R. 262.

The plaintiff deposited household furniture at a depository to be warehoused at the rate of 30s. a year. At the time he thought he was depositing them with a company with whom he had had name of the company, which name was also over the directors of the company; on which the plaintiff brought an action against them :- Held, that the goods were privileged from distress, as things delivered to a person exercising a public

Ship in process of Construction for Third. Party. Goods belonging to a third party which are on the premises of a person exercising a public trade for the purpose of being dealt with in the way of such trade, are not exempt from carpet manufacturers took premises, and put his distress for rent, unless they have been sent or principal's name outside as well as his own, and delivered to the trader. A shipbuilder contracted to build a ship on premises which he held as tenant to the defendants; the ship was to be but was in fact agent tor only one oner man, a paid for by instalments at certain stages of the "public trade" so as to exempt his principal's work. After the ship had been partly paid for, woods on his premises from distress. Tapling v. it was seized by the defendants as a distress for the defendant of the person for whom paid for by instalments at certain stages of the rent due from the buikler. The person for whom the ship was being built paid the rent under protest, and sued to recover the amount :-Held, that assuming the property in the ship to have passed to the plaintiff under the contract, still the ship, not having been sent or delivered to the builder, was liable to distress, and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. So, although the sender is also a butcher. Ib. But brewers' casks sent to a public-house with beer, and left there until the beer is consumed, are liable to be distrained for the rent of the house. Joule v. Jackson, 7 M. & W. 450; 10 L. J., Ex. 142.

Salt was manufactured and publicly sold atcertain salt works, and carried away in the boats. of the purchasers, which came for the purpose of being loaded with it into a cut or canal on the premises, communicating with a public navigation. The boat of an alkali manufacturer, lying in this cut or canal for the purpose of receiving and carrying away salt bought by him for the purposes of his manufacture, is not privileged from distress for arrears of an ammity issuing out of the land on which the salt works were erected, and granted by the manufacturer and scller of the salt. Muspratt v. Gregory, 3 M. & W. 677; 1 H. & H. 184; 7 L. J., Ex. 385—Ex. Ch.

Materials in the house of a manufacturer for the purpose of his trade are not distrainable by his landlord for rent. Gibson v. Ireson, 3 Q. B.

Materials delivered by a manufacturer to a weaver, to be by him manufactured at his own. dealings before; and he received a receipt in the home, are privileged from distress for rent due from the weaver to his landlord; but a frame or the door of the depository. Implements of Trade. | - Trover for churps. bedding, &c. Plea, a justification under a distress for rent. Replication, that the goods and chattels were implements of husbandry, and that there were other goods and chattels which might have been distrained :-Held, on special demurrer, that as some of the articles named could not be implements of husbandry, the replication was bad, for answering only part of the plen, when it professed to answer the whole. Duries v. Aston, 3 D. & L. 188; 1 C. B. 746; 14 L. J., C. P. 228.

An implement of trade, e.g. a threshingmachine, not a fixture, is liable to a distress for rent, unless in actual use at the time, or there is other sufficient distress upon the premises. Featon v. Logan, 3 M. & Scott, 82; 9 Bing, 676; 2 L. J., C. P. 102.

A, let to S, a threshing-machine; on Saturday afternoon S, ceased working it; and A, having a considerable distance to convey it home, it was left on the premises of S. till the following Monday morning, when it was distrained by the landlord for rent :- Held, that, in the absence of proof of sufficient distress aliunde, the machine was well taken. Ib.

An action of trespass lies, as well as an action on the case, for distraining tools of trade, though not actually in use, if there are other unprivileged goods upon the premises at the time of the dis-tress sufficient to satisfy the distress. #### b. Growing Crops.

Generally.]-A tenant, whose standing corn and growing crops have been seized as a distress for rent before they were ripe, cannot maintain an action on the case under 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 3, for selling the same before five days had elapsed after the seizure, as such sale was altogether void. Owen v. Legh, 3 B. & Ald. 470; 22 R. R. 455.

A distress on growing crops of corn of the vendee of the sheriff, for rent accruing due to the landlord, subsequently to the entry under the execution and sale, cannot be sustained, unless such vendee allows the crops to remain uncut an unreasonable time after they have become ripe, Peacock v. Purvis, 5 Moore, 79; 2 Br. & B. 262; 23 R. R. 465.

A tenant's growing crops, taken in execution and sold, and remaining on the premises a reasonable time for the purpose of being reaped, are price than was expected. Jenner v. Yolland, not distrainable by the landlord for rent become 2 Chit. 167; 6 Price, 5; 20 R. R. 608. due after the taking in execution. Wright v. An action is not maintainable for distraining

K. B. 181.

Such crops having been so taken, sold and left on the premises, and the arrears of rent paid pursuant to 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, the landlord cannot distrain them for rent subsequently due, on the ground that the purchaser has not entered into the agreement with the sheriff (to use and expend the produce in a proper manner), directed by 56 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 3. Nor is he entitled to presume, from the absence of such agreement, that the straw of such crops was sold for the purpose of being carried off the land, contrary to s. 1. Ib.

Standing crops cannot be distrained under a clause in an annuity deed, giving a power to cuter and distrain for arrears in like manner as for arrears of rent. Miller v. Green, 2 Tyr. 1; 2 C. & J. 143; 8 Bing, 92; 1 M. & Scott, 199; L. J., Ex. 51—Ex. Ch. See Arnison, Exparte,
 L. J., Ex. 57; L. R. 3 Ex. 56; 17 L. T. 480;

Where a landlord distrained growing crops under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 8, but sold them before they were cut, the remedy was held to be under s. 19, for the special damage sustained by that irregularity and no more. In such an action on the case, with a count in trover, the landlord is entitled to deduct the rent due to him from the difference between the price which might have been obtained had the sale been regular, and that which was obtained under the irregular sale; so where no such difference existed, from the crops having been sold for their full value, while the rent due exceeded the produce of that sale, the tenant recovered nominal damages only. Proudlore v. Twemlow, 3 Tyr. 260; 1 C. & M. 326; 2 L. J., Ex. 111.

Though growing crops seized under a fi. fa. are protected from distress at common law, yet, if an execution creditor, by reason of his claiming some things distrainable at common law, is driven to rely on 56 Geo. 3, c. 50, he is bound to bring himself in his pleading within the provisions of that statute. Hutt v. Morrell, 11 Q. ## c. Beasts of the Plough and Sheep.

Beasts of the Plough. - Where a landlord distrains beasts of the plough, though there are other goods on the premises, he is not liable to an action for an illegal distress, if he uses due diligence to ascertain whether such goods are a sufficient distress without them; and he is not to be affected by a subsequent sale at a higher beasts of the plough, when there is not other sufficient subject of distress on the premises but growing crosp. Pigapt v. Birtles, 1 M. & W. 441; 2 Gale, 18; 1 Tyr. & G. 729; 5 L. J., Ex. 193.

Beasts of the plough are distrainable for the poor rates. Hutchins v. Whittaker, 2 Ken. 204; 1 Burr. 579.

Agistment of Gattle—"Live Stook taken in to be fed at a fair price."]—Cattle were distrained while on a hodding pursuant to an agreement by which the tenant, in consideration of 2l., allowed the owner "the exclusive right to feed the grass on the land for four weeks":—Held, that the cattle were not "taken in" by the tenant "to be fed at a fair price," within the meant of the Agricultual Holdings Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. e. 61), s. 45, and were therefore not privileged from distress. Masters v. Green, 29 Q. B. D. 807; 59 L. T. 476; 36 W. R. 591; 53 J. P. 591; 53 V. R. 591; 53 J. P. 591;

Live stock agisted for a fair equivalent is within 46 & 47 Viet. c. 01, s. 45 (the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883), as taken in to be fed at a "fair price," and may therefore be exempt from distress, even although such equivalent be not money. Cows were agisted on the terms "milk for meat," is, that the agister should take their milk in exchange for their pasturage:—Held, that the agistment was within the act. London and Torkshire Brah v. Bellon, 64 L. J., Q. B. 568; 16 Q. B. D. 457; 34 W. R. 31; 50 J. P. 85

Colts and Steers.]—Cart colts and young steers, not broken in or used for barness or the plough, are not privileged from distress as beasts which gain the land. Keen v. Priext, 4 H. & N. 236; 28 L. J., Ex. 157; 7 W. R. 376.

Sheep.]—In case of a distress by a landlord for rent due from his tenant, the sheep of an under-tenant are privileged if there are other goods upon the premises sufficient to satisfy the rent. Ib.

A grazier driving a flock of sheep to London is encounaged by an imikeeper to put his sheep into pasture grounds belonging to the inu. The landlord seeing the sheep, consents they shall stay there one night, and then distrains them for rent; grazier relieved against this distress. Phocker v. Joyce, 2 Vern. 129.

If cattle escape into the next ground, and are distrained there for rent, equity will relieve against such distress, Ib.

Of Others. - Goods of a stranger on the land may be distrained for a rent-charge issning out of it. Muspratt v. Gregory, 2 Gale, 158; I M. & W. 633; in error 3 M. & W. 677; 1 H. & H. 184; 7 L. J., Ex. 385.

The goods of C. found upon land, out of which a rent-charge has been granted by A, to B, are liable to the distress of B., ppless C. has an interest in the land paramount to that which A. had at the time of the grant. Saffery v. Elynod, 3 N. & M. 346; I A. & E. 191; 3 L. J., K. B. 151.

The grantee of a rent-charge may take goods of a stranger, on the premises charged, as a distress for arrears. Johnson v. Funthuer, 2 Q. B. 925; 2 G. & D. 184; 11 L. J., Q. B. 193; 6 Jur. 832.

But a grant, purporting to be the grant of a rent-charge, with powers of distress, made by a person having no legal estate in the land, will not justify the seizure on the premises of the goods of third persons for the arrears of the rentcharge, Freeman v. Edwards, 2 Ex. 732: 17 L. J., Ex. 258.

If a mortgage is created by way of demise for a term of years, and the mortgagor attorns and becomes tenant to the mortgagee at a certain rent, the relation of landlord and tenant is created, and moon failure to pay the rent the mortgagee is entitled to distrain the goods even of a stranger. J., being lessee for a term of years, demised to P., by way of mortgage, all his interest in the term save one day, and J. attorned and became tenant to P. at a certain rent. J., and became tenant to P. at a certain rent, J., being mortgaged premises to K., who assigned his goods thereon to R. The rent due from J. to P. being unpaid, P. distrained the goods assigned by K. to R. No rent was then due from K. R. having brought an action against P. for the seizure of the goods:—Held, that, by the attornment, J. had become tenant to P., and that the distress was lawful. Kearsley v. Philips, 52 L. J., Q. B. 581; 11 Q. B. D. 621; 49 L. T. 435; 31 W. R. 909—C. A.

Execution against Goods of Third Party-Right of Landlord to claim for Rent. - By 51 & 52 Vict. c. 43, s. 160, when goods in a tenement for which rent is due are taken in execution under the warrant of a county court, the landlord may claim the rent due to him by delivering a notice to the bailiff making the levy, and such bailiff shall, in making the levy, in addition thereto distrain for the rent so claimed. Execution having issued upon a judgment in a county court against the defendant, goods belonging to him were taken in execution in a house of which the wife of the defendant was the lessee. The landlords gave to the bailiff making the levy a notice under s. 160 claiming arrears of rent due from the wife :-Held, that as the defendant's goods were rightly taken in execution, the claim of the landlords was good. Hughes v. Smallwood, 59 L. J., Q. B. 503; 25 Q. B. D. 306; 63 L. T. 198: 55 J. P. 182.

If a bailiff seizes, under a warrant of a county court, goods belonging to a stranger, he cannot, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 75, distrain such goods for the rent of the landlord, and if he does so, the true owner is entitled to have his goods back. Brard v. Knight, 8 El. & Bl. 865; 27 L. J., Q. B. 359; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 782; 6 W. R. 226.

Rails and Sleepers. |- The lessee of a colliery by deed demised it by way of mortgage, and assigned the plant, &c., comprised in a schedule, and all fixtures, buildings, and railways in and about the colliery, with a power of sale. The mortgagee having taken possession of the railways under the power, the landlord distrained them for rent due from the lessee. The railways were constructed for the better enjoyment of the colliery, and were so far permanent that they were intended to remain on the premises as ancillary to the working of the mines until the expiration of the term. The ground upon which they were laid was brought to a dry and uniform surface by spreading thereon, wherever the natural soil was moist or its surface depressed, such hard and dry materials as the soil afforded, with some further material of the same nature brought from elsewhere, so as to make it dry and level. On this surface so prepared the sleepers-were laid, and the rails were fastened to the sleepers by nails driven into the sleepers, and. firmly fixing the rails thereto. Large quantities. of such hard and dry materials, called ballast, were then packed under and about the sleepers, with the double object of keeping them dry, and so preventing their decay, and of keeping them in position. The usual mode of removing the rails was to wrench the rails out of the sleepers. In order to remove the sleepers the ballast was first loosened by picks, and then levers or bars of iron were driven under the sleepers. The removal of the sleepers caused hollow places to be formed by the falling in of the ballast:—Held, that the rails and sleepers forming the railways became fixtures, and therefore were not distrainable for rent, and the mortgagee was entitled to judgment for the value of the railways as re-Judgment for the value of the ranways as replaced in statu ono. Turner v. Cameron, 10-B. & S. 931; 39 L. J., Q. B. 125; L. R. 5 Q. B. 306; 22 L. T. 525; 18 W. R. 544.

Kitchen Ranges. - Fixtures (as kitchen ranges, stoves, coppers and grates) which a tenant may sever from the freehold, and take away during the term, are not therefore distrainable for rent. Darby v. Harris, 1 Q. B. 895; 1 G. & D. 234; 5 Jur. 988.

Those things only can be distrained for rent which the landlord can afterwards restore in the plight in which they were before the distress. Ib.

Machinery for the purposes of manufactureex. gr. mules used for spinning cotton-fixed by means of screws, some into the wooden floors of a cotton mill, and some by being sunk into the stone flooring and secured by molten lead, are at law distrainable for rent. Hellawell v. Eastwood, 6 Ex. 295; 20 L. J., Ex. 154.

Effect of Distraining.]—A mere distraining and purporting to sell fixtures affords no ground of action, as such a sale is merely a nullity. Beck v. Denbigh, 29 L. J., C. P. 273; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 998; 2 L. T. 154; 8 W. R. 392. The defendant distrained fixtures, and some days afterwards severed and removed them for sale: -Held, in trover, that though for the purposes of that action the plaintiff necessarily treated the fixtures as goods and chattels, the defendant, by whose wrongful act they had been brought into a chattel state, could not say that, as goods and chattels, he had a right to distrain them, Dalton v. Whittem, 3 G. & D. 260; 3 Q. B. 961; 12 L. J., Q. B. 55.

f. Goods of Persons becoming Bankrupt,

Landlord's Right to Distrain.]—A landlord's distress for rent is not liable to be restrained as "an execution or other legal process" within the an execution of other legal process within the Bankruptey Act, 1869, s. 13. Birmingham and Staffordshive Gaslight Co., Ex parte, Funshaw, Ta re, 40 L. J., Bk. 52; L. R. 11 Eq. 615; 24 L. T. 639; 19 W. R. 603.

Under a local statute a gas company had the same rights with respect to recovering the rent or charge due for the supply of gas, as landlords have with respect to recovering rent. The company, after notice that a firm indebted to them for a supply of gas had filed a petition under the Bankruptey Act, 1869, s. 125, distrained in pursuance of its statutory rights upon their goods. The creditors of the firm afterwards resolved on liquidation, and a trustee was appointed :-Held, that the distress was not liable to be restrained as "an execution or other legal process" within s. 13; and that, assuming the filing of the petition to be equivalent to the commencement of a bankruptey, the company was entitled to distrain, after the filing, for one year's supply of gas. Ib.

A landlord distrained for one year's arrear of rent on goods of a debtor in the hands of a receiver appointed by the Court of Bankruptcy. On an application by the receiver to the county court judge for an injunction, the landlord was restrained from proceeding with the distress, and was also committed for contempt of court. On appeal :- Held, that the landlord could distrain as against the receiver without the leave of the court; and further, that the position of a receiver in bankruptey is not the same as that of a receiver in chancery. Till, Experte, Mayhew, In re, 12 L. J., Bk. 84; L. B. 16 Eq. 97; 21

W. R. 574. A debtor covenanted to pay rent in advance. After he had filed a petition for liquidation, and while the trustee was still in possession of the premises, a further sum became due for rent under the covenant to pay in advance :- Held, that the landlord was entitled to distrain for such rent. Hale, Ew parte, Binns, In re, 45 L. J., Bk. 21; 1 Ch. D, 285; 33 L. T, 706; 24 W. R, 300.

If goods of tenant who has become bankrupt Plummer, Exparte, 1 Atk, 103.

Where the vendee had lived in the house of bankrupt, and retained the goods there, and the landlord had proved under the commission, but three years after distrained the goods, it was held illegal. Grove, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 104.

Where a distress is made for more than a year's rent after an act of bankruptcy by the tenant, the court will allow the assignees of the tenant to avail themselves of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 74, and to pay a year's rent into court. But if the land-lord under such a rule accept the sum so paid into court, he is entitled to double costs under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 22. Alderson v. Gadsden, 7 L. J., K. B. 89,

By the statute 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 31, "no distress for rent made and levied after the arrest of a person petitioning the Court of Insolvent Debtors. under that act, shall be available for more than one year's rent" :—Held, that a distress for more than one year's rent, made before arrest but not sold till after, was good for the whole. Wray v. Egremont (Earl) 1 N. & M. 188; 4 B. & Ad. 122; 2 L J., K. B. 48.

Unauthorised Distress-Scizure by Bill of Sale Holder. - According to the true con-struction of the New South Wales Insolvent Act (5 Vict. No. 17), s. 41, the prohibition of "distress for reut" after sequestration of the tenant's estate does not authorise the holder of a bill of sale to take his goods (the subject of such bill) out of the hands of the landlord's bailiff in possession thereof under such distress. Railton v. Wood, 59 L. J., P. C. 84; 15 App. Cas. 363; 63 L. T. 13.

Rent subsequent to Winding-up of Company. -Leave to distrain for rent subsequent to the commencement of the winding-up was refused where the liquidator, though he had derived an indirect benefit from the demised property, had not adopted the lease or used the property, House and Land Investment Trust, In re, Swith, Ex parte, 8 R. 232; 42 W. R. 572; 1 Manson, 148.

g. In Other Cases.

Marshalling Goods Seized, ]-The common-law right of distress, exercisable immediately on default being made in payment of rent, is not destroyed by the insertion in a lease of an express right of distress, extending to articles which would not be affected by the common-law right, but exercisable only after the lapse of a certain time from default, if the lease contains no negative words; and, notwithstanding the existence of such an express limited right, the common-law right may be exercised immediately on default, but only as to goods to which that right extends. River Swale Brick and Tile Works, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 638; 48 L. T. 778; 32 W. R. 202.

If in such a case the lessor distrains for two half-years' rent at once, before the expiration of the period after the second half-year's rent becoming in arrear which is fixed by the lease for the exercise of the power therein contained, and some of the goods scized under the entire distress are not seizable at common law, but only under the express power in the lease, the goods seized will be marshalled so as to set against the second half-year's rent in the first instance such of them as are seizable at common law, leaving the remainder of the seized goods to answer the first half-year's rent under the provision in the lease. Ib.

Sale of Stock by Landlord, ]-The 56 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 11, which makes a purchaser of farmers' stock bound by the tenant's covenant to consume such stock on the premises, does not enable a landlord to sell his tenant's hay which he has distrained for rent, otherwise than for the best price. Hawkins v. Walrond, 45 L. J., C. P. 772; 1 C. P. D. 280; 35 L. T. 210; 24 W. R. 824.

Perishable Commodity, ]-Commodities which cannot be restored upon replevin in the same plight and condition as that in which they were when taken, are not distrainable for rent at common law; and therefore the flesh of animals lately slaughtered cannot be distrained. Murley v. Pincombe, 2 Ex. 101; 18 L. J., Ex. 272.

Chattels in Use—Wearing Apparel, ]—Wearing apparel may be distrained for rent. Bisselt v. Cildwell, Peake, 36; 1 Esp. 206, n; 3 R. R. 648. S. P. Baynes v. Smith, 1 Esp. 206.

So, implements of trade may be distrained for rent in not in actual use at the time, and if there is no other sufficient distrass on the premises. Gorton v. Bulkner, 4 Term Rep. 565, 2 R. R. 463, S. P., Roberts v. Juckson, 2 Peake, 36; 4 R. R. 885.

A stocking-frame in actual use is not distrainable, unless there is not sufficient distress besides. Watts v. Davies, 1 Selw. N. P. 676. S. P. Gorton v. Falkhar, 4 Term Rep. 565; 2 R. R. 463.

Trespass lies for taking under a distress for rent, tools of trade not in use, there being not distrainable goods of sufficient value on the premises; and a special action on the case, as for an unreasonable distress, is not the only remedy for such a wrong. *Mergaft v. Nas, 1 El. & El. 439; 28 L. Ja. Q. B. 143; 5 Jur. (Ns.) 5 Jur. Charles Partnership Property.]—Two tonants in common mortgaged an estate to secure a debt which they jointly and severally covenanted to pay, and each of them separately attorned tenant to the mortgages of a part of the estate of which they were jointly in occupation, at a rent equal to half the annual interest on the mortgage debt. The mortgagers were partners in the business of brickmakers, which they carried on upon that part of the estate which was in their joint occupation:—Held, that the mortgages could not distrain for the rent upon the purtnership property which was on the estate. Parke, Experta, Patter, Le re, 43 L.J., Bk. 130; L. R. 18 Eq. 381; 30 L. T. 618; 32 W. R. 768.

Furniture—Use for Life.]—Where A., by the trusts of his father's will, was allowed to use the furniture in the manison of B. during his natural life, and was prohibited from removing it thence without the consent of the trustees:—Held, that such furniture could not be distrained for A.'s personal taxes returned as payable at the manison of B.: and that it did not fall within the description of such "other goods and claatels" as might be distrained by force of 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 33. Skaftedware (Eerd) v. Husselt, 3 D. & B. 84; 1 B. & C. 666; 1 L. J. (0.8.) K. B. 202; 25 B. K. 534.

Goods in Custody of the Law.]—The 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, makes it unlawful to remove goods taken in execution, without paying one year's rent; goods so taken are in custodia legis, and cannot be distrained on by the landlord for the year's rent, and they are equally in custodia legis for this purpose, whether they are in the hands of the sheriff or of his vendee. Wharton v. Naylor, 12 Q. B. 678; 6 D. & L. 136; 17 L. J., Q. B. 278; 12 Jur. 894.

If goods remain on the demised premises after a fletitious bill of sale made of them under an execution, they are liable to be distrained as before. Smith v. Russell, 3 Taunt. 400; 12 R. R. 674.

Goods seized by a messenger under a fiat in bankruptcy are not, while in his custody, privileged from distress for rent due from the bankrupt to his landlord. Briggs v. Sowry, 8 M. & W. 729; 11 L. J., Ex. 193. See Newton v. Scott, 9 M. & W. 434; 11 L. J., Ex. 121. Where a sheriff's officer executed a f. fa., by going to the house, and informing the debtor be eame to levy on his goods, and laying his hand on a table said, "I take this table," and then locked up his warrant in the table drawer, took the key, and went away, without leaving any person in possession; and after the fi. fa. was returnable, the landlord distrained the goods for rent:—Held, that the sheriff could not maintain trospass against him. Blades v. Arundale, 1 M. & S. 71; 14 B. R., 553;

Where after the making of an interpleader order the sheriff, with the consent of the execution creditor and the claimant, temporarily withdrew from possession:—Held, that the goods were no longer in custodial legis, and the landlord was entitled to distrain upon them, although he knew that the interpleader proceedings were pending. Cropper v. Wurner, I Cab. & E. 152.

Revival of Landlord's Right after Execution waived.]—A landlord's right to distrain revives upon an execution being waived. Seren v. Mihill, 1 Ld. Ken. 370.

A landlord may distrain upon the goods of his tenant for a year's rent, notwithstanding an outlawry in a civil suit. St. John's College, Oxford, v. Murcott, 7 Term Rep. 259.

A sheriff's officer being in possession of the tenant's effects under an onthawry, made a distress for rent, sold the goods so distrained, and afterwards the outlawry was reversed;—Ruled, that the officer was liable to pay the produce of the goods to the landlord, in an action for money had and received. Ib.

4. WHEN TO BE MADE.

Limitation of Time for Making. ]—The twenty years within which, since 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, a distress for rent must be made by the person to whom the right to make it has accured, begins to whom the right to make it has accured, begins to run from the last payment of the rent. Once v. De Benwoir, 16 M. & W. 547; 11 Jur. 488.

Affirmed, 5  $\mathbb{R}x$ , 166; 19  $\mathbb{L}$ ,  $\mathbb{J}$ ,  $\mathbb{R}x$ , 177— $\mathbb{E}x$ , Ch. Where a defendant avows for rent in arrear, it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to plead in bar that the rent has become extinguished by efflux of time under the 3  $\mathbb{R}4$  Will. 4,  $\mathbb{R}2$ , as stantamy be shown under non tenuit, although not under a plea of rieus in arrore.  $\mathbb{Z}1$

Time of Day.]—A landlord cannot justify making a distress for rent after dark. Aldenburg v. Peuple, 6 Car. & P. 212. A distress for rent before sunrise or after sun-

A distress for rent before sunrise or after sunset is illegal, although there may be daylight.

Tutton v. Durke, 5 H. & N. 647; 29 L. J., Ex.
271; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 983; 2 L. T. 361.

Quere, whether for such purpose the time of suurise is to be reckened from the first appeurance of the beams of the sun above the horizon, or from the time when the entire sun has emerged. Ih.

After Expiration of Tenancy.]—Before the 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 6, at common law, rent accruling before the expiration of a tenancy could not be distrained for after the tenance expired, though the tenant continued in occupation. Williams v. Stieva, 9 Q. B. 14; 15 L. J., Q. B. 321; 10 Jur. 804.

The 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 6, does not apply to cases where the tenancy is put an end to by the tenant's wrongful disclaimer. Doe d. David v.

Williams, 7 Car. & P. 322.

A tonant, a few days after his lease expired, gave up possession to the incoming tonant; but, without the latter's permission, left some cattle in the fold-yard, which were afterwards distrained in the name of the landlord:—Held, that he was not possessed of the premises, and that the grazing of the cattle thereon did not constitute a possession under 8 Anne, c. 14, ss. 6, 7, and that the distress was consequently filegal. Tuylerson v. Peters, 7 A. & B. 110; 2 N. & P. 622; W. W. & D. 644; 1 Jur. 497.

A landlord, who permits his tenant to retain possession of part of a farm, after the tenancy has expired, may distrain on that part, within six months after the expiration of the tenancy. Nuttail v. Staunton, 6 D. & R. 155; 4 B. & C. 51; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 135; 28 R. R. 207.

À landlord may distrain corn left, under a custom that a tenant may leave his away-going erop in the bara, &c., of the farm, for a certain time after the leave his expired, and he has quitted the premises, for rent arrear, after is, months have expired from the determination of the term. Hereum v. Dudhang, I. H. B. 5; 2 R. R. 696, S. P., Levels v. Harris, I. H. Bl. 7; n.; 2 R. R. 698, n.

A termor, who lets to an under-tenant, cannot, after his term has expired, enforce the continuance of the under-tenancy by distress, if the under-tenant refuses to neknowledge him as landlord, or pays him under threat of distress; although the under-tenant still retains the possession. Burne v. Richardson, 4 Tant. 720;

By agreement, as well as by eastom of the country, a tenant was to have the use of the barns and gate-rooms to thresh out his cern, and fodder his cattle, till the May-day efter the expiration of his term; his term expired at Michaelmas, 1824; he was then restrained by injunction from carrying off the premises comin the straw; in January, 1825, his landlord distrained a rick of corn on the premises —Held, that the distress was valid. Kulght v. Benett, 3 Bing, 364; 11 Blorce, 227; 4 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 95; 28 R. R. 643.

— Molding Over.—New Tenanoy.]—Where a new tonancy has been created as to part of the property comprised in a lense, of which notice to quit has been given, a landlord, after the expirition of such notice, is not entitled under S Anne, c. 14, ss. 6, 7, to distrain on such new tenancy for arrears of reut due in respect of the old tenancy. Wilkinson v. Peef, 64 L. J., Q. B. 178; [1895] I. Q. B. 516; 15 R. 213; 72 L. T. 151; 38 W. R. 802.

After Death of Tenant.]—Where a lessee of lands dies before the expiration of the term, and his administrator continues in possession during the remainder, and after the expiration of it, a distress may be made for rent due for the whole term. Bruithwaite v. Cooksey, 1 H. Bl. 465; 2 R. 807.

But where A., being tenaut at will, at a yearly rent, died, leaving rent in arrear, and the day after his death the lessor distrained, the house being occupied by A. servants:—Held, that the distress was illegal, and that it was not made during the possession of the tenant from whom the ruth became due, within 8 Aune, c. 14, s. 6, Taviner v. Barnes, 2 B. & S. 435; 31 L. J., Q. B. 170; 3 Jun. (x.s.) 199; 10 W. R. 561.

5. WHERE TO BE MADE.

River close to Wharf, —Barges lying in a river close to a wharf, and fastened by a rope to piles, intended partly for the support of the wharf, and partly that barges may be attrached to them, may be distrained for rent due in respect of the wharf, they being as much on the premises demised as the nature of the thing will admit of. Buzzerd v. Cupel, 4 Bing, 137; 12 Moore, 339; 2 Car. & P.541; 5 L.J. (co. S. C. P. 123.

But afterwards, where it was stated in a special verdict, that, by an indenture, the defendant demised to plaintiff a wharf "with all ways, paths, passages, profits, commodities, and appurtenances whatsoever, to the wharf belonging"; and that, by the indenture, the exclusive use of the land of the river opposite to and in front of the wharf, between high and low water mark, was demised as appurtenant to the wharf, but that the land itself was not demised :- Held, that the meaning of this finding was, either that the land was demised as appartenant to another piece of land, viz. to the wharf, which, in point of law, could not be; or that the use and enjoyment of the land passed as appurtenant, which would be a mere easement or privilege, from which no rent could issue : consequently, no distress could be made of barges lying on such land, taking the finding of the jury in either way. Buzzard v. Capel, 8 B. & C. 141; 2 M. & Ry. 197; 6 Bing. 150; 3 M. & P. 480; 3 Y. & J. 844.

Road near Stable.]—A tenant rented a stable, and was in the habit of keeping his cart on a part of the read adjoining the stable, which had been paved for thin purpose by his landlord. In an action against the landlord for setzing his tenant's cart, while standing in the road, as a distress for rent:—Held, that the paved part of the road was to be considered a part of the demised premises, and that the landlord might lawfully soize the cart there as a distress for the rent of the stable. Gillingham v. Gwyer, 16 L. T. 40.

Mining Lease—"Adjoining or neighbouring" of Colliery, 1—A power in a mining lease for the landlord to distrain for rent in arrear upon chattels of the lesses in the denised colliery, or "any adjoining or neighbouring collieries" must be construed as limited to the denised colliery and such collieries only as might be or become connected with it by underground workings. Remainsond Colliery Co., In r., Lee v., Roundwood Colliery Co., 50, 15, 16, 185; [1897] J. Ch. 37, 57, L. 7, 61; 45 W. R. 324—C. A.

6. How to be Made.

By Breaking open Door.]—A forcible re-entry by breaking the onter door is justifiable, under a warrant of distress, where the party has been forcibly turned out of possession. Eagleton v. Gutteridge, 11 M. & W. 465; 2 D. (N.S.) 1053; 12 L. J., Ex. 359.

A landlord cannot break open the outer door of a stable, though not within the curtilage, to levy an ordinary distress for rent. Brown v. Glenn, 16 Q. B. 254; 20 L. J., Q. B. 205; 15 Jur. 189.

A landlord, in order to distrain, may open the outer door in the ordinary way in which other persons using the building are accustomed to open it. Ryan v. Shillock, 7 Ex. 72; 21 L. J., Ex. 55; 15 Jur. 1200.

Although in levying a distress, when a person | wall surrounding the yard of the house, and has once obtained peaceable possession of the premises, and been forcibly put out of them, he may legally break open a door or a window for the purpose of regaining possession; yet when a person has merely got his foot and arm between the door and the lintel, or by putting a pair of shears between the door and the lintel has prevented its being closed, this is not a possession which will entitle him to break open a door or a window for the purpose of gaining admission to the house. And therefore a distress made under such circumstances is illegal ab initio. Boyd v. Proface, 16 L. T. 431.

Certain demised premises consisted of a courtyard in which was a warehouse. The landlord's balliff, in levying a distress for rent, obtained entrance into the courtyard through a gate, and being there broke open the main door of the warchouse, and distrained therein :-Held, that the distress was illegal, as the door that was broken open by the bailiff was the "outer door" Oh. v. Hendry, 5 R. 331. Affirmed, 62 L. J., Q. B. 388; 5 R. 335, n.; 68 L. T. 742; 57 J. P. 788— C. A.

Through Window. ]-A declaration that the defendant broke and entered a dwelling-house of the plaintiff, seized divers goods and chattels, carried them away, and converted them to his own use. The defendant, who was landlord to the plaintiff, from whom rent was due to him, had, in order to make a distress, entered on the premises by forcibly breaking in a window, and seized and sold his goods :- Held, that this mode of entry on the premises being unlawful in itself, rendered the defendant a trespasser ab initio. Attack v. Bramwell, 3 B. & S. 520; 32 L. J., Q. B. 146; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 892; 7 L. T. 740; 11 W. R. 309.

A landlord is not entitled, for the purpose of distraining for rent, to open the window of a house which is shut but not fastened. Nash v. Lucys, 8 B. & S. 531; L. R. 2 Q. B. 590.

Where another person at the suggestion of the 2 Br. & B. 514. landlord, opened a window and entered the house and then opened the outer door, through which the landlord entered and distrained :-Held, that the distress was unlawful. Ib.

An entry to make a distress through an open window is lawful. Tutton v. Darke, 5 H. & N. 647; 29 L. J., Ex. 271; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 983; 2 L. T.

But an entry for the purpose of making a distress through a window which is fastened by means of a hasp, is not lawful. Hancock v. Austin, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 634; 32 L. J., C. P. 252; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 77; 8 L. T. 429; 11 W. R. 833.

On an indictment for forcibly entering and distraining in a dwelling-house, a verdict having been given for the prosecution, the court refused a motion to set it aside, which was made on the ground that the entry having been made by opening an unfastened window was lawful. Reg. . Lockwood, 4 W. R. 465.

Getting over Yard Wall—Illegality.]—A The solicitors had, on previous occasions, issued landlord's bailiff, being employed to distrain distress warrants in respect of other property of in a house for rent in arrear, elimbed over the the landlords—Held, not to be sufficient evidence entered the house by an open window :- Held. that the climbing over the wall was not illegal, and that the distress was lawful. Eldridge v. and that the discress was lawful. Edwage v. Skacey (15 C. B. (K.s.) 458) approved; Scott v. Buckley (16 L. T. 573) overruled. Long v. Clarke, 63 L. J., Q. B. 108; [1894] 1 Q. B. 119; 9 B. 60; 69 L. T. 654; 42 W. R. 130; 58 J. P. 150—C. A.

Climbing over Fence.]—There is no illegality in distraining for rent by climbing over a fence, and so gaining access to the house by an open door. Eldridge v. Stacey, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 458; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 517; 9 L. T. 291; 12 W. R. 51.

A landlord in making a distress got over a fence or wall of from five to eight feet high at the back of the tenant's house, such being the only means of effecting an entrance, as the front door was locked:—Held, that such a mode of entry was illegal. Scott v. Buckley, 16 L. T. 573.

Calling in Police Officer.]-In making a distress for rent, eireumstances may occur which may require the presence of a police officer. But to justify the landlord in calling him in, it must be shewn that his presence was rendered neces-sary either from threats of resistance, or the apprehension of violence. Skidmore v. Booth, 6 Car. & P. 777.

By Breaking through Ceiling. - Trespass will not lie against a landlord who occupies an apartment over a mill demised to his tenant, from which it is divided only by a boarded floor without any eciling, for taking up the floor of his own apartment, and entering through the aperture to distrain for rent. Gould v. Bradstock, 4 Taunt. 562.

Premises must be thoroughly Searched.]-A clause of forfeiture in a lease, in case no sufficient distress be found on the premises, must be strictly pursued; and in case of a distress being made, every part of the premises must be searched. Rees d. Powell v. King, Forrest, 19;

7. WARRANT OF DISTRESS.

Authority under.]—If, in replevin against a broker, it is proved that the landlord employs the attorney to defend the broker, that is sufficient evidence of the broker's authority to distrain in the absence of any written warrant. Duncan v. Meikleham, 3 Car. & P. 172.

A warrant to distrain upon goods was originally addressed by the defendant to the plaintiff or his agent. The plaintiff's clerk struck out the Entry into a house for the purpose of distrain-ing may lawfully be made by further opening a window which is partly open. Crabtree v Robinson, 5 t. J., Q. B. 544; 15 Q. B. D. 312; 33 W. R. 936; 50 J. P. 70. sufficiently authorised by the defendant, and that the alteration did not render the warrant void. Toplis v. Grane, 7 Scott, 620; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 636; 9 L. J., C. P. 180.

A warrant of distress was produced by the plaintiff, purporting to be issued by the solicitors of the landlords of certain property, the writing being in the hand of a junior partner of the firm.

- Sewers Rate. |- Commissioners of sewers by a warrant under s. 7 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 50, addressed to A., authorised a distress of K.'s goods. A. handed the warrant to B., who handed it to C. The latter entered, and was ejected and assaulted by K. K. was summoned for an assault on C. :-Held, that as the warrant was addressed to A., C. had no anthority to execute it, and was rightly ejected by K. Symonds v. Kurtz, 61 L. T. 559; 16 Cox, C. C. 726; 58 J. P. 727.

How Executed. ]-A warrant of distress directed to two jointly, in a matter pro bono publico, may be executed by one. Lee v. Vessey, 1 H. & N. 90; 25 L. J., Ex. 271; 4 W. R. 554.

By a local act for draining and preserving low lands in Lincoln, and for restoring and maintaining the navigation of a river, commissioners were authorised to impose rates for the purpose of such drainage, and, in case of default in payment after demand, to issue their warrant to their collector or collectors to levy the amount by distress. The commissioners having issued their warrant "to L, the collector, and M., bailiff," it was executed by M. alone:—Held, that it was regularly executed, and that an action of trespass was not maintainable against the commissioners or M. Ib.

The act also provided, that a distress made under the act should not be deemed unlawful, nor the party or parties making the same be deemed a trespasser or trespassers on account of any defect or want of form in the warrant or other proceedings:-Held, that, supposing the execution of the warrant by M. had been irregular, this provision would have applied to cure the defect of the joint direction of the warrant, Ib.

8. WHAT AMOUNTS TO A DISTRESS.

Seizure necessary. ]—A landlord's agent walked round a demised wharf, left a written notice that he had distrained goods lying there for rent, and that they would be appraised and sold, if not replevied. He then went away, leaving no one in possession :- Held, an actual scizure. Swan v. Falmouth (Earl), 8 B. & C. 456; 2 M. & Ry. 534; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 374.

A. entered B.'s house, and said that he had come to make a distress, and began taking an inventory; but finding out that he had make a mistake, left the house without removing any of the goods :- Held, that the acts of A. did not amount to making a distress. Spice v. Webb, 2

A landlord's broker went to the tenant's house, and pressed for payment of rent alleged to be due, and 31, 3s. for expenses of the levy, but touched nothing, and made no inventory. The tenant paid him the rent and expenses under protest, on which he withdrew. In an action against the landlord for an excessive distress :-Held, that he could not say that there had been no actual distress. Hutchins v. Scott, 2 M. & W. 809; M. & H. 194; 6 L. J., Ex. 186.

Placing Hand on Cattle with Intention of Distraining. __ The agent of the landlord went into a field on the farm where the tenant's cattle were feeding, and, placing his hand upon one of the beasts, said he distrained the whole for the ing morning he left with the femant a notice, stating that he had distrained the cattle thereunder mentioned, and had impounded them on the premises :- Held, that this constituted an impounding, and that a subsequent tender of the rent, and of the costs of distress, was too late. Thomas v. Harris, 1 Scott (N.R.) 524; 1 Man. & G. 695; 9 L. J., C. P. 308; 4 Jur. 723.

Making Inventory and putting Man in Possession.]-A landlord entered upon a dwellinghouse held of him, to distrain for rent in arrear. To prevent inconvenience to the tenant, the landlord with the tenant's assent, instead of removing the articles of furniture upon which he proposed to distrain, made up, from a list given to him by the tenant, an inventory of the furniture in the house, put a man into possession, and handed to the tenant a notice of the distress referring to the inventory, which was also then handed to the tenant. The landlord did not go into the several rooms in which the articles were :- Held, that this constituted a distraining of the articles mentioned in the inventory, and that a tender subsequently made was too late, although the notice of distress did not state that the articles were impounded. Tennant v. Field, 8 El. & Bl. 336; 27 L. J., Q. B. 33; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1178; 6 W. R. 11.

Refusal to allow Removal of Goods. -W. occupied lodgings in the defendant's house at a weekly rent. He brought a plane with him, which he had hired of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs sent two men to fetch away the piano; the defendant's wife met the men in the passage of the house outside the room in which the piano was, and having been informed of their object, said, in the presence of W., who was at the door of the room, the piano should not leave the house unless what was owing from W. for rent and board were paid. The wife was acting by the defendant's authority; and there was rent due from W .: Held, that there might be a distress without actual seizure, and that what had occurred amounted to a distress, Cramer v. Mott, 39 L. J., Q. B. 172; L. R. 5 Q. B. 357; 22 L. T. 857; 18 W. R. 947.

The grantee, under a bill of sale of furniture, being in possession in the house of the grantor and intending to remove the goods from the premises, was told by the landlord (who was there for the purpose of distraining) that he would not allow them to be removed till the arrears of rent were satisfied, and that he was prepared to resist the removal by force. The grantee thereupon made no further attempt to remove the goods :-Held, that such assertion of the intention not to allow the removal of the goods did not, under the circumstances, amount to a conversion by the landlord. England v. Cawley, 42 L. J., Ex. 80; L. R. 8 Ex. 126; 28 L. T. 67; 21 W. R. 337.

Collusion-Void as against Third Party. - If A., the teuant of B., has paid all his rent, and has his landlord's receipt for it, but fearing that his goods will be taken on legal process, agrees with his laudlord to destroy the receipt, and that the latter should put in a distress for rent to protect the goods, and the landlord does so, and sells the goods, and keeps the proceeds :- This the bears, said in the limited the winds at the limited as against a third person, and A. can maintain no action against B. for it. Sims v. Tuffs, effects on the premises that may be required in 6 Car. & P. 207.

But if B. sold some articles not included in the inventary of the distress, A. may maintain an action in respect of these articles. Ib.

Impounding Distress. - Semble, that a distress is sufficiently impounded, in accordance the party distraining had seized the goods menwith 11 Geo. 2, c, 19, s, 10, where, with the continued in an inventory theremore written and sent of the tenant, the person distraining makes the inventory was for one clock, and any other an inventory of part of the goods distrained, serves it, together with notice of the distress, on the tenant, and leaves a man in possession on the premises, but does not disturb, lock-np, or remove any of the goods. Johnson v. Upham, 2 El. & El. 250.

On distraining for rent in a dwelling-house, which was chiefly occupied by lodgers, the distrainer took down, in the kitchen, at the dictation of the tenant's wife, an inventory of furniture in the other rooms. A man was left in possession, a copy of the inventory, with a notice that the articles enumerated therein had been distrained for rent, being also left. The tenant called the same day, and thanked the distrainer for the mode in which the distress had been conducted :-Held, that the tenant, having assented to what had been done, could not object that this was not an impounding within 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 10, as against a subsequent tender by him of the rent. Tennant v. Field, 8 El. & Bl. 336; 27 L. J., Q. B. 33; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1178; 6 W. R. 11.

Independently of the assent by the tenant, there was not an impounding. Ib.

- On the Premises.]-A tenant being in arrear for rent of a cottage, his landlord distrained the goods there, and locked up the cottage, and, after selling the goods, kept possession, the tenant saying " he would have done with it" -Held, in an action by the tenant for an expulsion, that the landlord was justified in impounding the distress on the premises, and in locking up the cottage to secure the distress.

Cow v. Painter, 7 Car. & P. 707.

Trespass for breaking and entering a plaintiff's dwelling-house, locking the doors, and expelling him. Plea, justifying all the trespasses except the expulsion under a distress for rent, alleging that the defendant kept and impounded it in the dwelling-house, and in order safely to impound and keep it necessarily locked and fastened the doors of the house, and afterwards caused the goods to be appraised and sold in satisfaction of the rent and costs of distress and sale :- Held, that the plea should have shewn that the house, or that part of it of which the doors were locked, was the most fit and convenicut place for securing the distress, or the tenant might be improperly kept out of posses-Woods v. Durrant, 16 M. & W. 149; 16 sion. Woods L. J., Ex. 313.

9. NOTICE OF DISTRESS.

belonging to several strangers, and a pony phae-ton of A., were taken under it. A notice of distress was left on the premises, the inventory tataclied to which, after specifying certain goods, but making no mention of those of A., possible v. Uphana, 2 El. & Bl. 250; 28 L. J., Q. B. 252; ceeded thus:—"And all other goods, charters and 5 draws. (X. L. Z. L order to satisfy the above rent, together with all the expenses":—Held, that this notice was too vague and uncertain to justify a sale of the property of A. Kerby v. Harding, 6 Ex. 234; 20 L. J., Ex. 163; 15 Jur. 953.

Where a notice of distress for rent stated that tioned in an inventory thereunder written, and goods and effects that might be found in and about the premises, to pay the rent and expenses; and where it was proved that all the goods on the premises were in fact seized, and were intended to be seized:—Held, that the notice and inventory together must be taken to mean a notice that all the goods on the premises were seized; and that since all were seized, such a notice, though improperly vague, was a sufficient compliance with the statutes, which require that when a distress is made notice shall be given of it. Wademan v. Lindsey, 14 Q. B. 625; 19 L. J., Q. B. 166; 15 Jur. 79.

In Writing. ]-Under 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2, the notice of distress for rent, to be given five days before sale, must be in writing. Wilson v. Nightingale, 8 Q. B. 1034; 15 L. J., Q. B. 309; 10 Jur. 917.

Want of . . A want of notice does not render a distress invalid. Trent v. Hunt, 9 Ex. 14; 22 L. J., Ex. 318; 17 Jur. 899; 1 W. R. 481.

In wrong Name. - Where notice of a distress for rent is given in the name of a wrong party. the distress is not vitiated, but the distrainor cannot proceed to sell the distress under 2-Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 15, and 11 (4co. 2, c. 19. Ib.

Under wrong Act. - When a distress is made under the authority of one local act, and the notice of distress states it to be made under another, and the plaintiff discontinues an action brought in respect of that distress, the mistake as to the act authorising the distress, does not interfere with the defendant's claim to treblecosts under that act in case of discontinuance, although the plaintiff may have adopted a form of action not contemplated by the protecting act. Debney v. Corbett, 5 D. P. C. 704.

10. TENDER OF RENT.

After Distress impounded. - After a distressfor rent has been impounded, tender of the rent and charges is too late. Ladd v. Thomas, 4 P. & D. 9; 12 A. & E. 117; 9 L. J., Q. B. 345; 4 Jur. 798. No action lies against a party for selling a distress after tender of the rent and costs, if the tender is made after the impounding; and the rule is the same, whether the pound be public or private. Ellis v. Taylor, 8 M. & W. 415; 10 L. J., Ex. 462. But see next case.

Must not be Vague.]—A distress for rent having been made at some livery stables, goods by the tenant of the rent due, and costs, to the Within five Days and before Sale, ]-A tenderperson distraining, within five days after the dis-tress is taken and before sale, though after the distress has been impounded, in accordance with

To whom made. ]-A tender of rent and expenses need not be made to the broker who distrains; if made to the landlord, a subsequent M. 371; 2 N. & M. 114; 4 B. & Ad. 413; 2 L. J., K. B. 192. detainer is wrongful. Smith v. Goodwin. 1 N. &

But a man merely left in possession of a dis-tress by the person who distrained, has no implied authority in law to receive from the tenant payment of the rent distrained for. Boulton v. Reynolds, 2 El. & El. 369; 29 L. J., Q. B. 11; 6 Jun. (N.S.) 46; 1 L. T. 166; 8 W. R. 62.

Tender made. ]-An action lies for detaining goods taken under a distress for rent, after a sufficient tender made before impounding. Loring v. Warburton, El. Bl. & EL 507; 28 L. J., Q. B. 31; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 634; 6 W. R. 602.

- Without Expenses. - A tender of rent without expenses, after a warrant of distress is delivered to a broker, but before it is executed, is a good tender. Bennett v. Bayes, 5 H. & N. 391 : 29 L. J., Ex. 224 : 2 L. T. 156 : 8 W. R. 320

Sale after.]-A landlord distraining for rent rent and costs made at any time within the five days. Johnson v. Upham, 2 El. & El. 250; 28 L. J., Q. B. 252; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 681.

11. ABANDONMENT AND RETAKING.

Abandonment. ]-The landlord's agent walked round a demised wharf, left a written notice that he had distrained goods lying there for rent, and that they would be appraised and sold, if not replevied. He then went away, leaving no one in possession:—Held, an actual seizure; and no abandonment as between landlord and tenant. in an action for an excessive distress. Swan v. Falmouth (Earl), 2 M. & Ry. 534; 8 B. & C. 456; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 374.

After seizure of goods under a distress for rent, no notice thereof having been given to the party depositing them, the distrainor permitted him to take them off the premises for a temporary purpose, with an intention on the part of the distrainor, that they should be returned, which was done :- Held, that there was not any abandonment of the distress. Kerby v. Harding, 6 Ex. 234; 20 L. J., Ex. 163; 15 Jur. 953.

The man in possession of goods distrained for rent, having quitted the house for the purpose of refreshment, found, on his return, the door purposely locked against him by the tenant, and broke it open for the purpose of re-entering:— Held, that there being no evidence of an abandonment of the distress, the man in possession was justified in so re-entering. Bunnister v. Hyde, 2 El. & El. 627; 29 L. J., Q. B. 141; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 171; 1 L. T. 438.

A broker distrained for rent by climbing over a garden fence and letting himself into the premises by the back-door, which was not locked, in the absence of the tenant. The tenant, on his return expelled the man in possession; but three weeks afterwards the premises were again entered by breaking in the front door :- Held, that the distress was lawful in the first instance, and that there was not an abandonment of it.

Eldridge v. Stacey, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 458; 10

Jur. (N.S.) 517; 9 L. T. 291; 12 W. R. 51.

Retaking.]—A bailiff distrained in a dwellinghouse, and remained there in possession longer than five days, and being then expelled, and afterwards retaking the goods distrained upon (finding them off the premises), but along with others not in-cluded in the distress :—Held, that the doctrine of confusion of property did not apply to preclude the owner from bringing trespass. Smith v. Torr. 3 F. & F. 505.

The plaintiff was possessed of a lathe, which was in the shop of S. The latter being indebted to his landlord (the defendant) for rent, and the plaintiff being about to remove the lathe (between six and seven o'clock in the morning), the defendant interposed, saying that "he would not suffer that, or any of the other things, to go off the premises till his rent was paid," and then left the shop. The plaintiff, however, removed the lathe, and about twelve o'clock the same day the defendant sent a broker to the premises to distrain, and followed and brought back the lathe. The plaintiff thereupon sued him in trover :-Held, that the distress being commenced by the landlord's saving in the morning, that he would not suffer the things to be removed until his rent was paid, and completed by the entry of the broker afterwards, the landlord had a right to ought not to sell the goods after a tender of the take and bring back the lathe, which had been carried away in the meantime. Wood v. Nunn, 2 M. & P. 27; 5 Bing. 10; 6 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 198; 30 R. R. 528.

> Effect of Delay in.]—A broker's man having taken possession of properly under a distress for rent, after remaining two days, left the house in a state of great excitement bordering on insanity. The landlord thinking that his leaving had been procured by the drugging of his liquor by the parties in the house, but which was not proved, six days after broke into the house and took away the goods, without any previous demand of admission:—Held, that he had no right to enter again after so long a delay. and that the owner of the goods might maintain trover for them, Russell v. Rider, 6 Car, & P.

12. How Goods Disposed of.

Within what Time Sold. |- In constraing 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2, which authorises the sale of goods distrained within five days next after the taking, the days must be calculated as the rule now is in other cases, inclusively of the last and exclusively of the day of taking. Robinson v. Wuddington, 13 Q. B. 753; 18 L. J., Q. B. 250; 13 Jur. 537.

If goods are distrained for rent, the landlord must wait five whole days, i.e. five times twentyfour hours, before he sells, and if he does not, he is liable to an action. Thus, where a distress was made on Friday at 2 p.m., and the sale was on the following Wednesday at 11 a.m., the sale was wrongful. Harper v. Taswell, 6 Car. & P.

If a landlord who has distrained for rent, does not sell within the five days by arrangement between him and the tenant, that is no proof of collusion per se. Harrison v. Barry, 7 Price, 690; 21 R. R. 781.

And a reasonable time after the expiration of five days from the time of distress, is by law allowed to the landlord for appraising and selling the goods distrained. Pitt v. Shew, 4 B. & Ald. 208. The request of the tenant will justify the as requires appraisement before sale of goods landlord in detaining the goods of a lodger upon distrained is repealed, except in cases where the the premises beyond the proper time of selling, if he did not know which were the goods of the lodger, and which those of his tenant. Fisher v. Algar, 2 Car, & P. 374.

— Lodger's Goods.]—See Sharp v. Fowle, 53 L. J., Q. B. 309; 12 Q. B. D. 385; 50 L. T. 758; 32 W. R. 539; 48 J. P. 680; ante, col.

When Appraised but not Sold. ]-Where goods are distrained, and at the end of five days removed and appraised, but not sold, such act does not take away the tenant's right to replevy them. Jacob v. King, 1 Marsh. 135; 5 Taunt. 451; 15 R. R. 550.

Notice of Sale.]-In a notice for the sale of a distress, it is not necessary to mention when the rent became due for which the distress was made. Moss v. Gallimore, 1 Dougl. 279,

Liability of Auctioneer.]—An auctioneer re-ceiving for the purpose of sale, from the distrainer, goods seized as a distress, who returns them, is not answerable in trover; although, while the goods were with him, he had notice that the distress was illegal, and refused to deliver them to the owner. Whitworth v. Smith, 1 M. & Rob. 193,

- Sale subject to Condition.]—Quere, whether a landlord, who has seized his tenant's hay and straw under a distress for rent, may sell it subject to a condition that the purchaser shall consume it on the premises, according to the custom of the country. Frusher v. Lee, 10 M. & W. 709; 12 L. J., Ex. 321.

Necessity of Sale. ]-The right of property in goods distrained for rent remains in the tenant until sale, and the taking of such goods to himself, at the appraised value, in discharge of the Self, as the appears of the country of the country of a hadlord, is not equivalent to a sale.

King v. England, i B. & S. 782; 33 L. J., Q. B.
145; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 634; 9 L. T. 645; 12 W. R.

Rights of Landlord where Goods unsold.] When a landlord distrains for rent and does not sell the goods, he cannot bring an action for the rent so long as he holds the distress, though it is insufficient to satisfy the rent. Lehain v. Phil-pott, 44 L. J., Ex. 225; L. R. 10 Ex. 242; 33 L. T. 98; 23 W. R. 876. See preceding case.

Where Sale is Insufficient. ]-When goods have been sold under a distress, and the proceeds are insufficient to satisfy the rent due, the landlord has a remedy by action or counter-claim for the balance. Philpott v. Lehain, 35 L. T.

Action does not lie against Landlord for not selling.]—The 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2, by which the landlord after five days "shall and may lawfully sell the goods distrained," is permissive, not compulsory, and therefore no action lies for not selling. Ib.

distrained is repealed, except in cases where the tenant or owner of the goods, by writing, requires such appraisement to be made.

Under former Statutes. ]-The appraisement of goods distrained made by two sworn appraisers under 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, e. 5, is only prima facie evidence of the value of the goods. Cook v. Corbett, 24 W. R. 181-C. A.

The 13 Edw. 1, c. 37 (Westm. 2), which enacts, that no distress shall be taken except by bailiffs "sworn and known," does not apply to distresses taken for rent in arrear. Begbie v. Hayne, 2 Scott, 193; 2 Bing, (N.C.) 124; 1 Hodges, 266; 4 L. J., C. P. 308. S. P., Child v. Chamberlain, 3 N. & M. 520; 5 B. & Ad. 1049; 6 Car. & P.

If the tenant, to save expense, request that appraisers may not be called in, and in consequenee the broker who made the seizure values the goods, the tenant cannot, in an action, complain of that which was done as an irregularity. Bishop v. Bryant, 6 Car. & P. 481.

It is illegal to swear the person who distrains as one of the appraisers. Andrews v. Russell, Bull. N. P. 81.

A distress so appraised is irregular. Westwood v. Cowne, 1 Stark, 172.

The appraiser must be sworn before the constable of the parish where the distress is taken; the constable of the adjoining parish cannot interfere, though the proper constable is not to be found when wanted. Arenell v. Croker, M. & M. 172.

The constable who swears the appraisers must attend with the appraisers at the time of the appraisement, and must swear them before they make it. Kenny v. May, 1 M. & Rob. 56.
Where a distress is sold without previous appraisement, the party distrained on can only recover the value of the goods minus the amount of rent due; but he may recover special damage sustained by such an illegal sale. Biggins v. Goude, 2 Tyr. 447; 2 C. & J. 364; 1 L. J., Ex. 120.

In an action for selling goods under a distress, without appraisement, if the sum produced is less than the fair value to the tenant, he may recover the difference without any allegation of special damage. Knotts v. Curtis, 5 Car. & l'. 822; 2 Tyr.

Although the reut, for which goods are distrained, does not exceed 20%, they must be appraised by two appraisers, under 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2, notwithstanding the 57 Geo. 3, e. 93, regulating the costs of distresses for rent not exceeding 201,, the schedule to which preseribes the sum to be for appraisement, "whether by one broker or more." Allen v. Tricker, 4 by one broker or more." Allen v. Tricher, 4 P. & D. 735; 10 A. & E. 640: 9 L. J., Q. B. 42; 3 Jur. 1029.

Since the statute 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, where there is a distress for rent not exceeding 20% in amount, there need be only one sworn appraiser. Fletcher

v. Saunders, 6 Car. & P. 747; 1 M. & Rob. 375. In an action on the case for selling goods distrained, without appraisement, the plaintiff is not entitled to damages without deducting the amount of rent for which the distress was made: Briggins v. Goude, 1 L. J., Ex. 129; 2 Tyr. 447.

In an action for selling goods distrained for Appraisement of Goods seized.]—By the Law refine the statute 3 Will. § M., c. 5, minus the rent due. Knight v. Egerton, 7 Ex. 407. Overplus—Meaning of ]—The overplus, which | 13. When Right of Distribution | 13. When Right of Distribution | 13. When Right of Distribution | 14. When Right of Distribution | 14. When Right of Distribution | 14. When Right of Distribution | 15. When Right of Dist left in the hands of the sheriff, under-sheriff, or constable, on a distress, for the owner's use, means the overplus after payment of the rent and of the reasonable charges. Lyon v. Tomkies, 1 M. & W. 603; 2 Gale, 144; 1 Tyr. & G. 810; 5 L. J., Ex. 260

Where the tenant herself received from the broker the balance remaining, after payment of the rent and the actual charges, making no objection as to their reasonableness :- Held, that it was a question for the jury whether she accepted such balance in satisfaction, and if not, whether it was sufficient to satisfy the real balance; but that it was not correct to lay it down as matter of law, that such payment and receipt substantially satisfied the requisitions of the statute. Ib.

- Rights of Mortgagee, -A landlord who has sold his tenant's goods under a distress for rent is not liable in an action for money had and received, at the suit of the mortgagee of the goods, to recover the surplus money in the landlord's hands, the proper remedy being by an action on the case against him for not paying Yates v. over the overplus to the sheriff. Eastwood, 6 Ex. 805; 20 L. J., Ex. 303.

Duties of Broker. - Where goods distrained for rent in arrear have been removed to a convenient place for sale, and sufficient sold to satisfy the distress, the proper course is for the broker to leave the surplus money with the sheriff. and return the surplus goods to the premises whomen he took them. Evans v. Wright, 2 whence he took them. Even H. & N. 527; 27 L. J., Ex. 50.

In an action for an excessive distress, with counts for selling without an appraisement, and for less than the value, and for not leaving the surplus in the hands of the sheriff; and the jury finding that the rent for which the distress was made was due, but that the defendant seized to an unreasonable amount, but that the plaintiff had authorised the defeudant to seize and to sell the whole; and the defence being, that the surplus having been paid over to a judgment creditor of the plaintiff's under a garnishment order for the attachment of the money obtained by the creditor, in consequence of an intimation of the distress given to him by the defendant; and the jury finding that this was a juggle, and, under the direction of the judge, giving a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount of the surplus, the posten was afterwards altered by entering a verdict for the plaintiff, with nominal damages, on the first count, and for the defendant on the others, the payment over to the creditor, under the garnishment order, being held to be a legal justification. Cross v. Aures, 1 F. & F. 187.

Being unable to find the tenant is a sufficient excuse for not paying over the surplus to the tenant after a levy and sale of the goods. Notwithstanding 2 W. & M. c. 5, s. 2, it is the practice to pay over such surplus to the tenant and not to the sheriff. Stubbs v. May, 1 L. J., C. P. 12.

Demand for. |-The statute 27 Geo. 2. c. 20, s. 2, requires that a demand be made before an action is brought against parish officers for the overplus after a distress has been made by them. The bringing of the action is not a suffi-cient demand, and a tender does not dispense with proof of it. Simpson v. Routh, 2 B. & C. 682; 4 D. & R. 181; 2 L. J. (6.s.) K. B. 163.

arrear, does not take away the landlord's right of distress. Sherry v. Preston, 2 Chit. 245.

The plaintiff being desirons of taking apartments of B., but not willing to do so unless the defendant, the superior landlord, would relieve him from the risk of having his goods distrained for B,'s rent; the defendant engaged that as long as the plaintiff paid B. his rent, he (the defendant) would never trouble the plaintiff or his property. The plaintiff accordingly entered, but failed in the due payment of his rent:—Held, that the landlord's right of distress was not taken away, notwithstanding that the plaintiff had, before the distress, tendered to B. the balance of rent due to him. Welsh v. Rose, 4 M. & P. 484; 6 Bing, 638; S L. J. (o.s.) C, P. 246.

From an agreement to which the landlord of a farm is privy, for a sale by the temant of some entage of pasture to A., the amount produced by the sale to be paid to the landlord, a contract by him may be inferred not to distrain cattle put on the demised land to consume the catage. ford v. Webster, I C. M. & R. 696; 5 Tyr, 409; 1 Gale, 1: 4 L. J., Ex. 100.

Landlord taking from Tenant Bill of Exchange.]—A tenant being indebted to his handlord for rent, the agent of the landlord, without his authority or knowledge, took a bill of exchange from the tenant for the rent, and paid over the amount of the rent to the landlord in his settlement of account. The bill was afterwards dishonoured, whilst in the hands of a third party, and the rent was not paid by the tenant, whereupon the landlord distrained :-Held, to be a question for the jury whether the bill was discounted for, or the money lent to, the tenant by the agent, or whether it was an advance by the agent to the landlord; and that if the bill was discounted for, or the money so lent to, the tenant, the landlord was not entitled to distrain; otherwise he was entitled. Parratt v. Anderson, 7 Ex. 93; 21 L, J., Ex. 291,

So where, on the rent becoming due, the agent for both tenant and landlord paid the rent to the landlord without any anthority from either party, the tenant afterwards failed to pay the rent, and the landlord distrained. Griffiths v. Chichester.

7 Ex. 95, 11,

The fact of a tenant giving a bill of exchange to his landlord for rent overdue is of itself some evidence of an agreement by the latter to suspend his right to distrain until the maturity of the bill. Palmer v. Bramley, 65 L. J., Q. B. 42; [1895] 2 Q. B. 405; 14 R. 643; 73 L. T. 329—C. A.

- Promissory Note. - Where a promissory note, payable after date, was given by a tenant to his landlord on account of rent due, without there being any distinct agreement between the parties, that it should operate as a suspension of the right to distrain:—Held, that it had not that effect. Davis v. Gyde, 4 N. & M. 462; 2 A. & E. 623; 1 H. & W. 50; ± L. J., K. B. 84.

A note given by a tenant to his landlord, on account of rent due, is no extinguishment of the right to recover the amount by distress until it is paid. 1b.

If a tenant on whom his landlord has distrained for rent, gives a note for the amount jointly with another person, to release his goods, and a subsequent distress is made on him for arrears of rent accruing due after the period to which the note referred, the produce of the sale shew that they were removed with a view to of such latter distress must be applied in discharge of the note, and the landlord cannot apply it in discharge of the subsequent rent, and then sue the person who joined in giving the note for the former rent. Pulfrey v. Baker, 3 Price, 572

Contract by Lessee to Purchase Reversion. ]-A lease is not determined at law by a contract by the lessee to purchase the reversion; but, in equity, the landlord's right to distrain is suspended pending completion of the contract, so long as the contract is subsisting and enforceable by action for specific performance; if, however, the contract is released or abandoned, or the lessee by unreasonable delay loses his right to specific performance, the landlord may then distrain. Ellis v. Wright, 76 L. T. 522—C. A.

Agreement for Lease—Specific Performance—Interim Order for Possession. Plaintiffs in an action for specific performance of an agreement for a lease to the defendant company, having under an interim order entered into possession of the demised premises, claimed the right to distrain on the goods of strangers on the premises for past arrears of rent due from the defendant company as lessees :-Held, that the order had suspended the relationship of landlord and tenant, and there being no tenancy there could be no right to distrain :-Held, also, that the doetrine of Walsh v. Lonsdale (52 L. J., Ch. 2; 21 Ch. D. 9) had no application, for there was no v. Silkstone and Dodsworth Coal and Iron Co., 65 L. J., Ch. 111; 44 W. R. 198.

Action Barred or Extinguished. ]-An arrangement between the parties respecting the sale of the goods distrained, after the distress but before sale, does not divest the plaintiff of his right of action; because a right of action once vested can only be destroyed by a release under seal, or by the receipt of something in satisfaction of the wrong done. Willoughby v. Backhouse, 4 D. & R. 539; 2 B. & C. 821; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 174; 26 R. R. 566.

A recovery in replevin is a bar to an action for an excessive distress. Phillips v. Berryman, 3 Dougl. 286; 1 Selw. N. P. 679.

14 FRAUDILENT REMOVAL

What is -11 Geo. 2, c. 19.] -The 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, applies to all cases where a landlord is, by the conduct of his tenant in removing goods from premises for which rent is due, turned over to the barren right of bringing an action for his rent. Where a tenant openly, and in the face of day, and with notice to his landlord, removed his goods without leaving sufficient on the premises to satisfy the rent then due, and the landlord followed and distrained the goods :- Held. that although the removal might not be clandestine, yet, if it was fraudulent (which was a question for the jury), the landlord was justified under the statute. Opperman v. Smith, 4 D. & R. 33; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 108; 27 R. B. 507.

elude a distress. Parry v. Duncan, 7 Bing. 243; 5 M. & P. 19; M. & M. 533; 9 L. J. (0,8.) C. P. 83.

It is not necessary to shew in proof of con-cealment of cattle, that they were withdrawn from sight; if they have been removed to a neighbour's field, so as to cause difficulty to the landlord in finding them, it is sufficient, Stanley v. Wharton, 9 Price, 301; 23 R. R. 683.

Semble, that it is a question for the jury whether a removal was fraudulent within the statute, although it is admitted, at the trial by the tenant, that the removal was to avoid a distress. John v. Jeukins, 1 C. & M. 227; 3 Tyr. 170; 2 L. J., Ex. 83.

It is for a landlord who has distrained on goods removed from the premises, to shew that they were removed with an intention to defraud him of his remedy by distress. Inhop v. Morchurch, 2 F. & F. 501.

A creditor, with the assent of his debtor, may take possession of the goods of the latter, and remove them from the premises for the purpose of satisfying a bona fide debt, without incurring the penalty against persons assisting a tenant in removing his goods from the premises, although the creditor takes possession, knowing the debtor to be in distressed circumstances, and under an apprehension that the landlord will distrain, Buch v. Meats, 5 M. & S. 200: 17 R. R. 310.

Rent must be due. ]-A., in May, 1859, entered into an agreement, not under seal, with M., by which M. agreed forthwith to grant A. a valid lease, under seal, of a house and premises for three years from 25th May, 1859, at the yearly rent of 84L, payable quarterly. The agreement specified the lessor's and lesses's covenants to be contained in the lease, and it concluded as follows :- "It is hereby mutually agreed that these presents shall operate as an agreement only, and that until a lease shall be executed the rents, covenants and agreements agreed to be therein reserved and contained shall be paid and observed and the several rights and remedies shall be enforced in the same manner as if the same had been actually executed." No lease was drawn up, but A. entered into possession, and remained till a quarter's rent became due, when he fraudulently removed his goods from the premises to prevent their being distrained : -Held, that the agreement, coupled with A.'s entry into possession, made A, tenant at will to M, at a fixed reserved rent, for which M, had a right to distrain; and that, therefore, M. was right to distrain, that there electric, it was entitled under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 1, to follow and scize A.'s goods. Anderson v. Midland Ry., 3 El. & El. 614; 30 L. J., Q. B. 94; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 411; 3 L. T. 809.

Goods can only be followed by the landlord where the removal takes place after the rent becomes due. Watson v. Main, 3 Esp. 15; 6 R. R. 806. S. P., Furneaux v. Fotherby, 4 Camp. 136.
The right of the landlord to follow the tenant's goods in the case of a frandulent and a clandestine removal, does not attach, unless the rent has actually become due before the removal of has actuary become the before the removation the goods. Rand v. Faughan, 1 Scott, 670; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 767; 1 Hodges, 173; 4 L. J., C. P. 239. S. P., Watts v. Thomas, 1 Jur. 719.

rent being due and payable on the quarter-day, the landlord was justified in following and distraining the goods within thirty days after their removal. Dibble v. Bandere, 2 El. & Bl. 564; 22 L. J. Q. B. 396; 17 Jur, 1054; 1 W. R. 435. Semble, that nuder 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 1, a landlord has no right to distrain goods removed from the premises for rent due subsequent to the removal. John v. Jenkins, 2 L. J., Ex. 83; 1 C. & M. 27; 3 Tyr. 170.

A distress cannot be made upon goods fraudulently removed to avoid distress, unless rent was due at the time of the removal. Northfield v. Nightingale, 1 L. J., K. B. 219.

Landlord must retain Reversion.] - A., entitled to a lease for lives renewable for ever assigned the whole of his estate and interest in the lands to B., reserving a rent, and a power of distress and re-entry, but no reversion. The rent being in arrear, A. distrained, and B. replevied; A. avowed under 25 Geo. 2, c. 13 (Irish), plevied; A. avowed under 25 Geo. 2, c. 15 (1781), corresponding to 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, giving land-lords the remedy by distress:—Held, that the statutes apply only to those cases where there is a reversion, or an interest vested in the lessor at the expiration of the lease; and here there was no reversion. Pluck v. Digges, 2 Dow & Cl. 180, A landlord has no right to follow the goods of a tenant who has removed them after the tenancy has expired by reason of the landlord having conveyed away the reversion. Hardy, 7 Car. & P. 501. Ashmore

Action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house and taking his goods. Plea, that S. held premises as tenant to the defendant, under a demise, made by the defendant to S. for the term of three years, upon which demise a yearly rent was reserved and made payable by S, to the defendant by quarterly payments; that such rent being in arrear, S. fraudulently conveyed away from the premises goods of S. to prevent the defendant from distraining the same for the rent, and for that purpose, and with the privity of the plaintiff, conveyed the same into his dwelling-house; for which reasons, and because the rent remained in arrear, and because there was no sufficient distress upon the premises, and because the goods still remained in his dwellinghouse, the defendant entered the dwelling-house and seized the goods (justifying under s. 1 of 11 Geo. 2, c. 19):—Held that it was not neces-sary that the plea should state the title of defendant to the premises, and that it sufficiently appeared that there was a reversion in the defendant. Angell v. Harrison, 17 L. J., Q. B. 25; 12 Jur. 114.

Landlord can follow Goods of Tenant only.] The statute applies to the goods of the tenant only, and not to those of a stranger; therefore. a plea justifying the following of goods off the premises, and distraining them for rent in arrear, premises, and distributing defined from the fractions must show that they were the tenant's goods. Theoreton v. Adams, 5 M. & S. 38; 17 R. R. 257. S. P. Fletcher v. Marillier, 1 P. & D. 354; 9 A. & E. 457; 2 W. W. & H. 14; 8 L. J. Q. B. 176.

A landlord has no right to follow and take under a distress for rent the goods of a lodger which have been taken off the premises, but only those of his own immediate tenant. Postman

v. Harrell, 6 Car. & P. 225.

19, giving a landlord power to sue for the the son removed the goods from the farm to his > Seizure of Goods after Expiration of Tenancy. -A landlord is not justified, under 11 Geo.

c. 19, s. 1, in following and seizing, after the expiration of the tenancy, and after the tenant has given up possession, goods which have been fraudulently removed from the demised premises for the purpose of defeating the landlord's right to distrain for the rent, for that statute applies only to a case where the handlord has a right to distrain either at common law or under 8 Anne. c. 14. ss. 6 and 7, and it is a condition of the statute of Anne, in order to make it applicable, statute of Affile, in order to make it applicable, that the tenant must be in actual possession. Gray v. Stait, 52 L. J., Q. B. 412; 11 Q. B. D. 668; 49 L. T. 288; 31 W. R. 662; 48 J. P. 86—

Proceedings by Action.]—The 4th section of the statute, which gives a summary remedy before two magistrates, provided the value of the goods shall not exceed 50l., does not take away the jurisdiction of the superior courts.
v. Holden, M. & M. 175; 31 R. R. 727.

Though the goods are worth less than 50%, the landlord is not confined to his remedy by application to two magistrates, Ih,

And the fact that the landlord in the first instance made his complaint before the magistrates, will not preclude him from afterwards maintaining an action. Horsefall v. Davy, 1 Stark, 169; Holt. 147: 17 R. R. 624.

It is not necessary, to support such an action, that it should be proved that a distress was in progress, or about to be in execution, or even contemplated. It is enough if the rent is shewn to be in arrear, and that the goods have been removed afterwards. Stanley v. Wharton, 10 Price, 138; 9 Price, 301; 23 R. R. 683. And see Wandyate v. Knatchbull, 2 Term Rep. 154; 1 R. R. 449.

A colourable possession by a servant of the tenant will not deprive the landlord of his remedy on the statute. Pilton, Ew parte, 1 B. & Ald. 369; 19 R. R. 342.

In an action against a tenant for fraudulently removing his goods from off premises to avoid a distress for rent, it is not necessary to shew an actual participation in the act, if the removal was with his privity. Lister v. Brown, 3 D. & R. 501; 1 Car. & P. 121; 26 R. R. 614.

In an action against a party for aiding and assisting a tenant in the fraudulent removal of his goods, with intent to prevent the landlord distraining them, it is incumbent on the landlord. not only to prove that the defendant assisted the tenant in such fraudulent removal, but also that he was privy to the fraudulent intent of the tenant. Brooke v. Noakes, 8 B. & C. 587; 2 M. & Ry. 570; 6 L. J., K. B. 376.

A plea justifying the breaking open a lock to distrain cattle which have been fraudulently removed to clude a distress for rent, must aver that a constable was present when the lock was broken. Rich v. Woolley, 7 Bing. 651; 5 M. & P.

- Pleadings in Actions.]-In an action for taking goods under a distress for rent if they have been clandestinely removed, and are afterwards seized, the defence must be pleaded wants seized, the derence must be measure specially, as the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 21, does not apply to such a case. Postman v. Harrell, 6 Car. & P. 225. S. P., Furneaux v. Fotherby, 4 Camp. 136; Vaughan v. Davis, 1 Esp. 257.

As to the proper mode of pleading the defence of fraudulent removal, where the goods had been removed to and placed in the plaintiff's house, see Fletcher v. Marillier, 1 P. & D. 354; 9 Ad. & E. 457; 2 W. W. & H. 14; 8 L. J., Q. B. 176.

The plea of not guilty is a good plea to an action by a landlord, for assisting a tenant in the fraudulent removal of his goods. Jones v. Williams, 1 H. & H. 348; 11 A. & E. 643.

In an action for taking goods, the defence, that the goods had been seized after having been fraudulently removed to prevent a distress for rent, cannot be gone into unless specially pleaded. Spencer v. Harrison, 2 Car. & K. 429.

But where, in an action against a landlord and his broker for taking goods, there was no evidence against the landlord, and this defence was opened, but could not be gone into, as not guilty by statute was the only plea, the judge would not certify under 8 & 9 Will. 4, c. 11, s. 1, that there was reasonable cause for making the landlord a defendant to deprive him of his costs. Ib.

It is unnecessary to shew that the goods have not been made the subject of a bona fide sale to persons not privy to the fraudulent removal, as provided by the 2nd section; that fact must be replied. Williams v. Roberts, 7 Ex. 618; 22

L. J., Ex. 61.

It is also unnecessary to state in a plea that the party upon whose land the goods are seized is privy to the fraud; and a previous request is unnecessary, in order to give the landlord the right to break into the premises for the purpose of scizing the goods. Ib.

An adjudication of justices under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 4, is an order and not a conviction, and cannot, therefore, like a conviction, be returned to the sessions in an amended form. Rew v. Cheshire JJ., 5 B. & Ad. 439; 2 N. & M. 827; 2

L. J., M. C. 95.

After notice of appeal against an informal order of two justices for payment of double the value of goods fraudulently removed to prevent a distress, a formal order is drawn up and fleed, of which notice is given to the appellant. The court of quarter sessions is bound to try the appeal as an appeal against the original order. Ib.

An order of justices adjudging a party to pay

An order of pasaces anthugung a party to pay double the value of goods fraudulently and clandestinely removed to prevent a distress, must shew on the face of it that the party removing the goods was tenant; and that the complainant is the landlord, or the agent, bailiff, or servant of the landlord, and that the Batty removing is tenant. Rev v. Davis, 5 B. & Ad. 651; 2 N. & M. 349; 3 L. J., M. C. 29. A warrant of commitment for a fraudulent removal of goods by a tenant did not state that there had been a complaint in writing to the justices, or that the examination of witnesses was upon oath; but it referred to the order of the justices (for payment of double the value of the goods removed) in which those matters were the goods removed in which these the justices were not liable in trespass. Coster v. Wilson, 3 M. & W. 411; 1 H. & H. 141; 7 L. J., M. C. 83.

A commitment for fraudulent removal of goods omitted to state a complaint in writing, by the omitted to state a companie in writing, a landlord, his bailiff, agent, or servant. If an order of justices, by which a party is adjudged to pay double the value of the goods removed, for the purpose of preventing the landlord from distraining for arrears of does not state that the offender was summoned, that the complainant was adjudged to be true on evidence given upon oath, and that there was proof before the justices, that the party wiffully and knowingly assisted in the removal of the goods, it is bad, although it specifies the full proof of the offence on which the justices convicted and adjudicated. Morgan, Ex parte, 4 Jur. 916,

Prevention of Distress by altering Character of Land. - Where plaintiff, by his bill, suggested that he had a rent issuing out of certain lands, but that defendant, to hinder his distress, had converted the premises into tillage, the court directed an issue to try if there was any fraud used to prevent the distress, and if found, then plaintiff to be relieved. Davy v. Davy, 1 Ch. Ca.

15. INJUNCTION RESTRAINING DISTRESS.

On what terms.]-An injunction, to restrain of the justices; it is sufficient if they find the value. Rex v. Rabbitts, 6 D. & R. 343; 3 L. J. (0.8.) K. B. 230; 28 R. R. 542. Shaw v. Jersey (Earl), 4 C. P. D. 359; 28 W. R. 142—C. A. Affirming 48 L. J., C. P. 308.

When refused. -The common injunction to stay proceedings at law does not extend to distress for rent. Hughes v. Ring, 1 Jac. & Walk, 392.

In a suit relating to two annuities secured on real estate, and to which the grantor was not a party, a receiver was appointed of the incomes of the outstanding trust property, in the pleadings mentioned. The receiver entered and continued in possession of the real estate for six years. The court refused to restrain the grantor, by injunction, from distraining on the tenants. Crow v. Wood, 13 Beav. 271.

Where one distrained, and on replevin made three conusances as bailiff to different persons, an affidavit stating the claim to be under one of the persons, and that he had absconded insolvent, will not entitle plaintiff to an injunc-tion. Nichols v. Philips, 3 Anstr. 636.

Lessee proceeded against by ejectment, and who has received notice from the claimant disputing his landlord's title not to pay him any more rent, and has been threatened with distress by landlord for rent, cannot restrain either party by injunction.

Homan v. Moore, 4 Price, 5; 18 R. R. 684.

The plaintiff demised a number of small leasehold houses to the defendant, who having committed a forfeiture the plaintiff re-entered and determined the lease. The defendant thereupon distrained on the tenants, and prevented the plaintiff taking possession and repairing, and the plaintiff apprehended a forfeiture. The defendant had also, being insolvent, received the rents; and in consequence of his conduct the property had become greatly depreciated, and some of the houses had been abandoned by the tenants. The bill prayed an account of the rents, an injunction to restrain the defendant from receiving the rents and distraining, and that the right might be determined under the court. A general demurrer was allowed. Aldis v. Fraser, 15 Beav. 215.

Excessive Distress. |- Semble, that a court of equity will not interfere with the legal right of distraint by the owner of the reversion for the rent due to him on the contract of tenancy, even where the distraint is for more money than is due as rent. Carter v. Salmon, 43 L. T. 490.

Against Stranger. ]-A court of equity has no jurisdiction, at the suit of an owner of property, to restrain a mere stranger from vexatiously distraining on or otherwise molesting the tenants. Best v. Drake, 11 Hare, 369.

At what Stage. ]-Plaintiff, after bill, answer and replication, distrains, for which an injunction is granted. Kidnere v. Harrison, Cary, 48.

Special injunction to restrain distress will be ranted before answer, if defendant is in contempt for not answering, Heming v. Emuss, 1 Price, 386.

Contract to distrain below a certain Sum. ]- landlord under a distress and bill of sale, the landlord not stating whether the sum (below which, by the terms of the contract, he was not to enforce his remedies) was due. Nuthrawa v. Thornton, 10 Ves. 159.

16. SECOND DISTRESS.

For same Rent.]—When a distrainor has been prevented from realising the fruits of a distress by the tortions conduct of the distraince, he may distrain again. Lee v. Cooke, 3 H. & N. 203; 27 L. J., Ex. 337; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 168; 6 W. R. 284— Ex. Ch.

So if a plaintiff in replevin is nonsuited, the defendant may again distrain the same goods for rent subsequently accrued, previously to his executing his retorno habendo, without waiving his action against the sureties to the bond. Hefford v. Alger, 1 Taunt. 218.

An action will lie against a landlord who, having distrained goods sufficient to pay his rent, abandous the distress, and afterwards makes a second distress for the same rent. Smith v. Goodwin. 2 N. & M. 114; 4 B. & Ad. 413; 2 L. J., K. B. 192.

But a second distress upon goods seized and held under a former distress for the same arrears of rent is not the subject of an action of trespass. Lear v. Caldecott, 3 G, & D. 491; 4 Q. B. 123; 12 L. J., Q. B. 169; 7 Jur. 277.

After a distress of goods of sufficient value to satisfy arrears of rent has been made, and abandoned by the landlord, without any cause or excuse, a second distress for the same arrears of rent is illegal; and trover will lie for a conversion of the goods seized and sold under such last-mentioned distress. Dawson v. Cropp, 1 C. B. 961; 3 D. & L. 225; 14 L. J., C. P. 281; 9 Jur. 944.

Half a year's rent being in arrear from a tenant who had previously committed an act of bankruptcy, the handlord put in a distress, and was about to proceed with the sale of the goods seized, when, in consequence of a notice from a creditor of the tenant, stating that he was taking proceedings in bankruptcy against the tenant, and that he thereby warned the landlord not to sell, and threatened to hold him accountable if he did, the landlord withdrew the distress without obtaining payment of his rent. At that time no assignee had been appointed; but the tenant was afterwards declared bankrupt, and the creditor who gave the notice was made assignee. The landlord subsequently distrained a second time for the same rent, but the goods were sold under the direction of the assignee, and the proceeds of the sale were paid over to him :-Held, that as the landlord had abandoned the first distress without any sufficient excuse for so doing, the second distress was illegal, and that he could not maintain an action against the assignee to recover the proceeds of the goods. Bugge v. Mawby, 8 Ex. 641; 22 L. J., Ex. 236; 1 W. R. 357.

A landlord distrained for rent in arrear before the bankruptcy of his tenant, and when the goods were appraised left them on the premises for the use of the bankrupt's wife, the bankrupt himself being in prison. After the bankruptcy, the landlord distrained again for the very same arrears of rent :- Held, that the second distress was void; and that the goods passed to the assignees, as being in the order and disposition of the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy. n order was made specifically to restore to a Bradley, Exparte, Deane, Inre, 1 Deac. & C. 223. For subsequent Rent.]—A landlord may, at inventory:—Held, that A was liable, jointly with his peril, make a distress for rent in arrear; B. in trespass. Gauntletv. King, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 59. although his right is in question in a suit depending between him and his tenant in respect of a previous seizure for rent previously due.

And, semble, he may, upon a second distress for the rent subsequently due, seize the same goods which were seized on the former distress, and which were replevied; and the legality of which former distress is still in question. Wilton v. Whiffen, 8 L. J., K. B. 303.

17. OTHER MATTERS RELATING TO.

Property in Goods Distrained. ]-Goods of the plaintiff's mother were assigned to the defendant braided in the control of the dependent of the defendant by bill of sale, but remaining in her possession, were distrained for rent due from her, and duly appraised, and the landlord, instead of selling them, took them at the condemned price in satisfaction of the rent and charges, and then gave them to the plaintiff, who removed. The defendant having followed and seized them:— Held, that there was no sale by the landlord under 2 Will & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2, and therefore the property in the goods remained in the plaintiff, notwithstanding 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 19. King v. England, 4 B. & S. 782; 33 L. J., Q. B. 145; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 634; 9 L. T. 645; 12 W. R. 308.

Effect of Distress on Title or Tenancy.] distress for rent affirms the continuance of the tenancy up to the day when the rent distrained for became due. Cotesworth v. Spakes, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 103; 30 L. J., C. P. 220; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 803; 4 L. T. 212; 9 W. R. 436.

Payment of rent under a distress is not a conclusive admission of title in the distrainer, but may be rebutted by shewing that he never had any title. Cow v. Knight, 18 C. B. 645; 25 L. J., C. P. 314.

Liability of Landlord for Acts of Broker.]—A landlord is not liable for the tortious act of a broker in seizing what his warrant does not authorise him to seize, unless he ratifies the broker's act, with knowledge of what he has done; but he is responsible for any irregularity by the broker in dealing with the distress he was authorised to make, as for selling the goods without notice of the distress and without appraisement. Haseler v. Lemoyne, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 580; 28 L. J., C. P. 103; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1279; 7 W. R. 14.

A., who received the rents and generally managed the property of B., in B.'s name, but without authority from her, signed a warrant to distrain the goods of C., a tenant, for rent in arrear, and after the goods had been distrained, informed B. thereof who thereover said that informed B. thereof, who therenpon said that she should leave the matter in his hands:—Held, sufficient evidence that the distress was authorised or ratified and adopted by B. Ib.

The presence of a landlord with a broker on the premises of the tenant immediately after they have been forced open by the broker, and the fixtures torn down, and who professed to have distrained for rent pending the tenancy, is sufficient evidence of the landlord's liability for the wrongful act of breaking open outer doors and taking fixtures as a distress for rent due.

Moore v. Drinkwater, 1 F. & F. 134.

books and papers (which were assumed not to be under the covenant upon the demised premises,

In an action for an irregular distress, the only evidence at all affecting K., the landlord, was, that all the defendants appeared by the same attorney, and that the defendants' attorney had given the plaintiff notice to produce "the notice of distress for rent due to Mr. K."; and that the managing clerk of the defendants' attorney, when he served it, had offered 10% to settle the action :- Held, that this was not evidence to go to the jury as against K. Crabb v. Killich, 6 Car. & P. 216.

Payment by Auctioneer to avoid Distress.]. An auctioneer sold certain goods, for the owner, on premises occupied by the owner and another person, and in respect of which the latter owed the landlord rent. By the conditions of sale each lot was to be taken to be delivered at the fall of the hammer, after which time it was to remain at the exclusive risk of the purchaser. After the sale, and before the goods were removed, the landlord threatened to distrain on the goods, whereupon the auctioneer paid the rent, and deducted it from the amount which the goods had realised, and paid over the balance to the owner:—Held, that the auctioneer was not justified, as against him, in paying the rent, as on the sale of each lot the property passed to the purchaser, who would have had to bear the loss if the landlord had distrained. Sweeting v. Turner, 41 L. J., Q. B. 58; L. R. 7 Q. B. 310; 25 L. T. 796; 20 W. R. 185.

When Distress given by Covenants.]-Upon a demise of mines a power of distress for the rent reserved was granted to the lessor over "any lands in which there shall be, for the time being, any pits or openings by or through which the coal or culm by the deed demised shall for the coat or enim by the deert defined single by the lessees, their executors, administrators and assigns," The assignees of the lease, with notice, under a trust deed made by the lessees for the benefit of creditors, sucd the defendants for a distress made under the above-mentioned power, after the assignment, at pits not included in the demise, but referred to in it, and then worked by the lessees :- Held, that whether the power was or was not a valid power of distress against strangers, the assignees taking with notice were bound by it. Daniel v. Stepney, L. R. 9 Ex. 185; 22 W. R. 662—Ex. Ch.

For Recovery of Debt—Bill of Sale—Non-Registration. ]-An agreement for the letting of an hotel by defendant to plaintiff provided that the tenant should not, during the tenancy, buy or sell upon the demised premises any fermented or spirituous liquors other than such as should be supplied by the landlord. It also contained a covenant that the landlord should have the same rights and remedies as landlords ordinarily possess in case of rent in arrear, against the goods of the tenant, for the recovery of any amount due for any fermented, spirituous, or other liquors, sold by him to the tenant, not exceeding 2001. over and above any rent due, and should be at liberty to seize and distrain any goods of the A authorised B., a broker, to distrain for rent same as landlords are empowered to do for arrears due to him from C. B. having entered for the of rent. The agreement had not been registered tenant in respect of any such debt, and to sell the purpose of executing the warrant, took away as a bill of sale. The defendant having entered distrainable), and omitted to insert them in the and having distrained in respect of a debt then sale under s. 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and was, therefore, void for want of registration, and that, consequently, the distress was illegal. Pulbrook v. Ashby (56 L. J., Q. B. 376) approved. Steens v. Marston, 60 L. J., Q. B. 192; 64 L. T. 274; 30 W. R. 129; 55 J. P. 404. But see Roundwood Colliery Co., In re, Lee v. Roundwood Colliery Co., 66 L. J., Ch. 186; [1897] 1 Ch. 373; 75 L. T. 641; 45 W. R. 324.

When a Waiver of Breaches.]—A distress for rent, levied after the commencement of an action of ejectment by a landlord against his tenant for breaches of covenants in the lease. does not operate as a waiver of breaches committed before the date of such rent being due. Grimwood v. Moss, 41 L. J., C. P. 239; L. R. 7 C. P. 360; 27 L. T. 268; 20 W. R. 972.

Pound-Breach-Rescue of Goods and Chattels.] Found-Breach—Resoure of goods and transfers,—It is no answer to an action on the 2 Will.
& M. sess. 1, c. 5, for a pound-breach that the rent and demand wore tendered after the distress and impounding. Firth v. Purris, 5
Term Rep. 422; 2 R. R. 637.
Where a balliff in possession of goods under a landlord's distress receives a fi. fa. from the sheriff and sells the goods under it, the sheriff is liable in an action for pound-breach and rescue, at the suit of the landlord. Reddell v. Stowey,

2 M. & Rob. 358.

B. being the owner of a piano, lent it to A., whose landlord seized it under a distress for rent. The laudlord remained in possession of the piano for a fortnight, when a sheriff's officer seized it under an execution against A., and removed it to the premises of an auctioneer, who afterwards sold it :- Held, that B. might maintain trover against him, and that trover would not lie at the suit of the landlord against him, but that his remedy was against the sheriff's officer for poundbreach. Turner v. Ford, 15 M. & W. 212: 15 L. J., Ex. 215.

The plaintiff levied a distress for rent in arrear, and impounded the goods on the premises. While his bailiff was removing them, a sheriff's officer came into the house, and said that he had a fi. fa. against the plaintiff, and that he would not allow the goods to be removed. The plaintiff's tenant thereupon ejected the plaintiff's bailiff, and brought back the goods which had been removed :-Held, that these facts did not shew a pound-breach or a rescue by the sheriff's officer.

Story v. Finnis, 2 L. M. & P. 198.

Semble, that in an action on the case for the rescue of goods taken under distress for rent in arrear, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to set out the deed creating the demise from himself to the tenant. Dordoy v. Scott, 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 60. The plaintiffs, brewers, were the lessors of a public-house to D., under an agreement which gave them all the rights and remedies of land-lords for rent against the effects of the tenant for the recovery of any book debts for liquors sold by them to him. There being moneys due in respect of such debts, the plaintiffs sent in their bailiff with a written authority to distrain for the amount, who shewed his authority to the defendant, an auctioneer then on the premises. took an inventory and made a valuation. The of the defendant, an attorney, employed the tenant D, and the defendant thereupon proplantiff to levy a distress for rent upon the pre-

due to him for liquors supplied to the plaintiff:— | down the goods by auction, the tenant handing Held, that the covenant amounted to a bill of them to the purchasers:—Held, that though the plaintiffs had not such possession as to enable them to sue for conversion, they could maintain an action for a resenc against the defendant, for knowingly assisting in transferring the dominion and property in the goods seized to the respective purchasers. Irrdale v. Kendall, 40 L. T. 362.

> Landlord seeking Assistance of Equity.] Where a landlord had a remedy by distress, either upon nonpayment of rent or a penalty, equity will not interfere to assist him unless some fraud be proved. Doneraile v. Chartres, 1 Ridgw, P. C. 135.

Engine—Railways Clauses Act, 1845.]—The Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 115, 116, provides that no one shall use an engine on the rail of a company which has not been approved of by the company, and that a certificate of the approval may be obtained by certain steps; and that if an engine be used on the railway without a certificate, the party using shall forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding 201., and the company may remove the engine : -Held, that the company has a common-law right of distress damage feasant on an engine encumbering the railway if there is no certificate of approval. Ambergate Ry, v. Midland Ry, 2 El, & Bl. 793; 2 C. L. R. 261; 23 L. J., Q. B. 17; 18 Jur. 243.

3. FOR INJURY TO CHATTELS ON THE LAND.

Distress damage feasant may be taken for injury done to chattels upon the land, as well as to the land itself. An action of trespass is not maintainable so long as the distress is detained. Roscoe v. ## C. INDEMNITY ON DISTRESS.

Extent of-Costs of Defending Action.]-A landlord signed a warrant of distress in the fol-lowing form: "I hereby authorise R. I., or his agent, as my agent, to seize and distrain the goods on the premises in the possession of M. G., for 91., being the amount of rent due to me; and for your so doing this shall be your sufficient warrant, authority, and indemnification against all costs and charges in respect to any law expenses, action, or actions that may arise, as well as any other and all charges or expenses which you or your agent may be at, or brought against you or your agent on this account." A servant of R. I. having distrained, an action was brought against him by the tenant, for the conversion of against min by the critary for the conversion of the conversion of the certain goods, some of which were alleged not to have been in the inventory, in which action the plaintiff was monauted :—Held, that, assuming that the servant had done nothing wrong, the indemnity extended to the costs of defending the action brought against him. Ibbett v. De la Salle, 6 H. & N. 233; 30 L. J., Ex. 44.

ceeded to sell the goods in disregard of such mises of an auctioneer, urging him to make the distress—the defendant putting up and knocking levy forthwith, assigning, as a reason, that there room; and by the warrant, he directed him to ment stamp. Cox v. Bailey, 6 Scott (N.R.) 798; distrain "the several goods and chattels on the 6 Man. & G. 193. room; and by one warrant, no directed num to distrain "the several goods and chattels on the premises." Acting upon these instructions, the plaintiff caused all the goods upon the premises to be seized. Some of the goods so seized turning out to be protected from distress, the owners brought actions, and eventually the goods were restored to them, and the plaintiff incurred costs:—Held, that, under the circumstances, an costs:—Held, that, under the circumstances, an indomnification of the plaintiff against the consequences of pursuing the defendant's instructions was implied by law. *Toplits v. Graue, 7 Scott, 629; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 636; 2 Arn. 110; 9 L. J., C. P. 180.

Held, also, that the plaintiff's conduct in the premises did not exhibit such a degree of negligence and want of skill, as to afford an answer to an action for his work and labour. Ib.

Person Distraining in Default. ]-A. gave authority to B. to distrain on the goods of C., and gave him an indemnity against all costs and charges that he might be at "on that account."
B. made the distress, and his men being told by the son of C. that a certain cask contained spent liquor of no value, they took the cask to pieces, and let the liquor run off; it was, in fact, cochineal dye belonging to D. For the wasting of it, D. recovered damages against B. in trover: Held, that B. could not recover the amount of those damages from A. in an action on the in-demnity, and that such an indemnity would only apply to cases where a distress was illegal, because the landlord had no right to put in such distress. Draper v. Thompson, 4 Car. & P. 84.

Covenants in Lease-Indemnity against.]-Under an agreement to assign a lease, the defendant agreed to pay the rent and taxes to become duc in respect of the premises after a certain day, and to indemnify the plaintiff against the rent and covenants contained in the lease, and from all loss which he might incur by the non-payment of such rent, or non-observance of the covenants. No legal assignment was made, but the defendant was let into possession, and some of the plaintiff's goods, which lad been left upon the premises, were distrained for the rent and taxes. In an action upon the agreement for not indemnifying, the declaration alleged that goods or chattels of the plaintiff were in and upon the premises with the leave and licence of the defendant, and were liable to be seized and taken; and afterwards the goods were lawfully seized and taken as a distress for arrears of rent due under the lease in respect of the premises, and sold. The defendant pleaded that no goods or chattels of the plaintiff were at any time in and upon the premises with the leave and licence of the defendant, nor was any part of the goods lawfully seized or taken as and for a distress, or sold or disposed of as alleged:—Held, that the statement relating to the leave and licence was immaterial; and that the substance of the plea was, that the plaintiff's goods had not been seized; and that as the facts involved in the issue raised thereon had been found for the plaintiff, the verdict upon such issue should have been entered for him. Groom v. Bluck, 2 Man. & G. 567; 2 Scott (N.R.) 89; 10 L. J., C. P. 105.

D. COSTS OF DISTRESS.

The vestry of a metropolitan parish, having incurred expenses for paving, gave the occupier of a house notice to pay his rent to them and not to his landlord. The tenant gave notice thereof to his landlord, who nevertheless distrained. The tenant thereupon paid his rent (which was less than the paving expenses apportioned to the house) to the vestry, and the landlord then merely levied the expenses of the distress, and withdrew :- Held, that his right of distress was only taken away on actual payment by the tenant to the vestry, that the distress was, there-fore, justifiable in the first instance, and that the expenses thereof might be levied. Ryan v. Thompson, 37 L. J., C. P. 134; L. R. 3 C. P. 144;. 17 L. T. 506; 16 W. R. 314.

Amount of, under 57 Geo. 3, c. 93.]-There is: no statutory limit to the amount of the costs and charges for levying and impounding a distressfor rent above 201., where it is impounded on the prentises by virtue of 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 10, Child v. Chamberlain, 3 N. & M. 520; 5 B. & Ad. 1049 : 6 Car. & P. 213.

The 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, does not apply to a case of a distress taken for more than 201., made of goods which are appraised at and sold for less.

than that amount. Ib.

The 6th section of the above statute does not apply to the landlord, unless he interferes personally in the distress. Hart v. Leach, 1 M. & W. 560; 2 Galc, 172; 1 Tyr. & G. 1010; 5 L. J., Ex. 244.

The costs of the distress in the above statute are not confined to the actual distress, but include the subsequent costs of appraisement and sale-per Parke, B. Ib.

A bailiff who seizes goods under a distress. warrant, if his authority to sell on behalf of the landlord is afterwards withdrawn, has no right to go on and sell for his expenses. Harding v. Hall, 14 L. T. 410: 14 W. R. 646.

Hatt, 14 L. T. 410; 14 W. E. 040.
Upon a distress for a church rate, the bailiff made certain charges mentioned in the schedule. to 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, which charges, however, though incurred, were not applicable to such a seizure :-Held, that as he had not claimed any charges not in the schedule, he was not liable to the penalty. Nott v. Bound, L. B. 1 Q. B. 405; 14 L. T. 330.

In replevin, in respect of a distress for arrears of a rent-charge, both the plaintiff and the defen-dant had taken down the record for trial, and the defendant obtained a verdict :- Held, that nnder 17 Car. 2, c. 7, which gives full costs to successful defendants in replevin, the defendant was entitled to ordinary costs only, and that he was entitled to the costs of taking down the was entitled to the costs of making the distress. Jamicoon v. Trevelyan, 10 Ex. 748; 3 C. L. R. 702; 24 L. J., Ex. 74; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 834; 3 W. R. 172.

A charge of 2s. 6d. a day for a man in possession under 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, is excessive, for retaining possession of growing crops distrained upon for a tithe rent-charge less than 201, in amount, on a piece of unenclosed meadow land. Plumpton Tithe Rent-charge, In re, Arnison, Em describing a distress to be taken for rest claimed parts, 37 L. J., Ex. 57; L. R. 3 Ex. 56; 17 L. ## E. REMEDY FOR WRONGFUL, IRRE-GULAR, OR EXCESSIVE DISTRESS.

1. WHEN AND HOW MAINTAINABLE

After Tender of Rent Due. ] - Case lies, as well as trespass, for an excessive distress after tender of the rent due. Holland v. Bird, 10 Bing. 15; 3 M. & Scott, 363; 2 L. J., C. P. 201.

A tenant, tendering his rent after distress taken, but before it is impounded or removed, may maintain trespass for a subsequent removal of the distress. Virtue v. Beasley, 1 M. & Rob.

An action is maintainable upon the equity of the 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2, for selling goods seized under a distress for rent, where a tender of the rent and expenses has been made before the sale and within five days of the seizure, although after impounding. Johnson v. Upham, 2 El. & El. 250; 28 L. J., Q. B. 252; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 681.

An action on the case lies for an excessive distress, when the tenant has tendered the rent to his landlord prior to the distress being levied. Branscomb v. Bridges, 1 B. & C. 145; 2 D. & R. 256; 1 L. J. (0.8.) K. B. 64; 25 R. R. 335.

General Principles-Irregular Distress.] Trespass will not lie for merely an irregular distress. Messing v. Kemble, 2 Camp. 115.

The true construction of 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 19, is, that an action of trespass or case must be brought with reference to the nature of the irregularity. 16.

. But trespass will lie for continuing on the premises and disturbing the plaintiff's possession after the time allowed by law. Winterbourne v. Morgan, 2 Camp. 117; 11 East, 395; 10 R. R. 532. S. P., Ethorton v. Popplewell, 1 East, 139; 6 R. R. 235.

And trespass, and not ease, is the proper remedy for taking goods under an irregular distress since 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 19, Wallace v. King, 1 H. Bl. 13.

Wrongful. -Semble, tresposs lies for a wrongful continuance in possession after a distress made—per Lord Denman, C.J. Ladd v. Thomas, 4 P. & D. 9; 12 A. & E. 117; 9 L. J., Q. B. 345.

Where a landlord, after a lawful distress and impounding, accepts the rent in arrear and costs of distress, he is not liable as a trespasser for retaining possession of the goods distrained, and selling them. West v. Nibbs, 4 C. B. 172; 17 C. P. 150.

. Where goods are distrained which are not liable, an action of trover may be brought by the owner without a demand and refusal, Ward v. Ventum, Peake's Add. Cas. 126.

If a party pays money in order to redeem his goods from a wrongful distress for rent, he may maintain trover against the wrongdoer. wich v. Blanchard, 6 Term Rep. 298; 3 R. R. 175.

A party making a wrongful distress for two causes, as to one of which he is cutitled to notice of action, is nevertheless liable in trespass as to the other. Lamont v. Southall, 7 D. P. C. 569.

Goods of R. were seized by the plaintiff under a distress for rent of a house alleged to have been demised by him to R., and were delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant to sell as his auctioneer. When the sale was about to begin, R. served a notice on the defendant that the distress was void. and requiring him not to sell, or, if he sold, to trained upon the premises goods of the plaintiff, retain the proceeds for him. The defendant sold the goods, but refused to pay over the proceeds to the plaintiff, and defended an action by the plaintiff, relying on the right and by the authority of R. The distress was void and tortious, as the relation between the plaintiff and R. was not that of laudlord and tenant; but although the plaintiff was a wrongdoer there was no fraud on his part, and he thought he had a right to distrain :—Held. that the defendant might set up the jus tertii of R. as an answer to the action. Biddle v. Bond, 6 B. & S. 225; 34 L. J., Q. B. 137; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 425; 12 L. T. 178; 13 W. R. 561.

An owner of sheep seized and sold under a distress for rent, which was unlawful, because there were other goods on the premises belonging to him which might have been distrained for the same rent, is entitled to recover from the distrainor, not merely nominal damages, but the full value of the sheep so seized. Keen v. Priest. 4 H. & N. 236; 28 L. J., Ex. 157; 7 W. R. 376.

What Interest sufficient to maintain Action against Landlord.]—A house was occupied by a man, his wife, and her trustee. Goods therein had been assigned to the trustee on trust for the wife. Rent being in arrear to the amount of 91. only, the landlord, by his builiff, distrained for 181, and costs, seizing 1001, worth of goods. The rent actually due was tendered to the bailiff with expenses, but refused, and the bailiff remained in possession until an undertaking was given on behalf of the tenant for payment of the whole demand, and a part amounting to 21, 7s. was paid, wherenpon the distress was withdrawn, The tenant having brought an action for an excessive distress, and for money had and received, was nonsuited when the deed of assignment was produced at the trial :- Held, that, although he was neither the legal nor the equitable owner of the goods distrained, yet he had, from his mere enjoyment of the use of them, a special property which entitled him to maintain the action. Evil v. Whitakev, 41 L. J., Q. B. 78; L. R. 7 Q. B. 120; 25 L. T. 880; 20 W. R. 317.

Excessive.]—Distraining for a greater amount of rent than is due is not, per se, actionable.

Tancred v. Leyland, 16 Q. B. 669; 20 L. J., Q. B. 316; 15 Jur. 894-Ex. Ch.

The making a distress for rent, some rent being due, accompanied by an untrue claim or pretence that more was due than really was due, is not actionable. Ib.

An action on the case does not lie against a landlord for distraining for more than the actual arrears of rent, unless the distress taken be of larger value than will satisfy the actual arrears. Wilkinson v. Terry, 1 M. & Rob. 377.

An action on the case will lie against a landlord for distraining for more than the arrears of rent due, although upon the sale the goods taken are not sufficient to satisfy the actual arrears. Taylor v. Henriker, 12 Ad. & E. 488; 4 P. & D. 243; 9 L. J., Q. B. 383.

In case for excessive distress, though the warrant of distress be for a greater sum than is really due, the plaintiff is not entitled to a verdiet unless the goods seized are excessive in regard to the sum really due. Crowder v. Self, 2 M. & Rob.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiff held certain premises as tenant thereof to the defendant, and that the defendant wrongfully disas a distress for alleged arrears of rent, to wit, away and sold. At the sale they realised 5*l*, 11*s*, the sum of 6*l*, 3*s*, by the defendant pretended In an action at the suit of the lodger for wrong-to be due and in arrear, and the defendant fully breaking and entering the premises, and wrongfully remained in possession of the goods under colour of the distress, until the plaintiff was compelled to pay, and did pay, to the defendant the pretended arrears of rent and the costs of the distress, in order to regain possession of the goods, whereas, in truth, a small part only, to wit, 11, 16s, 9d., of the pretended arrears was due :- Held, that the count disclosed no cause of action, for, as the distress was lawful, the defendant was entitled to a tender of the amount really due, and upon his refusal to accept that sum, the plaintiff's course was to replevy the goods. Glyn v. Thomas, 11 Ex. 870; 25 L. J., Ex. 125; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 378; 4 W. R. 363— Ex. Ch.

A count that the plaintiff held a workshop as tenant to the defendant at a certain rent, and that he wrongfully seized divers goods and chattels of the plaintiff, of great value, to wit, of the value of 301., as a distress for arrears of rent, to wit, 137, 10s., claimed by the defendant to be in arrear, and he afterwards wrongfully sold the goods and chattels for the alleged arrears of rent, and costs : whereas in fact a small part only, to wit, 91., of the pretended arrears of rent so distrained for was in arrear. The defendant pleaded not guilty, and at the trial a verdict was found for the plaintiff with 101. 10s. damages :-Held, that the count disclosed no cause of action. French v. Phillips, 1 H. & N. 564; 26 L. J., Ex. 82; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1169; 5 W. R. 114— Ex. Ch.

In an action against a landlord for excessive distress it appeared that two several distresses for rent, and an intervening execution for a debt, were levied; a sale was afterwards made, when the defendant, having retained what was due for rent, paid the remainder to the execution ereditor :- Held, that he was justified in doing so, and therefore that the sum so paid over could not be recovered back in this action. Held, also, that defendant and his broker were in the same situation as the sheriff's officer, and that production of writ and warrant, without proof of judg-ment, was sufficient. Taylor v. Harrison, 1 ment, was sufficient. Taylor L. J., K. B. 155; 3 B. & Ad. 320.

Excessive or Illegal Distress-Proof of Special Damage - Withdrawal - Lodgers' Goods. -On the 1st September, 1882, W. distrained for 8l. rent due to him from T., who held three rooms under him at the weekly rent of 10s. T. had underlet one of the rooms at the weekly rent of 3s. 6d, (none of which was in arrear) to the plaintiff, who claimed the goods seized as being her sole property, and on the 5th gave W. the proper notice with a written declaration and inventory in the form required by s. 1 of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 79). W., in consequence of this claim and of his immediate tenant T. paving him 11. on account of the rent, and engaging to pay the remaining 7l. by weekly instalments of 10s., withdrew the distress. On the 21st of September two more weeks' rent having become due from T., and he having failed to pay any of the instal-ments as agreed, W. again distrained on the same goods for 81, being 71, of the rent for which the first distress was put in and 1l. for the two weeks' subsequently accruing rent. No fresh declaration and inventory having been served upon him of an excessive distress, made in consequence converting and selling her goods :- Held, first, that as between the defendant and his immediate tenant, the distress on the 21st of September was not wrongful or illegal, but at the most excessive. and therefore not the subject of an action in the absence of an allegation and proof of special damage; secondly, that the declaration and inventory served on the 5th of September were not applicable to the distress levied on the 21st, and consequently that the plaintiff could not avail herself of the benefit of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871. Thwaites v. Wilding, 53 L. J., Q. B. 1; 12 Q. B. D. 4; 49 L. T. 396; 32 W. R. 80; 48 J. P. 100-C. A.

Injunction against enforcing Judgment. 7-A landlord, against whom his tenant has obtained judgment in an action for excessive distress, is not entitled to an injunction to restrain proceedings upon the judgment on the ground that rent and dilapidation money have subsequently become due from the tenant. Maw v. Ulyatt, 31 L. J., Ch. 33; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1300; 5 L. T. 251; 10 W. R. 4.

Sale under Illegal Condition. 1-A lease of a farm contained a covenant by the tenant not to remove hay, or unthreshed corn, from the demised premises, but to use them for the improvement of the land. The landlord having distrained hav and unthreshed corn for rent in arrear, sold the distress under a condition that the purchaser should consume the matters sold on the premises, and consequently the best price was not obtained in accordance with 2 Will, & M. sess, 1, c, 5 :-Held, that the landlord could not legally sell under such a condition. Hawkins v. Walrond, 45 L. J., C. P. 772; 1 C. P. D. 280; 35 L. T. 210; 24 W. R. 824.

The 56 Geo. 3, c. 53, s. 11, does not apply to a sale by a landlord of a distress. Ib.

A landlord who has distrained his tenant's hav made on the premises, and has sold it subject to a condition that it shall be consumed by the purchaser on the premises, by reason whereof it produces less than the usual price, is liable to the tenant in an action for not selling for the best price, notwithstanding that the latter was under covenant to consume such hay on the premises. Ridgway v. Stafford (Lord), 6 Ex. 404; 20 L. J., Ex. 226.

A tithe-owner seized under a distress for 391. a rick valued 621., there being smaller ricks on the premises. The tenant being bound to consume the straw on the premises, the tithe-owner sold the rick for 42l, subject to the purchaser's leaving the straw:—Held, that this was not an excessive distress; that the tithe-owner was not bound to sell the straw; that the whole rick might be taken; and that a party seizing under a distress is bound only not to take what is manifestly excessive. Hoden v. Eyton, 6 C. B. 427; 18 L. J., C. P. 1; 12 Jur. 921.

After Re-entry.]-A broker having distrained the goods of a tenant for rent in arrear, he signed an agreement drawn up by the broker, that if he, the tenant, did not pay the rent on or before a given day, the broker might re-enter and distrain again :- Held, that this did not estop the tenant from afterwards complaining by the plaintiff, W. caused the goods to be carried of the rent not being paid at the stipulated Bing. 15; 2 L. J., C. P. 201.

Man in Possession-Tenant having sufficient Control of Goods to carry on Business. ]-Au action will lie for an excessive distress, and leaving a man in possession, although the goods of the tenant are not so completely removed from his control as to prevent him from carrying on his business. Baylis v. Usher, 4 M. & P. 790; 7 Bing. 153; 9 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 43.

Damage must be Shewn. ]-The 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 19, only entitles the tenant to recover in an action for any irregularity in dealing with an action for any irregularity in dealing with a distress, where actual damage is proved. Rogers v. Parker, 18 C. B. 112; 25 L. J., C. P. 220; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 496; 4 W. K. 545.

- Even when Sale does not realise Amount of Rent. -An action may lie for an excessive distress, although the sale (less the expense) does not realise the rent due. Smith v. Ashforth. 29 L. J., Ex. 259.

having distrained growing wheat as a distress for rent, and having caused the same to be carried away, instead of impounding, appraising and selling the same, suffered other persons to carry the same away and convert the same to their use, whereby the plaintiff was injured, and was deprived of the surplus. There was a count in trover. The evidence was, that the defendant seized the plaintiff's growing wheat as a distress for rent, and sold it (for its full value) on the premises in a growing state, that the purchaser cut the wheat and carried it away, and that the surplus of the proceeds of the sale, after satisfying the rent, was paid over to the plaintiff. The jury found that the plaintiff sustained no damage by the transaction :- Held, that upon these facts and upon this finding, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover even nominal damages upon either count. Rogers v. Parker, 18 C. B. 112: 25 L. J., C. P. 220; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 496; 4 W. R. 545.

An action will lie for an excessive distress in taking growing crops. Piggott v. Birtles, 1 M. & W. 441; 2 Gale, 18; 1 Tyr. & G. 729; 5

L. J., Ex. 193.

A landlord is liable to some damages in an action for an excessive distress, where the excess consists wholly in seizing growing crops, the pro-bable produce of which is capable of being estimated at the time of the seizure; but the measure of damages is not the value of the crops, but the inconvenience and expense which the tenant sustains in being deprived of the management of them, or which he is put to in procuring sureties to a larger amount than he would otherwise have been in repleying the crops.

Order to restore Stock Improperly Taken. uraer to restore stock improperly Taken.]—An order was made specifically to restore to a tenant farm stock, &c., on the farm seized by landlord under a distress and bill of sale, the landlord not stating whether the sum (below which, by the terms of the contract, he was not to enforce his remedies) was due. Nutbrown v. *Monthly 10 Ver. 150. Thornton, 10 Ves. 159.

time. Holland v. Bird, 3 M. & Scott, 363; 10 | money into court. The plaintiff replied damages ultra, and that issue was found for the defendant : —Held, that defendant was not entitled to double costs under 11 Geo. 2, c. 10, s. 21. Hundcock v. Foulkes, 9 M. & W. 431; 1 D. P. C. 658; 11 L. J., Ex. 381.

2. Pleadings in Actions.

Claim. ]-The court will not allow a common count in trespass de bonis asportatis, together count in trespass to done asportant, together with a count to recover the double value of the goods, framed under 2 Will & M. soss. 1, c. 5, s. 5. Haare v. Lee, 5 C. B. 754; 5 D. & L. 765; 17 L. J., C. P. 196; 12 Jun. 355.

Under a count in the common form on the 52 Hen. 3, c. 4, for an excessive distress, the allegation, that the defendant took and distrained the plaintiff's goods, does not include the sale of them, and, therefore, under such a count. damages cannot be recovered for the sale as well as the seizure. Thompson v. Wood, 3 G. & D. 518; 4 Q. B. 493; 12 L. J., Q. B. 175; 7 Jur. 303

In an action for an irregular distress it is Growing Crops. — The plaintiff declared for necessary to state correctly to whom the rent an irregular distress, alleging that the defendant distrained for is due. Ireland v. Johnson, I Bing. (N.C.) 162; 4 M. & Scott, 706; 3 L. J., C. P. 303.

> - Amendment of ]-In an action for an excessive distress, not averring that the sum distrained for was not due, with a count for selling before the expiration of five days, the plaintiff at the trial applied to amend by adding a count for distraining and selling goods to satisfy more rent than was due. The judge refused to allow the amendment, on the ground that it was not a matter in dispute at the time of the commencement of the action :—Held, that the amendment was properly disallowed. Lucas v. Turkton, 3 H. & N. 116; 27 L. J., Ex. 246.

> Defence—Not Guilty.]—The plea of not guilty by statute pleaded under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 21, in an action for an excessive distress, puts in issue not only the matter of justification, but the tenancy and ownership of the goods. Williams v. Jones, 11 A. & E. 643.

> In an action for wrongful and excessive distress, the defendant pleaded not guilty by statute :- Held, that this plea not only put in issue the wrongful act complained of, but also the tenancy itself, and the distress, and all mat-ters of justification. Nash v. Lucas, 16 L. T. 610.

> Where the plaintiff assigned her interest in the premises before the date of the distress, but still remained upon the premises (the person to whom her interest was assigned not having entered) : Held, that she was there merely as the agent of such other person, and that she therefore could not maintain an action for distress. Ib.

> — Denying Tenancy.]—In an action against a landlord for distraining where no rent was due. or for more rent than was due, a plea denying the tenancy is a good plea. Yates v. Trarle, 6 Q. B. 282; 13 L. J., Q. B. 289; 8 Jur. 774.

3. EVIDENCE.

Amount of Rent Due.]—It is not incumbent on a plaintiff, in an action for an excessive distress, to prove the precise amount of rent due, as stated in the declaration; the substantial Double Costs.]—In an action for an illegal allegation being that more was distrained for distress, the defendant pleaded payment of than was actually due. Sells v. Haure, 8 Moore, 451; 1 Bing. 401; 1 Car. & P. 28; 2 L. J. (o.s.) only nominal damages. Clarke v. Holford, 2 C. P. 56.

Malice. ]-In an action for excessive distress, express malice is not necessary to be proved to support the declaration. Field v. Mitchell, 6 Esp. 71. S. F., Sturch v. Clarke, 1 N. & M. 671; 4 B. & Ad. 113; 2 L. J., K. B. 9.

Improper Sale.]—Upon a count for not selling goods distrained at the best prices, the plaintiff may go into evidence to shew that the goods were allowed to stand in the rain, and that they were improperly lotted. Poynter v. Buchley, 5 Car. & P. 512.

Where a landlord distrains for rent, and the tenant, before the sale of the goods, brings an action for breaking and entering the premises, and for seizing and taking the goods of the plaintiff, and for excessive distress, with a count in trover, evidence of the sale (which took place after the action was commenced) is not admissible to shew the intention of the defendant to seize the fixtures, which were among the articles which the landlord purported to have sold. Beck v. Denbigh, 29 L. J., C. P. 273; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 998; 2 L. T. 154; 8 W. R. 392.

Not putting in Agreement for Tenancy. ]-If a tenant who sues his landlord for a wrongful distress does not put in the agreement of the tenancy, the jury, as against him, may infer its terms from his own admission or his own evidence. Cowne v. Cordery, 10 W. R. 347.

Appraisement.]—The appraisement made by two sworn appraisers under 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, is only prima facie evidence of the value of the goods. Cook v. Corbett, 24 W. R. 181.

Price realised on Sale by Auction. ]-The price realised at a sale by auction of goods seized under a distress is prima facie evidence of their value. Rapley v. Taylor, 1 Cab. & E. 150.

4. DAMAGES

When Distress is Irregular or Excessive. In an action for an excessive distress a plaintiff is entitled to a verdict with nominal damages, although he proves no actual damage. Chandler v. Doulton, 3 H. & C. 553; 34 L. J., Ex. 89; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 286; 11 L. T. 639.

In an action for a vexatious and excessive distress, the plaintiff having received the taxed costs of his replevin on the distress is not entitled to recover, as damages, the extra costs occasioned to him by the replevin. Grace v. Morgan, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 534; 2 Scott, 790; 5 L. J., C. P. 180.

In an action for an excessive distress, the question is, what the goods seized would have sold for at a broker's sale. If it is excessive, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the fair value of them. Wells v. Moody, 7 Car. & P. 59.

In an action for selling goods distrained before the expiration of five days, the plaintiff is not entitled to a verdict unless he proves actual damage. Lucas v. Tarleton, 3 H. & N. 116; 27 L. J., Ex. 246.

Where a landlord distrained for 110L instead of 271. 10s. :- Held, that if the jury was of opinion that the goods distrained were no more damage sustained by the taking of those partithan sufficient, if fairly sold, to realise the cular goods, and not the whole amount paid by 271. 10a, the plaintiff would be entitled under him. Harvey v. Phecok, 11 M. & W. 740; 12 count for taking an excessive distress, to recover L. J., Ex. 434.

Car. & K. 540.

Held, secondly, that in assessing the damages under that count, the jury was at liberty to inquire whether the best means had been used to ascertain the value of the goods seized and sold, although it appeared that they had been duly appraised, and that they were sold at the appraised value. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that under a count in trover to recover damages for wrongfully removing fixtures under a distress, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the fixtures as chattels merely. Ib.

In an action for selling goods distrained for reut without complying with the provisions of the 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, the damages are the value of the goods distrained, less the amount of rent due, Whitworth v. Maden, 2 Car. & K. 517. S. P., Knight v. Egerton, 7 Ex. 407. In an action upon the 2 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 4, for double value for distraining, no rent being due, the jury ought to be directed, if they find for the plaintiff, to give damages to double the amount of the value of the goods. Masters v. Farris, 1 C. B. 715.

In an action for an excessive distress for taking goods, it appeared that of the goods taken part belonged to the plaintiff and part to a third party :- Held, that the declaration might be amended, by stating the legal distress to have taken place with respect to the goods of the plaintiff and of the third party, and that the plaintiff would be entitled to recover some amount of damages, and that the other party whose goods were taken would also be entitled to maintain an action and recover damages. Buil v. Mellor, 19 L. J., Ex. 279.

Where a laudlord of a warehouse, let with heavy weaving machines, distrained property to an excessive amount, and locked up the warean excessive amount, and recent up as more hones, so as to keep the tenant excluded, and the proceeds of the sale, less the expenses, did not equal the amount of the rent due; but there was evidence that the value was ten times the amount, and the tenant sued both in trespass and for an excessive distress; a verdict for the plaintiff on both counts, and upon each of them, for substantial damages, was upheld. Smith v. Ashforth, 29 L. J., Ex. 259.

Set-off against Rent.]—A landlord, by his bailiff, distrained upon his tenant for an arrear of rent; the tenant brought trespass against the landlord and his bailiff, for an irregularity in the distress, and recovered damages; the bailiff being indemnified by the landlord in respect thereof:-Held, on demurrer, that the landlord and his bailiff could sustain a bill to have the damages and costs recovered by the tenant set off pro tanto against the arrears of rent due to the landlord; and to restrain execution in the meantime. Hamp v. Jones, 9 L. J., Ch. 258.

When Wrongful or originally Illegal. |-- If a landlord distrains for rent goods which are not distrainable in law (as looms in work, there being sufficient without them to satisfy the rent), and the tenant pays the rent and the costs of distress, upon which the distress is withdrawn, thetenant is entitled to recover only the actual for rent in such a manner as to render himself a lanswer. Albridge v. Howard, 5 Scott (N.R.) 623; trespasser ab initio, the measure of damages is 4 Man. & G. 921. the full value of the goods seized. Attack v. Bramwell, 3 B. & S. 520; 32 L. J., Q. B. 146; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 892; 7 L. T. 740; 11 W. R. 309.

In an action by a tenant against his landlord for breaking open the door and tearing down fixtures, under colour of a distress during the tenancy, the proper measure of damages as to the ceeds of a forced sale by a broker, nor is it necessarily the value paid by the tenant; but it is, or may be, the value of the fixtures to an incoming tenant, and the amount such incoming tenant would be likely to pay the outgoing tenant for them. Moore v. Drinkwater, 1 F. & F. 134. Rent being due to the defendant from the plaintiff, who was about to remove her goods, the defendant entered the house after sunset, and for some hours prevented her from so doing, and locked some of the doors:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdiet, but only for the actual damage. Lamb v. Wall, 1 F. & F.

F. EFFECT AS A DISCHARGE.

Distress must have satisfied Rent Due. ]-To an avowry by executors, for rent due in the life-time of their testator, a plea that the testator took as a distress for the same rent, goods of sufficient value to satisfy such rent and the costs of taking the distress, is insufficient, as it should have shewn that such distress produced a satisfaction of the rent. Lingham v. Warren, 4 Moore, 409; 2 Br. & B. 36.

To a cognizance for rent in arrear, a plea in bar that the defendant, on a former occasion, made a distress for the same rent, and took goods liable to distress, sufficient to discharge the rent in arrear, and the costs of the distress, and might thereby have paid the arrears, but neg-lected so to do, and wrongfully made a second distress for the same rent, is ill on special demurrer, assigning for cause that the plea did not shew that the rent was satisfied by the former distress. Hudd v. Raxonor, 5 Moore, 542; 2 Br. & B. 662; 23 R. R. 526.

Second Distress - First Abandoned. ] - Sec supra, col. 1032.

When agreed that Goods Seized should be kept in Satisfaction.]—Action for use and occu-pation. Plea, that the plaintiff wrongfully seized and detained goods of the defendant, of sufficient value to pay the rent and costs, that it was agreed that plaintiff should retain them in satisfaction of the rent, and that he did retain them. A replication traversing the seizure of the goods of sufficient value to pay the rent and costs of distress, is bad, as traversing mere in-ducement to the allegation of acceptance in satisfaction:—Plea held good, as disclosing a good accord and satisfaction. Jones v. Sauckins, 5 D. & L. 353; 5 C. B. 142; 17 L. J., C. P. 92.

To Action alleging Nonpayment of Rent. nonpayment of rent, a plea as to so much as relates to 150l., parcel of the arrears, that, after the same became due, and before action, the plaintiff distrained certain goods on the premises, subject to the rent, and sold them for a sum greater than the amount of the arrears, and Payment and Satisfaction of Rent. ]-When a superior landlord distrains on a sub-lessee for rent due to him from the mesne lessee, and the sub-lessee owes rent to his immediate lessor, the amount realised by the distress is a satisfaction, pro tanto, of the rent due by the sub-lessee to his landlord; and this is so not only when the sub-lessee pays out the distress, but also when goods belonging to him are sold under the distress. O'Donoghue v. Coalbrook and Broad-oak Co., 26 L. T. 806-Ex. Ch.

The goods of a sub-lessee, who owed rent to his immediate lesser, having been sold under a distress put in by a superior landlord for rent due to him; in an action by the sub-lessee against his immediate lessor to recover damages for a breach of his covenant to pay the rent to the superior landlord :-Held, that the sum for which the goods were sold should be deducted from the amount of damages recoverable, as that sum operated as a satisfaction, pro tanto, of the rent due by the sub-lessee to his immediate lessor. Ib.

Suspension of Remedy by Action. ]-A distress for rent suspends the right of the landlord to recover the rent by action, so long as the goods distrained continue in his hands as a pledge unsold. Lehain v. Philipatt, 44 L. J., Ex. 225; L. R. 10 Ex. 242; 33 L. T. 95; 23 W. R. 876. See King v. England, 4 B. & S. 782; 33 L. T. 95, 12 L. T. 645; 12 L. T. 645; 12 W. R. 308.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

In General.]—The court will not give any assistance to a party seeking to enforce a hard bargain. Kimberley v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340; 5 L. J., Ch. 115.

Setting Aside.]—Where a purchaser takes advantage of the distress or ignorance of the vendor, or of any particular authority over him, a court of equity may set aside the purchase, even after the purchaser's death. Gould v. Oheden, 4 Bro. P. C. 198.

At time of making Contract.]—To form case for relief on the ground of oppression on the one side, and distress on the other, the disadvantage of the bargain must be within view of the parties, and not the result of future contingencies. Ramsbottom v. Parker, 6 Madl. 5.

Waiver—Performance.]—A man who being in distress, procures other persons to consent to an agreement which he would not himself have consented to if he had not been in distress, and obtains the performance of that agreement, and benefits by it, and acquiesces in the performance, without any notice of complaint, is not entitled to set aside the transaction on the mere ground of the powerful and distress. Knight v. Majoribanis, 2 Mac. & G. 10; 2 Hall & Tw. 308.

Arbitration.]—If a voidable contract is voluntarily acted upon by a party to it, with a knowledge of all the facts, he cannot avoid it when the result has turned out to his disadvantage. Ormeev. Beadel, 2 De G. F. & J. 383; 30 L. J., Ch. 1; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1003; 3 L. T. 344; 9 W. R. 25.

A: ontracted to build a house within a given time, under a condition that if the builder did not progress as the architect might consider necessary, the architect might purchase such materials and employ such workmanship as he might consider necessary, and deduct the costs of the same from any moneys due to the contractor. After a portion of the work had been done the architect refused to certify for further payments. A's workmen not being paid, they became elamorous, and accompanied A: to the architect's office, and A. signed an agreement, giving up the contract, and stipulating that the works should be paid for according to the valuation of an arbitrator. The arbitrator proceeded with the valuation, and was attended by A: —Held, that A. had confirmed the agreement by acting upon it. The

2. WHAT AMOUNTS TO.

Threat of Criminal Proceedings. - The defendants gave promissory notes to the plaintiff, the trustee in bankruptcy of C., the plaintiff stating that criminal charges under the Debtors Act 1869, could, and were about to be brought against C., who was the son of one defendant and nephew of the other :- Held, that judgment should be entered for the defendants on the ground that they had been induced to enter into ground that one had been induced to state and the contract by duress, and threats of criminal proceedings. Seeur v. Cohen, 45 L. T. 589. And see Williams v. Buyley, 35 L. J., Ch. 717; L. R. 1 H, L. 200; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 875; 14 L. T. 802.

Compromise of Proceedings. -- When an offence is of such a nature that the person injured may obtain either a civil or a criminal remedy, there is nothing unlawful in a compromise of criminal proceedings taken against the offender. Fisher v. Apollinaris Cv., 44 L. J., Ch. 500; L. R. 10 Ch. 297; 32 L. T. 628; 23 W. R. 460.

A company indicted the plaintiff for a mis-demeanour under the Merchandize Marks Act. 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 88), s. 3, but upon his undertaking to give an apology they allowed a verdict of not guilty to be entered. Held, that the agreement to give the apology was not void as made under duress; that the compromise of the criminal proceedings was not unlawful. Ib.

A mortgage deed executed by a married woman was set aside on the ground that it was executed by her to secure payment of moneys which her husband had misappropriated and in fear of a criminal prosecution against him. McClatchie v. Haslam, 63 L. T. 376.

A sum was provided by A. under an agreement, to be applied in paying the liabilities of B. to a company, with the object of saving B. from a eriminal prosecution:—Held, that the agreement was void, as it was made under pressure. Davies v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 47 L. J., Ch. 511; 8 Ch. D. 469; 38 L. T. 478; 26 W. R. 794.

Held, also, that the illegality was not such that (the fund being in medio) the court would refuse to interfere in favour of A. Ib.

Coercion.]-The moment that a person who influences another does so by the threat of taking away from that other something that he possesses, or of preventing him from obtaining something he could otherwise have obtained, then the act of the person exercising the influence becomes coercion, and ceases to be persuasion or considera-tion. If a person in custody confess a judgment whilst his counsel is attending, it will not be set aside for duress. Roy v. Beaufort (Duke), 2 Atk.

Compromise with a prisoner held bad. Wil-kinson v. Stafford, 1 Ves. J. 43. But see Hinton v. Hinton, 2 Ves. Sen. 635.

Securities obtained under a threat and apprehension of arrest set aside. Scott v. Scott, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 74.

Distressed Circumstances. ]-A share in a leasehold interest was sold to the plaintiff. Subsequently the owners of the other share obtained a renewed lease of the whole, which they mortgaged to M., and brought an ejectment against the plaintiff. The plaintiff filed a bill against the mortgagors and their mortgagee, and obtained a decree in 1826, for an account and a reconveyance against them. The defendant, the attorney who prepared the mortgage and conducted the electment, afterwards purchased the mortgagors' interest, and paid off his mortgage. The plaintiff, who was in distressed circumstances, signed an agreement, stating that he had surrendered his holding to the defendant, and consenting to a reference to arbitration respecting a new division of the lands, and to take them at an increased rent; but no actual surrender, nor lease, was proved :-Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the decree of 1826 against the defendant, who was decreed to pay the costs. Patten v. Wallace, 1 L. & T. 470. S. C., sub nom. Wallace v. Patten, 12 Cl. & F. 491.

H. was entitled to the rent of lands producing 350l. a year. S. having withheld the rents of these lands from H., whereby she was reduced to great necessity, she was prevailed upon to release the same to S., in consideration of 1007. paid down (though the arrears amounted to 1,2001), and an annuity of 2001 per annum. But this release was set aside as fraudulent. Amory v. Luttrell, 4 Bro. P. C. 159, — Reduction of Portion.]—Notwithstanding two private acts of parliament, reducing younger children's portions in proportion to the other interests in the estate, the court would not enforce an agreement entered into by one of the younger children, in execution of the private acts, consenting to accept a stated sum in satisfaction; such agreement being inserted by the plaintiff's solicitor in a receipt from her, on paying her a small sum of money, and she being in great distress and embarrassment at the time. Kerneys v. Hansard, G. Cooper, 125,

- Bond. ]-B., while in distressed circumstances, upon the suggestion of M., executes a bond to him for a sun due by a deceased brother, to whom she was next of kin, but who left no personal chattels. Sale of Equity of Redemption.]-A mortgagor in embarrassed circumstances, in May, conveyed his equity of redemption, under pressure, to the mortgagee, for considerably less than its value, and in June he was, on his own petition, adjudicated bankrupt. On a bill by the assignee the deed was set aside. Ford v. Olden, 36 L. J., Ch. 651; L. R. 3 Eq. 461; 15 L. T. 558.

Promise to Bequeath Debt by Will.]-A., being in embarrassed circumstances, made an arrangement for an advance from an insurance office, that his mother should take up certain judgment debts and have a second mortgage (after that of the insurance office) on the family property. The money was raised, but he refused B. PRIVATE WAYS. to execute the mortgage to his mother, except upon a promise from her to leave the mortgage debt to him by will. The mother died without carrying out the promise:—Held, that since he could have been compelled to excente the deed without the promise, the promise was not binding on the mother's estate. Luxmore v. Clifton, 16 W. R. 265.

Duress of Goods.]—Bond given for silks taken up in order to sell and to raise money ordered to be delivered up upon payment of the sum really raised. Burker v. Vansommer, 1 Bro. C. C. 148, If a man pays money or gives securities to redeem his goods from the custody of the law, that is not a case of duress, nor can he recover back his money, or defend himself from proceedings taken to enforce the securities. Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Hunter, 18 L. T. 749: 16 W. R. 1090.

An agreement made under duress of goods is not void. Skeate v. Beale, 3 P. & D. 587; 11 A. & E. 983; 9 L. J., Q. B. 283; 4 Jur. 766. And see Wahefield v. Newbon, 6 Q. B. 276;

Prescription. ]-No one can claim a prescription in his own land. Cooper v. Barber, 3 Taunt, 99 : 12 R. R. 604.

the thing upon which it is claimed is within the time of memory. Rew v. Johns, Lofft. 76.

Unlawful Acts will not Support. 1scription based upon a series of unlawful acts. cannot be supported whether the acts were unlawful at common law or by statute. Traill v. McAllister, 25 L. R., 1r. 524.

The general rule that a man cannot prescribe against a statute means that prescription cannot be proved by acts prohibited by a statute. The prescription which is sought to be established must be one which could have a legal origin, and the right must be such as that it could have been lawfully granted by the owner of the servient to the owner of the dominant tenement; and if such grant would have been unlawful, either at common law or as prohibited by statute, it cannot be presumed, and the claim of right cannot be supported by a continuance of acts, thus unlawful, for any length of time. Ib.

- Ancient Grant. |--- An ancient grant, without date, does not necessarily destroy a prescriptive right; for it may be either prior to time of memory, or in confirmation of such prescriptive right, which is matter to be left to a jury. Addington v. Clode, 2 W. Bl. 989.

- Effect of unauthorised Grant, ] - Sec Simpson v. Godmanchester Corporation, 66 L. J., Ch. 770; [1897] A. C. 696; 77 L. T. 409—H. L.

- Effect of Statute. ]-The Prescription Act has not taken away any of the modes of acouiring easements which existed before the statute was passed; and where the evidence is clear of a right to the light from time immemorial that right is not taken away by the statute. Aynaley v. Glaver, 44 L. J., Ch. 523; L. R. 10 Ch. 283; 32 L. T. 345; 23 W. R. 457.

- Impossible Rights. The right to any easement whether affirmative or negative cannot be acquired by prescription when neither it was physically capable of being prevented nor actionable at the snit of the servient owner, Sturges v. Brildman, 48 L. J., Ch. 785; 11 Ch. D. 852; 41 L. T. 219; 28 W. R. 200—C. A.

The right therefore to make a noise so as to annoy a neighbour cannot be supported by user, unless during the period of user the noise has amounted to an actionable nuisance. Ib.

An owner of a windmill cannot claim, either by prescription, or by presumption of a grant arising from twenty years' acquiescence, to be entitled to the free and uninterrupted passage of the currents of wind and air to his mill. > - Profits à prendre.] - The defendants proved that cot-fishing had been carried on in a navigable tidal river with the knowledge of the plaintiff or his agents, and without interruption by them, as far back as living memory extended: Held, that if the plaintiff's right to a several fishery were once proved the exercise of cot-fishing could not take it away or confer any right on the imblic; for the public cannot in law prescribe for a profit à prendre in alieno solo, nor acquire any right adversely to the owner under any statute of limitation; and an incorporeal hereditament such as a several heterporeas hereditainent stati as a several fishery, which can only pass by deed, cannot be "abandoned." Noill v. Devonshère (Duke), S. App. Cas. 135; 31 W. R. 622 — H. L. (Ir.)

A prescriptive right to a several ovster fishery in a navigable tidal river was proved to have been exercised from time immemorial by a borough corporation and its lessees; without any qualification except that the free inhabitants of ancient tenements in the borough had from time immemorial without interruption, and claiming as a right, exercised the privilege of dredging for oysters in the locus in quo from the 2nd of February to Easter eye in each year, and of catching and earrying away the same without stint for sale and otherwise. This usage of the inhabitants tended to the destruction of the fishery, and if continued would destroy it:— Held (Lord Blackburn dissenting), that the claim of the inhabitants was not to a profit à prendre in alieno solo; that a lawful origin for the usage ought to be presumed if reasonably possible; and that the presumption which ought to be drawn, as reasonable in law and probable in fact, was that the original grant to the corporation was subject to a trust or condition in favour of the free inhabitants of ancient tenements in the borough in accordance with the usage. Goodman v. Saltash Corpora-tion, 52 L. J., Q. B. 193; 7 App. Cas. 633; 48 L. T. 239; 31 W. R. 293; 47 J. P. 276—H. L.

The inhabitants of a town cannot, by that name and description, prescribe for an easement in alieno solo; and, therefore, under a grant the inhabitants of a town cannot take, by that name or description, an easement to place their stalls on market-days upon the land of another, withont making any mayment for the use of the soil. A prescriptive right to a several fishery in a navigable river may pass as appurtenant to a manor. Rogers v. Allen, 1 Camp. 309; 10 R. R.

To an action for fishing in the plaintiff's fishery the defendant pleaded that the locus in quo was an arm of the sea; the plaintiff replied a prescription for the sole and several right of fishing, and traversed that every subject had a right of free fishery in the locus in quo. This was a bad traverse, and defendant might pass it and traverse the prescriptive right. Richardson v. Orford, 2 H. & Bl. 182; 1 Aust. 281; 4 Term Rep. 437; 3 R. R. 579.

____ Excessive Servitudes.]—There can be no prescriptive right, in the nature of a servitude or an easement, so large as to preclude the ordinary uses of property by the owner of the land affected, Dyce v. Hay, 1 Macq. H. L. 305.

It does not follow that rights sustainable by grant are necessarily sustainable by prescription.

The tunnel was completed about July, 1872, and had ever since remained in the uninterrupted and exclusive possession of the defendants or their predecessor in title. No substantial alteration had been made in it for more than twelve years before the issue of the writ in Angust, 1891. Plaintiff, who was owner of the land on both sides of the road, where the tunuel passed under, claimed to be cutitled to the soil under the road at that place, and claimed an injunction restraining trespass by the defendants on his land :- Held, that the use of the tunnel by the defendants was not a mere easement, but as against the plaintiff amounted to exclusive possession and occupation, which having continued for more than twelve years, the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Beran v. Landon Portland Cement Co., 3 R. 47; 67 L. T. 615.

2. Under Prescription Act.

When Absolute and Indefeasible.] - Under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 27, it is sufficient to prove forty years' enjoyment of the easement claimed next preceding any suit or action in which the right has been called in question. And this doctrine in a compromise, or refusal by the plaintiff to proceed with it, does not hinder it from being such an action as the statute mentions. Ib.

Nor does the fact that the plaintiff in the former action was only tenant of the dominant tenement, whereas the plaintiff in the present action is the reversioner sning as such. Ih.

Computation of period of Twenty Years. |a declaration for obstructing ancient lights, the defendant pleaded the custom of London to build on ancient foundations to any height; that the defendant was possessed of an ancient messuage adjoining the plaintiffs' premises, and towards which the windows in the declaration mentioned looked; and that pursuant to the custom he built thereon, and thereby unavoid-ably a little obscured the plaintiffs' windows. The plaintiffs replied that the access of light and air had been enjoyed as of right and without interruption by the respective occupiers of the plaintiffs' messuage for and during the full period of twenty years before the said obstruction, and of twenty years next before the commencement of a suit, wherein the plaintiffs' claim in this action, and to the said access and use of light and air was and is brought into question :- Held, that the twenty years' enjoyment of the access and use of light to a dwellinghonse, &c., under ss. 3 and 4 of the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), is to be taken to be the period next before some action or suit wherein the claim shall have been brought in question, and, consequently, that the replication was good. Computation of Period of Forty Years-" Person entitled to any Reversion." ]-The words in s. 8 of the Prescription Act, "any person entitled to any reversion expectant on the determination" of a life estate, are not limited to an owner of the whole reversion, but include a tenant at will to such an owner. Therefore, if within three years after the determination of a life estate in land, an action is brought by a tenant at will to the reversioner against the claimant of an easement by prescription over the land, the term of the tenancy for life is to be excluded in the computation of the period of forty years mentioned in the act. Palk v. Shinner, 18 Q. B. 568; 22 L. J., Q. B. 27; 17 Jur. 372.

> Enjoyment of Rights.]—The words "enjoyed by any person claiming right," applied to cuse-ments, in 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2, and "enjoyment thereof as of right" in s. 5, mean an enjoyment had, not secretly, or by stealth, or by tacit sufferance, or by permission asked from time to time on each occasion, or on many; but an enjoyment had openly, notoriously, without particular leave at the time, by a person claiming to use without dauger of being treated as a trespasser, as a matter of right, whether the right so passer, as a natter of right, whether the right so claimed is strictly legal, as by prescription and adverse user, or by deed, or has been merely lawful, so far as to excuse a trespass. Tieble v. Branos, 4 A. & E. 360; 1 H. & W. 769; 6 N. & M. 230; 5 L. J., K. B. 119.
> The 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, converts into a right such an enjoyment only of access of light over contiguous land as has been had for twenty years in the character of an easement, distinct from the enjoyment of the land itself; and the statute places this species of negative easement on the same footing, in this respect, as those positive easements provided for by the other sections; therefore, if the dominant and servient tenements are, during the prescribed period, in the occupation of the same person, no right is acquired. Harbidge v. Warwick, 3 Ex. 552; 18 L. J., Ex. 245.

Belonging to Land or Owner. ]-Semble, that where an easement has been enjoyed from time immemorial by persons exercising rights in the dominant tenement, although such rights are not derived from the owner, and are to some extent adverse to him, yet, in the absence of express proof as to the origin of the easement, the presumption is, that it belongs to the land and not sampten is, that it belongs to the familiar into the persons exercising such rights. Frimey v. Stocker, 35 L. J., Ch. 467; L. R. I. Ch. 396; 12 Jun. (N.S.) 419; 14 L. T. 427; 14 W. R. 743.

The plaintiff was possessed of a mill on the river Calder, and the defendant of a mill on the river Hebble, which flowed into the Calder at a point above the plaintiff's mill. A declaration complaining that the defendant threw, placed and deposited, into and upon the bed of the Hebble, and on the banks and side thereof, at and near to the defendant's mill, cinders and ashes, which fell and were washed down, and carried into the Hebble, and so were floated and passed with the water into the Calder, and unto and into the plaintiff's mill-pond, and unto and into the plaintiff's part of the bed and channel of the Calder, filling them up, and obstructing the working of his mill. Plea, as to the throwing, placing and depositing the cinders and ashes, that the defendant had been the occupier of the mill on the river Hebble for more than twenty years before the doing the acts complained of, that they must not be taken to agree with the and that during all that time large quantities of cinders and ashes were necessarily produced at windows by actual enjoyment for twenty years the mill, being the refuse of the ash-pit of the engine, and the sweepings of the mill; and that being such occupier he enjoyed as of right, and without interruption, the privilege and easement of throwing, placing and depositing upon the bed and channel of the Hebble, and the banks and side, and near to his mill, all such quantities of cinders and ashes as were produced in the mill. The plea alleged that the cinders and ashes were produced in the defendant's mill, and justified the grievance in the lawful exercise of the privilege and easement :—Held, after verdict, that supposing the defendant to claim the banks and hed of the Hebble, on and in which the cinders and ashes had been deposited, as in his own occupation, or that the banks and bed were in the occupation of some third person against whom a valid right by way of easement had been gained, in either view the plea failed to show any right of easement as against the plaintiff. gatroyd v. Robinson, 7 El. & Bl. 391; 26 L. J., Q. B. 233; 3 Jur. (N.s.) 615; 5 W. R. 375.

Held, also, that even if it was taken that an casement in the bed and banks of the Hebble had been alleged and proved, and as a natural consequence that the deposit on the bed of the Calder was necessarily established, still, as it was consistent with the plea, that no perceptible deposit had been occasioned on the plaintiff's part of the bed of the Calder for twenty years, the plea was insufficient to show a claim to an easement of depositing cinders and ashes on the plaintiff's part of the bed of the Calder. Rights in a Parish Church. ]-Upon a bill in equity to establish a right to a chancel as part of a parish church against the lord of a manor, who claimed it as appendant to the manor or manor-house, it appearing that the chancel was an ancient charged when a manor or with the period with the chancel was an ancient charged, overal with the years' user without intermities to the chancel and the charged with the period with the pe church, and that it was a private chapel erected by lord of the manor: - Held, that the immemorial use and occupation, coupled with reparation, entitled the lord of the manor by prescription to the perpetual and exclusive use of the chancel; and that this right might exist, notwithstanding that the freehold might not be in the person prescribing, and although the estate or house to which the chancel was appendant might not be situate in the parish. Churton v. Frewen, 35 L. J., Ch. 692; L. R. 2 Eq. 634; 12 Jur. (N.s.) 879; 14 L. T. 846.

"Consent or Agreement."]-K., the owner in fee of a freehold house, in 1814 put out four new windows, and signed and gave to S., the owner in fee of an adjacent freehold house overlooked by those windows, a document declaring that they were put out and remained upon the leave of S., and that he, K., would, on the request of S., or his heirs or assigns, at any time thereafter block up the same, and in the meantime would pay S., his heirs and assigns, sixpence a year for the indulgence. This document was not signed by S. The rent was paid down to 1859. In 1877 S.'s successor in title called upon K.'s successor in title, who had bought the property in 1865 with notice of the document, but had never paid any rent under it, to block up the four windows, and proceeded to obstruct the access of light to them. K.'s successor in title thereupon brought his action against him for an without intermission:—Held, first, that the enjoyment of light by K. and his successors had been by virtue of the document of 1814, and that such document, although signed by K. only, was a consent or agreement expressly made or given for the purpose of such enjoyment within the meaning of the 3rd section of the Prescription Act, so as to prevent K. and his successors from acquiring any right to the access and use of light under that section ; and secondly, that the agreement, having been acted on by payment of rent thereunder to within twenty years from the commencement of the action, was enforceable in equity, irrespective of the statute. Bewley v. Athinson, 49 L. J., Ch. 153; 18 Ch. D. 283; L. T. 603; 28 W. R. 638—C. A.

Interruptions-Payment of Rent. ]-Payment of rent for the use of lights is not an interruption of the njoyment, so as to defeat a prescriptive title, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3. Plasterers' Co. v. Perish Clerks' Co., 20 L. J., Ex. 362; 15 Jur. 965-Ex. Ch.

There must be a discontinuance of the enjoyment to constitute such an interruption. Ib. The interruption which defeats a prescriptive right under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 1, is an adverse obstruction, not a mere discontinuance of user by the claimant himself. Carr v. Foster, 3 Q. B. 581; 2 G. & D. 753; 11 L. J., Q. B. 284. In a case under s. 1, if proof is given of a right enjoyed at the time of action brought, and thirty years before, but disused during any part of the intermediate time, it is always a question for the jury, whether, at that time, the right had ceased, or was still substantially enjoyed. Ib.

years' user without interruption is set up, extending over a space larger than but including the locus in quo, and an interruption acquiesced in for a year is shown to have existed as to the locus in quo, but as to no other part of the space over which the right is elaimed, the right under 2 & 3 Will, 4, c. 71, is disproved as between the parties to the action, and affords no justification of the trespass complained of. Davies v. Williams, 16 Q. B. 546; 20 L. J., Q. B. 330; 15 Jur. 752.

Where an easement has been enjoyed for nineteen years and a fraction, and is then interrupted by the owner of the soil, the easement may still be acquired under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, at the end of the twentieth year; for the interruption, to defeat twenty years' user, must have been acquiesced in or submitted to for a whole year. West, 671; 8 Cl. & F. 231; 5 Jur. 811. Where an easement is claimed under s. 2 of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, e. 71, the question of acquiescence or non-acquiescence in an interruption of the enjoyment thereof, under s. 4, is a question for the jury, to be determined by the acts and conduct of the claimant of the easement, within a year from the commencement of the interruption, and it is not necessary that the claimant should higuertion, claiming to have acquired an indefensible right to the access of light to the four Bennison v. Although under 2 & 3 Will, 4, c, 71, s, 4, uo interruption will prevent a right from being acquired by twenty years' user, unless it has been acquiesced in for a whole year, yet an interruption for a shorter period may have the effect of showing that the enjoyment never was as of right, and thereby of preventing a right being acquired under s. 1. Eaton v. Swansea Waterworks Co., 17 Q. B. 267; 20 L. J., Q. B. 482; 15 Jur. 675.

The practice in a manor was for the lords to grant copyholds for three lives, and to renew at a fine upon the dropping of any of the lives; but there was no custom binding them to renew. The convhold grants did not mention a right of fishing; but from time immemorial the copy-holders had enjoyed a right of angling in a stream which formed the boundary of the manor, and of passing along the bank over the lands of other tenants of the manor for that purpose. Subject to this, the right of fishing was in the In 1845 the lords enfranchised a copyhold belonging to S., which adjoined the river, and leased in the most ample terms all rights of fishing and all other rights they had over the enfranchised tenement. After this various other copyholds were enfranchised, and for nearly forty years the copyholders and the enfrancised convholders exercised the same right as before of angling and going over the land of S., for that purpose. T. was the owner of several tenements formerly copyhold of the manor which had been enfranchised since 1845. In 1885 S, set up a gate and prevented T, from passing over his land to fish. T, acquiesced in the interruption until 1889, when he commenced an action, on behalf of himself and all other the owners and occupiers of copyholds or enfranchised copyholds, to establish the right of angling and of passing over the land of S, for that purpose:—Held, that the interruption of T.'s alleged right, acquiesced in by him, for four years before action brought, was a bar to that right under s. 4 of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71; and that such right, being in the nature of a profit à prendre, could not be claimed by prescription on behalf of a large and indefinite class such as "owners and occupiers," Tilbury v. Silva, 45 Ch. D. 98; 62 L. T. 254, Affirmed on other grounds, 45 Ch. D. 98; 63 L. T. 141-C. A.

Application for Leave. ]-Action for breaking and entering a close, called the Railroad. A plea alleged that the occupiers of adjoining closes had, for twenty years, as of right, and without interruption, used and been accustomed to use the privilege and easement of passing and repassing, and laying down railroads across the plaintiff's railroad :- Held, that the defendant was bound to show an uninterrupted enjoyment, as of right, during that period ; and that the plaintiffs might prove, under that issue, applications by the defendant during the twenty years for leave to cross their milroad, and that it was not necessary for them to reply to such licence specially. Monnouth Cunal Co. v. Harford, 1 C. M. & B. 614; 5 Tyr. 68; 4 L. J., Ex. 43.

- Encroachments. - To an action for taking the plaintiff's cattle in an open field, called P. and G. field, and impounding them, the defenand their cattle, from the 4th of September to the 5th of April: that T. B., in 1755, by indenture, granted the pasturage to S. B., his heirs and assigns, for ever; that J. B. (who claimed by descent from S. B.), in 1836, demised the pasturage to the defendant, who seized the plaintiff's entile because they were depasturing on the 217 acres. The second plea alleged a right of sole pasturage, in gross, for thirty years before the commencement of the suit in J. B. and his ancestors, and a demise from him to the defendant. It appeared that within the last twenty years encroach-ments have been made by buildings and inclosures on the 217 acres, and that above thirty acres had thus been appropriated, but no encroachments had been made on the part of the 217 acres on which the alleged trespass was committed :- Held, that these interruptions, being so recent did not disprove the right of T. B. to the pasturage in 1755, as alleged in the first plea: and that, not having been made on that part of the land where the plaintiff's cattle were depasturing, they were not conclusive evidence of an interruption of the enjoyment of that part by J. B. as alleged in the second plea. Welcome V. Upton, 6 M. & W. 536; 8 L. J., Ex. 267.

- Life Tenancy.]-If to a declaration in trespass the defendant pleads an enjoyment as of right for thirty years next before the commencement of the action, and the plaintiff simply traverses such enjoyment, he cannot support the traverse by proof, that though there was such enjoyment, yet for a period of time without including which there would not be a thirty years' enjoyment there was a tenant for life of the locus in quo. Pye v. Munford, 11 Q. B. 666; 5 D. & L. 414; 17 L. J., Q. B. 138; 12 Jur. 578.

Disproof by Origin of Right.]-The 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 1, does not prevent a claim to a right of common, &c., from being defeated after thirty years' enjoyment, by showing that such right was first enjoyed at a time when it could not have originated legally. Mill v. New Forest Commissioner, 18 C. B. 60; 25 L. J., C. P. 212; 2 Jnr. (N. s.) 520; 4 W. R. 508,

A plea, that the defendant and all his ancestors, whose heir he is, from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, have had and been used and accustomed to have the sole and several herbage and pasturage of and in a certain open field, is disproved by showing a grant to the defendant's ancestor eighty-one years before, for a valuable consideration; and such a plea is not aided by 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 1. Welcome v. Upton, 5 M. & W. 398; 7 D. P. C. 475; 9 L. J., Ex. 154.

Presumption of Legal Origin, 1 - Where a privilege has been exercised as of right for a long series of years, the court will make every presumption in favour of its legal origin, but the circumstances of the enjoyment must be carefully looked to; and as in the present case there were copyholders whose right of way and of fishing was not disputed, the court considered the case not to stand on the same footing as if the person exercising the privilege formed only one class. Tilbury v. Silva, supra.

The Court will seek to find a legal origin for a user which has continued for a long period of dant pleaded, first, that T. B. and his ancestors | years without interruption, and will, if necessary, had been immemorially used and accustomed to presume a lost grant. Even where the origin, can be traced to a deed granting the user in a way which would be bad as being the grant of an ensement in gross, yet such origin will not defeat the acquisition of the right by prescription by minterrupted user, nor in consequence of such a deed will the user be considered as enjoyed by "some consent or agreement expressly given or made for the purpose by a deed or writing" within s. 2 of the Prescription Act, 1832. Simpson v. Gadmanekester Corporation, 13 R. 861; 64 L. J. Ch. 837. Affirmed 73 L. T. 423; 44 W. R. 149; 13 R. 869, n.—C. A. &ee S. C. in H. L., 66 L. J., Ch. 770; [1897] A. C. 696; 77 L. T. 469.

3. IMPLIED BY LAW.

Easements of Necessity—Severance of Tenements.]—Upon a severance of tenements, as of necessity or in their nature continuous, will pass by implication of law without any works of grant. Watts v. Kelson, 40 L. J., Ch. 126: L. R. 6 Ch. 166: 24 L. T. 209: 19 W. R. 833.

The owner of two adjoining properties, Black-acre and Whiteaere, conveyed Blackacre by deed, "together with all waters, watercourses, &c., used and enjoyed therewith." There was a small natural watercourse, which passed through Whiteaere to Blackaere. At the date of the conveyance an artificial pipe existed in this watercourse, which passed the water through Whiteacre down to some eattle-sheds in Black-After the severance the grantee pulled down the cattle-sheds and erected cottages in their place :- Held, that the right to the waterflow through the artificial pipe was an easement as of necessity, and in its nature continuous, and as such passed by implication of law to the grantee; that, if it was not necessary, the general words in the conveyance were sufficient to pass it, and that the change in the mode of user by the grantee had not taken away his right to have the water-flow in the accustomed manner through the premises. Ib.

—— Support of Surface.]—In every grant or lease by the owner of the surface and subjacent strata of land, either of the surface or of the subjacent strata, there is an implied provision that the surface-owner shall have a right not to be damaged by the removal of such support from the subjacent strata as is necessary to support the surface in the condition in which it is at the time of the grant or lease, with the buildings thereon, if any. Richards v. Jenkins, 18 L. T. 437; 17 W. R. 30.

— When discontinuous.]—An easement such as the right to use a pump is a discontinuous easement, and needs definite words to create it, and differs from a continuous easement, such as a right to drains, which passes with the premises to which it appertains. Polden v. Bustard, 7 B. & S. 130; 35 L. J., Q. B. 92; L. R. 1 Q. B. 156; 13 L. T. 441; 14 W. R. 198—Ex. Ch.

— Implied reservation.]—Where an essement is in the nature of an easement of necessity, there is no need of an express reservation of such easement in the conveyance of the property to be affected by the easement; and such reservation is a matter of legal presumption to einplied from the nature of the transaction between the grantor and grantee. Shubrook v. Tufnetl., 46 I. 7. 886; 43 J. F. 684.

An easement, by implied grant, of communication with a dwelling-house, through land not conveyed therewith, cannot be claimed in virtue of anything short of an absolute necessity for the user. Dadd v. Burchall, 1 H. & C. 113; 31 L. J., Ex. 364; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1180.

- Contiguous Tenements. ]-Although the occupiers of contignous tenements, held under one title, may sometimes set up implied grants from the original owner of easements not expressly mentioned, this only applies to such easements as are apparent and continuous, that is to say, clearly indicated by the condition of the premises at the time of the division of title; and if the premises are then unfinished, and the buildings are in a skeleton state, so that though there are openings left in the walls, it is uncertain for what purpose they are intended, whether as doors or windows; and if as doors, then in what direction and to what extent the ways thereto are designed to be used, there will be no such implied grants, the easements not being apparent and continuous; and a plan attached to the grants, if it leaves the matter equally uncertain, will not aid the implication, Glave v. Harding, 27 L. J., Ex. 287.

Easements continuous — Apparent and necessary.]—To imply a grant or a reservation of an easement as arising upon the disposition of one of two adjoining tenements by the owner of both, where the easement had no legal existence anterior to the unity of possession, and is not one of necessity, is a theory in part not required by, and in other parts inconsistent with, the principles of English hav that regulate the effect and operation of grants of real property. Sufficial v. Brown, 4 De G. J. & S. 185; 83 L. J., Ch. 248; 3 N. R. 340; 10 Jur. (N. 8.) 11; 9 L. F. (627; 12 W. R. 356. Explained in Wheeldon v. Burrows, infra.

If the grantor intends to reserve any right over the property granted, it is his duty to reserve it expressly in the grant; and the operation of a plain grant not pretended to be otherwise than in conformity with the contract between the parties ought not to be limited and cut down by the fletion of an implied reservation. 1b.

A dock and an adjoining strip of land and a coal wharf were held in fee by the same person, and whenever a ship of any size was taken into the dock to be repaired her standing bowsprit projected over and across the adjoining strip of land. All the properties were put up for sale by anction under particulars of sale which stated that the dock was capable of holding two vessels of large size, and that at low water several vessels or a steamer of the largest class would safely lie on the ways for repairs; and wherein the strip of land was described as a freehold coal wharf, capable of being rendered worth a very large rental by a comparatively small outlay; but nothing was stated to show that the dock or its. owners either had or were intended to have any right or privilege over the adjoining premises. The strip of land or coal wharf was sold and conveyed to the purchaser in fee absolutely and in the most unqualified manner, and under such purchaser the defendant claimed. Afterwards the dock was sold and conveyed to the purchaser thereof, under whom the plaintiff claimed :-Held, on a bill for an injunction to restrain the defendant from preventing or interfering with the plaintiff's full use and enjoyment of the dock as the same had theretofore been used by allowing the bowsprit of any vessel in the dock to overlie or overhaug the strip of had and coad wharf; first, that there was no legal ground for holding that the owner of the dock retained or had, in respect of that tenoment, any right or easement over the adjoining tenement of the strip of land and wharf after the sale and alicnation of the latter. Ib. Held, secondly, that the purchaser or grantee Held, secondly, that the purchaser of grantee of the wharf was not to be considered as having been bound to know, at the time of his purchase, that the use of the dock would require that the bowspirts of large vessels received in it should project over the land he bought, or as having hought with notice of this necessary use of the dock, and the absolute sale and conveyance to him was not to be out down and reduced accordance.

ingly. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the casement claimed by the plaintiff was neither continuous, apparent, nor necessary. Ib.

By the grait of part of a tenement there will pass to the grantee all those continuous and apparent casements over the other part of the tenement which are necessary to the enjoyment of the part granted and have been hitherto used therewill: but, as a general rule, there is no corresponding implication in favour of the grantor, though there are certain exceptions to this, as in the case of ways of necessity. Wheeldow v. Hurvens, 48 L. J., Oh. 853; 12 Ch. D. 31; 41 L. T. 327; 28 W. R. 1996—C. A.

Where two properties are possessed by the same owner, and there has been a severance made of part from the other, anything which was used and was necessary for the confortable enjoyment of that part of the property which was granted must be considered to follow from the grant. Beart v. Chehrane, 4 Macq. H. L. 117; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 92; 5 L. T. 1; 10 W. R. S.

A, owner of two adjoining properties, commands, owner of two adjoining properties, commands a cesspool in a corner of the garden, and a drain to carry the water into it from the tanyard, which gradually sloped down towards the garden. Afterwants he sold the two properties to different persons. The conveyances made no allusion to the existence of the drain and cesspool:—Held, that the casement passed, by an implied grant, with the tanyard. Ib.

— Grantor cannot derogate from his Grant.]
—The grantor cannot derogate from his own absolute grant so as to claim rights over the thing granted, even if they were at the time of the grant continuous and apparent easements, enjoyed by an adjoining tenement which remains the property of the grantor. Suffield v. Brown, 4 De G. J. & S. 185; 33 L. J., Gl. 249; 3 N. R. 340; 10 Jun. (N.S.) 111; 9 L. T. 627; 12 W. R. 356.

The rule that an owner of two tenements who grants one of them cannot decogate from his own grant by anything he does on the tenement which he retains cannot be extended so as to compel such owner, when he has granted one tenement but has retained under covenant certain rights over it, to enforce those rights in order to preserve to a subsequent grantee of the other tenement, the enjoyment of easements which he would have been entitled to enjoy if the owner of the two tenements had retained the absolute ownership of the tenement first granted.

Master v. Hansard, 46 L. J., Ch. 505; 4 Ch. D. 718; 36 L. T. 535; 25 W. R. 570—C. A.

The owner of two adjoining premises demised one of them for unety-une years by a lease which contained a restrictive covenant on the part of the lessee not to do anything upon the premises which might be an aunoyance to the neighbourhood or diminish the value of the adjacent property, and not to build upon the premises without the approval of the lessor. Afterwards he demised the adjacent premises for ninety-four years by a lease which contained a restrictive covenant in the same terms as that in the first lease. The first lease was assigned to an hotel company, and they proposed, with the approval of the lessor, to build so as to interfere with the access of light to the adjacent premises, the lease of which had been assigned to the plaintiff. In an action to restrain the lessor from approving such building, and the company from building, and for damages :-Held, first, that the principle that the lessor could not derogate from his grant did not compel him to prevent the company from building; and secondly, that the restrictive covenant in the first lease had not emired for the benefit of the plaintiff. Ib.

A deed of 1671, which severed the surface from the minerals, contained a reservation of the mines to the grantor, with free and full power and liberty to work, sink, dig for, or win the same, and to drive drifts, make watercourses, or do any other act necessary or convenient for the working, winning or getting the same, with a covenant by the grantor to pay to the grantee treble the damages, loss or prejudice which the grantee should sustain by reason of such diggling, working, &c. —Held, that the reservation was subject to the implied right of the grantee of the surface to support from the uninerals, and did not empower the granter to remove the whole of the minerals without leaving a support for the surface, Smart v. Marton, 5 El, & Bl, 30; 24 L. J., Q. B. 200 : 1 Jur. (N.S.) 825.

A grant by lease of premises last held under the grantor as bleach works, implies a licence to use the same as such. Hidl v. Innd, 1 H. & C. 676; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 205; 11 W. R. 271.

Grantor, affected with Notice of Plans -Implied Reservation-Merger of Lease-Surrender.]-By seven simultaneous leases seven plots of lands marked respectively A, B, C, D, E, F, and G, and forming together one square block, were demised by the owner to J. with a ground plan on each lease, and with covenants for the erection and maintenance of buildings upon each plot according to certain plans. The leases were granted with a view to the erection upon the whole block of one large edifice, of which the several parts and the internal arrangements were to be connected together for a common use and occupation; so, however, as to be separable (if desired) into seven separate buildings. J. being in the occupation of the whole, while the buildings were being erected, mortgaged C. F. and G, by a sub-lease which recited the building scheme and the original leases of C, F and G, and contained stipulations for the completion of the buildings on C, F and G. After the buildings had been substantially completed, J. mortgaged E by a deed which recited the lease of E and assigned the buildings thereon, subject to the covenants in the lease, to one who had notice of the general plan of the buildings. J. then mortgaged B. On J's bankruptey the sic utere too ut alienum non lædas, the action several mortgagees obtained forcelosure decrees was maintainable. Alston v. Grant 3 El. & Bl. in respect of B, C and E respectively :- Held (Lord Blackburn dissenting), that though there was no express reservation of the right to light. yet, looking at the plans, the covenants in the original leases, and the mortgage deeds, the mortgagees of C and E respectively were by mortgagees of Came E respectively were by reasonable implication precluded from interfering with the light to the windows in B which looked out upon C and E respectively, and might be restrained accordingly in an action by the mortgagee of B :- Held, also, that the mortgagee of B. could maintain such an action, although he had surrendered the lease of B and taken a fresh lease from the original lessor; for, without deciding what effect the merger of the original lease might have, whenever the lease of B came to an end either by surrender, forfeiture. or otherwise, the original lessor would have the same rights to light as the mortgagee would have had if the original lease had subsisted, Russell v. Watts, 55 L. J., Ch. 158; 10 App. Cas. 590; 53 L. T. 876; 34 W. R. 277; 50 J. P. 68— H. L. (E.)

____ Sale of Plots of Land.]—Semble, by the Earl of Selborne, that if on a sale and conveyance of land adjoining a house to be built by the vendor, it is mutually agreed that one of the outer walls of that house may stand wholly or partly within the verge of the land sold, and shall have in it particular windows opening upon and overlooking the land sold, and if the house is erected accordingly, the purchaser cannot afterwards build upon the land sold, so as to prevent or obstruct the access of light to those windows. Th.

Admissions in Derogation. ]-The plaintiff claimed a right of common by prescription, in respect of a que estate in land, and also by thirty and sixty years' enjoyment by the occu-pier of the land. The defendant offered evidence that A., now deceased, while tenant of the land for years, had declared that he had no such right in respect of the land :- Held, that the declaration was not admissible, inasmuch as it was in derogation of the title of the reversioner. Papendick v. Bridgwater, 5 El. & Bl. 166; 24 L. J., Q. B. 289; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 657; 3 W. R. 490.

____ Implied Duties.]—The defendant had, more than twenty years before action, constructed a sewer or a watercourse through property of his own then occupied by him. In 1845, the defendant let a house, shop and cellar to the plaintiff, which the defendant, down to that time, also occupied with the property. In 1851, the sewer or watercourse burst, and thereby the plaintiff's cellar and goods were damaged, and the plaintiff thereupon brought an action against the defendant for negligently and improperly making and constructing the sewer, and keeping and continuing the same negligently and improperly made and constructed, and so causing the damage. The jury found that the sewer was not originally constructed with proper care, and it was proved that it had been continued in the same state: Held, that upon the letting of the premises to the plaintiff, a duty arose on the part of the defendant to take care that that which was rightful did not become wrongful to the plaintiff, because that would be in derogation of the defendant's own demise to the plaintiff; and course, and that the defendant was liable to an that upon this ground, as also upon the principle action for altering the channel and diverting the was maintainable. Alston v. Grant, B El. & Bl. 128; 2 C. L. R. 933; 23 L. J., Q. B. 163; 18 Jur. 332; 2 W. R. 161.

Both Tenements held under same Landlord-Presumption of Grant. |-Where parcels of land are held under a common landlord by tenancies, each of which has existed for unwards of twenty years, the jury, in an action for obstructing the easement, may infer, from twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment, as of right of an easement claimed by the owner of one of the tenements over the lands of the other tenements, a grant of such casement by deed from one tenant to the other. Where the tenancies have not been created by writing, and the user is proved to have existed as far back as the memory of the witness can reach, the jury may infer that the alleged dominant tenement when originally. demised by the landlord, was demised with the easement appurtenant. When open upon the pleadings the question should be so left to the jury, that if some of the jurors infer a deed and the others infer the creation of a tenancy, with the easement annexed as appurtenant, the verdict should be for the owner of the alleged dominant tenement, though all the jurors do not agree upon the same alternative. Timmons v. Hewitt, 22 L. R., Ir. 627.

Right of Interference-Implication must be Direct.]—At common law, where A. has two interests in the same hereditament, as houses or minerals, or a watercourse or also a mill, or two storeys in a house, and demises one part, e.g. the lower portion of a honse, reserving to himself the upper part, the grantee either for years or in fee will not, except by express stipulation or very direct implication, be permitted to use the portion held by him so as to interfere with the enjoyment by the grantor of the portion of which he has retained possession. Dugdale v. Robertson, 3 Jnr. (N.S.) 687.

4. CREATED BY EXPRESS AGREEMENT.

Construction. ] - By an agreement between G. & C. it was agreed, "that the dock between their wharves, on the eastern side of the line of separation, shall for ever remain open as it now stands; that is to say, that neither of them shall fill it up with wharves or other incumbrances. whereby the convenience of the same may be damaged to either party":-Held, that the effect of this agreement was to create an easement that the dock should remain open as it then stood for the convenience of either party to use it as a dock; and that if it was intended that one party should have a more limited right therein than the other, such limited easement should have been created by express words. Morton v. Snow, 29 L. T. 591—P. C.

By a deed between A. and B. it was stipulated that B. should have the use of a stream of water, for irrigation, for ten days in every month, and that at all other times the stream should be under the control of A. and his assigns, and should flow in an uninterrupted course, through a channel, into the land of A. : and afterwards A. and B. assigned respectively their land to the plaintiff and the defendant:—Held, that the deed operated as a grant of the easement of the waterstream, though he did not thereby deprive the sive right to put or use boats on the canal, and plaintiff of the use of any water. Abriham v. let the same for hire for the purposes of pleasure Murley, 1 El. & Bl. 665; 22 L. J., Q. B. 183; 17 only," a third party infringed that right by Jun. 672.

Appurtenances. ]-A. was owner of the estate adjoining the sea-shore, and let N., part of the estate, to a tenant, with express liberty to take seaweed from the shore to manure his lands. N, was a farm lying inland, no part of it being nearer than about two miles from the shore. N., while so occupied, was sold to F., and the lands were described in the conveyance "as the same are presently possessed by the tenant." No express mention was made of any easement to take seaweed, and there were only the general words, "together with all the appurtenances." F. having claimed an easement to go and collect the seaweed adjoining A's estate to manure his lands :-Held, there being no express words of conveyance of such an easement, and the period of prescription not having clapsed, the easement flid not pass under the words "together with the appurtenances." Baird v. Fortune, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 926; 5 L. T. 2; 10

- Reservations. ] - A conveyance of land from the defendant to the plaintiff contained the following clause: "save and except, and always reserved unto the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, the power to enter upon the land, and to dig and make a covered sewer or watercourse through the land, in order to convey the waste water from the premises of the plaintiff into the river W., on making reasonable compensation to the defendant for any damage or injury which might be occasioned thereby, either to the surface of the ground or the buildings under which the same might be The plaintiff having constructed covered drain or sewer, in pursuance of the power, the defendant made an opening in it, and drained his premises through it :- Held, that the reservation gave the plaintiff a right to the exclusive use of the sewer. Lee v. Sterenson, El., Bl. & El. 512; 27 L. J., Q. B. 263; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 950.

A plaintiff, in an action for diverting the water of springs used in bleaching works, claimed under a lease of certain closes, with all streams that might be found in certain of the closes, there being in the lease an exception of mines and quarries, with power to the lessor and his assigns to enter on the premises, and search for minerals, and divert or alter the course of any brook or spring. The defendant justified under a subsequent demise of mines under the demised premises :- Held, that the rights of the parties were regulated by the prior lease; and that upon its construction, springs, the water of which was collected in reservoirs, and used in the works at the time of the demise, passed to the lessee, as well as streams (there being only one above-ground stream at the time of the demise); and that under the exception, as it did not comprise in its terms springs or streams, the lessor, or his subsequent lessee, could not interfere, by mining, with the springs found under the demised premises. Whitehead v. Parks, 2 H. & N. 870; 27 L. J., Ex. 169.

Rights against Third Parties.]—A canal not justify cuttering the land again, and widening company having, in consideration of an annual the goit from nine to eighteen feet, for that the reart, demised land adjoining the canal for a power to make a goit was exhausted, and the term of years, "together with the sole and exclusive widening was not a repairing or amending within sive right to put or use boals on the canal, and let the same for hire for the purposes of pleasure only," a third party infringed that right by letting out a boat for hire on the canal. In an action against him by the lessee for such infringement:—Held, that the grant of the right, although valid as between the company and their lessee, passed on such estate or properly to him as would enable him to maintain an action against a third party for its infringement. Hill v. Tupper, 2 H. & O. 121; 32 L. J., Ex. 217; 9 Juv. (N.S.) 725; S. L. T. 792; 11 W. R. 786.

The grant of the right in question operated simply as a licence or a covenant on the part of the lessors; and in suing a stranger for its infringement the lessee must use the name of his lessors. Ib.

Increase of Privilege. |- Lands, partly adjoining a river, were demised for 999 years, by indenture, in which the lessor granted to the lessee liberty to cut a goit or sluice out of the river at a proper and convenient distance above a weir, in the most convenient line, through closes (named) of the lessor, into a close intended for a mill-dam, part of the demised lands, and from time to time, and at any times to turn the water of the river through the goit, and liberty, from time to time and at all times during the term, to view, examine, carry, and lay down materials, and repair and amend the goit or sluice, when so made as aforesaid, or any of them, when and as often as need or occasion should be, making reasonable satisfaction to the lessor, his heirs and assigns, for all damage done or occasioned to the grass or herbage of the lessor, his heirs and assigns, and the lessee covenanted that he, his executors, administrators, orassigns, would make reasonable satisfaction to the lessor, his heirs and assigns, for all damages to be occasioned to the lands of the lessor by the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, in exercise of any of the liberties, privileges, and powers by the in-denture granted, except for the term of two years next cusning the commencement of the rent, during which time no trespass or damage should be charged or paid for. In an action against the lessee for widening a goit on the lessor's soil to the extent of nine additional feet, he pleaded that the goit was made in due exercise of the liberty contained in the deed, but that the same not having been made of a sufficient width, and completed to a small and an insufficient width only, viz., nine feet, so that, without widening it, as after mentioned, he could not enjoy the tenements as he was entitled by the indenture so to do, he, in further due exercise of the liberty contained in the indenture, cut down the sides of the goit, and widened it. Replication, that before the expiration of two years, and before the commission of the trespasses, the lessee, in due exercise of the liberty in the indenture contained, made and completed a goit, being the goit in the plea mentioned, of the width therein mentioned, and the same remained and was used by the lessee continually, from the time the same was so made and completed until the lessee, under colour of the indenture, committed the trespass complained of :-Held, that the privilege given to the lessee by the deed was to make a goit once only, and that, after having completed a goit, he could not justify entering the land again, and widening the goit from nine to eighteen feet, for that the

the meaning of the indenture. Bostock v. Sidebottom, 18 Q. B. 813—Ex. Ch.

A shop was demised by A. to M. "as the same was late in the occupation of C." During the occupation of C., A., who occupied the adjoining house, had the right of using the flat roof of the shop for a garden, or any other purpose not in-jurious to the shop:—Held, that the assignces of A. had no right, without the consent of M., to erect a photographic studio uyon the roof of the shop. Martyr v. Lawrence, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 858; 10 L. T. 677; 12 W. R. 1048.

Property in Soil.]—Where a local act gave to a navigation company of a river a power to appoint and set out towing-paths alongside the river, but the language left it in equal doubt whether the soil of the towing-paths was to vest in the company, or only the easement of the right of way for rowing; though it was necessary for other purposes of the company that the company should have the fee of certain parts of the land adjoining the river:—Held, that the company is not provided the river in the towing-paths, but only such a use of the soil, or an easement, as was necessary for the purposes of the navigation. Badger v. South Yorkshire Heilmay and Hiver Dun Murigution (a., 1 E. k. El. 347; 28 L. J., Q. B. 118; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 459; 7 W. R. 130—Ex. Ch. —Ex. Ch.

Preventing Sale of Land—Legality,]—An agreement between the vendor and vendee in a conveyance of land, after setting out the parcels, providing "that any distance which may remain westwardly to J.-street slad in ever be hereafter sold, but left for the common benefit of both parties, and their successors," does not create a servitude in contravention of any rule of law, but creates an equity binding ou the successor in estate of the vendor, so that the person who has the estate of the original vendee is entitled to come into a court of equity for its assistance to remove a structure placed on such land. McLewa v. McKay, L. R. 5 P. C. 327; 29 L. T. 352; 21 W. R. 798.

User of Roads. ] -- By a deed of partition of a freehold estate between S. and P., portions of the estates, which were laid out for roads, were conveyed to S. in fee, and he covenanted with P., his heirs and assigns, that P., his heirs and assigns. and all owners and occupiers for the time being of all or any parts of the lands limited to P., and of the house to be built thereon, should at all times for ever thereafter have right of passage over the roads, which was given in the most ample terms, and also the full use and enjoyment of the roads in as full, free, complete, and absolute manner to all intents and purposes whatsoever as if they were public roads. Thirty years afterwards the occupiers of houses on these lands of P. applied to a gas company to supply them with gas, and the company proceeded to lay down pipes for the purpose in the above roads. It was admitted under the company's act this would have been lawful if the roads had been public roads. The devisees of S. filed a bill in equity to restrain the company from interfering with the roads. The Master of the Rolls having dismissed the bill:—Held, that the bill had rightly been dismissed, for that the covenant cutifled the occupiers to the same use of the roads for the purpose of obtaining gas as if they had been public roads. Selby v. Crystal Palace Gus Co., 4 De G. F. & J. 246; 31 L. J., Ch. 595; 10 W. R. 636.

Right of Repair vested in Owner of Dominant Tenement. ]-By an indenture executed by both parties, A. conveyed to B. in fee land, "subject, nevertheless, to the joint ownership and right to the use by A. and the owners and occupiers for the time being of certain adjoining land as then enjoyed by him or them, but no further or otherwise, of the drain running through or laid in the land conveyed and the course and direction of which was delineated on a plan in the margin of the deed, and subject to the right of A, and the occupiers, &c., at all reasonable times to enter upon the land thereby conveyed for the purpose of renairing the drain and laying or replacing pipes therein." A local board of health, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 49, after the conveyance, constructed a new sewer (in lien of the old one, into which the drain discharged the sewerage from A, and B,'s premises), at a lower depth : and A. thereupon lowered the drain between two and three feet and put fresh pipes (but in the course of the old drain), in order to adapt it to the new sewer. B. having brought an action of trespass :-Held, that the effect of the deed executed by both parties was either to create a tenancy in common in the drain between them or only an easement in A., but that, in either view, A. had done no more than he had the right to do. Finlinson v. Porter, 44 L. J., Q. B. 56; L. R. 10 Q. B. 188; 32 L. T. 391; 23 W. R. 315.

User of Easement,]—When an easement be land has been granted, the use of that easement will be restricted to a reasonable use for the purpose of the land in the condition in which it was when the grant was made. Wood v. Saunders, L. R. 10 Ch. 582, Affirming 44 L. J., Ch. 514; 32 L. T. 803; 23 W. R. 514.

A lease contained a demise of a house and grounds, together with the free passage and running of water and soil in and to the existing cesspool, and in and through all the drains then constructed or thereafter to be constructed through the adjoining property of the lessor. The cesspool was on such adjoining property. The lease also contained a stipulation against the culargement of the house or the erection of new buildings, without the consent of the lessor. The lessee subsequently purchased the reversion, the conveyance of which contained a similar grant of the right of drainage, and shortly afterwards considerably cularged the house :- Held, that the right of drainage given by the lease had reference to the house in its then existing state, and could not be extended so as to allow the whole of the drainage from the enlarged house to flow into the cesspool, Ib.

Countermandable or Revocable, ]—If a party seiscal of land grants to another by parol an easement therein, the grant is countermandable at any time, so long as the licence remains exceed tory on the part of the grantee; if it is executed, and the grantee has incurred any expense thereby, it is otherwise. Wilkis v. Harrison, 4 M. & W. 538; 8 L. J., Ex. 44; 2 Jur. 1019. If a party seised of land grants to another by

If a party seised of land grants to another by parol an easement therein, and subsequently disposes of the land itself to a third person, the right to the easement is instantly put an end to, and the grantee, by exercising the same, will render himself liable to an action at the suit of the purchaser. Ib.

In order to make the grantee a wrongdoer in the above ease, he is not entitled to notice from soil, as that is a fact which he is obliged to know at his peril. Ih.

A verbal licence is not sufficient to confer an easement of having a drain in the land of another to convey water, and such licence may be revoked, though it has been acted upon. Cocker v. Cowper, I C. M. & R. 418; 5 Tyr. 103.

5. ABANDONMENT, SUSPENSION, OR EX-TINGUISHMENT OF.

Non-user. ]-Whether mere non-user of a right amounts to an abandonment of the right will depend upon the circumstances which caused the non-user. Ward v. Ward, 7 Ex. 838; 21 L. J., Ex. 334.

Mere non-user for less than twenty years of a privilege or of an easement to discharge foul dye water into a stream is not in itself a proof of abandonment, which is a conclusion to be which the lying by, and permitting others to incur expense in preparing to do that which, if continued uninterruptedly for twenty years, would destroy the easement, is a fact of great importance, Crossley v. Lightowler, L. R. 3 Eq.

- Acquisition of Adverse Rights.] - Actual disuser of an easement for twenty years, during which others have acquired adverse rights, destroys the right to the easement. Where there is a prescriptive right to a riparian casement, the user which originated the right must also be its measure, and the easement cannot be enlarged to the prejudice of any other person. S. C., on appeal, 36 L. J., Ch. 584; L. R. 2 Ch. 478; 15 W. R. 801.

Time of-Evidence. - Where, on the trial of an indictment for driving a carriage along and thereby obstructing a public footway through a narrow lane, the question was, whether the defendant's private right of carriage way, pre-ceding the public user and inconsistent therewith, had been released or abandoned, and the jury was directed that no interruption by the public for a less period than twenty years could destroy the private right, a new trial for mis-direction was granted, after verdict for the defendant. Reg. v. Chorley, 12 Q. B. 515.

In such a case (no actual interruption for twenty years being proved), it is not so much the duration of the cesser to use the private easement, as the nature of the act done by the grantee of such easement, or of the adverse act acquiesced in by him, and the intention in him which either the one or the other indicates, that is material for the consideration of the jury. Ib.

Semble, if an easement is disused for a time sufficient to bar the right of resumption as against parties acting on the assumption of abandonment, unless there are some acts on such assumption, and unless other persons have expended money on the faith of the right having been abandoned, the right continues, and is merely suspended, and may be resumed. Cook v. Bath Corporation, 18 L. T. 123.

Unity of Possession. |-- Unity of possession has the effect of suspending an easement, but does not extinguish a prescription. Canham v. Fish, 1 Price's P. C. 148.

the purchaser of the change of ownership in the | twenty (or forty) years next before the commencement of the snit within 2 & 3 Will, 4, c, 71. means a continuous enjoyment as of right, for twenty (or forty) years next before the com-mencement of the suit, of the easement as an easement, without interruption acquiesced in for a year, and such right is defeated by unity of possession during all or part of the period of enjoyment, though such unity of possession has its inception after the completion of the twenty (or forty) years. Battishill v. Revd, 18 C. B. 696; 25 L. J., C. P. 290.

An easement is suspended as long as the same person having a term of years in the land a qua, and a fee-simple in the land in qua, is in posses sion of both; but it revives on a cessation of the unity of possession, though the change of possession is not accompanied with an alienation of the whole of either of the estates. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 C. M. & R. 34; 1 Gale, 61; 5 Tyr. 804; 4 L. J., Ex. 179.

In 1796, S. was seised in fee of a farm and also of an estate for life in a moor. In 1822, S, and the tenant in remainder joined in a couvevance of the moor to C, in fee, that he might be tenant to the precipe for the purpose of suffering a recovery in order to create a mort-gage term, but no recovery was suffered. In 1827, S. became bankrupt, and by subsequent conveyances his interest in the moor vested in conveyances his interest in the moor vested in the defendant, and his interest in the farm vested in the plaintiff. S. always occupied the farm by his tenants, who had enjoyed without interruption the right of depasturing their cattle on the moor. In 1856, the defendant distrained the plaintiff's cattle, damage feasant, when the plaintiff claimed the right of common by enjoyment as of right, for the respective periods of sixty and thirty years mentioned in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c, 71:—Held, first, that there was no unity of seisin to extinguish the easement or prevent its existence. Warburton v. Parke, 2 H. & N. 64; 26 L. J., Ex. 298.

Held, secondly, that the title to the tenements. was such that there could not, in point of law, have been an enjoyment of the right of common for the period of sixty years as of right; for S-being owner in fee of the farm, and also tenant for life and occupier of the common, the rights of the tenants of the farm over the common were derived from him, and as he could not have an enjoyment as of a right against himself within the meaning of the statute, so neither could his tenants. Th.

To an action of trespass on land, the defendant pleaded, that for twenty, thirty, forty, and sixty years, he and the occupiers of a mill had (as an easement) gone on the land to repair the banks of a stream which flowed to the mill. It appeared that within forty years B. had been lessee of the mill under one landlord and of the land under another :- Held, that this was such a unity of possession as prevented his having an easement on the land. Clay v. Thachrah or Shackeray, 9 Car. & P. 47; 2 M. & Rob. 244.

Held, also, that this unity of possession need not be specially replied; and that, without a special replication under the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s, 5, the lease of the land to B. and letters. written by B. while lessee of the mill, and before he became lessee of the land, were receivable in evidence. Ib.

Enjoyment as of Right.]-Held, also, The enjoyment of an easement as of right for that B,'s lease of the land having expired more than thirty years ago, the acts of the occupiers ! time, without any leave asked by them, or any notice from the other side of any adverse claim, must be taken to be done as a right. Ib.

The enjoyment of an easement of right for twenty years next before the commencement of the suit, within 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, means a continuous enjoyment as of right, for the twenty years next before the commencement of the suit, of the easement as an easement, without interruption, acquiesced in for a year. It is therefore defeated by unity of possession during all or part of the twenty years; and such unity of possession need not be specially replied under the 5th section. Olivy v. Gardiner, 4 M. & W. 496; 1 H. & H. 381; 8 L. J., Ex. 102,

- Severance on Sale. - When the owner of two tenements sells and conveys one for an absolute estate therein, he puts an end by contract to any relation which he had himself created between the tenement so sold and the adjoining tenement, and discharges the tenement so sold from any burthen imposed upon it during his joint occupation ; and the condition of such tenement is thenceforth determined by the contract of alienation, and not by the previous user of the vendor during such joint ownership. Suffield v. Brown, 4 De G. J. & S. 185; 3 N. R. 340; 33 L. J., Ch. 249; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 111; 9 L. T. 627; 12 W. R. 856.

Abolition of Servient Tenement.]-An easement to take water to fill a canal ceases when the canal no longer exists. National Guaranteed Manure Co. v. Donald, 4 H. & N. 8; 28 L. J., Ex. 185.

Award by Inclosure Commissioners. ]-To an action for entering a close the defendant justified under a custom for the inhabitants of a parish to take water from a well in the plaintiff's close, and proved a continuous use of the well by the inhabitants. It was also proved that, in 1809, the close was allotted to the plaintiff under an inclosure act, which incorporated the 41 Geo. 3. c. 109, s. 10 of which empowers the commissioners to set out roads, ways, and watering places; and by s. 11, all ways which are not so set out are to be extinguished. Sect. 14 directs that the allotments are to be in lien of all rights of common and all other rights to which the allottees were entitled, and enacts that, after making the award, all rights of common, and all rights whatsoever intended by the local act to be extinguished, are to cease, Neither the local act nor the award contained any reference to the well, or to any way to it, but the latter did set out certain watering places and ways to them : -Held, that the award and act had not the effect of extinguishing the well, either directly or indirectly, by reason of the way to it being but an end to, and that the right claimed was therefore proved. Race v. Ward, 7 El. & Bl. 384; 26 L. J., Q. B. 133; 3 Jnr. (N.S). 512; 5 W. R. 288.

Variation of Rights. |-- When it is sought to establish a right to an easement by user, and it appears that the user has varied, it is for the jury to say whether the user has been commensurate with the right claimed. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 C. M. & R. 34; I Gale, 61; 5 Tyr. 804; 4 L. J., the plaintiff, and digging for and carrying away Ex. 179.

Though a party, having an easement of eavesof the mill in repairing the banks ever since that droppings from a thatch resting on a wall, increases the height of the wall and the projection of the thatch, he may maintain an action against a neighbour who does an act which not only prevents the enjoyment of the extended easement. but which would also interrupt it if existing within its proper limits. Ib.

6. PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE.

Entirety of Rights.]—All prescriptions are in their nature entire, and when they are pleaded, the adverse party cannot deny a part only, but must either demur to or traverse the whole,

Morewood v. Wood, 4 Term Rep. 157; 2 R. R. 349. Morewood v. Wood, 4 Term Rep. 157; 2 R. R. 349. A party in pleading may prescribe for less than he is entitled to claim. Teuchesbury Balliffs v. Bricknell, 1 Taunt. 142; 11 R. R. 537.

A prescription to enter and dig for minerals, making compensation, is an entire prescription, and will not support the affirmative of an issue taken upon a plea justifying under a prescription to enter and dig for minerals, omitting the qualification as to making compensation. Paddock v. Furrester, 3 Man. & G. 903; 3 Scott (N.R.) 715; 1 D. (N.S.) 527; 11 L. J., C. P. 107.

But in a plea stating such prescription correctly, it is not necessary to allege that compensation has been made or tendered. Ib.

In an action by a reversioner for widening a channel or watercourse in a close in the occupation of his tenant, the defendant pleaded a prescriptive right, enjoyed for twenty years and upwards, as of right, and without interruption, by the occupiers of a certain close, to a watercourse, and also a right to enter for the purpose of cleansing and souring the same, when necessary, as appurtenant to the said close. The replication traversed the right to the water course, and the right to enter for the purpose of eleansing and scouring :-Held, that the right to the watercourse, and the right to scour and cleanse, constituted one entire right, and consequently that such right was properly put in issue in its entirety. Peter v. Daniel, 5 C. B. 568; 5 D. & L. 501; 17 L. J., C. P. 177; 12 Jur.

Pleading Specially.]—Whoever pleads an easement must plead it specially. Hawkins v. Wallis, 2 Wils. 173.

In an action for obstructing the plaintiff in the enjoyment of an easement, he must show, in his declaration, that the obstruction was in the place wherein the plaintiff is entitled. Thus, when a declaration alleged a right to take water at a cistern, and complained that the defendant wrongfully locked up a door leading to it, and thereby prevented the plaintiff from using the cistern, issue having been taken on the right to take water, judgment was arrested after verdict for the plaintiff, because non constat that he had any right to go through the doorway in question, although a verdict found that he had a right to take water. Tehbutt v. Selby, 6 A. & E. 786; 1 N. & P. 710; W. W. & D. 312; 6 L. J., K. B. 175; 1 Jur. 309.

Right Claimed must not be Unlimited. ] - In trespass for breaking and entering the close of the elay, the defendant justified as owner of a brick-kiln, and pleaded that he and all the occupiers thereof for thirty years had enjoyed, as of right, and without interruption, a right to dig, take and earry away from the close so much clay as was at any time required by him and thom for making bricks at the brick-kiln, in every year and at all times of the year.—Held, that the claim was bad. Clayton v. Carby, 14 L. J., Q. B. 364.

Amendments. ]-Where a party who is entitled to a limited right excreises it in excess, so as to cause a misance, or create a right of action cutire in its nature (as where a window or a drain is enlarged or applied to other purposes than originally authorised), as the entire muisance may be abated, an action for an obstruction of the original right of easement cannot be maintained, until its exercise has been reduced within its original limits; and if an action is brought for the obstruction, in which the right is alleged according to its enlarged exercise, and the declaration is not supported by the proof, on a traverse of the right as laid, an amendment will not be allowed, as the effect would be to evade, and not to determine the question really in controversy between the parties. Cuwhwell v. Russell, 26 L. J., Ex. 34.

Action for nuisunce. Plea, prescription for an casement. The plea must distinctly show that the right elaimed is an easement, otherwise the plea is bad, and, if not, the defect is not cured by vertice. Flight v. Themas, 2 P. & D. 531; 10 A. & E. 590; 7 D. P. C. 741; S. L. J., Q. B. 337; 3. Jur. 899.

Divisible Issues.]—Under a canal act, millowners within a specified distance of the canal were entitled to use the water for the purpose of condensing the steam used for working their engines. In an action against such a mill-owner. the declaration charged that he abstracted more water than was sufficient to supply the engine with cold water for the purpose of condensing the steam, and that he applied the water to other and different purposes than condensing steam. The plea alleged an user by him, as occupier of the mill, of the water as of right and without interruption for twenty years for other purposes than condensing steam, to wit, for the purpose of supplying the boiler of the engine, and of generating steam for working the engine, and of supplying a certain cistern, to wit, a cistern on the roof of a certain engine-house. The evidence was, that he was the occupier of two mills, adjoining to each other and occupied together. each having a separate steam-engine. The old mill was creeted in 1823, since which time he had used the water from the canal for twenty years for the purposes mentioned in the plea in respect of the old mill. The new mill was built in 1829, and the water had been used for less than twenty years in respect of that mill. There was no cistern on the roof of any enginehouse, but there were various cisterns in and about the engine-house in the old mill through which the water passed. The jury found that the two buildings formed one mill, and that there had been a twenty years use as of right by the defendants:—Held, that the issue was divisible, and that he was entitled to have the verdict entered for him, except as to the supplying a cistern on the roof of the enginehouse, as to which the plaintiff was entitled to entera verdict with nominal damages. Rockdale Canal Co. v. Radeliffe, 18 Q. B. 287; 21 L. J., Q. B. 297; 16 Jur. 1111.

Held, also, that the plea was bad, as the company had no right to grant the water for other purposes than for condensing steum, and that no such right could consequently be inferred from a twenty years' user by the defendant. Ih.

Evidence.)—Where rights are claimed by prescription, the jury ought to be directed, that from modern wasque they are warranted in presuming that the right claimed is immemorial, unless they are satisfied of the contrary by other evidence. Jenkins v. Harrey, 1 C. M. & R. 877; 1 Gule, 23; 5 Tyr. 326; 5 L. J., Ex. 17. And see S. C., 2 C. M. & R. 888.

— Time of User.]—A plea of prescription is supported if the party proves a right more extensive than that pleaded; but the right proved must be of such a nature that it may comprehend the right pleaded. Basey. Appleyeard, 8 N. & P. 257; 8 A. & E. 161; 1 W. W. & H. 208; 7 L. J., Q. B. 145; 2 Jun. 872.

A plea of forty or twenty years' user is not smparted by proof of user from a period of suffixy years before the commonement of the action down to within four years of it; and if the evidence goes no further there is no case for the jury, Parke v, Mitchell, 11 A. & E. 788; 2. P. 6.1 6.5, 9.1. I. O. 8. 194. 4. Jury 117.

3 P. & D. 655; 9 L. J., Q. B. 194; 4 Jur. 915.

In plea of forty years' user, it is sufficient to allege this neer to have been before the commencement of the suit; it is not necessary to allege it to have been before the time, when, &c. Wright v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 77; 1 Tyv. & G. 375; 1 Gale, 410; 5 L. J. Ex. 107.

To such a pilea, a replication of a life estate still existing is no answer, unless it shows that the reversion expectant on such estate is in the plantiff. Th.

plaintiff. Ih.

A plea alleging an easement enjoyed for twenty years must state, in the words of s, 5, that the enjoyment was had as of right. Halford v. Hashiwan, 5 Q. B. 584; D. M. 473.

Under 2 & 3 Will. 4. c 71, where a defendant justifies in trespass under a profit à prendre as enjoyed thirty years. 8 next before the commencement of the sait, "a life estate which has existed during part of that time is to be excluded from the computation. Therefore, where the plaintiff replied to such a plea, that a life estate existed during part of the thirty years, which allegation was traversed by the defendant :—Held, that on this issue the defendant was entitled to succeed, it appearing that the life estate existed during part of the thirty years, but that the defendant enjoyed the right chained for twenty-five years before its commencement, and five years after its termination. Clauton v. Corby, 11 L. J., Q. B. 289 ; 5 Q. B. 415.

Pleas of twenty and forty years' user respectively, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c, 71, are not supported by proof of user for forty years and apwards, before the commencement of the action, to within fourteen months of it. Some act of user must be shown to have been excised in the year in which the action is brought. Lance v. Curpenter, 6 Ex. 825; 20 L. J., Ex. 374; 15 Jur. 883.

— Extent of Rights.)—To an action for polluting a stream, and impregnating it with noxious substances, whereby the plaintiff was unable to drink the water, defendant pleaded an immemorial right to use the water of the stream for the purposes of his trade of a tanner and | fellmonger, and returning it polluted to the stream when so used, and also prescriptive right for twenty and forty years respectively. The plaintiff new assigned that he sued not only for the grievances in the pleas admitted and atdant committed the grievances over and above what the defences justified. At the trial, it appeared that the defendant and his father and grandfather had for a long series of years carried on the business of tanners at the place in question, using the water of the stream as they wanted it; but that, within the last twelve years, the tannery business had been enlarged, and the business (and consequently the pollution of the stream) increased fourfold. Without leaving anything to the jury, the judge ruled that the defendant was entitled to a verdict on all the issues except the first and second :-Held, that, whether the pleas were to be understood as claiming an immemorial or a prescriptive right, not limited to the purposes of the tannery, or the more limited right to use the water for the purposes of the business as carried on more than twenty years ago, the verdict was not warranted by the evidence. Moore v. Webb.

1 C. B. (N.S.) 673.
The plaintiff and the defendant occupied contignous portions of land. For more than forty years, and as far back as living memory went, the occupiers of the plaintiff's land had been in the habit of passing over the defendant's land to a brook which lay on the other side of that land. and of damming up the brook, when necessary, so as to force the water into an old artificial watercourse which ran across the defendant's land to the plaintiff's land. They did this for the purpose of supplying their cattle with water, whenever they wanted the water, except when the owners of the defendant's land used the water, as they did at certain seasons of the year, for irrigation:—Held, that upon this evidence, the jury was warranted in inferring an user, as of right, by the occupiers of the plaintiff's land, of the easement on the defendant's land, and, that for the interruption of such easement, the plaintiff might maintain an action against the defendant. Breston v. Weate, 5 El. & Bl. 986; 25 L. J., Q. B. 115; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 546; 4 W. R. 325.

In an action for cutting lines of the plaintiff, and throwing down the linen thereon hanging, the defendant pleaded that he was possessed of a close, and because the linen was wrongfully in and upon the close he removed it. Replication, that E., being seised in fee of the close and of a messuage with the appurtenances contiguous to it, conveyed to H. the messuage, and all the casements, liberties, privileges, &c., to the message belonging, or therewith then or of late used; that, before and at the time of such conveyance, the tenants and occupiers of the messnage used the easement of fastening ropes to the messnage, and across the close to a wall in the close, in order to hang linen thereon, and of hanging linen thereon to dry, as often as they should have occasion so to do, at their free will and pleasure, and that the plaintiff, being tenant to H. of the messuage, did put up the lineus:—Held, that proof of a privilege for the tenants to lang lines across the yard for the purpose of drying the linen of their own families only, did not support the alleged right.

Drewell v. Towler, 3 B. & Ad. 735; 1 L. J., K. B. 228.

Where a party claims an casement, and proves only a part of his claim, the casement proved constitutes a different casement from the one claimed, and the claimant cannot obtain relief in equity. Felkin v. Herbert, 11 L. T. 173.

— Unity of Possession.]—A plea of enjoyment of a profit à prendre for sixty years is, defeated by showing unity of possession during part of the time, and unity of title is prima facie evidence of unity of possession. This may be shown on a traverse of the plea. Chapton v. Corby, 5, 0, 8, 415; 111, 15, 0, 2, 2, 39.

User short of Thirty Years.]—Although, by 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 6, no presumption in twour of the claim is to be derived from a user short of thirty years, the statute does not take from such shorter user its weight as collateral evidence of a grant. Hunner v. Chanre, 34 L. J., Ch. 413; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 397; 12 L. T. 163; 13 W. B. 556.

B. PRIVATE WAYS.

1. By Grant and Reservation.

a. Particular Description.

Mining Property—"Free and Convenient Way."]—Under the grant of a free and convenient way for the purpose of earrying coals (among other articles), the grantee has a right to lay a frauncd waggon-way. Senhouse v. Christian, 1 Term Rep. 560; 1 R. R. 300.

Under a grant of a way from A. to B. in, through and along a particular way, the grantee is not justified in making a transverse road across the same. Ib.

"Waggon or Cart Road."]—H., being the owner of certain land and the mines thereunder, by indeature conveyed the surface to C; but he excepted and reserved a "waggon or cart road" of the width of eighteen feet, to be at all times, thereafter kept in repair at his own costs and charges:—Held, that these words would not enable H. to lay down a railroad or trauway for the carriage of coals raised from neighbouring-collieries belonging to him. Bidder v. North Suffortshitre Ry, 48 L, J., Q, B, 248; 4 Q, B, D, 413; 4 D, T. S01; 27 W, R, 549—C. A.

"Full and Sufficient"]—By a lease of mines the lessees were authorised to take and use "full and sufficient rail and other ways, paths and passages to and for the said lessees and their agents, servants and workmen, or others," to carry away "all or any of the coal, cannel, slack, iron and ironstone, the produce of the mines thereby domised, or any other mines":

—Hold, that the lessees, by virtue of this clause, might lay down a railway for the carriage of coals raised by them, and that they were not restricted to using the railway for the carriage of coals raised by or through the pits of the mines demised to them by the above-mentioned leases. Ib.

Foot and Horse Way.]—A reservation in a lease of a right of way on foot, and for horses, oxen, earthe and sheep, does not give any right of way to lead manure. Breston v. Hall, 1 G. & D. 207; 1 Q. B. 792; 10 L. J., Q. B. 258; 6 Jur. 340.

Extent of Grant.]—When a private way is granted over a piece of land of stipulated dimensions, the grantee is not entitled to the use of every square inch of the surface of the land; all that the grant confers upon him is a reasonable enjoyment of the land as a road. Clifford v. Houre, 43 L. J., C. P. 225; L. R. 9 C. P. 362; 30 L. T. 465; 22 W. R. 828.

By an indenture of the 17th May, 1872, to which the defendant was a party, A. bought a plot of ground for building a house, and power was given to her to erect as part a portico projecting into a private road upon the west side thereof. By an indenture of the 2nd August, 1872, to which also the defendant was a party, another plot of ground was conveyed to the plaintiff with a right of way over the private road before mentioned, which was to be forty reat paints mentioned, when was no be forty feet wide; and the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff that he had not "been party or privy to anything" whereby the premises granted by him were or might be "impeached, affected or incumbered in title, estate or otherwise howsoever." A. erected a house upon the plot of ground bought by her, and built out a portico upon the west side; the columns of the portico stood in the carriage-way of the private road; the bases of the columns were five feet in width and two feet in depth :- Held, that, by the indenture of the 2nd of August, 1872, the plaintiff was entitled only to the reasonable enjoyment of a right of way over the private road, and not to the use of every square inch of the surface of a road forty feet wide; that the portico did not interfere with the reasonable enjoyment of the road by the plaintiff, that the defendant's covenant had not been infringed, and that he was not liable for breach thereof in an action at the sait of the plaintiff. Ib.

Semble, that if the plaintiff's enjoyment of the right of way over the private road had been interfered with by the portico the defendant would have been, within the meaning of his covenant, party and privy to a thing which impeached, affected and incumbered the grant of the right of way to the plaintiff, who might therefore have maintained an action against the defendant. Ib.

- Over Waste Land. ] A private right of way over waste land, or a line between two points, is not necessarily a right over every part of the land, and the owner of the soil may enclose on each side of it, leaving a convenient way. Hutton v. Hamboro, 2 F. & F. 218, — Way abutting on Road. ]—A. granted to B. land of unequal width, described as abutting on a road on his own soil. It abutted on the broadest part of the road, but in the narrowest part of it a narrow strip of the grantor's land intervened between the road and the premises granted :-Held, that the granter and those granted:—Held, that the grantor and those claiming under him were concluded from preventing the grantec from coming out into the road over this skip of land, Roberts v. Karr., 1 Tanut. 495; 10 k. R. 592.

A grant of a right of "ingress, egress and tegress" is a grant of a right of way from the regress," to and from certain private roads which bounded the close and led to the railway station and on to the public highways :- Held, that the grantee was entitled to pass from the close to the private roads, and thence to the public highways, or in the reverse direction, and was not limited to passing from the close to the railway station, or vice versa. Somerset v. Great Western Ry., 46 L. T. 883.

---- Construction of Deed. ]-A conveyance to the plaintiff granted to him a right of way through the guteway of the vendor (which opened into a close afterwards bought by the defendant) to a wicket-gate to be erected by the plaintiff at a given point into a piece of garden ground, part of the premises purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff built a cart-shed on this piece of garden ground close to the point where the wicket-gate was to be, and claimed a right of carriage-way to it :- Held, that he was not confined to a right of footway, but was entitled to a right of way for all purposes. Watts v. Kelson, 40 L. J., Ch. 126; L. R. 6 Ch. 166; 24 L. T. 209; 19 W. R. 338.

A conveyance of a piece of freehold ground with a messuage thereon, adjoining a covered gateway, "together with the exclusive use of the said gateway," was held to confer not merely a right of way through the gateway, but the use of it for all purposes. Semble, that it passed the ownership of the gateway. Rrilly v. Booth, 44 Ch. D. 12: 62 L. T. 378; 38 W. R. 484.

The defendant was owner in fee of a dwellinghouse, together with a cottage and stable belonging to it, called Roseville, and was also owner in fee of an adjoining farmstead and farm, having a private road which led from a high road to the farm buildings, and passed close to one side of the stable of Roseville. By indenture of the 1st of May, 1860, the defendant demised Roseville to H. for ten years. H. entered on the premises, and built over the stable a hay loft, with two openings towards the private road, having first obtained permission from the defendant to do so, and also permission from him and the then tenant of the farm to use the farm road for the purpose of bringing hay, straw, &c., to the loft, that being the only access to the openings in the loft. H. and the sub-temants occupying Roseville continued during the term to use the road up to May, 1870; at that time the plaintiff agreed to purchase Roseville of the defendant; and by deed of the 2nd of August, 1870, Roseville was conveyed by the defendant to the plaintiff in fee, "together with all . . .

ways and rights of way, . . . casements, and appurtenances to the said dwelling-house, cottage and hereditaments, or any of them appertaining, or with the same or any of them now or heretofore demised, occupied, or enjoyed, or reputed as part or parcel of them, or any of them, or appur-tenant thereto":—Held, that the right to use the farm road for the aforesaid purposes passed to the plaintiff under the above words. Oxley, 44 L. J., Q. B. 210; L. R. 10 Q. B. 360; 33 L. T. 164.

In a lease the demised premises were described as "all that plot of land bounded on the east learness is a ginut of a right of way from the least of lecus a quo to the locus ad queen, and from the least of lecus a quo to the locus ad queen, and from the least of least ad queen forth to any other spot to which is endorsed on these presents," and the lessee the greates may lawfully go, or back to the lecus a quo. By a deed of conveyance from a lands. The site of the new streets was marked rathey company of a close of land the grantee as each in the plan indorsed:—Held, that this was given a right of free "ingress, egress and Semble, if the owner of a house and land makes a formed road over the land for the apparent use of the house, and conveys the house separately from the land, with the ordinary general words, a right of way over the road will pass. Watts v. Kelson, supra.

A right of way was granted by deed as follows: "together with the free liberty, use, benefit and privilege for A., his heirs, tenants and assigns, with other the inhabitants of York-house and with other the inhaditants of lora-noise and grounds of the Terrace-walk, of the Water-gate next the river Thames, he, they, and every of next the river Thames, he they are not applying and proving a property of the control of the them from time to time contributing and paying a ratable share and proportion towards repairing the same, with others who shall have the benefit thereof." In an action by the assignce of A. against a stranger, for obstructing the right:
Held, first, that the plaintiff might properly describe it as a right of way from his house, over a street called Buckingham-street, through and over the Terrace-walk, unto the Water-gate, and over the representation of the water gate, and so back again, the evidence proving his right to use the Terrace-walk at his pleasure. Duncan v. Louch, 6 Q. B. 904; 14 L. J., Q. B. 185; 9 Jur. 346.

Held, also, that the private right of way so granted was not extinguished by the subsequent dedication of Buckingham-street to the public.

A. sold to B. two dwelling-houses, a coach-A. soft to b. two avening-moses, a coach-house and stables, and a field, together with all ways usually held, occupied or enjoyed there-with, with free liberty of ingress, egress and regress for B., or for cattle and carriages, over the carriage road leading to the dwelling-houses and stables. B. afterwards made a gate from the field which abutted upon the carriage road, into the road at an intermediate part thereof, and drove horses and carriages along the road into the field and back again :—Held, that he was liable in trespass, the right of way being a right of way to the dwelling-houses, coach-houses and stables only. Henning v. Burnet, 8 Ex. 187; 22 L. J., Ex. 79.

Defined Way - Limitation of User -Substantial Interference, ]—The plaintiff in 1888 purchased Nos. 1, 2, and 3, H. cottages, and certain land in the rear thereof, which and certain land in the rear alereot, which property was conveyed to him by deed, together with a right of way on foot along the way or passage coloured blue in the plan on the deed, which passage ran from F.-lane along the southside of No. 8.H. cottages, to the above-mentioned land of the plaintiff. This land was at the date of the conveyance, and had ever since been, used as a nursery garden. The passage was for the as a nursery garden. The passage was for the greater part of its length about three feet wide, but grew to a width of about ten feet where it Dut grow to a want or about ten reet where to reached the plaintiff's land, from which a gate about three feet wide opened on to it. The defendant had erected a building, partly on certain adjoining land of his own, and partly on the wider end of the passage, thereby reducing it to a uniform length of about three feet, reducing the what can of the passage, the coy culturing to a uniform length of about three feet, reducing conveyed in fee farm, to other persons, land in the frontage of the plaintiff's land on the passage the manor of H. (adjoining A.), with a like exby some seven feet, and preventing the erection by the plaintiff on his land of any greenhouse or other building which could open on the passage by any door unless it occupied the exact site of by any table arress to complete the state of the Ex. 279.

Held, also, that, under the reservation in the

the proposed new streets to the land demised. | the occupation of the land as a nursery garden, Espley v. Wilkes, 41 L. J., Ex. 241; L. R. 7 Ex. | but gave a right to the reasonable use of the way. and any part of it, for all purposes; that the plaintiffs mode of access to his land was not limited to the gate, but he was entitled to access at whatever point was most convenient to himself; that the defendant's building was a substantial interference with the plaintiff's right of way, and a mandatory injunction for its removal must be granted. Shetchley v. Berger, 69 L. T.

> - Appropriation for Streets.]-A private estate aet enabling tenants for life to grant building leases, empowered the lessors to lay out and appropriate any part of the land authorised to be leased as and for a way, street, square, passage or sewer, or other conveniences for the general improvement of the estate, and the accommodation of the tenants and occupiers : -Held, that exclusive private rights of way over land, so appropriated for a way, might be granted to particular lessees, as such appropriation did not confer a right of user by all the tenants and occupiers. White v. Leeson, 5 H. & N. 53; 29 L. J., Ex. 105; 5 Jur. (N.s.) 1361; 1 L. T. 189; 8 W. R. 137.

- Evidence of User. ] - An indenture of lease demised to K. property, including a yard, together "with the right of way for K., his executors, administrators and assigns, his and their servants, agents and workmen, horses, carts and carriages, from D-street to the yard and workshops as at present by K. enjoyed, which premises respectively are more particularly delineated and described on the plan drawn on the margin of these presents coloured red and green":-Held, both on the construction of the grant, and on the evidence of user, that the right of way was over the whole of the premises coloured green. Knox v. Scnsom, 25 W. R. 864.

Held, also, that where the turning of a carriage or cart is necessary to the convenient enjoyment of the dominant premises such a right of turning over a piece of land may be a part of the right of way to the dominant premises. Ib. The court will not declare a greater right than is necessary to satisfy the right of the plaintiff as claimed. Ib.

- Ways at the date of Grant. ]-By a deed, dated in 1830, the grantor conveyed in fee farm land in the manor of A., in the county of Northumberland, "excepting and reserving out of the grant all mines of coals within the fields and territories of A. aforesaid, together with sufficient way-leave and stay-leave to and from the said mines, with liberty of sinking and digging pit and pits"; with a covenant by the grantees, that they, their heirs and assigns "should give such accustomed recompense for digging and breaking the ground within A. aforesaid, in which any pits should thereafter happen to be sunk and wrought, as formerly had been usually given and allowed there in like cases." By another deed of the same date, the same parties ception, reservation and covenant :- Held that that right was not confined to such ways as were in use at the time of the grant. Dand v. Kingscote, 6 M. & W. 174; 2 Rallw. Cas. 27; 9 L. J., former deed, the coal owner could not carry over sionally used this new way, but more generally A. coals got in H., although part of the same internal field. IL.

— Lawful Jase.]—Where there is an express pant of a private right of way to a particular place, to the unrestricted use of which the grantee of the right of way is entitled, the grant is not to be restricted to access to the land for purposes for which access would know the time of the grant. By an inclosure award a road was set out as a carriage road and drift way from a highway to certain of the enclosed lands. The defendants, a railway company, acquired some of these lands, and built a cattle-pen therom, adjoining their railway, and used the road for that were to be or had been conveyed on their railway, such user being much greater than the user at the time of the grant, which was exclusively for agricultural purposes: —Hald, that this was a lawful user on their part, and that they were not estricted to the new which existed at the time of the grant, Finch v. G. II. Ray, 5 Ex. D. 284; 14. J. P. 84; 28 W. R. 229; 44. J. P. 8.

— Gustomary User.]—A deed reserved to 04, a right of way over a yard "to the stable and loft over the same, and the space or opening under the loft, and now used as a woodhouse," and also the use of the yard "in common with A. and his tenants for the time being, it being the intent that the whole of the yard should lie open and undivided as the same then was, without any other buildings to be erected thereon, and that the yard should be used in common by the occupiers of A.7s and G.'s messanges, in the same manner as the tenants thereof had been accustomed to use the same." G. converted the loft, and the space thereunder, which had been used as a woodhouse, into a cottage—Held, first, that the deed did not justify G. in using the yard after the cottage was built, for that such a user was not the accustomed user which had been reserved. Allan v. Gomme, 3 P. & D. 581; 11 A. & E. 759; J. L. J. Q. B. 258.

Held, secondly, that the reservation of the way in the space or opening, under the loft, and now used as a woodhouse," was to be taken as identifying the locality, and confining the way to a piece of open ground generally, and not specifically to a woodhouse; but that the conversion of the open space to a cottage, was an alteration in substance, and that G, had no right of way to the cottage. Ib.

No Defined Way—Definition by user—Right of Grantor to alter Direction.]—By lease, dated in 1862, the S. milway demised to the plaintiff, for twenty-one years, the space under and within one of the arches supporting their station, together with a right of way for him, his servants, agents and customers, with or without carts and corriages, from the said arch into V-street. At the time of the lease, and for eight years after, the only way by which the plaintiff could get to V-street was by passing over an open space lying in front of the plaintiff's arch and the adjoining arches, in a northerly direction, in front of two arches occupied by other tenants, and then turning east into V-street. The plaintiff used this way exclusively 11 1880. In that year the company made a way into V-street, a liftle to the south of the plaintiff's cards occacontinued to use the old one. In 1882 the company put a fence across the open space, barring the old way used by the plaintiff, but they made gates in this fence and gave the plaintiff keys. The plaintiff continued till 1888 to use the old way through the fence by means of these gates. The right of way granted was in no way defined in the lease or the plan thereon, and had never been paved, set out, or otherwise defined on the land. In December, 1888, the company put new lockson the gates, and claimed to prevent the plaintiff passing through, and to confine him to the way made in 1880. The plaintiff brought this action for an injunction restraining the company from closing the gates or preventing him passing through them.—Held, that the right of way granted by the lease being undefined by the deed, the right to define the line it should take was vested in the company as a grantor, but that the company, by their action in putting up the gates and giving the plaintiff keys, had defined the way and could not afterwards after it, and that the injunction must be granted. Deacon v. S. E. Ry., 61 L. T. 377.

Duration of Grant—Leasehold Interest in Dominant Tenement—Subsequently Acquired Fee, ]—If the owner of land (coloured green on plan) covenants and grants with and to the yearly tenant of adjoining land (coloured green on plan) are a right of way from the "pink" land over the "green" land, and the yearly tenant subsequently acquires the fee of the "pink" land, it is a question of construction of the deed of grant and covenant whether the right of way terminates with the yearly tenancy, or continues to subsist in favour of the covenantee, his helis and assigns, owners of the "pink" land, and where the latter is the true construction a lessee of the assignee of the heirs of the covenantee, where the latter is the true fright of way. **Upmer* v. **Ject**-Ject

Personal Privilege for Life of Grantee.] -A.'s and B.'s lands adjoined each other, A.'s land being on the south and B.'s on the north, and about the middle of the boundary was a gate into B.'s land at the end of a lane or road leading to this gate from the public street, and passing through A.'s land. On the eastern side of B.'s land adjoining the highway, was a house in a ruinous state, which was once, in 1830, a dwellinghouse, and in the centre of B.'s land, equidistant from the gate and the house, and surrounded by From the gate and the noise, and shruamon by a garden, was a separate building, then used as a kitchen for the house. The remainder of B.'s land had been partly and at different times garden, ovohard, grass, &c. The owner of A.'s and B.'s premises, who died in 1830, by his will devised to his nephew, B.'s predecessor, the kitchen and garden. The will then continued as follows:—"I will and direct that my nephew, table Heavisten shall have the wireless or with John Harrison, shall have the privilege or right of a road for loading coals and dung, and other necessary things, through the gate, to the kitchen and garden." This right of a road, which was the lane or road above mentioned, was at that time the only approach to the kitchen and garden. Shortly afterwards the remainder of the premises now occupied by B. came by inheritance into the possession of John Harrison, whereby he had other access to the highway through the ruined | legally appurtenant; or unless it appears from dwelling-house, though the only approach for a horse and cart was through the way in dispute. B., who carried on the business of a coal higgler, used the kitchen as a stable for his horse, and made use of the way with his cart and horse :-Held, that this grant of a right of way was merely a personal privilege for the life of the grantee; for that by the words of the devise merely a life estate in the easement passed, and it was manifestly the intention of the testator that the right should not extend beyond the lifetime of the devisee. Pym v. Harrison, 33 L. T. 796-C. A.

b. General Words.

"All Ways appertaining."]—Where an under-lease described a road demised and the ways granted by the words, "all ways thereunto appertaining," it seems that a right of way over the original lessor's soil would not pass by these words. **Harding v. Witson, 2 B. & C. 100; 3 D. & R. 287; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 238; 26 R. R. 287.

"All Ways used before with."]-In an action for the disturbance of a right of way, leading from a public street through the defendant's premises to a yard at the back of the plaintiff's house, originally forming part of the premises demised by lease to the defendant:—Held, that a grant of "all ways, used or enjoyed before with" the plaintiff's premises, was good, though there, was no express grant of the way in question.

**Kooystra v. Lucas, 1 D. & R. 506; 5 B. & Ald, 830.

"Ways now or heretofore enjoyed"—Way at Date of Grant physically incapable of Use.]—In 1872 the owner of two adjoining pieces of land granted one to the plaintiff and the other to the defendant. The grant to the plaintiff contained the general words, "together with all ways, &c., easements, and appartenances whatsoever to the said tenement and premises hereby granted, or any part thereof, now or heretofore held or enjoyed, or reputed or known as part or parcel thereof, or appurtenant thereto."—Prior to 1852 the occupiers of the two tenements had used in common a formed private road, for the purpose of going to and from their respective tenements to the high road .- There was access to the plaintiff's tenement from the high road without passing over the private road, but the only access to the defendant's tenement was by means of that road. In 1852, by the permission of the owner, the then occupier of the plaintiff's tenement built a wall which entirely separated his tenement from the private road, and from that time down to 1872, and afterwards, with one exception, down to the issue of the writ, the occupiers of the plaintiff's tenement made no use of the private road, but obtained access to the tenement directly from the high road :-Held, that under the circumstances the inference that the word "heretofore" in the grant to the plaintiff was used in its ordinary grammatical meaning was rebutted, and that no right to the use of the private road passed to him. Roe v. Siddons, 22 Q. B. D. 224; 60 L. T. 345; 37 W. R. 228; 53 J. P. 246—C. A.

"All Ways to the Same belonging." ]-Where one seised in fee of premises, and of the soil over which a way, not of necessity, has been used by the occupier of them, grants those premises "with all ways, roads, &c. to the same belonging, or in anywise appertaining," no way will pass, unless the grant itself that the parties meant to use the word in a sense more extended than the legal one. Barlow v. Rhodes, 3 Tyr. 280; 1 C. & M. 439 ; 2 L. J., Ex. 91.

"Right occupied or enjoyed as Parcel or Member" of Tenement granted. - A railway company purchased, under the powers of their act, a piece of land on which was a stable. By the conveyance to the company the premises were granted together with all "rights, members, or appurtenances to the hereditaments belonging or occupied or enjoyed as part, parcel or member The vendor had many years previously made a private road from the highway to the stable over his own land for his own convenience, and had used it ever since; the soil of this road was not conveyed to the company and no express mention of it was made in the con-veyance. The plaintiff refused to allow the company to use the road:—Held, that notwithstanding the unity of possession of the stables standing the unity of possession of the stables and the private road at the date of the conveyance to the company, a right of way passed to the company under the general words in the conveyance. Kay v. Oeley (L. R. 10 Q. B. 360), and Watts v. Kelson (L. R. 6 Ch. 165), followed. Bayley v. G. W. Ry., 26 Ch. D. 494; 51 L. T. 33T—C. A.

The fact of the stable having been purchased by a railway company for the purposes of their undertaking did not preclude them from claiming the right of way so long as they used the premises as a stable ; which they might lawfully do till such time as they were required for the special purposes of the railway, or were sold as superfluous land. Whether the railway company would be entitled to claim the right of way after they had ceased to use the premises as a stable, and had converted them to some purpose connected with the railway, quære. 11

Access "to and from every or any Part of the Parcels"-Intervening Lands of Grantor-Use of one Line of Access.]-Where the right of access to a private right of way over land belonging to the grantor has been granted "to and from every or any part of the parcels". convyed to the grantee, the latter and his suceessors may avail themselves of such right at any point, notwithstanding that only one par-ticular line of access has been made and used during a long period. Cooke v. Ingram, 3 R. 607; 68 L. T. 671.

Implication-Streets not yet formed.]-By a deed of conveyance land was conveyed to the respondent's predecessor in title, "the situation, dimensions, and boundaries whereof are particularly described in the map or plan drawn on larry described in the map of pain drawn on these presents . . . together with all streets, ways, rights, easements, and advantages." The plan showed a piece of land at the intersection of "G. Street" and "M. Street," which were delineated communicating on a level. The land was in fact, at the date of the conveyance, waste building land on the outskirts of a town, and neither of the streets had been made or dedicated to the public. The soil of the intended streets was the property of the vendor. Houses were built on the land fronting M. Street, and both streets were made, and used as streets; but the appellant company afterwards made a branch line passing under G. Street, near the property in mineral field. Ib.

____Lawful User.]—Where there is an express grant of a private right of way to a particular place, to the unrestricted use of which the grantee of the right of way is entitled, the grant is not to be restricted to access to the land for purposes for which access would be required at the time of the grant. By an inclosure award a road was set out as a carriage road and drift way from a highway to certain of the enclosed lands. The defendants, a milway company, acquired some of these lands, and built a cattle-pen thereon, adjoining their railway, and used the road for the passage to and from the highway of cattle that were to be or had been conveyed on their railway. such user being much greater than the user at the time of the grant, which was exclusively for agricultural purposes:—Held, that this was a lawful user on their part, and that they were not manual user on mear part, and that they were not restricted to the user which existed at the time of the grant. Finch v. G. W. Ry., 5 Ex. D. 254; 41 L. T. 731; 28 W. R. 229; 44 J. P. 8.

— Customary User.]—A deed reserved to (t, a right of way over a yard "to the stable and loft over the same, and the space or opening under the loft, and now used as a woodhouse," and also the use of the yard "in common with A. and his tenants for the time being, it being the intent that the whole of the vard should lie open and undivided as the same then was, without any other buildings to be creeted thereon, and that the yard should be used in common by the occupiers of A,'s and G,'s messuages, in the same manner as the tenants thereof had been accus-tomed to use the same." G. converted the loft, and the space thereunder, which had been used as a woodhouse, into a cottage:—Held, first, that the deed did not justify G, in using the yard after the cottage was built, for that such a user was not the accustomed user which had been reserved. Allan v. Gomme, 3 P. & D. 581; 11 A. & E. 759; 9 L. J., Q. B. 258.

Held, secondly, that the reservation of the way " to the space or opening under the loft, and now used as a woodhonse," was to be taken as identifying the locality, and confining the way to a piece of open ground generally, and not specifithe open space to a cottage was an alteration in substance, and that G. bad no right of way to the cottage. In 1882 the company put a fence across the open space, barring the old way used by the plaintiff, but they made gates in this fence and gave the plaintiff keys. The plaintiff continued till 1888 to use the old way through the fence by means of these gates. The right of way granted was in no way defined in the lease or the plan thereon, and had never been payed, set out, or otherwise defined on the land. In December, 1888, the company put new locks on the gates, and claimed to prevent the plaintiff passing through, and to confine him to the way made in 1880. The plaintiff brought this action for an injunction restraining the company from closing the gates or preventing him passing through them:—Held, that the right of way granted by the lease being undefined by the deed, the right to define the line it should take was vested in the company as a grantor, but that the company, by their action in putting up the gates and giving the plaintiff keys, had defined the way and could not afterwards alter it, and that the injunction must be granted. This right of a road, which was the lane or road above mentioned, was at that time the only approach to the kitchen and garden. Shortly afterwards the remainder of the premises now occupied by B. came by inheritance into the possession of John Harrison, whereby he had other access to the highway through the ruined | legally appurtenant; or unless it appears from dwelling-house, though the only approach for a horse and cart was through the way in dispute. B., who carried on the business of a coal higgler, used the kitchen as a stable for his horse, and made use of the way with his cart and horse :-Held, that this grant of a right of way was merely a personal privilege for the life of the grantee; for that by the words of the devise merely a life estate in the easement passed, and it was manifestly the intention of the testator that the right should not extend beyond the lifetime of the devisee. Pym v. Harrison, 33 L. T. 796-C. A.

b. General Words.

"All Ways appertaining."]—Where an under-lease described a road demised and the ways granted by the words, "all ways thereunto appertaining," it seems that a right of way over the original lessor's soil would not pass by these words. Harding v. Wilson, 2 B. & C. 100; 3 D. & R. 287; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 238; 26 R. R. 287.

"All Ways used before with." ]-In an action for the disturbance of a right of way, leading from a public street through the defendant's premises to a yard at the back of the plaintiff's house, originally forming part of the premises demised by lease to the defendant :—Held, that a grant of "all ways, used or enjoyed before with" the plaintiff's premises, was good, though there, was no express grant of the way in question. Kooystra v. Lucas, 1 D. & R. 506; 5 B. & Ald. 830.

"Ways now or heretofore enjoyed "-Way at Date of Grant physically incapable of Use. |- In 1872 the owner of two adjoining pieces of land granted one to the plaintiff and the other to the defendant. The grant to the plaintiff contained the general words, "together with all ways, &c., easements, and appurtenances whatsoever to the said tenement and premises hereby granted, or any part thereof, now or heretofore held or enjoyed, or reputed or known as part or parcel thereof, or appurtenant thereto."—Prior to 1852 the occupiers of the two tenements had used in common a formed private road, for the purpose of going to and from their respective tenements to the high road .- There was access to the plaintiff's tenement from the high road without passing over the private road, but the only access to the defendant's tenement was by means of that road. In 1852, by the permission of the owner, the then occupier of the plaintiff's tenement built a wall which entirely separated his tenement from the private road, and from that time down to 1872, and afterwards, with one exception, down to the issue of the writ, the occupiers of the plaintiff's tenement made no use of the private road, but obtained access to the tenement directly from the high road :- Held, that under the circumstances the inference that the word "heretofore" in the grant to the plaintiff was used in its ordinary grammatical meaning was rebutted, and that no right to the use of the private road passed to him. Roev. Siddons, 22 Q. B. D. 224; 60 L. T. 345; 37 W. R. 228; 53 J. P. 246—C. A.

"All Ways to the Same belonging." - Where one seised in fee of premises, and of the soil over which a way, not of necessity, has been used by the occupier of them, grants those premises "with all ways, roads, &c. to the same belonging, or in anywise appertaining," no way will pass, unless line passing under G. Street, near the property in the grant itself that the parties meant to use the word in a sense more extended than the legal one. Barlow v. Rhodes, 3 Tyr. 280; 1 C. & M. 439 : 2 L. J., Ex. 91.

"Right occupied or enjoyed as Parcel or Member" of Tenement granted. - A railway company purchased, under the powers of their act, a piece of land on which was a stable. By the conveyance to the company the premises were granted together with all "rights, members, or appurtenances to the hereditaments belonging or occupied or enjoyed as part, parcel or member thereof." The vendor had many years previously made a private road from the highway to the stable over his own land for his own convenience, and had used it ever since; the soil of this road was not conveyed to the company and no express mention of it was made in the conveyance. The plaintiff refused to allow the company to use the road :-Held, that notwithstanding the unity of possession of the stables and the private road at the date of the convey-ance to the company, a right of way passed to the company under the general words in the conveyance. Kay v. Ozley (L. R. 10 Q. B. 360), and Witts v. Kelson (L. R. 6 Ch. 166), followed. Bayley v. G. W. Ry., 26 Ch. D. 434; 51 L. T. 337—C. A.

The fact of the stable having been purchased by a railway company for the purposes of their undertaking did not preclude them from claiming the right of way so long as they used the premises as a stable; which they might lawfully do till such time as they were required for the special purposes of the railway, or were sold as. superfluous land. Whether the railway company would be entitled to claim the right of way after they had ceased to use the premises as a stable, and had converted them to some purpose connected with the railway, quære. Ib

Access "to and from every or any Part of the Parcels"-Intervening Lands of Grantor-Use of one Line of Access.]-Where the right of of one Line of Access, —Where the right of access to a private right of way over land belonging to the grantor has been granted "to and from every or any part of the parcele" convyed to the grantee, the latter and his successors may avail themselves of such right at any point, notwithstanding that only one particular line of access has been made and used during a long period. Cooke v. Ingram, 3 R. 607: 68 L. T. 671.

Implication-Streets not yet formed. ]deed of conveyance land was conveyed to the respondent's predecessor in title, "the situation. dimensions, and boundaries whereof are particularly described in the map or plan drawn on these presents ... together with all streets, ways, rights, easements, and advantages." The plan showed a piece of land at the intersection of "G. Street" and "M. Street," which were delineated communicating on a level. The land was in fact, at the date of the conveyance, waste building land on the outskirts of a town, and neither of the streets had been made or dedicated to the public. The soil of the intended streets was the property of the vendor. Houses were built on the land fronting M. Street, and both streets were made, and used as streets; but the appellant company afterwards made a branch question, and thereby altered the level of that | street, and cut off the access for horses and vehicles from M. Street into G. Street; a means of access for foot-passengers remained :-Held that the conveyance granted to the purchaser a right of way from M. Street into G. Street, and that the alteration of levels had "injuriously affected" the land so as to entitle the respondents to compensation. Furness Ry. v. Cumberland Co-operative Building Society, 52 L. T. 144; 49 J. P. 292—H. L. (E.)

"All other Liberties, &c., needful to." -A. granted to B, his heirs, and assigns, occupiers of houses abutting on a piece of land about eleven feet wide, which divided those houses from a house then belonging to A., the right of using the piece of land as a foot or a carriage way; and gave him "all other liberties, powers, and authori-ties, incident or appurtenant, needful or necessary, to the use, occupation or enjoyment of the road, way, or passage ":-Held, that under these road, way, or passage":—Held, that under these words B. had a right to put down a flagstone in this piece of land in front of a door opened by him out of his house into this piece of land. Gerrard v. Cooke, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 109.

"Close and Appurtenances."]-A., by deed, granted to S. close A., together with all ways, paths, passages, particularly the right and privi-lege to and for the owners and occupiers for the time being of close A., and all persons having occasion to resort thereto, of passing and repassing for all purposes, over a road in close B. :-Held, first, that the grant conferred on S. a right to use the road for purposes unconnected with the enjoyment of close A. Ackreyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 164; 19 L. J., C. P. 315; 14 Jur. 1047.

Held, secondly, that such a right being nucon-nected with the enjoyment or occupation of close A. could not be annexed to it, so as to pass by a conveyance of "close A. and the appurtenances" from S. to the occupier. Ib.

"Appurtenances." ]-The plaintiff and defendant were tenants under the same landlord of adjoining farms near the sea-coast, to which a highway ran through the defeudant's farm; the plaintiff's farm communicated with the highway by a private road, which joined the highway at A. From a point on the plaintiff's farm and on the private road, an ancient lane ran to a spot on the highway nearer than A. to the sea-coast; this lane was not only the nearest way from the plaintiff's farm to the sea-coast, way from the planneds tarm to the sca-cosso, but was also level, whereas the private road was steep and hilly. The lane, which was a formed roadway bounded on either side by tarf banks roadway bounded on either side by turn banks and hedges, ran wholly through the defendant's land, except for a few yards where it started from the private road on the plaintiff's farm, but it had no communication on either side with the defendant's land, and was only open to the defendant's access at the point where it joined the highway; it had been used for many years by the plaintiff, and had been from time to time repaired by him. Prior to 1873 the plaintiff and defendant were tenants from year to year of their respective farms; in that year the landlord granted to the defendant a lease of his farm, which contained no reference to the lane, or to its user by the plaintiff; but the soil of the lane was admittedly included in the admeasurements all houses, buildings, and appurtenances thereto belonging," in which no specific mention was made of the lane or of any right of way over it. The defendant having interfered with the plaintiff's user of the lane :- Held, that the lease to the defendant did not amount to a demise of the soil of the lane free from the plaintiff's right of way, inasmuch as the lessor, not being in possession at the date of the lease, could not make such a demise without derogating from the grant to the plaintiff under which his then existing tenancy was constituted; that there was an implied reservation of the right of way out of the defendant's lense; and that the right of way over the lane passed to the plaintiff by the lease of 1878 under the word "appurtenances." Thomas v. Oven, 57 L. J., Q. B. 198; 20 Q. B. D. 225; 58 L. T. 162; 36 W. R. 440; 52 J. P. 516 -C. A.

By deed of partition, two estates formerly distinct, but which had become vested in coparceners, were conveyed to a trustee, together with all ways, paths, passages, easements, &c., to the said messuages, &c., belonging, appertaining or therewith usually held and occupied or enjoyed, to have and to hold the said messuages, &c., with the appartenances as to one estate, to the use of A. in fee, and as to the other to the use of himself in fee, to become tenant of the pracipe in a recovery :-Held, that, on this deed, there was sufficient evidence of an intention that a way which had been usually enjoyed by the occupier of the one estate over the other, and which was used up to the time of the deed of partition, should pass to the uses limited as to the other estate under the word appurtenances, and that as the re-lessee to uses as to the one property took no estate, he had not such a seisin of the soil of the two as should extinguish the right of way. James v. Plant, 4 A. & E. 749; 6 N. & M. 282; 6 L. J., Ex. 260—Ex. Ch.

Reference to Maps and Plans. ]-A company and E. each purchased lands of W., which were separated by a road, over which a right of way was reserved to each (the freehold remaining in W.) with a joint obligation to repair. In the conveyance to the company, the land purchased by them was described as containing thirty-one acres or thereabouts, "which, with the abuttals and boundaries thereof, were more particularly described in the map or plan thereof affixed to and forming part of the conveyance, together with full and free liberty, licence and authority for the company, their successors and assigns and tenants, and all persons coming to or going from the same lands and hereditaments or any part thereof, to use and enjoy, with horses, carts, and carriages, or on foot, jointly or in common with others, the person or persons for the time being entitled to the like liberties, licences and authorities, the roads or ways leading to and from the same lands and hereditaments, as the same roads or ways are described in the said map or plan." At the time of the conveyance the land so purchased by the company was separated from the road by a hedge, in which were two gates, one at the upper, the other at the lower end of the road. The company removed the hedge, and built a wall with two gates thereon, both at the same distance from the spot where the old gates had stood. E. obstructed the access to these new gates by excavating the road to the depth of between four and five feet;—Held, that he was of the defendant's farm. In 1878 the landlord between four and five feet :—Held, that he was granted to the plaintiff a lease of his farm "and liable to an action at the suit of the company; altering the position of the gates or not, the company were still entitled to the uninterrupted use of the way as granted to them. South Metropolitan Cometery Co. v. Eden, 16 C. B. 42.

P., owner in fee of an estate called "the Lyde Field Estate," having sunk a shaft for working coals theremuler, staked and set out a road across the Lyde Field estate from a highway on the west to the colliery, and to the east to another highway. The road from the west to the colliery being formed, but the remainder to the east being only staked out, P. in 1832 agreed with A. for the sale to him of a piece of land which was described in the conveyance (not executed until the 1st of December, 1840) as being "bounded on the north by the road leading to the said Purser's colliery," "together with the free use and enjoyment by A., his heirs, appointees, tenants, and assigns, of the abovementioned road leading to the colliery at all times, and on all occasions, he and they contributing a proportionate part of the expense of keeping such road in repair." In 1846, A. conveyed this piece of land, together with the right of way, to W.:—Held that the deed of 1840 conveyed to A. and his assigns the right to use the road across the Lyde Field estate to the east as well as to the west, though part of it was only staked out at the time of sale. Wood v. Stourbridge Ry., 16 C. B. (N.S.) 222.

In December, 1854, P. conveyed another piece of land to W., which was described in the conveyance as "bounded on the north by a road laid out by P. across the Lyde Field estate, from a road leading from the Lyde waste into the road leading from Dudley to Cradley, together with the free use and enjoyment by the grantees, their heirs, appointees, tenants and assigns, of the above-mentioned road leading across the Lyde Field estate at all times and on all occasions, on contributing a proportionate part of the expense of keeping it in repair." At the date of this conveyance, the road across the Lyde Field estate had been completely formed throughout its whole length, but a chain or a bar had been placed by P. across the road to the east of W.'s premises and the right to use that part of the road was occasionally disputed by P.:—Held, that, under the deed of December, 1854, W. acquired a right of way over that part of the road across the Lyde Field estate which lay to the east of his premises, for the use of the premises conveyed by that deed. Ib.

In 1858, W. purchased from B. a piece of land (abutting upon the land conveyed to A. by the deed of 1st December, 1840), which was described in the conveyance as "adjoining at one end thereof to a road or highway leading from Crad-ley Forge to Rowley Regis." At the time of this purchase, the only mode of access to this piece of land was by means of an opening at the west corner, upon the road described in the convey-By an act for the formation of a railway, a new road was directed to be made in lieu of a portion of the old road, numbered 4 on the plan deposited under the standing orders, and that so much of the road numbered 22 thereon as should lie between the point at which such new road terminated and the point where the road numbered 4 met the road numbered 22 should eease to be used as a highway, "without prejudice to #### c. Sale without Notice.

Purchaser for Value without Notice of Contract with Vestry to dedicate to Public.]—In December, 1864, B., who was in possession of land adjoining the river Thames, under an agreement for a lease for eighty years, gave notice to the Board of Works for the district that he desired to divert a public footway which crossed the land, and that he proposed to substitute a better footway, and also to make a new roadway to the waterside between two points specified, and throw the same open to the public. The vestry agreed to the application, subject to the proposed new roadway being made and thrown open to the use of the public, and the new footway being properly made. In April, 1865, the justices made an order for the stopping up and diversion of the old footway. This was done by B., and he also constructed the new road. The owners of the fee, however, did not give their consent, and there was, in the opinion of the court, no sufficient evidence of any actual dedication of the way to the public. In May, 1866, a lease of the land to B. was executed, in which it was described as "all that piece of land, &c., as the same are more particularly delineated and described on the plan drawn in the margin hereof," and the habendum was made "subject to the existing rights of way over the said land." In the plan rights of way over the said land. In the plan the new road was shown, but was marked "Private road." There were other rights of way over the land. In June, 1866, B. assigned the lease for value to the B. company, and there was nothing to shew that they had any notice of B.'s agreement, or of the existence of a right of way over the road, other than such notice as was given by the lease itself, there being, in the opinion of the court on the evidence, nothing in the appearance of the road or in the extent of its user by the public, to convey to a person inspecting the property any notice that there was a public right of way. After other assignments, the lease became vested in W., to whom the defendants were tenants. In the sale plan, by reference to which W. purchased, the road was marked "Private road," but appeared to termi-nate at the Thames at a point marked "Ferry from Blackwall Stairs." The defendants stopped up the road. An information was filed by the attorney-general, at the relation of the vestry of the parish, to restrain the defendants during the remainder of their term from obstructing the road. The defendants, by their answer, alleged that W. was a purchaser for value without notice of the agreement between B, and the vestry :-Held, by Fry, J., that there was a valid contract between B. and the vestry for a licence to the public to use the new road during his term, which the vestry could have enforced against B., and that probably W. ought to be held to have purchased with notice of it; but that, looking at the lease and the plan together, no notice of the existence of a right of way over the new road was given to the B. company, and that as they had no other notice of its existence, they were purchasers of the lease for value without notice of same for all purposes ".—Held, that this reserved darks, as claiming through them, stood in the two way, and therefore entitled to hold same for all purposes ".—Held, that this reserved darks, as claiming through them, stood in the to W. a right of way to the whole of their preassignees had acquired the lease with notice of poration v. Riggs, 49 L. J., Ch. 297; 13 Ch. D. the right of way; and that the information must 798; 42 L. T. 580; 28 W. R. 610; 44 J. P. 345. therefore be dismissed :- Held, on appeal, that as the defendants had not, by their answer, alleged that the B. company had no notice of the right of way, they could not avail themselves of the defence that the B. company were purchasers for value without notice; but that the defence that W. was a purchaser without notice was sustained, there not being enough on the sale plans to affect him with notice that there was a public right of way; and that, therefore, assuming the existence of an agreement which could have been enforced against B., it could not be enforced against the defendants. Att.-Gen. v. Biphosphated Guano Co., 49 L. J., Ch. 68; 11 Ch. D. 327; 40 L. T. 201; 27 W. R. 621—C. A.

2 By NECESSITY

Creation of.]-A right of way of necessity can only arise by grant, express or implied. Proctor v. Hodgson, 3 C. L. R. 755; 24 L. J., Ex. 195; 10 Ex. 824.

Grant of a surrounded Close.]-In 1839, A. being owner of five closes, two of which, called the Holme closes, were separated by two of the others from the only available highway, sold the entire property in three lots. M. purchased the Holme closes, N. one of the other closes, and D. the remaining closes. Over the latter the tenants of A., from 1823, used a way for the occupation of the Holme closes. The deeds of conveyance to the three purchasers were all executed on the same day, but it could not be ascertained in what order of priority they were executed. No special grant or reservation of any particular way was contained in any of them, but in the conveyance to M. were the usual words, "together with all ways, roads, &c. to the closes belonging or appertaining." For several years after the execution taining." For several years after the execution of the conveyances, the plaintiffs, who occupied the Holme closes, as tenant of M. had used the way, but, in 1848, the defendant, who had purchased D.'s closes, disputed the plaintiffs right, and obstructed the way:—Held, first, that assuming that the conveyance to M. was expected to the plaintiff of the plaintiff euted before that to D., the plaintiff was clearly entitled to the way; for where a person, having a close surrounded by his land, grants the close to another, the grantee has a way over the grantor's land as incident to the grant. Pinnington v. Galland, 9 Ex. 1; 1 C. L. R. 819; 22 L. J., Ex. 348,

Held, secondly, assuming that the conveyance to D. was executed before that of M., the plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to the way; for, while the property in the Holme closes remained in A., he had that way of necessity, as being the most convenient mode of access to his premises; and it passed by his conveyance to M., under the words "all ways to the closes belonging or appertaining." Ib.

Where the owner of a close surrounded by his own land grants the land and reserves the close, the implied right to a way of necessity to and from the close over the land operates by way of re-grant from the grantee of the land, and is limited by the necessity which created it. This regrant, however, does not create a right to a way of necessity when the total purposes for which the close may at any time be used, but only such a right of way as will enable the owner of the close to enjoy it as in the condition it happened to be at the time of the re-grant. London Cor- during the unity of possession, have been used

For instance, if at the time of the re-grant the close was agricultural land, the owner of the close can only claim such a right of way as is suitable to the enjoyment of land in that condition; he cannot claim a right of way suitable to the user of the close as building land. Ib.

Semble, the same rule applies if the grant is of the landlocked close with an implied grant of a way of necessity over the surrounding land. Ib.

— Necessary Access.] — Where one as a trustee conveys land to another, to which there is no access but over the trustee's land, a right of way passes of necessity as incidental to the grant. Howton v. Frearson, 8 Term Rep. 50; 4 R. R. 581.
The lessee of an inner close has by necessity a right of way suitable to the business for which the lease was made, over an outer close which belongs to the same landlord, Gayford v. Moffat.

L. R. 4. Ch. 133.

But the lessee of one close cannot as such by user acquire an easement over another close which belongs to the same landlord. Ib.

The right of one proprietor to an uninterrupted flow of water, by means of pipes which run through the land of another, carries with it the right to enter upon that land for the purposes of cleaning and repairing or otherwise for the preservation of the pipes; and the court will grant an injunction to restrain the servient owner from the commission of any act which causes the dominant owner greater difficulty and expense in the exercise of his rights, or which, if suffered, might materially affect his rights in future. Goodhart v. Hyett, 32 W. R. 165.

Passing in general Words.]—By indenture of lease of the 23rd of September, 1878, one Berridge demised to Brett a public-house at Hampstead, "together with all ways, waters, watercourses, drains, cellars, vaults, paths, passages, lights, easements, profits, privileges, commodities, advan-tages and appurtenances whatsoever to the said premises belonging or in anywise appertaining." At the rear of the premises was a path across the garden to a doorway in the boundary wall which opened on to a private road (the property of Berridge) leading to Hampstead Heath. On the 1st of October, 1878, Berridge (pursuant to an agreement of November, 1867) granted to the defendant Clowser a lease for ninety-nine years of land which comprised the private road leading from the back of the public-house to Hampstead Heath; and on the 9th of October in that year Clowser built up the doorway in the boundary wall. This way had, by special agreement between himself and his lessor Clowser, for several years been used by one Haughton, a former tenant of the public-house, whose tenancy had been determined in June. 1878 :- Held, that the way in question not being a way of necessity did not pass to Brett by the general words in the lease of September, 1878; and that the defendant Clowser was not estopped from denying the existence of the alleged right of way by having allowed Haughton to use it whilst he was the occupier of the public-house. Brett v. Clouser, 5 C. P. D. 376. See Wheeldon v. Burrows, infra, col. 1098.

On Severance of Tenements. ]—On a severance of two tenements, no right to use ways which, and enjoyed in fact, passes to the owner of the dissevered tenement, unless there is something in the conveyance to shew an intention to create the right to use these ways de novo. Pearson v. Spencer, 1 B. & S. 571; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1195; 4 L. T. 769. Affirmed on appeal, 3 B. & S. 761; 1 N. R. 373; 8 L. T. 166; 11 W. R. 471—Ex. Ch. Where property devised or granted is landlocked, and there is no other way of getting at it without being a trespasser, so that it cannot be enjoyed without a way of some sort over the land of the testator or grantor, a way of necessity is 196—C. A. ereated de novo. Ib.

The ground on which the way of necessity is created is, that a convenient way is implied by grant as a necessary incident. Ib.

The way of necessity, once created, must remain the same way as long as it continues at all. Ib.

Where an owner of a farm divided it by his will into two portions, devising them to A. and B. respectively, and the portion of B. was land-locked, so that in order to reach it it was necessary that he should have a right of way over the property of A., and the devisor during his life had used a way in a certain direction over that property:—Held, that a right to use that way passed to B. by the devise. Ib.

E. H. and J. P. were tenants in common of N. and V. estates. By a deed of partition V. was conveyed to E. H., and N., "together with all and every their rights, members, easements, and appurtenances," was conveyed to J. P., who sold years from V. to N., and had been used up to the time of partition by E. H. and J. P.:—Held, that such right of way did not pass to J. P. by the general words used in the deed of partition.

Worthington v. Gimson, 2 El. & El. 618; 29

L. J., Q. B. 116; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1053.

For whose Use. ]-When a right of way is granted to "the owner and owners for the time being" of lands, and the lands are subsequently severed, the grant gives a right of way to the owner for the time being of every part of the severed lands. Newcomen v. Coulson, 46 L. J., Ch. 459; 5 Ch. D. 133; 36 L. T. 385; 25 W. R.

469-C. A.

Strips of land having been allotted by an award under an inclosure act to different persons, there was awarded to the owners for the time being of the allotments "a way, right and liberty of passage for themselves and their respective tenants and farmers of the lands and grounds, as well on foot as on horseback, as with their carts and carriages, and to lead and drive their horses, oxen and other cattle" as often as oceasion should require, from a highway adjoining the outside strip over the east end of the allotments to their respective allotments, "doing as little damage to the soil, or the corn, grass or herbage," as might be, with a provision that if any owners should street out the way through their respective allotments, the same should be made and for ever remain at least eleven vards wide :- Held, that there was no implied restriction of the right of way to agricultural purposes. Ib.

Held, also, that a person entitled to a right of way is entitled to make an efficient way for any purposes for which he is entitled to use it, and desires to use it; and held, therefore, that the owners of any allotment on converting the same into building land might form a metalled road to the highway over the east end of the intervening plots. Ib.

____Implied Reservation.]—By the grant of part of a tenement there will pass to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements over the other part of the tenement which are necessary to the enjoyment of the part granted and have been hitherto used therewith: but, as a general rule, there is no corresponding implication in favour of the grantor, though there are certain exceptions to this, as in the case of ways of necessity. Wheeldon v. Burrows, 48 L. Ch. 853: 12 Ch. D. 31: 41 L. T. 327: 28 W. R.

A contract to sell land with the appurtenance does not pass a right to a way to the land sold which the vendor has used over adjoining land of his own. Bolton v. Bolton, 48 L. J., Ch. 467;

11 Ch. D. 968; 40 L. T. 582.

On Sale-Notice to Purchaser. ]-On the sale of land to a purchaser, who has notice that the adjoining land is to be laid out in building in a manner which will make a right of way over the purchased land necessary to the yender, such right of way is reserved to the vendor by impliagain of way is reserved to the ventor by impli-cation as a way of necessity. Duvies v. Sear, 38 L. J., Ch. 545; L. R. 7 Eq. 427; 20 L. T. 56; 17 W. R. 390.

Where other Access. -An owner of land built a house on the front of it with a cottage at the back, the access to the cottage being by a passage through the house. He conveyed the cottage to B, in fee with the right of passage, and two years afterwards he conveyed the house with a garden to D. in fee. From the time the house was built, D. and the prior owners and occupiers of it used a part of the passage, which was included in the ground conveyed to B., for the purpose of passing between the house and the garden and offices, through a doorway open-ing from that part of the passage into the garden. There was, however, another mode of getting to the garden through a room in the house. Within twenty years of the building of the house, B. blocked up the doorway:—Held, that D. had not, as owner of the house, any right of way over the part of the passage, either by necessity or otherwise. Dodd v. Burchull, 1 H. & C. 113; 31 L. J., Ex. 364; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1180.

Where a grantee is entitled to a way of necessity over another tenement belonging to the grantor, and there are to the tenement granted more ways than one, the grantee is entitled to one way only, which the grantor may select. Bolton v. Bolton, supra.

Way of Necessity-Land taken Compulsorily Public Undertaking.]-A. and B. had respectively acquired interests under building agreeevery acquired interests timer building agree-ments in two adjoining plots of land. A local board under their compulsory powers took half an aere, part of A.'s holding, and five acres, part of B.'s holding, for the purpose of sewage works, the necessary proceedings laving been taken as against A. and B. in respect of their several interests, and against the reversioner C., in respect of the whole five and a half acres. The only way to the land taken was a warple way over another part of A.'s building plot, which for thirty years before the building agreements had been used by the occupiers of both A.'s and B.'s land for purposes of cultivation, and since the building agreements had been used by A. for his own building purposes :- Held, that the local board had a right of way over the warple ways for all necessary purposes in connection with the sewage works. Soff v. Acton Local Bourd, 55 L. J., Ch. 569; 31 Ch. D. 679; 54 L. T. 379; 41 L. T. 379; 54 W. R. 563.

Underlease.]-Where a lease of a parcel of building ground described premises as abutting on an intended way of thirty feet wide, which was not then set out, the soil being the property of the lessor, and the lessee underlet the premises, and described them as abutting on an intended way without mentioning the width; and the soil of the intended way, together with the adjacent land on the other side, was afterwards sold by the lessor to another person, who narrowed the intended way to twenty-seven feet by building a wall thereon :-Held, that the tenant of a house built by the under-lessee was entitled only to a way of necessity and convenience. Harding v. Wilson, 3 D. & R. 287; 2 B. & C. 96; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 238; 26 R. R. 287.

Reasonable User-Evidence.]-As between a lessor and lessee, the proper question to be left to a jury, as to the right to a way of necessity, is whether the easement was, at the time of granting the lease, necessary for the fair and reasonable enjoyment of the demised premises. Semble, that the acts of the parties are evidence of what was necessary for such enjoyment. Geraghty v. M. Cann, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 411.

- Right of Turning a Carriage.]-Au indenture of lease demised to K. property, includ-ing a yard, together "with the right of way for K., his executors, administrators, and assigns, his and their servants, agents, and workmen, horses, carts and carriages, from D. Street to the yard and workshops as at present by K. enjoyed, which premises respectively are more particularly delineated and described on the plan drawn on the margin of these presents coloured red and green":- Held, both on the construction of the grant, and on the evidence of user, that the right of way was over the whole of the premises coloured green. Know v. Sansom, 25 W. R. 864.

Held, also, that where the turning of a carriage or cart is necessary to the convenient enjoyment of the dominant premises, such a right of turning over a piece of land may be a part of the right of way to the dominant premises, Ib.

The court will not declare a greater right than is necessary to satisfy the right of the plaintiff as claimed Ib.

— On Parol Demise.]—If, at the time a landlord lays out a farm for letting there is a usual and manifest way of access from it to the high road through other lands of the landlord, and if he demises the farm with the appurtenances and all easements usually enjoyed with it, the way will pass, even under a parol demise from year to year, although the way was not a strictly legal way of necessity, but a way the use of which was essential to the convenient use of the farm. Clancy v. Byrne, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 355.
In such a case, evidence of user is to be applied, not to shew that the tenant, after the commencement of the tenancy, began to use the way, but that, anterior to his tenancy, it was the usual way, and as such afterwards enjoyed. Ib.

Proof that, at the time of the commencement of the snaney, the way was the usual and recognised way of approach, without which the farm could not be conveniently enjoyed, will sustain of the land; and no such right can be presumed nothing is said about it at the time of the demise. Skull v. Glenister, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 81; 33 L. J., C. P. 185; 9 L. T. 763; 12 W. R. 554.

A., having a right of way to a close, demised the close to B. B., being possessed of an adjoining close, upon which he was creeting houses, used the way for carting bulkling materials to A's close for the purpose of using them upon his own land:—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to say whether B's use of the road was a bona fide exercise of the right of way to A.'s close, or a mere colourable mode of getting to his own land. Ib.

User involving Trespass.]-If a way granted by a lease cannot be used, by reason of its passing over the land of third persons, and there is no other way to the lessee's house, he is entitled to a way of necessity to the nearest public highway, by the shortest line across the granter's land. Osborn v. Wise, 7 Car. & P. 761,

When Way Impassable. ]-A person who prescribes in a que estate for a private way cannot-justify going out of it on the adjoining land because the way is impassable. Barrison, 4 M. & S. 387; 16 R. R. 493. Bullard v.

It is not a good justification in trespass that the defendant has a right of way over part of the plaintiff's land, and that he had gone upon the adjoining land because the way was impassable from being overflowed by a river. Taylor v. Whitehead, 2 Dougl. 475.

Cesser of Right.]—A way of necessity is limited by the necessity which created it; and when such necessity ceases, the right of way also ceases; therefore, if at any subsequent period, the party formerly entitled to such way can approach the place to which it led, by passing over his own land by as direct a course as he would have done by using the old way, such way ceases to exist as of necessity. Holmes v. Goring, 9 Moore, 166; 2 Bing, 76.

A way of necessity exists after unity of possession of the close to which, and the close over which it leads, and after a subsequent severance; if a person purchases close A., with a way of necessity thereto over close B., a stranger's land, and afterwards purchases close B., and then prochases close C. adjoining to close A., and through which he may enter to close A., and then sells close B. without a reservation of any way, and then sells closes A. and C., the purchaser of close A. will nevertheless have the ancient way of necessity to close A. over close B. Bucksby v. Coles, 5 Taunt, 311; 15 R. R. 308, Pleading.]-A way of necessity cannot be pleaded generally, without shewing the manner in which the land, over which the way is claimed, is charged with it. Bullard v. Harrison, 4 M. & S. 387; 16 R. R. 493.

If a particular class of persons uses a pathway, and the owner does not interrupt the user for some private reason not communicated to the persons using the path, a public right of way is gained by the user after a lapse of twenty years. Reg. v. Broke, 1 F. & F. 514.

Acquiescence of Owner.]—A right of way may be acquired, as against a lessee for years, by uninterrupted user as of right for a period of forty years, during the entirety of which period the lease has been in existence, though the owner of the reversion has not acquiesced in such user, and the dominant and servient tenements are held under different landlords. Bengun v. M. Donald, 2 L. R., Ir. 560-C. A.

Knowledge of Landlord. ]-The user of a way during the occupation of tenants does not bind the landlord, unless he was aware of it; but if the user has been for a great length of time, it may be presumed that he was aware of it. Davis v. Stevens, 7 Car. & P. 570.

Tenants under same Landlord. ]-A prescriptive right of way may be acquired in respect of one tenement, by user for forty years, against another held for a term of years under the same landlord; and such right is not necessarily determined upon the expiration of the lease, when the tenant of the servient tenement continues in occupation upon the same terms as before. Fahey v. Dwyer, 4 L. R., Ir. 271.

Rights of Lessees, |-- Where a plaintiff derived title to a locus in quo under a lease from the owners within the last twenty years (without any reservation of a right of way), and the defendant had within that time occupied part of the locus, and taken adjoining premises by a subsequent lease from the original lessors:—Held, that he could not set up a right of way over the land by user, or of necessity. Walter v. Williams, 2 F. & F. 423.

Against Reversioners. ]-The assignee of a lease granted for lives, by a bishop in right of his sec, used a way, without interruption, to and from his premises for more than twenty years, over the locus in quo; the defendant, by assign-ment of a similar lease of it, obstructed the way: —Held, first, that since 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, the user conferred no title as against the reversioner, the bishop; nor, secondly, against his lessee, or persons claiming under such lessee during the term. Walker v. Bright, 1 C. M. & R. 211; 4 Tvr. 502. Sub nom. Bright v. Walker, 3 L. J., Ex. 250.

A declaration claiming a right of way, "by rason of" the possession of premises, is sup-ported by proof of a reservation of way in a con-veyance of them granted by a tenant for life to the plaintiff. Ib.

Where a right of way is claimed by virtue of forty years' enjoyment under the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, the period during which the servient tenement has been vested, in a tenant for life, with remainder in fee, cannot be deducted from the period of forty years' enjoy-ment, for the remainderman is "not a person entitled to the reversion expectant on a term"

In 1728, land was let on a building lease, which expired at Lady-day, 1824. In 1819, the plaintiff by virtue of a demise from an under-lessee, which expired in 1820, was in possession of a house erected on part of this land; and, under that demise, exercised, as all his predecessors had done for more than thirty years, a right of way over a passage on one side of his house, as necessary for the use and enjoyment thereof, particularly for repairing the eastern side; the underlessee's interest expired in 1822; the defendant was in possession of the soil of the passage, by virtue of an assignment, in 1791, of the lease of 1728; in 1819, the party possessed of the reversion expectant on the lease of 1728 demised to the plaintiff the house of which he was in possession, as above, for fifty-seven years and a half, to hold from Lady-day, 1824, together with all the appurtenances to the same belonging, subject to a covenant for repairs. In 1822, the reversioner demised the soil of the passage to the defendant for sixty-one years, to hold from Lady-day, 1824: —Held, that under the demise of 1819, the plaintiff was entitled to a right of way over defendant's passage. Hinchlife v. Kunnent (Eurl), 5 Bing. (N.O.) 1; 6 Scott, 650; 1 Arn. 342; 8 L. J. C. P. 105. The doctrine of the case of Walker v. Bright

(1 C. M. & R. 211) does not apply where the enjoyment on which the right of the easement depends has been for a period of forty years. Beggan v. M. Donald, 2 L. R., Ir. 560—C. A.

When absolute and indefeasible.]-Under such circumstances the right to the easement becomes at the expiration of the period of forty years absolute and indefeasible as against the lessee for the residue of the term, though liable to be defeated by the reversioner within three years after the determination of the lease.

Covenant consistent with Demise. ]-In an action for obstructing a right of way, the plaintiff proved an uninterrupted user for seventeen years. The defendant claimed a right to the soil under a subsequent demise, containing a covenant that the lessee should contribute a ratable proportion of the expense of repairing the fences, paths, ways, &c., used in common with the occupiers of other premises near or adjoining thereto, belonging to the lessor. The passage over which the plaintiff claimed a right of way was the only one to which this covenant could apply :-Held that the right of way in the plaintiff was not inconsistent with the demise of the defendant. Oakley v. Adamson, 1 M. & Scott, 510; 8 Bing.

Law of Jersey-Proof of Title.]-By the law of Jersey a public right of way in the nature of an easement over the soil of another cannot be created by a mere dedication by the owner of the fee simple at any time followed by user of the way so dedicated. Quare, whether an easy-ment or servitude can be created by any enjoyment, even from time immemorial, without proof of title; and whether forty years' possession by a parish of a way as a public way accompanied by acts of ownership would prove title in the parish to either the soil or the servitude. De Carteret v. Baudains, 55 L. J., P. C. 33; 11 App. Cas. 214-P. C.

Law of Scotland—Knowledge of Proprietor.]—In order to found a prescriptive right of way according to Scotch law, the nets of possession relied on most be of seah a classractor, or done in such circumstances, as to indicate unequivocally to the proprietor of the servicus tenement the fact that a right is asserted and the nature of the right. McLivry V. Athele (Duke), [1891] A. C. 629—H. L. (Sc.)

b. Evidence of User.

Actual Exercise for Forty Years, —It is sufficient primă facie proof of a preseription for a general easement as a right of way for all purposes to shew the actual exercise of the right for more than twenty years, for all the purposes to owhich the use or enjoyment of the premises at different times required its exercise, although for some of these purposes it appears that it was first used in fact within that period. Dure v. Heathoode, 25 L. J. Ex. 245.

To an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, the defendant pleaded a user as of right for forty years of a way over the plaintiff's lands from a public highway. There was evidence that, during the whole period, the defendant used the way without interruption, but that the plaintiff erected across the way a gate which he kept locked for the last six years at least, allowing a key to be given to the defendant and others using the way.—Held, that, in the absence of evidence that the key was given to the defendant in consequence of his assertion of a right, the fact of its being given did not constitute an acquiescence in the user by the plaintiff, and that there was, therefore, no evidence of enjoyment as of right proper to be submitted to the jury. Barry v. Lowry, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 483.

The plaintiff and the defendant occupied contiguous portions of land. For more than forty years, and as far back as living memory went, the occupiers of the plaintiff's land had been in the habit of passing over the defendant's land to a brook which lay on the other side of that land. and of damming up the brook, where necessary, so as to force the water into an old artificial watercourse which came across the defendant's land to the plaintiff's land. They did this for the purpose of supplying their cattle with water whenever they wanted the water, except when the owners of the defendant's land used the water, as they did at certain seasons of the year, for irrigation:—Held, that the jury was war-ranted in inferring a user, as of right, by the occupiers of the plaintiff's land, of the easement on the defendant's land, and that, for the interruption of such casement, the plaintiff might maintain an action against the defendant. Beeston v. Waute, 5 El. & Bl. 986; 25 L. J., Q. B. 115; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 540; 4 W. R. 325.

Up to Date of Action.]—A plea of twenty years' enjoyment of a way must be supported by user for that period down to the commencement of the action. Purker v. Mitahell, 3 P. & D. 655; 11 A. & E. 788; 9 L. J., Q. B. 194.

Proof of user commencing forty years ago, but discontinued four or five years before the commencement of the action, is insufficient. Ib.

To support a plea of a right of way enjoyed for forty years, evidence may be given of user more than forty years back. Lawson v. Langley, 4 A. & E. 890; 6 L. J., K. B. 271.

General Evidence.)—In an action for a treapass to land the defeatinal pleaded pleas, alleging enjoyment as a right of way cover the land for twentry years and forty years. It support of the pleas general evidence was given of user of the right of way, commencing about forty-eight years before the commencement of the action, and continuing until within about two years of that time, and that there had been no interruption by others:—Held, that the pleas were not proved, and that there was no evidence in support of them. Lonce v. Carpenter, 6 Bx. 825; 20 L. J., Ex. 874; 15 Jul. 883.

User as of Right. — In 1823, M. built two adjoining houses, behind each of which was a piece of ground appropriated as a yard, but no wall divided the yards. In 1832, M. permitted the defendant to occupy one of the houses without payment of rent, and he was accessformed to pass over the yard of the other house, which was let from time to time to different tenants, to a public highway. M. continued owner of both houses until his death in December, 1835, In August, 1830, the trustees under his will conveyed the last-mentioned house and the ground behind it to a person through whom the plaintiff derived his title. In September, 1830, the trustees conveyed the other house and ground to the defendant, who continued to occupy it and use the way across the plaintiff's yard without interruption until 1853.—Held, that there was no user of the way as so right for twenty years. Winship v. Hudspetch, 10 Ex. 2 C. L. R. 1042; 32 L. J., Ex. 268; 2 W. R. 528.

Immemorial Private Right, —Upon a plen of an immemorial private right of way, there must be evidence of a user for at least twenty years as of right, in order to make out a prima facie case in support of it, and if during part of the time, and for more than twenty years before the alleged trespasses, there has been a user of the way less convenient, it will be for the jury, on the whole of the evidence, and especially with reference to the non-user for so many years before the time of the trespass, to say whether the alleged way was ever acquired as of right, or whether it was abandoned; that is, whether it existed, and was a subsisting right, at the time of the alleged trespasses. Durling v. Clue, 4 F. & F. 329.

Award of Inclosure Commissioners.]—
To an action for entering and passing over a close of the plaintiff, the defendant plended a right of way from time immemorial, and a user for forty years and twenty years respectively. A neer in fact for more than forty years was proved. In fast, all ways not set out in an award were extinguished by act of parliament, and this way was not set out:—Held, that it could not be presumed from the user that the award was otherwise than properly made, and that less than twenty years having elapsed since the award, no right had been gained under the statute. Holden v. Titley, 1 F. & F. 601.

Where no evidence appeared to shew that a way over another's land had been used by leave or favour, or under a mistake of an award which would not support the right of way chimed, such a user for above twenty years, excerised adversely and under a claim of right, was sufficient to presume a grant which must have been made within twenty-six years, as all former ways not disproved by shewing that, forty-eight years ago, B. was part of a common, inclosed under an act of parliament, and allotted to the party under whom the defendant justifies. Codling v. Johnson 4 M. & Ry, 671; 9 B. & C. 933; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B.

c. Continuous User.

How computed.]-Under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, ss. 7, 8, the time during which the servient tenement has been under lease for a term exceeding three years is to be excluded from the computation of a forty years' enjoyment, but not from the computation of an enjoyment for twenty years. Palk v. Skinner, 18 Q. B. 568; 22 L. J., Q. B. 27; 17 Jur. 372.

Enjoyment as of Right-How defeated. The enjoyment of an easement as of right, for twenty (or forty) years next before the com-mencement of the suit, within 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, means a continuous enjoyment as of right for twenty (or forty) years next before the commencement of the suit of the easement as an easement, without interruption, acquiesced in for a year; and such right is defeated by unity of possession during all or part of the period of enjoyment, though such unity of possession has its inception after the completion of the twenty (or forty) years. Battishill v. Reed, 18 C. B. 896; 25 L. J., C. P. 290.

- Interruption of. ]-When a person sets up an enjoyment of a right of way, or other easement, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2, and it appears there has been an interruption of such enjoyment, the question whether such interruption has been acquiesced in or not for one year, as specified in s. 4, is one to be left to the jury as specified in 8, 4, is one to be left to the first and settled by them; and it is not necessary to bring any action or to commence a snit in order to prove that the interruption has not been acquieseed in. Bennison v. Cartieright, 5 B. & S. 1; 33 L. J., Q. B. 187; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 847; 10 L. T. 266; 12 W. R. 425.

- Agreed Alteration.]-A plea of twenty years' right of way is not defeated by proof of an agreed alteration of the line of way, nor by a temporary non-user under an agreement of the parties. Payne v. Shedden, 1 M. & Rob. 382.

— User of Way at Long Intervals.]—In an action where a right of way was claimed under the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 2, in respect of twenty years' user as of right it appeared that the way had only been used by the party claiming it, the defendant, for the removal of wood cut upon an adjoining close. The wood was cut upon this close at intervals of several years; the last cutting having been in the year in which the action was commenced, the one next previous fifteen years before, and the next at another interval of fifteen years, Between these intervals the road was occasionally stopped up, but the defendant used it as often as he wished while the wood was being cut : -Held, that there had not been an uninterrupted enjoyment of the way for twenty years within the meaning of s. 2 of the Prescription Act, purposes in an altered condition of the property.

were at that time extinguished by the operation, of an inclosure act. Campbell v. Wilson, 3 East, 294; 7 R. R. 462.

A plea of way by prescription over A. to B. is 33 W. R. 5; 48 J. P. 580—C. A.

4. EXTENT OF RIGHT.

Confined to Foot-passengers.]-By a lease a demise was made of a dry dock, described as bounded on the west by a roadway or a passage running between the dock and certain newlyerected warehouses, together with free liberty and right of way for the lessee, his workmen and servants, and all other persons and person, by his authority or permission, from time to time, and at all times thereafter during the continu-ance of the demise, in, by, through and over the roadway, lying to the west of the demised premises, jointly with the lessor and his tenants. Between the dock and the warehouses was a strip of land of twenty-three feet in breadth. At the date of the lease that part of the strip, fourteen feet in breadth, which lay nearest to the warehouses was paved, and there was at the extremity of the pavement a strong kerb three inches high. On this kerb a strong fence was erected either before or soon after the date of the lease :- Held, that the right of way conferred by the lease extended over the whole strip, and not merely to the portion of it adjacent to the dock; but that it was confined to foot-passengers. Cousens v. Rose, L. R. 12 Eq. 366; 24 L. T. 820; 19 W. R. 792.

For all Purposes.]—A conveyance to the plain-tiff granted to him a right of way through the gateway of the vendor (which opened into a close afterwards bought by the defendant) to a wicket-gate to be erected by the plaintiff at a given point into a piece of garden ground, part of the premises purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff built a cart-shed on this piece of garden ground close to the point where the wicket-gate was to be, and claimed a right of carriage-way to it :- Held, that he was not confined to a right of footway, but was entitled to a right of footway, but was entitled to a right of way for all purposes. Watts v. Kelson, 40 L. J., Ch. 126; L. R. 6 Ch. 166; 24 L. T. 209; 19 W. R. 338.

Alteration in Tenement-Excess of User.] In an action for trespass over the plaintiff's yard, at the back of the defendant's house, it was found that for upwards of twenty years, during which the defendant had occupied his house as a dwelling-house, he had possessed a right of way across the yard to his back door for himself and his friends. During the last two years the defendant had opened a small shop in one room of his house, and a few customers had crossed the yard for the purpose of going to the shop by the back door. Upon the plea to a new assignment to the plea of the right of way, the jury had found for the plaintiff :-Held, that this was not such an alteration in the dominant tenement that the facts could constitute an excess of the defendant's user of his right of way; and that the verdict must be entered for the defendant on the new assignment. Sloan v. Helliday, 30 L. T. 757.

Increased Burden, ]—The immemorial user of a right of way for all purposes for which a road was wanted in the then condition of the property, does not establish a right of way for all Agricultural Purposes.]-When a road had been immemorially used to a farm, not only for usual agricultural purposes, but in certain instances for carrying building materials to enlarge the farmhouse and rebuild a cottage on the farm, and for carting away sand and gravel dug out of the farm :-Held, that that did not establish a right of way for carting the materials required for building a number of new houses on the land. Ib.

Semble, that the fact that the occupiers of the farm, in passing with carts from a particular point to a certain gate over a common on which no definite road was marked out, did not keep to one line, but used several tracks, did not prevent their acquiring a right of way between that point and the gate. Ib.

- Minerals.]-User for twenty years of a way to a field used only for agricultural purposes does not give a right of way for mineral purposes. Bradburn v. Morris, 3 Ch. D. 812—

The owner of a field, with a right of way to it through an occupation road, agreed to sell the surface of the field, reserving the minerals. The field had never been used for mining, and the vendor did not appear to have any present intention of working the minerals:—Held, that the vendor, having had a right to use the road for agricultural purposes only, could not prevent the purchaser from so altering the road as to make it unfit for the use of the vendor in working the minerals under the land agreed to be sold, Ib.

Held, also, that even if the vendor had a right to use the road for minerals, masmuch as he had no present intention of working the minerals, the court would not interfere. Ib.

A right of way for agricultural purposes is a limited and qualified right of way, and does not necessarily confer a right to use such way for general and universal purposes, Jackson v. Stacey, Holt, N. P. 455; 17 R. R. 663.

Tramway for carriage of Coal. -An estate was intersected by a canal company under the powers of its act, and an accommodation bridge was built by the company, over which a private road, leading across the property to a high road, was carried. Coal-pits were opened upon the estate, which, when the canal was made, had been used as a farm. For some time the coals were carried down to the canal by a tramway which did not cross the bridge. The coal-owners subsequently carried the tramway across the bridge (excavating the soil of the roadway on the bridge and approaches), in order to carry their coals to a line of railway on the other side of the property. An action for trespass having been commenced, and a writ of injunction applied for by the canal company, the coal-owners submitted in the action to judgment for 11. damages and costs, and gave an undertaking not to repeat the trespass complained of. The coal-owners having, a few months afterwards, again laid down the

> As if Public Roads-Right to lay down Gas.] -A freeholder of land, which was let for building purposes, entered into a covenant that the owners and occupiers of the houses should have a free right of way over certain roads, and should have full use and enjoyment of the roads in as absolute a manner as if they were public roads. The roads had not been dedicated to the public. At the invitation of the occupiers, but without the consent of the freeholder, a gas company broke up the surface of the roads in company broke up the same to the reasts in order to lay down gas to some of the houses. The freeholder filed a bill for an injunction against the company. The occupiers of the houses to which gas had been already laid down not having been made parties, the cause was ordered to stand over for them to appear. The occupiers appearing, and consenting to the acts of the company, the bill was dismissed with on the company, the bit was assussed with costs. Selby v. Crystal Palace District Gas Co., 8 Jur. > The extent of the usage is evidence of a right only commensurate with the user. Ib.

> For certain Purposes. ]-User of a road with horses, carts and carriages, for certain purposes, does not necessarily prove the right of road for all purposes, but the extent of a right is a questhe form the jury, under all the circumstances of the case. > Footways.]-Footways (but not for carriages, or for horse people) through Richmond-gate, and through East Sheen-gate, across Richmond Park, established. Rex v. Burgess, 2 Burr. 908.

> - Carriage-way includes. ]-If a defendant pleads a footway, his plea is supported by proof of a carriage-way, as a carriage-way always includes a footway. Duris v. Stevens, 7 Car. & P.

> For removal of Tithes. ]-A rector cannot claim a permanent right of way for the purpose of carrying away his tithe, unless by prescription or grant. James v. Dods, 2 C. & M. 266; 4 Tyr. 101; 3 L. J., Ex. 47.

The owner or occupier of the soil, provided he damway, but without breaking the soil on the bridge, the vice-diameellor-held that, independ of the farm, has a right to vary and stop up a deathy of the undertaking in the action, by by which tithe has been carried, although the alteration puts the tithe-owner to great circuitous route for the purpose of carrying away his tithe. Ib.

Reasonable User.]—Where premises are demised or conveyed "with the right of way thereto," it may be a question for the jury what is a reasonable use of such right. Hawkins v. Carbines, 27 L. J., Ex. 44.

Where a right of way was expressed to be "through the gateway" of the plaintiff (which gateway led to other premises of the plaintiff), and at the time of the lease, earts could come in to load and unload, and turn round and go out again, but, through alterations of the premises, could not do so without slightly trenching upon the plaintiff's premises:—Held, that in the reasonable use of the right of way the defendant had a right to do this; and that, what was a reasonable user was for the jury. Ib.

The owner of field A., who had a right of way over the plaintiff's close for the more convenient use of A., made a gateway from field B., into A., mowed both fields, stacked all the hay in A., and some months after sold the whole hay to the defendant, who carried it all away over the said way. The plaintiff brought an action of trespass : the defendant justified under the right of way, and the plaintiff new assigned :-Held, that whether there had been an excess of user was not a question of law; but that it was a question of fact for the jury whether the stacking and carrying away was a reasonable and proper user of the way for the purposes of A., or merely colourably so, and really for the purposes of B.; and on their finding that the former was the case, the defendant was entitled to the verdiet on the new assignment. Williams v. James, 36 L. J., C. P. 256; L. R. 2 C. P. 577; 16 L. T. 664; 15 W. R.

Liability to repair.]-Semble, that where one grants to another a right of way, the latter must bear the expense of making it available, by forming the road, keeping it in repair, and erecting the necessary fences. Ingram v. Morecroft, 33 Beav. 49.

5. CESSER OF USER OR ABANDONMENT.

Proof of.]—Although a grant of an occupation-way cannot be presumed from a user of less than twenty years, yet it is not necessary, in order to destroy the right to such an easement, that a cesser of the use for twenty years should be proved. Reg. v. Chorley, 12 Q. B. 515; 12 Jur.

Effect of. ]-A cesser of the use for any period less than twenty years, accompanied by an act clearly indicative of an intention to abandon the right, is sufficient to destroy such an easement.

Dedication to Public.]-If an owner of land has granted to an individual the easement of an occupation-way over it, then the subsequent absolute dedication by him of a footway to the public, in the same place, cannot be presumed, without also presuming, or proving in fact, a release of the easement by the individual; for without the release the owner can only be supposed to have given what he himself had—a right of user not inconsistent with the easement.

Intention to Abandon-Non-User. |-Where inconvenience, by compelling him to use a more the use of an immemorial right of way to a close was discontinued, because the occupiers had a more convenient access to it over another close in their occupation :--Held, that the non-user afforded no evidence of an intention to abandon the right. Ward v. Ward, 7 Ex. 838; 21 L. J., Ex. 334

In 1839 the appellant's predecessor in title conveyed a portion of his land, together with a right of way over the land he retained, to the respondent's predecessor. In 1886 and 1888 certificates of title to their respective lands were issued to the appellant and respondents under the Transfer of Land Statutes, neither of which contained any notice of the casement. In an action by the respondents to assert their right :-Held, that abandonment being a question of intention, absence of user by the respondents, together with user by the appellant of land subject to the easement, was insufficient under the circumstances to shew any intention to abandon the right. James v. Stevenson, 62 L. J. P. C. 51; [1893] A. C. 162; 1 R. 324; 68 L. T. 539—P. C.

- After Non-User and Release. - When a way is substituted for a pre-existing one, with the consent of the person entitled, and non-user of the original easement is accompanied by acts which warrant the court or a jury in inferring an intention to release it, the right of resumption becomes forfeited; nor is it necessary in such a case that the non-user should extend over twenty years or any defined period. Mulville v. Fallon, — Substituting New Way for Old.]—A parol agreement for the substitution of a new way for an old prescriptive way, and a consequent discontinuance to use the old way, afford no evidence of an abandonment thereof. Lovell v. Smith, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 120.

· Putting up Paling. ]-The fact that the grantee or his successors have run a paling along their boundary and only opened one gate in it at the point where such access had been enjoyed. is no proof of an intention to abandon their right to access at any point. Cooke v. Ingram, 3 R. 607; 68 L. T. 671.

Agreement in Expired Lease.]—In 1850, the owner in fee of a plot of ground near a town demised the coal under it for six years to K., the owner in fee of the adjoining land; and in the lease was an agreement that a street, to be called Union Street, should within five years be made aeross the land under which the coal lay and K.'s land; that a sewer should be made under such road; that the lessor and lessee should, at their own cost, construct and repair so much of the road and sewer as should extend along their respective lands; and that the road should be used as a public road for all purposes for ever thereafter, and should be maintained by each of the parties so far as the same should extend over his land, until it should be adopted by the surveyor of highways. The road and sewer were never made, and there was no dedication of a highway to the public by notice under the Highway Act. A brickfield, and afterwards (in 1851) a colliery, were opened on K.'s land, and gaps were opened through which access was obtained to the premises for carts and foot-passengers. In 1869 posts and chains were placed across one of | by a set-out carriage drive or sweep, entering in 1871 conveyed to the plaintiff in fee, and in 1872 the Local Board of Health called upon him to sewer and pave the alleged street under the Public Health Act, 1848 :- Held, that the agreement in the expired lease had been abandoned and could not be enforced; and that it did not amount to a dedication of a right of way to the public. Healey v. Batley Corporation, 44 L. J., Ch. 642; L. R. 19 Eq. 375.

Right extended by Statute.]-A prescriptive right of way on a public towing-path on the by that part of the river adjoining the towingby that part of the river adjoining the dwing-path having been converted by statute into a floating harbour, although such towing-path was thereby subject to be used at all times of the tide; whereas before it was only used at those times when the tide was sufficiently high for the purposes of navigation. Hex v. Tippett, 3 B. & Ald. 193: 22 R. R. 346.

6. UNITY OF POSSESSION.

Effect of ]—No way or other easement can subsist in land of which there is a unity of possession. Morris v. Edgington, 3 Taunt. 24; 12 R. R. 579.

One entitled to a right of way over a strip of land independently of the ownership thereof, purchased the strip of land :—Held, that during the ownership, his right of way over the plot was suspended, but would revive on his ceasing to be owner. Charlesworth v. Gartsed, 3 N. R.

Devise of "Appurtenances" - Extinguishment.]—One, being seised in fee of the adjoining closes, A. and B., over the former of which a way had immemorially been used to the latter, devised to B. with the appurtenances:—Held, that the devisee could not, under the word "appurtenances," claim a right of way over A. to B., as no new right of way was thereby created, and the old one was extinguished by the unity of seisin in the devisor. Whalley v. Thompson, 1 seisin in the devisor. W Bos, & P. 371; 4 R. R. 826.

In 1870 K,'s land was sold, and of the house afterwards devised to C, to B,'s door, and then returning round an oval garden in front of C.'s house, but at a greater distance from it, to the same point of entrance. B.'s house had a coach-house, opening only into the high road, and a back entrance into the same. After A.'s death C. made a fence geross so much of the carriage-drive as passed immediately in front of his house and across the oval garden, leaving the further way to B.'s front door by the same carriage drive open. B. claimed the way as appurtenant to his house and garden:—Held, first, that the way as used in A.'s time, during the unity of ownership in him, immediately in front of C.'s house, did not pass to B. with the house devised to him, under the word "appurtenances" in A.'s will, Pheysey v, Vicary, 16

Grant of one of adjoining Closes-Ordinary general Words. -- Where two closes in one ownership adjoin, and a formed way leads over one to the other and is used therewith, and the owner grants the latter close "with all ways now used therewith," a right of way over the way passes to the grantee, whether the way was constructed before the unity of possession or not. The defendant, the owner of two pieces of land, P. and B., made an agreement with the plaintiff to convey so that P. should belong to the defendant and B. to the plaintiff. The only access to B. was by a defined gravelled path crossing P., which path, it was assumed in this action, had not existed before the unity of possession. By a conveyance executed in pursuance of the agreement, P. and B., "with all ways with the same now enjoyed," were conveyed to a trustee as to half thereof to the use of the defendant and as to half to the use of the plaintiff. P. was then occupied by the defendant, B. by the plaintiff. The defendant stopped up the path, and the plaintiff was compelled to buy a right of way over adjoining land. The plaintiff brought this action, asking that the conveyance might be action, asking that the conveyance might be recitified by vesting B. in her with a right of way over the path, and vesting P. in the defendant, subject to the right of way:—Held, that a conveyance of the reconstruction of the reconstruction. veyance executed in pursuance of the agreement ought to have contained an express grant of the right of way; that such right would have passed by a conveyance containing the common general words: that it was immaterial whether the way was constructed before the unity of possession or not; that the plaintiff had not abandoned her right; and that she was entitled to rectification as claimed. Barkshire v. Grubb, 50 L. J., Ch. 731; 18 Ch. D. 616; 45 L. T. 383; 29 W. R. 929.

There being two tenants of adjoining premises held under the same landlord, the tenant of one of the premises acquired a right of way to his vanits through the adjoining premises. landlord sold both premises at one sale, with a condition that they were to be subject to, and with the benefit of, as the ease might be, all subsisting rights or easements of way or passage, so far as any lot might be affected thereby : Held, that the vendor being subject to no liability as to a right of way, the purchaser of one tenement could not enforce a right of way as against the other. Daniel v. Anderson, 31 L. J., Ch. 610; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 328; 7 L. T. 183; 10 W. R. 366.

Mortgage of Servient Tenement without Reservation-Devise of the Two Tenements to different Persons-Reconveyance to Devisee. 1-The owner of freehold land on which were two houses occupied the first and let the second. retaining a right of way along a walled passage across the premises of the second. This passage was not a way of necessity. She mortgaged the continuance of the mortgage she died, leaving the houses by her will to different persons. The devisee of the second house paid off the mortgage, took a reconveyance of all the interest of the mortgagee, and subsequently blocked up the passage. The plaintiff, who had purchased the first house from the devisee thereof, sued the devisee of the second house for trespass :- Held, that the plaintiff had no equity against the defendant, inasmuch as they were both volunteers under the will, and the defendant had, by the reconveyance, which was not merely the release of a security, acquired a larger estate than that given by the will. Taux v. Knowles, 60 L J., Q. B. 641; [1891] 2 Q. B. 564; 65 L T. 124; 39 W. R. 675; 56 J. P. 68—C. A.

Reservation in Long Lease. |- In a lease for ninety-five years, a right of way over the demised premises was reserved to the lessor and his heirs, as long as they should retain adjoining lands held in fee, and after he or they should alienate such adjoining lands then reserving to the lessor, his heirs and assigns, a different right:—Held that the reservations were valid, and that on ceased. Ardley v. St. Panorus Guardians, 39 I. J., Ch. 871.

- Covenant with Lessor, whether as Owner of Reversion or Owner of Adjoining Land-Conveyance of Reversion to Lessee-Merger. D. and C., eo-owners of an estate, by deed demised for a term of 1,000 years a strip of land intersecting the estate for the purpose of making a canal, with the proviso that nothing should prevent D. and C., "their heirs or assigns," from using any of the land demised, or any stream of water flowing over the same, or from granting: any wayleaves across the same for the carriage of goods, &c., or for any other purpose in like manner, as they could have used the same in ease the lease had not been granted, but so as not to injure the canal. The canal was made, and the estate was afterwards partitioned by deed between D. and C., the reversion in a portion of the canal being conveyed to C., and the adjoining lands on each side of that portion being eonveyed to D. C. afterwards conveyed the reversion in that portion of the eanal to the lessees. D., as owner of the lands intersected by that portion of the canal, having claimed to grant waylcaves, &c., and build a bridge across it for the purpose of making an access from one side to the other :- Held, that, upon the true construction of the lease, the proviso operated as a covenant with D. and C. as owners of the reversion, and not as owners of the adjoining lands; that this eovenant ran with the reversion; and that when the reversion in that portion of the canal became vested in the lessees, there was a merger, and the rights under the proviso were extinguished as to that portion of the canal.

7. OBSTRUCTION OF.

Action against Railway Company.]-Action for obstruction by a railway company of a private right of way. No special damage was alleged. Plea, justifying under a private act of the company, and other acts therewith incorporated. Replication, that the way was a road within the | removal of such obstruction. provisions of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, and that the Byerley, 28 L. T. 553; 21 W. R. 668. company had interfered with the same within the meaning of that act, and had not caused a a sufficient road to be made in its stead, as required by the act :-Held, that the 8 & 9 Vict. 20, takes away the common-law right of action for an interference under the powers of a railway company with a private right of way, except when special damage has been sustained. Watkins v. G. N. Ry., 16 Q. B. 961; 20 L. J., Q. B. 391; 15 Jur. 127.

Action by Reversioners.] — A reversioner cannot sue for the obstruction of a right of way, unless the obstruction is such as either perma nently injures the estate, or operates in denial of the right. Hopwood v. Scholfield, 2 M. & Rob. 34.

A declaration by a reversioner alleged that he was entitled to a right of way for his tenants over a close of the defendant, and charged that he wrongfully locked, chained, shut and fastened a gate, standing in and across the way, and wrongfully kept the same so locked, and thereby obstructed the way; and that by means of the premises the plaintiff was injured in his reversionary estate:—Held, on motion in arrest of judgment, that the declaration was sufficient, masmuch as such an obstruction might occasion injury to the reversion, and it must be assumed, after verdict, that evidence to that effect had been given. Kidgell v. Moore, 9 C. B. 364; 1 L. M. & P. 131; 19 L. J., C. P. 177.

Stationary Obstruction.]-P. was the owner of an inn, the yard of which was approached by a passage over adjoining property of M. They agreed to alter their boundary, and substitute a new passage for the old one, M. accordingly, in 1854, conveyed to P. a small strip of land reaching across the end of the new passage where it entered the yard, and granted to him, his heirs and assigns, "rights of way at all times and for all purposes along a passage intended to run between the piece of land hereinbefore conveyed and a street called the Tyrrels," By another deed P. released his rights of way over the old passage. The plaintiff was a lessee of the inn and yard under P. The defendants were tenants of M., occupying warehouses on his property, and the bill was filed to prevent the defendants from allowing carts and waggons to remain stationary in the passage in course of loading and unloading, so as to obstruct the access to the yard :- Held, that the necessity of the business of the defendants did not give them any right to occupy the passage by stationary obstructions when any other person having a right of way required to pass. Thorpe v. Brumfitt, L. R. 8 Ch. 650.

Held, also, that the right of way was not a right in gross, but was appurtenant to the pro-perty occupied by the plaintiff, so that his lease gave him a right to the enjoyment of it. Ib.

Cart standing in Narrow Way.] -A. occupied business premises, the only approach to which was by a private road passing a warehouse belonging to B. The roadway was too narrow for vehicles to pass each other, and carts stand-ing at B.'s warehouse created an obstruction, and margined access to A's place of business:— egress and ingress. The only entrance was Held, that A., having equal and reciprocal rights intrough an entrance or a gateway with a paved with B., was entitled to require the immediate road under the landlord's house:—Held, that Shoesmith v.

By Grantor-Grantee may go Extra viam. If the grantor of a right of way obstructs it, the grantee may go, extra viam, over the granter's land; and the granter or a purchaser with notice from him will not be allowed to obstruct the substituted mode of access so long as the original obstruction exists. Selby v. Nettlefold. 43 L. J., Ch. 359; L. R. 9 Ch. 111; 29 L. T. 661; 22 W. R. 142.

- Notice of Deviation, - Notice of right of way, and also of an obstruction to it, is notice of the grantee's right of deviation. Ib.

Notice of such an interrupted right of way is notice of all the rights appertaining thereto. This right to go extra viam is one which can be protected by injunction, but the injunction must be limited to the time during which the obstruction lasts, and is not to prevent the grantor from substituting any other convenient mode of user, and is not to extend so as to anthorise the grantee to use the mode of access, across the defendant's land, for the continuous passage along the way granted. Ib.

Use of Ways in and through an Estate-Obstruction at further End. ]-It was stipulated by an agreement between the parties to the suit, that the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, should have full and free permission "to use at all times the roads and ways in and through the defen-dant's estate." There were two roads traversing the defendant's estate, at the further extremity of which, where his land terminated, certain existing obstructions were continued by the defendant, so that the plaintiff, whilst he had the use of the roads over the defendant's estate, could not pass beyond it. The court granted an injunction to restrain the defendant from making and continuing the obstructions at the extremity of his land. Phillips v. Treeby, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 711; 2 Giff. 632; 6 L. T. 313. Affirmed, 8 Jur. (N.S.)

Injunction when granted to prevent.]-A lease contained a covenant to do nothing to the annoyance or damage of the lessor or his adjoining tenants or occupiers. The lease granted a right of way over a certain passage as then used and enjoyed by the lessee. At the date of the lease the lessee used the passage for the purpose of a business carried on in the premises, and the lessor, who occupied the adjoining premises, used to lock the gate of the passage in the evening, and kept it locked until the morning. Many years afterwards the lessee's representative turned part of the business premises into a place for entertainments, and claimed a right of entry to his premises at all hours. The lessor's representative filed a bill for injunction against the unisance, and against being prevented from locking the gate at night:—Held, that he was entitled to the injunction asked for. Collins v. Slade, 23 W. R. 199.

Under an agreement for a lease, the tenant had power to creet a workshop on a portion of the premises, for the purposes of his business, but was not to obstruct the entrance to the pre-mises, except by using it for the purposes of egress and ingress. The only entrance was the tenant had an implied right of way through and obstruction; and that, therefore, as the the gateway for horses and carts, as well as for plaintiff had the same rights over the road as foot passengers, and that he was entitled to an the public would have over a public highway, he injunction to restrain the landlord from obstructing the gateway by loading and unloading carts there. Cunnon v. Villars, 47 L. J., Ch. 597; 8 Ch. D. 415; 38 L. T. 939; 26 W. R.

- Delay.]-A railway company had constructed its line so as to leave the passage for a private road two intervals of 9 feet 8 inches each. The interval required by the Railway Clauses Act, for a similar right of way, was 12 feet. The plaintiff's right of way was not disputed; but he had lain by and allowed the railway works to proceed, and the damage accruing to the plaintiff in consequence was of small amount:-Held, that he, having delayed the assertion of his legal right, and the damage being slight, the court would not grant an injunction to restrain the infringement on the legal right. Wintle v. Bristal and South Wales Union Ry., 6 L. T. 20; 10 W. R. 210.

Injunction or Damages-Lord Cairns' Act. 1-Where a plaintiff has established his right to a perpetual injunction against the defendant, the court has no power under Lord Cairns' Act to oblige him against his will to accept damages in lieu of the hijunction. Krehl v. Burrell, 48 L. J., Ch. 252; 11 Ch. D. 146; 40 L. T. 637; 27 W. R. 805—C. A.

Extent of Right-Road granted as if Public Road. ]-The defendant, the owner of a building estate, conveyed to the predecessor in title of the plaintiff one of the plots of ground on the estate, and in the conveyance granted to him the right for himself, his heirs and assigns, and his and their families, tenants, servants and workpeople, with or without horses, cattle, carts and carriages, to pass over the several roads made or to be made through the estate; in the same puone roads. Two of the roads on the estate were 40 feet wide, 20 feet in the middle being a reasonable user of the passage previous to the gravellet for cart and carriage traffic, and there being a strip of grass 10 feet wide on either side. The plaintiff, in common with other residents on the estate, was accordanced traffic. along these grass strips to and from his house, which was built on the plot of ground so conveyed as above stated. The defendant caused voyet as above stated: In electronant during the passengers in the use of a zoocway six ditches or trenches, each about 15 inches through the passengers in that the first question wide and 10 inches deep, to be cut completely alone ought to have been left to the jury, but as across the strips of grassland at the sides of the that question appeared to have been fairly and the property of the prop road near the plaintiff's house, the earth taken out of the ditches being banked up at the edges out of the difference being burners up to the origes or a universal metric and use over summitted for the difference, and the plaintiff's passage along cronecously did not form any ground for selting the strips was thereby rendered difficult and, saide the verdict for the plaintiff on the first dangerous. The plaintiff claimed an injunction question, and that the finding on that question and that the finding on that question that the contract of the plaintiff or the first plain against the defendant to restrain the continuance of the impediments to his right of way. The defendant contended that the plaintiff's right of way was the same as that of the public along a 8 L. R., Ir. 385—C. A. highway, and that the public ways had similar ditches and trenches cut through the grass at their sides for drainage and similar purposes and it was was entitled to the injunction. Nicol v. Beau-mont, 53 L. J., Ch. 853; 50 L. T. 112.

Right to Foreshore. - In an action to restrain the removal of shingle from, and the placing of bathing-machines upon, a part of the foreshore of the sea at M., the plaintiff claimed to be tenant in possession of the locus in quo under a building agreement granted him by the lord of the manor of M., who was tenant for life of the property under a settlement:—Held, that on the true construction of the building agreement the plaintiff had no estate whatever in the locus in quo, but only a right of entry thereon for the purposes of that agreement, and therefore could not maintain the action. Laird v. Briggs, 19 Ch. D. 22: 45 L. T. 238—C. A.

What amounts to.]—The plaintiff was entitled to a right of way on foot through a passage across the defendant's premises. This passage had been formerly level throughout, with the exception of a three-inch step. The defendant raised part of the passage, causing an ascent of four with a descent of three steps. The plaintiff brought an action for the obstruction to his right of way, caused by this alteration, and in his statement of claim alleged that his servants had been in the habit of carrying bales and other heavy goods along the passage. Evidence was given to shew that the alterations prevented goods from being conveyed by trucks along the passage, and that heavy burdens could only be carried through it at much greater inconvenience than formerly. The jury, after viewing the premises, found, in answer to questions left to them by the judge-(a) that the passage was rendered by the alterations substantially less convenient as a mere footway; (b) that it was rendered substantially less convenient for persons on foot carrying such burdens as might, previously to the alterations, have been carried through it: the jury that no right had been shewn to roll tracks or carry burdens not commonly carried by ordinary passengers in the use of a footway properly tried, the circumstance that other issues of a different nature had also been submitted and the judgment for the plaintiff upon it should accordingly stand, Austin v. Scottish Widows' Fund Mutual Life Assurance Society,

Abatement of Inhabited House.]-A person having a right of way which has been obstructed mers or change and similar purposes and it wiss a wing a right of way which has been obstrated ditches or "grips" were made:—Hickl, that the right of the public to use a highway extends to the whole road, and not merely to the part used though it is actually inhabited. Davies v. Williams (16 Q. B. 546) approved. Lane v. as via trita; that these ditches if cut on a public highway, would have amounted to a nuisance. L. T. 375; 40 W. R. 87. Threatened Destruction.]—The lessees of a collicy having agreed to grant to the lessees of a neighbouring colliery licence to use a right of way enjoyed by the former, the owner of the first colliery having granted to the second lessees the same right of way during a term of years, and afterwards, by assignment from the first lessees, become possessed of the first colliery, and the right of way; an injunction was granted to restrain him from removing the materials and destroying the way. Newmarch v. Brandling, 3 Swanst, 90, 3 Swanst, 90, 3

8. EFFECT OF STATUTES UPON.

Over Level Crossings. ]-A railway company was empowered for the purposes of their undertaking to take marsh lands at Harwich belonging to the Crown, and which had been acquired by the Crown for the purposes of defence, but they were required by their act to construct and maintain across, over or under their railway such communications as the Commissioners of Woods and Forests should adjudge to be necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the Crown lands. Accordingly the company took lands which lay between the railway and an estancy, and agreed with the commissioners to make four level crossings over their line as communications with these lands. At this time the land was used for grazing purposes only. Subsequently it was purchased by a land company and laid out for building. Therenpon the railway compiers of houses on the land to use the level crossings, on the ground that the right of way was restricted to the purposes for which com-munication with the severed lands was necessary at the time the railway was made :- Held, that the grant of the right of way was not so restricted, but gave the landowners a right of way over the level crossings for all purposes which would not interfere with the proper working of the railway. United Land Co. v. G. E. Ry., 44 L. J., Ch. 685; L. R. 10 Ch. 586; 33 L. T. 292; 23 W. R. 896.

A right of way acquired by prescription is restricted to the purposes for which it was acquired. But where such a right is acquired by grant, the limit to the right of user is a question depending on the construction of the instrument of grant. Ib.

The plaintiff had been entitled from 1855 to a carriage-way to property of his over a railway by a level crossing. By an act obtained by the company in 1875, reciting that it was expedient that the rights of way in respect of footways which crossed the railway on the level should be extinguished, it was enacted that all rights of way in proper of footways numbered 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 on the deposited plans should be extinguished. No provision for compensation was made. The roadway in question was numbered 5 on the deposited plans, and was thereon marked "roadway and footway" the others being marked simply "footway" —Held, that upon the true construction of the act, it did not interfere with private rights of way, but only with public rights of way, and that an injunction restraining the milway company from obstructing the way had been rightly granted. Wellsy London, Tilwary and Southead Ry, 5 Ch. D. 126; 37 L. T. 302; 25 W. R. 325—0.4.

Under Inclosure Acts.]—H. was possessed of lands in the parishes of R. and W., the waste lands of which were about to be inclosed, and in respect of which he was entitled to an allotment. H. sold some of his land to the defendant, expressly reserving the intended allotments. Between the lands conveyed to the defendant and a high road to R, certain strips of land, forming part of the waste lands to be inclosed, were interposed, and over them there were track-ways, which had been used for more than forty years by the occupiers of the property conveyed to defendant as a means of access between part of the property and the high road, and which had been used by the defendant without dispute down to the time of the inclosure award. afterwards sold the allotments made to him. which included the strips of waste, to the person through whom the plaintiff claimed. The award. which was duly made and confirmed, did not set out any ways over the allotments. The defendant claimed a right of way over them where the of s. 68 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, any rights of way which might have existed prior to the confirmation of the award were from that date extinguished, and that the defendant had no such right as that claimed; and that the extinguishing of the right of way was not a wrongful derogation from the grant of the plaintiff's prodecessor in title. Turner v. Crash, 48 I., J., Ex. 481; 4 App. Cas. 221; 40 L. T. 661; 27 W. R.

When a right of way is granted to "the owner and owners for the time being" of lands, and the lands are subsequently severed, the grant gives a right of way to the owner for the time being of every part of the severed lands, November 9, Conton, 46 L. J., Ch. 450; 5 Ch. D. 133; 36 L. T. 335; 25 W. R. 469-C. A.

Strips of land having been allotted by an award nuder an inclosure act to different persons, there was awarded to the owners for the time being of the allotments "a way right and liberty and passage for themselves and their respective tenants and farmers of the lands and grounds, as well on foot as on horseback, as with their carts and carriages, and to lead and drive their horses, oxen and other cattle" as often as occasion should require, from a highway adjoining the outside strip over the east end of the allotments to their respective allotments, "doing as little damage to the soil, or the corn, grass or herbage," as might be, with a provision that if any owners should street out the way through their respective allotments, the same should be made and for ever remain at least eleven yards wide :- Held, that there was no implied restriction of the right of way to agricultural purposes. Ib.

Held, also, that a person entitled to a right of way is entitled to make an efficient way for any purposes for which he is entitled to use it, and desires to use it; and held, therefore, that the owners of any allotment on converting the same into building land, might form a metalled road to the highway over the cast end of the intervening plots. Th.

By an inclosure act, it was enacted that all ways over a field, called West Field, allotted to B, should be extrigmished from the time of the making and completion of a new road, as therein directed; with a provise, that nothing in the act should extend, or be construct to extend to deprive A., his helrs or assigns, or his, or their agents, of the right of ingress, egress, and regress, to and from a watercourse, for the purpose of rebuilding, repairing, opening, or shutting the sluices thereon, or to cleanse the same :—Held, that this reserved to A. his right of way unimpaired, over West Field, for the purposes in the act mentioned. Advanc v. Mortlock, 7 Scott, 189; 5 Bing, (N.C.) 236; 1 Arn, 488; 8 L. J., C. P.

Under Canal Act-" Freed from all Estates, Charges and Incumbrances."]—The enactment in the Ulster Canal Transfer Act conveying certain lands to the Commissioners of Public Works in Ireland "freed and discharged from all estates, charges and incumbrances heretofore made, permitted or suffered by the said canal company. does not extinguish rights of way over said lands

Under the Education Act.]-A school board taking lands under the Elementary Education Act, 1870, need not give notice to treat to the owners of easements over the lands taken ; but compensation in respect of such ensements is to compensation in respect of such casements is to be given as for lands injuriously affected. Clark v. Landon School Board, 43 L. J., Ch. 421; L. R. 9 Ch. 120; 29 L. T. 903; 22 W. R. 354.

Extinction by Implication.]—A corporation were empowered by a provisional order of the Board of Trade, made under the authority of the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, and confirmed by a subsequent special act, to construct a pier in accordance with certain deposited plans. The plans shewed that the pier, when constructed, would be physically inconsistent with the existence of an alleged public right of access to the seashore from a street with which the pier was connected. The provisional order contained no words expressly extinguishing the right of way, or substituting another right of way for it:

Held, that, if the alleged right of way had ever existed, it was extinguished by necessary implication, and that it was not saved by ss. I1 & 14 of coming to his house, gave permission to A., who was engaged in building on the land, to place materials upon the road. A availed himself of this permission, by placing a quantity of slates there in such a manner that B., in using the road, sustained damage :- Held, that A. was liable to an action. Corby v. Hill, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 556; 27 L. J., C. P. 318; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 512; 6 W. B., 576. Held, also, that the declaration was not objectionable for not averring that the obstruction was placed on the road without permission; inas much as such an allegation, if traversed, would have presented an immaterial issue. Ib.

10. PROCEEDINGS RELATING TO.

a. Jurisdiction.

On Motion. ]-The Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction to decide the question of a public or private right of way upon a motion in a petition suit. Pryor v. Pryor, 27 L. T. 257-L.JJ.

A bill by a lessee for twenty-one years, under the dean and chapter of W., against a lord of a manor and the tenant of a particular house, which obstructed plaintiff's way, praying that the house might be pulled down, and that plaintiff be quieted in the possession of the way :- Held. that the dean and chapter of W., who were the owners of the inheritance, were necessary parties. Poore v. Clark, 2 Atk. 515.

It is no objection to an action by a lessec of a private road for an injunction to remove an obstruction that his lessors or his assignees in bankruptcy are not made parties. Semple v. London and Birmingham Ry., 9 Sim. 209.

Osborne v. Wise, 7 Car. & P. 751.

In order to prove a grant of an occupation-way through a lane to the defendant's premises, he offered two deeds, which purported to be grants by the owners of the soil of an occupation-way through the lane, to tenants of premises situated on the opposite side of the lane from the defendant's premises:—Held, that the deeds were wrongly admitted for that purpose, Reg. v. Chorley, 12 Q. B. 515; 12 Jur. 822.

The question being as to a right of way over the locus in quo, on an equitable plea that the defendant had contracted to purchase from C. a close, to which was attached the right of way, and that the plaintiff had contracted with C. to the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861. R. 802. sible on the part of the plaintiff, as to what C, said at the sale as to the close conveyed to the Liability of Party Using.]—An owner of land having a private road for the use of persons coming to his house owners.

To prove User.]—Where in trespass the defendant justified, on the ground of a right of way, and proved a constant user of the way with carts and carriages, he was allowed to put in evidence a deed 120 years old relating to the property, as appurtenant to which the way was claimed, and containing a description of the way, for the purpose of shewing that the way had always been enjoyed in conformity with the description contained in the deed. Brownserd v. Harris, 3 F. & F. 853.

When Deed Lost.]—The defendant pleaded a grant of right of way by deed, subsequently lost. The plaintiff traversed the grant. At the trial, there being conflicting testimony as to the uninterrupted user of the way, the judge directed the jury, that if, upon this issue, they thought the defendant had exercised the right of way uninterruptedly for more than twenty years by virtue of a deed, they would find for the defendant; if they thought there had been no way granted by deed, they would find for the not in the nature of a condition precedent, and plaintiff:—Held, that this direction was right. need not be alleged in the declaration. Ib. Livett v. Wilson, 3 Bing. 115; 10 Moore, 439; 3

In trespass quare clausum fregit, the defeudant pleaded that A. was seised in fee; and, being so seised, granted a right of way by non-existing grant. The plaintiff replied, traversing the grant :- Held, that on these pleadings it was not competent for the plaintiff to give evidence to shew that A. was not seised in fee for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of the grant. Cowlishaw v. Cheslyn, 1 C. & J. 48.

Occupation.]—The defendant justified a right of way over the locus in quo in the tenants and occupiers of premises adjacent thereto, and it being proved that he was only seised of the premises in respect of which the right of way was claimed, and occupied by means of a tenant, to whom the premises were demised :--Held, that he was an occupier so as to sustain the plea of justification pleaded. Hollis v. Proud, 2 D. & R. 31. S. C., nom. Proud v. Hollis, 1 B. & C. 8.

Ownership. ]-A. was possessed of a close, the only way to which was along a green lane between two other closes, one of which belonged to A, and the other to B. In the absence of any direct evidence of ownership, the jury was told that they might presume the soil of the land to belong in moieties to the owners of the adjoining closes, and that, in respect of the close at the end of the lane, A. had a mere casement :- Held, a proper direction. Smith v. Howden, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 398.

Particular Description. ]-A claim of a prescriptive right of way from A, over the defendant's close unto D., is not supported by proof that a close called C., over which the way once led, and which adjoins to D., was formerly pos-sessed by the owner of close A., and was by him conveyed in fee to another, without reserving the right of way; for thereby it appears that the prescriptive right of way does not, as claimed, extend unto D., but stops short at C. Wright v. Rattray, 1 East, 377

But where the right of way is proved to extend to the terminus ad quem, the fact of an intervening close belonging to the party claiming the right will not vitiate it. Juckson v. Shillito,

The casement was granted in 1675; there was evidence that for ten years next before the commencement of the action part of the way claimed had become public :- Held, not necessary to state in the declaration that such part had become public. Ib.

One who has a grant of an occupation-way may declare in an action against the owner of the land over which the way leads for obstructing it, although it is proved that the public in general had used the way without denial for the last twelve years. Allen v. Ormond, 8 East, 4; 9 R. R. 368

In an action for obstructing the plaintiff's right of way, the declaration claimed a right of way for himself and his servants on foot to go and return, pass and repass, and also to lead and carry away manure; the word "lead" as used in the declaration is a word of general use in England, and means the conveying of goods or materials by cart. Brunton v. Hall, 1 G. & D. 207; 1 Q. B. 792; 10 L. J., Q. B. 258.

In an action for not repairing a private road leading through the defendant's close, it is sufficient to allege that the defendant, as occupier of the close, is bound to repair. Itider v. Smith,

3 Term Rep. 766.

A servant put into the occupation of a cottage, with less wages on that account, does not occupy it as tenant, but the master may properly declare on it as his own occupation in an action for a disturbance of a right of way over the defendant's close to such cottage, and it matters not that the cottage was divided into two parts, one of which only was in the occupation of such servant, the other being occupied by a tenant paying rent. Bertie v. Beaumont, 16 East, 33. 22 R. R. 802, n.

In an action for obstructing the plaintiff in the enjoyment of an easement, he must shew, in his declaration, that the obstruction was in the place wherein the plaintiff is entitled. Thus where a declaration alleged a right to take water at a cistern and complained that the defendant wrongfully locked up a door leading to it, and prevented the plaintiff from using the distern, issue was taken on the right to take water, and judgment arrested after verdict for the plaintiff, because non constat that he had right to go through the doorway in question, although he had a right to take water. Tebhutt v. Selby, 6 A, & E. 781; 1 N. & P. 710; W. W. & D. 312; 6 L. J., K. B. 175; 1 Jnr. 309.

In an action for interfering with the plaintiffs' right of way to a certain quarry, the plaintiffs alleged, in the first paragraph of their statement of claim, that they were entitled to a right of way from the public highway through a certain gateway along a certain passage to the said quarry, and back again from the said quarry to the public highway, for themselves, their agents, servants and licensees, on foot and with horses. carts and carriages, at all times of the year; and in the second paragraph they alleged that they were entitled to a right of way from the public highway through a certain gateway along a certain passage to the said quarry, and back again from the said quarry to the public highway, for themselves, their agents, servants and licensees, proved being only larger than the essement of not and with horses and carts, at all times alleged, and not different in kind. Duncan v. convenient and necessary for the working of the Long, b Q. B. 904; 14 L.J., Q. B. 185; 9 Jun. 346.

Held, also, that the obligation to repair was other material therefrom. On motion to set aside the first and second paragraphs of the state—at their free will and pleasure. Replication ment of claim:—Held, that the statement of traversing such right—Held, that, under the claim was sufficient. Kennare (Lord). Clasy, 12 L. R., Ir. 374.

Pleas—Sufficiency of.] — Action for breaking and entering a close called the Hencroft. Plea, that C., being owner in fee of the close, granted to H., by deed, a way over the close for the occupiers of a dye-house, and that the defendant being in the occupation of the dye-house, committed the trespass. The plaintiff set out the deed in his replication. By the deed C. granted to H, all those newly-erected buildings standing and being partly on the close called the Hencroft, and partly on B. C., together with all and singular out-houses, edifices, buildings, roads, ways, &c., and appurtenances, with the premises usually held, occupied, or enjoyed, C. reserving to himself exclusively Hencroft, with the rights, privileges, and appurtenances within and to the same belonging :- Held, that the plea was bad, in omitting to aver that the way had been usually held, occupied or enjoyed with the Hencroft. Tutton v. Hummersley, 3 Ex. 279; 18 L. J., Ex. 162.

To a declaration quare clausum fregit, the defendant pleaded that he was the occupier of a close called B. M., with certain lands thereunto adjoining, and another close called M., with two other closes next adjoining thereto, and that he, and the occupiers of the several closes and lands, had enjoyed a right of way for twenty years from the close called B. M., over the locus in quo, into and unto the close called M. :-Held, that inasmuch as the termini of the way elaimed were specially described by name, and two closes at least in respect of which the way was claimed were specially described by name, and as the defendant was not bound to prove his right in respect of any but the two named closes, the plea was sufficiently certain, though all the closes pien was summetricly certain, rhough at the choses in respect of which the right of way was claimed were not specially described, cither by name or by all their metes and bounds. Holt v. Daze, 16 Q. B. 990; 20 L. J., Q. B. 365; 15 Jnr. 1074.

A plea of a right of way, under 2 & 3 Will, 4 c. 71, s. 5, must state the enjoyment to be "as of right," within the very terms of the act. Halford v. Hankinson, D. & M. 473; 5 Q. B. 584; 13 L. J., Q. B. 115; 8 Jur. 463.

In pleading a prescriptive right of way it is not necessary to describe all the closes intervening between the two termini. Simpson v. Leuthwaite, 3 B. & Ad. 226; 1 L. J., K. B. 126.

To a plea of forty or of twenty years' enjoy-ment of a way, a licence, if it covers the whole time, must be pleaded. Tiehle v. Brown, 4 A. & E. 369; 6 N. & M. 230; 1 H. & W. 769; 5 L. J.,

K. B. 119.

But a verbal or other licence, given and aeted on within the forty or twenty years, may be proved under a traverse of the enjoyment as of right; and this, whether such licence is granted for a single time of using, or for a definite period. Ib.

In a plea it is sufficient to allege that the user has existed for forty years before the commencement of the suit, and it need not be alleged to have been for forty years before the act complained of in the declaration. Wright v. Wildiams, 1 M. & W. 77; 1 Tyr. & G. 375; 5 L. J., Ex. 107.

issue, the plaintiff might shew that the defendant had a right of way for horses, carts, waggons, and carriages for certain purposes only, and not for all, and was not compelled to new assign : and might shew that the purpose for which the defendant had used the road, and in respect of which the action was brought, was not one of those to which the right extended. Cowling v. Higginson, 4 M. & W. 245; 1 H. & H. 269; 7 L. J., Ex. 265.

To an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close (which was set out by abuttals), and pulling down the posts and bars standing thereon. Plea, that there was a public footway over the close, and that the defendant, because the posts and bars obstructed the way, pulled them down. Replication, traversing the footway :- Held, that on these pleadings the defendant was entitled to a verdict, on proof of a right of footway in any direction over the close, and was not bound to prove a way over the place where the posts and bars stood. Webber v. Sparks, 10 M. & W. 485; 12 L. J., Ex. 41.

A plea, that defendant was seised in his demesne as of fee, and that he and all those whose estate, &c., have a right of way for himself, his and their farmers and tenants, occupiers, &e., is good, without alleging that the defendant is occupier. Stott v. Stott, 16 East, 343; 14

- Divisibility of Claims. ]-In an action for an obstruction to a right of way, the declaration claimed a right of way for himself and his servants, on foot, to go and return, pass and repass, and also to lead and carry away all the manure which might be made on his premises. Plea, denying the right:—Held, that this right was not divisible; and that proof that the plaintiff had a right of footway only, would not support a verdiet for him on this issue. Brunton v. Hall, 1. Q. B. 792; 1 G. & D. 207; 10 L. J., Q. B. 258; 6 Jur. 340.

Replications-Validity of ]-To a plea of enjoyment of a right of way over the plaintiff's close, by the occupiers of a close called W., for twenty years next before the commencement of the action, the plaintiff replied, that, before the period of twenty years, A. was seised in fee as well of the close mentioned in the declaration as of the close called W., and continued so seised during part of the period of twenty years, until he died so seised :- Held, bad, for that unity of seisin was not inconsistent with the right as alleged in the plea, and unity of possession (if that was meant by the replication) might have been given in evidence under a traverse of the right as alleged in the plea. England v. Wall, 10 M. & W. 699; 12 L. J., Ex. 273.

A replication of a life estate to a plea of enjoyment for forty years, must shew that the plaintiff is the person entitled to the reversion expectant on the determination of the life estate. Wright v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 77; 1 Tyr. & G. 375; 5 L. J., Ex. 107.

way, and that the gate being wrongfully erected across the same, he took it down and deposited it in a convenient place for the use of the plaintiff, to which the plaintiff replies a subsequent conversion; proof that the defendant put the gate upon his own premises, whence the plaintiff might have taken it if he had pleased, will not sustain the replication. Houghton v. Butler, 4 Term Rep. 364; 2 R. R. 411.

To an action of trespass, the defendant pleaded a right of way across the locus in quo, for the occupiers of B. field, on foot, and with eattle and carriages, enjoyed as of right and without interruption for twenty years before the com-mencement of the suit. The replication traversed so much of the alleged right of way as was claimed to be used with carriages, and as to the residue of the plea, set forth an act of parliament, under which a navigation company, before the commencement of the twenty years, made a haling-path for towing vessels along the river, across the locus in quo, into B. field; that after the commencement of the twenty years, under the powers of another act, another haling-path was set out near the river, but also across the locus in quo, and into B. field; and that thereupon the navigation company abandoned the former haling-path, which thenceforth ceased to be used as such : that, before and at the commencement of the twenty years, the occupiers of B. field used and enjoyed, as of right and without interruption, by virtue and under the provisions of the first act, a way along the first-mentioned but that, from that time until the commencement of the suit, the occupiers of B. field, claiming right to the way, as a continuation of the right before enjoyed by them under the act of parliament, continued to use the same way; which way, and the use and enjoyment along the haling-path as aforesaid, is the same way, and the same use and enjoyment thereof as in the plea mentioned, except as to the user with carriages:-Held, that the replication was good; that it disclosed facts shewing that the defendant's user, although as of right and without interruption (luring the twenty years, within the meaning of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, ss. 2, 5, was not such as would, before the statute, have been sufficient to prove a claim by prescription or nonexisting grant; and that those facts must be replied specially, and could not have been given in evidence under a traverse of the right of way alleged in the plea. Kinlack v. Nevile, 6 M. & W. 795; 10 L. J., Ex. 248.

To a declaration in trespass quare clausum fregit the defendant pleaded, that he and the former occupiers of a house and land had, for twenty years, used and enjoyed as of right a cer-tain way on foot and with horses, &c., from and out of a common highway, towards, into, through, and over the plaintiff's close, to the defendant's house and lands, and back, at all times of the year, at their free will and pleasure. The replication averred, that the defendant, &c., used and enjoyed the right of way mentioned in the plea, but that they did so under the plaintiff's leave and licence. At the trial, it appeared that the defendant and the former occupiers of his house and land had an admitted right of way thence

If, to an action for pulling down and carrying | the highway, to a close called Reddings, and that away a gate, the defendant pleads a right of | for the last twenty years they had had a license for the last twenty years they had had a licence from the plaintiff to use, whenever they pleased, a way from the defendant's house and lands over the locus in quo to the highway and back, when they had not any intention of going to Reddings: -Held, that the replication was not supported by this evidence, and that the plaintiff was bound to shew a licence co-extensive with the right claimed in the plea, and admitted by the replication. > New Assignments-Validity. ]-To an action for entering the plaintiff's close, and enting down the rails there standing. Plea, a right of way across the close, and because the rails were there standing in and across the way, a justification of their removal. Replication, that the rails were not standing in or across the way, and issue thereou :—Held, that the defendant maintained the issue by proving that some of the rails cut down were standing on a highway; and that the plaintiff could not recover in respect of the rails which were not on the highway, and that, in order to do so, he should have new assigned. Bravegirdle v. Peavoch, 8 Q. B. 174 : 15 L. J., Q. B. 73 : 10 Jur. 9.

Trespass quare clausing fregit, with abuttals. Plea, a right of way. New assignment, trespass stopped up the way in the former plea men-tioned, wherefore the defendant did necessarily go a little out of the highway, qua est eaden. At the trial, it appeared that there was a public haling-path, across the locus in quo, on foot and with earlier with the dealer of the haling-path; the defendant claimed as public, but which the plaintiff had stopped up, and it was proposed to try the question as to the existence of a public right over the second way. The judge being of opinion that no issue was raised as to the second way, directed a verdict for the plaintiff :- Held, that the direction was right, for the precise locality being material to the defence, the defendant was bound to shew it in his pleadings, Ellison v. Iles, 3 P. & D. 391; 11 A. & E. 665; 9 L. J., Q. B. 103.

The 15 & 16 Viet. c, 76, ss. 77, 79, which allow a plaintiff to traverse the whole of a plea by a general denial, only enable him to traverse generally what he might have traversed before, and where a plaintiff, before that statute, must have new assigned, he must do so still. A declaration contained two counts, the second of which charged the trespass on other days and times, and on other parts of the closes in the first count mentioned. The defendant pleaded a right of way over the closes. The plaintiff traversed the right of way, and new assigned. To the new assignment there was a payment of money into court, and an acceptance of it :-Held, that the plea justified all the trespasses in the declaration; and that the defendant, there-Wood v. Robertson v. Gantlett, 16 M. & W. 289; 4 D. & L. 548; 16 L. J., Ex. 156.

To a declaration in case for an injury arising from smoke issuing out of the defendant's factory chimneys, the defendant justified under a prescriptive right to have the smoke issuing from the chimneys. This plea was traversed, and the plaintiff new assigned. It was proved that one of the chimneys whence the smoke issued had been erected for more than twenty years :--Held, that upon the issue raised by the traverse to this plea, the defendant was entitled to have the verdict entered for him, Bennett v.

Thompson, 4 W. R. 594.

Verdict, on Jury's Finding.]—A defendant in a plea justified nuder an alleged right of way with horses, carts, and carriages, for the purpose of fetching goods and water from a navigable river. The jury affirmed the right set up, so far as it related to the fetching of water, but negatived it as to the rest :- The court directed the tree it is to the ress:—Inc cours arreads the verdict to be entered distributively (for the plaintiff as to the goods, for the defendant as to the water). # C. LIGHT AND AIR. 1. RIGHT TO.

a. Generally,

Shutting out a man's house from public view is not a legal injury. Butt v. Imperial Gaslight Co., L. R. 2 Ch, 158; 16 L. T. 820; 15 W. R. 92,

An owner of ancient lights is entitled not only to sufficient light for the purpose of his then business, but to all the light which he has enjoyed previously to the interruption sought to be restrained. Yates v. Jack, L. R. 1 Ch. 295; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 305; 14 L. T. 151; 14 W. R. 618.

Light and air are bestowed by Providence for the common benefit of men, and so long as the reasonable use by one man of this common property does not do actual and perceptible damage

An act of parliament alone can give any person the right of taking the property of another without his consent on payment of an adequate pecuniary compensation, and the right to light and air is as much property as the land which enjoys this easement on the land of another, Dunball v. Walters, 35 Beav. 565.

Where a purchaser takes with notice of adjoining windows, he is thereby put upon his inquiry as to whether they are privileged or not, and if privileged, it is immaterial whether as modern windows by grant, or as ancient by prescription.

Miles v. Tobin, 17 L. T. 432; 16 W. R. 465.

Windmill.]—An owner of a windmill cannot claim, either by prescription, or by presumption of a grant arising from twenty years' acquiescence, to be entitled to the free and uninterrupted passage of the currents of wind and air to rupted passage of the carrents of wind and are to his mill. Webb v. Bird, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 268; 30 L. J., C. P. 384; 4 L. T. 445; 9 W. R. 899. Affirmed on appeal, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 841; 31 L. J., C. P. 335; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 621—Ex. Ch.

Vertical Column of Air over Room.] - An owner of two contiguous houses in the city of Loudon sold one to the defendant by a conveyance which correctly marked out the ground site of the house conveyed. One of the first-floor rooms in the house retained by the owner projected over the site, and was supported by the other house:—Held, that the vertical column of air over so much of the room as overhung the defendant's site belonged, not to the owner, but to the defendant. Corbett v. Hill, 39 L. J., Ch. 547; L. R. 9 Eq. 671; 22 L. T. 268.

Unity of Possession.]-In a suit to restrain a defendant from building so as to obstruct the plaintiff's ancient lights, it was proved that for a period of more than twenty years, extending to But where the defendant pleaded a right of ay ou foot, and with horses, earthe, earts, wag on foot, and with horses, earthe, earts, wag, and other carriages at all times, for the was no cyclence of there ever having been any within a very short time before the bill was filed, unity of title; and it was proved that before the unity of possession commenced, the access of light to the windows had been cujoyed as far back as living memory went :- Held, that the morial, independently of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71 : for that the statute does not take away any of the modes of claiming easements which existed before the passing. Ayusley v. Glaver, 44 L. J., Ch. 523; L. R. 10 Ch. 283; 32 L. T. 345; 23 W. R. 459,

b. By Statute.

Indefeasible. —The right conferred or recognised by 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, is an absolute indefeasible right to the enjoyment of the light without reference to the purpose for which it is used. Youngev. Shaper, 27 L. T. 643: 21 W. R. 135.

The right to ancient lights depends upon this rate right to another against appear to statute, and not upon any presumption of grant or fiction of licence; and being an absolute indefeasible and unqualified statutory right, cannot be lost by a subsequent intermission of enjoyment, not amounting to intentional abandonto the right of another to the similar use of it, no ment, nor can it be prejudiced by an attempt to extend the access of light beyond that access which has so become indefeasible. Tapling v. Jones, 11 H. L. Cas. 290; 20 C. B. (N.S.) 106; 34 L. J., C. P. 342; 11 Juv. (N.S.) 309; 12 L. T. 555; 13 W. R. 617.

How acquired.]—A right to the access and use of light to a house cannot be acquired, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 8, by the lapse of time during which the owner of the house, or his occupying tenant, is also the occupier of the land over which the right would extend. Ladymens v. Grare, L. R. 6 Ch. 763; 25 L. T. 52; 19 W. R. 863.

During such period of unity of occupation, the running of the twenty years under the statute is only suspended. Ib.

Semble, that the owner in fee of land demised for a term of years is subject to any right to for eacess and use of light over his land which may be acquired by the owner of an adjoining house during the demise. Th.

Retrospective J.—The 2 & S Will. 4, c, 71, s, 3, limiting twenty years as the period for acquiring an indefeasible right to the access and use of light, is retrospective, so that such an easement may be acquired by ritrue of enjoyment prior to the passing of the act. Simper v. Foley, 2 Johns. & H. 555; f b. L. 669.

Effect of Act on Nature and Extent of. ]—The 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, has not altered the law as to the nature and extent of light to which the owner of an ancient light is entitled. Kelk v. Peursin, L. R. 6 Ch. 809; 24 L. T. 890; 19 W. R. 665.

The owner of an ancient light is cutifled to prevent his neighbour from obstructing the access of light, so as to render the house possessing the ancient light substantially less fit for occupation. 1b.

The right of an owner of ancient lights is to prevent his neighbour from obstructing the access of sufficient light and air to such an extent as to render his house substantially less comfortable and enjoyable, and the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, has not altered the nature of the right or the principle on which it is to be determined whether it has been intringed, but has userely substituted a statutory title for an assumed grant. City of London Brewery Ch. v. Tranand, 43 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 9 Ch. 212; 29 L. T. 755; 22 W. R. 172.

"Access"—" The Right thereto."—The word access in s. 3 of the Prescription Act refers not to the access through the aperture of the jominant tenement, but to the freedom of passage over the servicut tenement, although the aperture which admits the light into the dominant tenement defines the area which is to be kept free over the servicut tenement. "The right thereto" means the right to the same access and use of light to and for any building. Scott v. Zape. 55 L. J., Ch. 426; 31 Ch. D. 554; 54 L. T. 399; 34 W. R. 465; 50 J. P. 645.

One of Light.]—The right acquired under the Prescription Act, s. 3, is a right to the access and use of the whole or a substantial part of the particular cone of light which has passed for the statutory period over the servient to the dominant tenement. It.

"User of."]—The word "nse" in s. 3 of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71 (the Prescription Act), points to the actual admission of light into a building, and not to the existence of any particular user either in kind or degree, the object of the section being to give title to relief, but not to define its extent. Mackey v. Scattish Wildows Frond Life Assurance Society, Ir. R. 11 Bq. 541—C. A.

"Other Building" — Dwelling house or Workshop.]—The words "other building" used in the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will, 4, c. 71), s. 3, in connection with any "dwelling-house, workshop—" mean some building of a like charwith a dwelling-house or workshop, and will not necessarily include every structure which may be a building for the purposes of the Metropolitan Building Acts. Accordingly, a permanent structure used for storing and seasoning timber and shewing it to customers, which consisted of apright banks of timber or standards fixed in stone bases built on brick piers, with cross-beams and diagonal from braces, divided into floors or stagings with open unglazed ends or apertures between the uprights, and which served for drying the timber and also for admitting light, is not a "building" within s. 3, so as by twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment of the access and use of light to and for the apertures, to have acquired an absolute and indefeasible right thereto. Harris v. De Pinna, 56 L. J., Ch, 344; 33 Ch. D. 238; 54 L. T. 38; 50 J. P. 308-C. A.

- Unconsecrated Chapel-Memorial Windows-Mural Decorations-Special Purpose. ]-The effect of the decision in Moore v. Hall (3 Q. B. D. 178) is, that light required for a special purpose is not protected under the Prescription Act, unless it has been previously used for that special or a like purpose, or there is a reasonable probability of its being so used. There is, however, no rule that such special amount of light must have been used for the ordinary prescriptive length of time. A memorial chapel, unconsecrated, used for Church of England and Presbyterian services and for confirmation and other classes, and decorated with stained windows and mural mosnics :- Held, to be a "building within s. 3 of the Prescription Act, entitled to protection with regard to the light necessary not only for conducting the services and classes, but also for the designed illumination of the works of art. Alt. Gen. v. Queen Anne Mansions, 60 L. T. 759: 37 W. R. 572.

Inchoste Right—Injunction.]—Notwithstauding s. 4 of the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), the court will not interfere by injunction to protect the inchoste right to an easement of light, although the light may have actually been enjeyed without intercuption for more than ninchen years next before action brought. Hatterwee (Lord) v. Souver Commissioners, 65 L. J., Ch. 81; [1895] P. Ch. 708; 13 R. 795; 73 L. T. 116; 44 W. R. 124; 59 J. P. 728.

Actal Enjoyment.]—An actual enjoyment of lights for twenty years, even under a permission verbally asked for by the occupier of a house, and given by the person laving right to obstruct, is sufficient to confer a right under 2 c. 8 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3. The enjoyment under that section need not be as of right or adverse. London Corporation v. Practever' Co., 2 M. & Rob. 409.

Under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, a party is not the servient tenement has been demised by the entitled of right to the access and use of light over contiguous land, unless his enjoyment thereof has been for the full period of twenty years, in the character of an easement, distinct from the enjoyment of the land itself. Harbridge v. Warwick, 3 Ex. 552; 18 L. J., Ex. 245.

In order to establish the right to the access of an extraordinary amount of light necessary for a particular purpose or business to an ancient window, open, uninterrupted, and known enjoyment of such light in the manner in which it is at present enjoyed and claimed must be shewn to research of twenty and cannet mass be snown for a period of twenty years. Lanfranchi v. Machemsie, 36 L. J., Ch. 518; L. R. 4 Eq. 421; 16 L. T. 114; 15 W. R. 614. But see Lazarus v. Artistic Photographic Co., 66 L. J., Ch. 522; [1897] 2 Ch. 214; 76 L. T. 457; 45 W. R. 614.

To acquire a right to the access of light and air by actual enjoyment, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, it is not necessary that the house should be occupied, or that it should be fit for immediate occupation during the statutory period. Courtauld v. Legh, 38 L. J., Ex. 45; L. R. 4 Ex. 126; 19 L. T. 737; 17 W. R. 466.

A house was structurally completed, the roof finished, the floors laid, and the windows put in, but it was not internally completed nor fit for habitation. It so remained till within a period maintain an action for the obstruction of its windows. Ib.

Where a house was, twenty years before an action brought, structurally completed, the windows being placed, the joists laid, and the roof slated, but the window sashes were not then in, and it was otherwise not completed internally so as to be fit for habitation, an injunction was granted to restrain an interference with the access of light to the windows. Courtuald v. Legh (L. R. 4 Ex. 126) followed. Collis v. Laugher, 63 L. J., Ch. 851; [1894] 3 Ch. 659; 8 R. 760; 71 L. T. 226; 43 W. R. 202.

The title to light acquired under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, by a twenty years' enjoyment is a right to a certain amount of light only, and does not prevent the owner of one of the adjacent tenements from altering the aperture through which that amount of light approaches. Maguire

v. Grattan, 16 W. R. 1189; Ir. R. 2 Eq. 246. Under 2 & 3 Will, 4, c. 71, ss, 3 and 4, a party is prescriptively entitled to the access and use of light, if his enjoyment thereof commenced twenty years next before the bringing of an action in which the right is contested; provided such enjoyment has not at any time been interrupted. and the interruption acquiesced in for a whole and the interruption acquisecer in for a whole year. Flight v. Thomas, 8 Cl. & F. 231; West, 671; 5 Jur. 811. S. C., in K. B. and Ex. Ch., 11 A. & E. 688; 3 P. & D. 442; 10 L. J., Ex. 529.

The period of twenty years' enjoyment, which confers a right to the access of light, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, is, by s. 4, the period of twenty years next before any suit or action wherein the claim to the right was brought into question, and is not limited to the period of twenty years next before the pending suit or action. Cooper v. Hubbuck, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 456; 31 L. J., C. P. 323; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 575; 6 L. T. 826.

A tenant of premises can, by enjoying access of light for more than twenty years over adjoining premises demised to another tenant by the same landlord, acquire an absolute right thereto house for the use of lights is not an interruption under s. 3 of the Prescription Act. The fact that of the enjoyment within 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3.

landlord subsequently to such right being acquired, and the fact that the tenant of the dominant tenement has, after the expiration of his lease, remained in possession under an agreement, are immaterial. Robson v. Ednards, 62 L. J., Ch. 378; [1893] 2 Ch. 146; 3 R. 336; 68 L. T. 195; 44 W. R. 569. The use of light has been "enjoyed" with a building within the meaning of s. 3 of the Prescription Act, if the owner of the building has had the amenity or advantage of using the access of light. It is not necessary that there should have been a continuous user. Copper v. Straker, 58 L. J., Ch. 26; 40 Ch. D. 21; 59 L. T. 849; 37 W. R. 137.

The owner of a building having windows with movable shutters, which are opened at his pleasure for admission of light, acquires a right to light under s. 3 of the act at the end of twenty years, if he opens the shutters at any time he pleases for the admission of light during those twenty years, and if also there is no such interruption of the access of the light over the neighbouring land as is contemplated by s. 4. In such a case, if it be proved that the windowopenings have remained unchanged for twenty years, and that the shutters were constructed so that they might be opened or closed at the pleaof twenty years before action, and was then sure of the owner of the building, the onus is finished:—Held, that the owner was entitled to thrown upon the owner of the neighbouring land to prove that the right has not been acquired.

> Interruption of Continuous Enjoyment. ]twenty years' enjoyment which, under 2 & 3 Will, 4, c. 71, s. 3, gives an absolute and indefeasible right to the access of light, need not be an enjoyment in fact "without interruption" for the period mentioned, but an enjoyment without such an interruption as is contemplated by s. 4, viz. "an interruption submitted to or acquiesced in by the party interrupted for one year" after notice. Glover v. Coleman, 44 L. J., C. P. 66; L. R. 10 C. P. 108; 31 L. T. 684; 23 W. R. 163

> And, in order to negative submission to or aconjescence in the interruption, it is not necessary that the party interrupted shall have brought an action or a suit, or taken any active steps to remove the obstruction: it is enough to shew that he has in a reasonable manner communicated to the party causing the interruption that he does not really submit to or acquiesce in 77.

When, therefore, the plaintiff had for more than twenty years enjoyed the access of light to his workshop, through a window against which the defendant had about forteen months before action brought erected a permanent building which obstructed it, and the plaintiff had taken no active measures to cause the obstruction to be removed, but had several times, himself or by his tenant, complained of and protested against it : -Held, that it was a question proper to be left to the jury whether or not there had been such a submission to or an acquiescence in the interruption of the enjoyment as to deprive the plaintiff of the right to the light. Ib, Semble, that the same sort of evidence of user or enjoyment need not be given in the case of a light as in the case of a claim of a right of way.

Fluctuating Interruption - Onus of Proof. |- In an action for an injunction damages for interference with the ancient lights of the plaintiff's house by raising an old party wall fifteen feet above its original height, the defendant pleaded that he had for several years been in the habit of piling up empty packingcases against the wall to a height exceeding the new wall. The evidence was conflicting as to the minimum height of the pile of packing-cases, and as to the time they remained there, but it was proved that they were removed from time to time, some to be returned to the owners, and the rest to be broken up :-Held, that there had been no interruption of the plaintiff's enjoyment of light within the 4th section of the Prescription Act, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an inquivy as to damages, Presland v. Bingham, 41 Ch. D. 268: 60 L. T. 433: 37 W. R. 385: 53 J. P. 583-C. A.

Per Cotton and Lindley, L.J.:-Semble, if in an action for obstruction of light it appears on the plaintiff's evidence that there has been some interruption, which in its nature is permanent, the owns is on the plaintiff of proving that such interruption did not in fact continue with his acquiescence for a year; but if the interruption is in its nature fluctuating and temporary, the onus of proving that it in fact continued and was acquiesced in by the plaintiff for a year, lies on the defendant, Ib,

Uninterrupted Access-Definite Channel. In order to acquire an absolute and indefeasible right to light under s. 3, it must be shewn not only that there has been an uninterrupted access of light to the building in respect of which the easement is claimed, but also that the light has reached the building by one and the same channel for the statutory period. Without therefore deciding whether the particular structure was a Without therefore "building" within the Prescription Act, s. 3 :-Held, that as from the nature of the structure and the mode of carrying on business, timber would be so piled as from time to time to block up one or other of the apertures so that the plaintiffs could not prove that there had been an uninterrupted access of light by any one aperture for the statutory period, their claim to an easement failed. - Rights of Crown and its Assignees or Lessees. |- The Crown not being named in s. 3 of the Prescription Act is not bound thereby; therefore, where land had been held upon trust for the Crown from a date prior to the Prescription Act:-Held, that no prescriptive right to the access of light over such land to adjoining buildings had been acquired against the Crown during its beneficial ownership, although the legal estate therein was not vested in the Crown, and that purchasers from the Crown were entitled to build thereon so as to interfere with such access of light. Perry v. Eames, 60 L. J., Ch. 345; [1891] 1 Ch. 658; 64 L. T. 438; 39 W. R.

Enjoyment against Lessee of the Crown. ]-Sect. 2 of the Prescription Act does not apply to easements of light, which are governed by s. 3 — Unity of Possession.]—A right by way and the subsequent sections, which have to be of easement to the uninterrupted access of air not

s. 3, is not bound by it. Wheaton v. Maple, 62 L. J., Ch. 963; [1893] 3 Ch. 48; 2 R. 549; 69 L. T. 208; 41 W. R. 677—C. A.

Limited and qualified easements are not within the scope of the Prescription Act; accordingly, an easement of light cannot arise under s. 3 as against a lessee of the Crown, to exist only during the continuance of the lease. Ib.

Presumption of Lost Grant. ] - The assignee of a Crown lease for ninety-nine years from 1815 surrendered it in 1892, and agreed to take a new lease, under which he proceeded to erect a building so as to interfere with the access of light which W. had enjoyed in respect of a house on contiguous land without interruption since 1852, when such house was built. In 1893 W. commenced an action to restrain this building :- Held, that there was no ground for presuming a lost grant, or for inferring immenorial prescription, in favour of W. Principle of Bright v. Walker (1 C. M. & R. 211) followed; Perry v. Eames ([1891] 1 Ch. 658) approved.

Lease preventing Right being acquired—"Adjoining or contiguous"—Medium filum.]— A declaration in a lease empowering the lessors, their successors and assigns, to erect or suffer to be creeted on any of the adjoining or contiguous premises any buildings, whether such buildings should or should not diminish the lessee's light and air, prevents the losses from acquiring a right to light under s. 3 of the Prescription Act. Where a lessor is owner of land on both sides of a street and leases one side to A, and the other side to B, :- Held, that A,'s land might be said to be "adjoining or contiguous" to B.'s land. Ib.

Access of Air by undefined Channel. ]to a free passage for wind to a windmill is not such an easement as comes within 2 & 3 Will, 4, c. 71 (Prescription Act), s. 2, which section refers to easements upon the surface of land capable of being interrupted. A grant of a free passage of air to a windmill over the soil of another cannot be presumed from twenty years' user of the windmill; for the presumption of a grant only arises where the owner of the servient tenement had it in his power to prevent the enjoyment, and did not; and it is not practically in the power of an owner of neighbouring land to preclude the passage of air to a windmill. Ib.

The access of air to the chimneys of a building cannot, as against the occupier of neighbouring land, be claimed either as a natural right of property, or as an easement by prescription from the time of legal memory, or by a lost grant, or under the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71). coming by any definite channel, but over the general unlimited surface of the alleged servient tenement cannot be acquired under the Prescription Act, s. 2, by mere enjoyment for the statutory period; and the fact that the alleged dominant and servient tenements were both held under a common lessor, either of itself, or at any rate when coupled with the fact that the lease of the servient tenement was the earlier, negatives any claim to the easement as arising out of implied covenant. Harris v. De Pinna, 56 L. J., Ch. 344; 33 Ch. D. 238; 54 L. T. 770; 50 J. P. 486.

____Nuisance.]—Where one of two neighbouring owners of land, by something done on his own premises, causes such difficulty in ventilating his neighbour's premises that smells which before were harmless become a nuisance, no action will lie against him for a nuisance, unless he has sent on to his neighbour's land something which makes the air impure. Bryant v. Leferer (4 C. P. D. 172) followed. A right to have free access of air, not through a defined aperture or channel, but generally over a neighbouring property, cannot (in the absence of agreement, express or implied) be established; not on the ground of prescription at common law, unless the house in respect of which it is claimed has been in existence since before the commencement of legal memory; nor under s. 2 of the Prescription Act, because the passage of air is not an easement within that section; nor on the presumption of a the lease of rights and easements was controlled lost grant, because the enjoyment of the alleged by the anticeedent agreement, which was to be right could not have been interrupted. Custom in City.] — A prescriptive title is acquired under 2 & 3 Will, 4, c, 71, by an adverse enjoyment for twenty years, without interruption, of the access of light to the windows of a house in the city of London, notwithstanding a local custom of the city for the owners of an ancient messuage or foundation to build thereon to such height as the owner may please against the windows of any adjoining house, and darken them. Onus of Proof. - A plaintiff who alleges a twenty years' enjoyment of light must prove affirmatively a prima facie case of enjoyment. But, when he has done this, the defendant may «lisplace the prima facie case, either by proving years' user or by grant from the owner of the the existence of an obstruction at the commencement of the twenty years, or a statutory inter-ruption of the enjoyment at some time during ruption of the enjoyment at some time turning the twenty years, or by shewing by other evidence that the plaintiffs evidence of enjoyment caunot be relied upon. Statutory Power of London School Board. The School Board of London having, under the Elementary Education Act, 1870, and the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, acquired land as a site for a school, proceeded to build so as to interfere with the light of an adjoining owner whose houses the board had not acquired power to take :- Held, that the board was not entitled by its building to interfere with the plaintiff's rights, leaving him to claim compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 68, but that he was entitled to an injunction. Clark v. London School Bourd, 48 L. J., Ch. 421; L. R. 9 Ch. 120; 29 L. T. 903; 22 W. R. 354.

c. By Grant.

Grant controlled by prior Agreement. ]-An agreement to grant A, a lease, in a form set out in a schedule, of property in the city, as soon as the house then in course of erection by A, on the property should be completed, contained a provise that nothing therein contained should give A. a right to any easement which did not belong to the premises agreed to be demised as they then existed, not to any right of light and air derived from over the houses opposite (which belonged to the lessors). The lease subsequently granted was of the land together with the honse crected thereon, and all lights, easements, and appurtenances thereto belonging, in accordance with the scheduled form :- Held, that the grant by the lease of lights and easements was controlled houses from building so as to obstruct the access of light and air to his premises from over such honses. Saluman v. Giorer, 44 L. J., Ch. 551; L. R. 20 Eq. 444; 32 L. T. 792; 23 W. R. 722.

Parol Agreement-Part Performance.]-The plaintiff and defendant, the owners of adjoining houses, being about to rebuild, entered into a verbal agreement that the plaintiff should pull down a party wall and rebuild it lower and thinner, and that each party should be at liberty to make a lean-to skylight with the lower end resting on the party wall. The plaintiff rebuilt the party wall and erected a lean-to skylight on his side of it as agreed; the defendant also erected a skylight on his side, but instead of a lean-to, so shaped it as to obstruct the access of light to the plaintiff's premises more than the agreed lean-to skylight would have done:— Held, that the effect of the agreement was to give to each party an easement of light over the other's land; and that the plaintiff, having performed the agreement on his part, was entitled to have it enforced on the part of the defendant, Mc Manus v. Cooke, 5: L. J., Ch. 662; 35 Ch. D. 681; 56 L. T. 900; 35 W. R. 754; 51 J. P. 708.

By Covenant. ]—There is no difference in the right of an owner of land to the ordinary casement of light, whether it is acquired by twenty servient tenement; and if the grant is accompanied by a covenant for quiet enjoyment of the premises, such covenant does not enlarge the right of the covenantee so as to entitle him to an injunction in equity to restrain an obstruction where the damage is not sufficient to enable him

But it is otherwise where the right to light possession of the house from the lessee for breach case a court of equity will grant an injunction without regard to the amount of damage. Ib.

Implied Reservation of Light in adjoining Tenements.]-By the grant of part of a tenement there will pass to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements over the other part of the tenement which are necessary to the enjoyment of the part granted and have been hitherto used therewith; but, as a general rule there is no corresponding implication in favour of the grantor, though there are certain exceptions to this, as in the case of ways of necessity. A workshop and an adjacent piece of land belonging to the same owner, were put up for sale by auction. The workshop was not then sold, but the piece of land was then sold, and was soon afterwards conveyed to the purchaser. A month after this the vendor agreed to sell the workshop to another person, and in due time conveyed it to him. The workshop had windows overlooking and receiving their light from the piece of land first sold :- Held, that as the vendor had not when he conveyed the piece of land, reserved the right of access of light to the windows, no such right passed to the purchaser of the workshop, and that the purchaser of the piece of land could build so as to obstruct the windows of the workshop. Ib.

Held, that whatever might have been the

Where a man, being seised in fee in possession of a house with windows, and of an adjoining field over which the light required for the window passes, devises the house to one person and the field to another, the right to light over the field is comprised in the devise of the house. In 1875 W. conveyed land to the trustees of a religious body who were desirous of erecting a chapel thereon. The deed of conveyance set forth fully the trusts upon which the grantees were to hold the hand, including trusts to erect a chapel in such manner as the grantees should with the sanction of the religious body deem necessary or expedient, and trusts in certain events to let, sell, or mortgage the lands and buildings; the conveyance also contained a covenant by the grantees with W. that all windows in the chapel looking out on the other land of W. should be of fluted or ground glass. There were no buildings upon the land at the date of the grant, and no plans or specificationsof the proposed chapel were submitted to W. for his approval. In February, 1878, the grantees commenced to build a chanel having windows looking out upon the land retained by W. Ju November, 1878, W, entered into an agreement to sell this land; and it was shortly afterwards conveyed by him to the defendants, who in May, 1890, commenced to build thereon in such a manner as to obstruct the light of the chapel :-Held, that W. had, in effect, given permission to the trustees of the chapel to erect such a building as they thought fit; and that, the chapel having been erected in a reasonable manner, neither W nor his assigns could complain of the position of the chapel or of the way in which it was lighted. That, it having been within the contemplation of the parties to the conveyance of 1875 that a chapel would be built on the land conveyed. having windows looking out on the land retained by W., W. and his assigns were under an implied obligation not to do anything to obstruct such windows. Building Scheme.]—The mortgagor in possession of certain lands which were the subject of a building scheme granted a lease of a house and land forming part of the property. Subsequently, the mortgagees sold the adjoining land, and the purchaser erected a hoarding which obstructed the access of light to the house in the lease. The hourding was not necessary for carrying out the building scheme, but to secure might have, the fee of the lands opposite the privacy for a recreation ground:—Held, that the plaintiff's house, and erected buildings thereon, lessee was entitled to an injunction to restrain the obstruction of light. The corporation of a town granted a lease to the plaintiffs of a piece of land and a newly creeted building "with the rights, members, and appurtenances to the said premises belonging. The building abutted on a passage twenty feet wide, which the corporation agreed to keep open, and on the other side of the passage were old buildings about twenty-five feet high. The corporation demised the land on the other side of the passage to the defendant, who erected on the site of the old buildings a house eighty feet high, which materially interfered with the plaintiffs' light. The land on both sides of the passage was part of a larger piece of land laid out by the corporation under a building scheme for the improvement of the town :- Held, that there was poration not to obstruct the plaintiff's light which was to be implied from the relation in which they had placed themselves to the plaintiffs by granting them the lease, must be measured by the circumstances existing at the date of the lease and known to both parties; that having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs knew that the land was being laid out for building, and that they had stipulated that there should be a The conveyance to D. contained no reservation

The defendant's predecessor in title afterwards acquired from the company, under a conveyance subject to any right of light which the plaintiff and he also took a lease of the arches. The defendant subsequently acquired this property, and blocked up the openings of the two arches nearest the plaintiff's house with hoardings :-Held, that the company, on selling a portion of their surplus lands to the plaintiff, had entered into an implied obligation not to do or permit anything on the land retained by them which would interfere with the plaintiff's reasonable enjoyment of the land he purchased, except what was required for the construction of their railway; and that, the hoarding not being for that purpose, a mandatory injunction ought to-be granted. In 1875 W. conveyed land to the trustees of a religious body who were desirous of creeting a chapel thereon. The deed of conveyance set forth fully the trusts upon which the grantees were to hold the land, including trusts to erect a chapel in such manner as the grantees should with the sanction of the religious body deem necessary or expedient, and trusts in certain events to let, sell, or mortgage the lands and buildings; the conveyance also contained a covenant by the grantees with W. that all windows in the chapel looking out on the other land of W. should be of finted or ground glass. There were no buildings upon the land at the date of the grant, and no plans or specifications of the proposed chapel were submitted to W. for his approval. In February, 1878, the grantees commenced to build a chapel having windows looking out upon the land retained by W. In November, 1878, W. entered into an agreement to sell this land; and it was shortly afterwards conveyed by him to the defendants, who in May, 1890, commenced to build thereon in such a manner as to obstruct the light of the chapel :-Held, that W. had, in effect, given permission to the trustees of the chapel to creet such a building as they thought fit; and that, the chapel having been erected in a reasonable manner, neither W. nor his assigns could complain of the position of the chapel or of the way in which it was lighted. That, it having been within the contemplation of the parties to the conveyance of 1875 that a chapel would be built on the land conveyed, having windows looking out on the land retained by W., W. and his assigns were under an implied obligation not to do anything to obstruct such windows. Bailey v. Iche, 64 L. T. 789.

Description of Adjoining Land as "Building Land."]-In a conveyance of a house the grantee's right to light under sub-s. 2 of that section. Brownfield v. Williams, 66 L. J., Ch. 305: [1897] 1 Ch. 602; 76 L. T. 243; 45 W. R. 469—C. A.

User of Building for special Trade-Injunction.]—In the case of a building agreement the amount of light implied from the grant is such as is reasonably sufficient for all ordinary purposes of business in the neighbourhood, and not such as may be requisite for a special purpose not shown to have been contemplated by the parties at the time of the contract. Corbett v. Jonas, 62 L. J., Ch. 43 * [1892] 3 Ch. 187; 3 R. 25; 67

- Building Scheme.]-The mortgagor in possession of certain lands which were the subject of a building scheme granted a lease of a house and land forming part of the property. Subsequently, the mortgagees sold the adjoining hand, and the purchaser erected a hoarding which obstructed the access of light to the house in the lease. The hoarding was not necessary for carrying out the building scheme, but to scoure privacy for a recreation ground:—Held, that the lessee was entitled to an injunction to restrain assee was diffused to in infinitetion to restrain the obstruction of light. Myers v. Cutterson (43 Ch. D. 470) followed. Wilson v. Queen's Club, 60 L. J., Ch. 698: [1891] 3 Ch. 522; 65 L. T. 42; 40 W. R. 172.

The maxim that a grantor shall not derogate does not entitle a grantee of a house to claim an easement of light to an extent inconsistent with the intention to be implied from the circumstances existing at the time of the grant and stances existing at the time of the grant and known to the grantee. Birmingham Banking Co. v. Ross, 57 L. J., Ch. 691; 38 Ch. D. 295; 59 L. T. 609; 36 W. R. 914—C. A. Affirming, 52

The corporation of a town granted a lease to the plaintiffs of a piece of land and a newly erected building "with the rights, members, and appurtenances to the said premises belonging."
The building abutted on a passage twenty feet wide, which the corporation agreed to keep open. and on the other side of the passage were old buildings about twenty-five feet high. The corporation demised the land on the other side of the passage to the defendant, who erected on the site of the old buildings a house eighty feet high, which materially interfered with the plaintiffs' light. The land on both sides of the passage was part of a larger piece of land laid out by the corporation under a building scheme for the improvement of the town :—Held, that there was no grant, express or implied, in the lease to the plaintiffs of a right to uninterrupted light to the new building; that the obligation on the corporation not to obstruct the plaintiff's light which was to be implied from the relation in which they had placed themselves to the plaintiffs by granting them the lease, must be measured by the circumstances existing at the date of the lease and known to both parties; that having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs knew that the land was being laid out for building, and that they had stipulated that there should be a passage twenty feet wide adjoining the new building, they had no right to complain of the trary intention" within s. 6, sub-s. 4, of the lights cannot erect new buildings so as to Conveyancing Act, 1881, so as to exclude the obstruct those lights applies to the case where the grantor purposely leaves a strip of land intervening between the house and the lands retained. Ib.

> Railway Company—Sale of Surplus Lands with House thereon—Implied Obligation to Purchaser. - A railway company sold a piece of their surplus land to the plaintiff together with a house, which they had allowed him to erect thereon The house was close to their line of railway, which there ran over a series of arches, through two of which there was some access of light to two of the lower windows of the plaintiff's house. The company retained in their own hands lands on the other side of the railway opposite the plaintiff's house; and their conveyance to him contained a regital that all the land acquired by them other than that sold to the plaintiff would be required by them for the construction of their railway, and it contained no express grant of right, or covenant as to light, The defendant's predecessor in title afterwards acquired from the company, under a conveyance subject to any right of light which the plaintiff might have, the fee of the lands opposite the plaintiff's honse, and erected buildings thereon. and he also took a lease of the arches. The defendant subsequently acquired this property, and blocked up the openings of the two arches nearest the plaintiff's house with hoardings :-Held, that the company, on selling a portion of their surplus lands to the plaintiff, had entered into an implied obligation not to do or permit anything on the land retained by them which would interfere with the plaintiff's reasonable enjoyment of the land he purchased, except what was required for the construction of their railway; and that, the hearding not being for that purpose, a mandatory injunction ought to be granted. Myers v. Citterson, 59 L. J., Ch. 315; 43 Ch. D. 470; 62 L. T. 205; 38 W. R. 488—C. A.

> For adjacent House.]-Upon a general conveyance of land, there is no implied grant, by the purchaser, of the easement of light necessary for the enjoyment of an adjacent house of the vendor, Ellis v. Manchester Carriage Co., 2 C. P. D. 13; 35 L. T. 476; 25 W. R. 229.

> When the owner of a house which has by prescription acquired a right to light over the adjoining land, becomes the owner of such adjoining land and sells it without reserving the easement of light, the purchaser may build so as to obstruct the light. 1b.

In 1867, the plaintiff bought houses in Manchester, the backs of which abutted on a street or way, on the opposite side of which were certain cottages. In 1868 he purchased these cottages, but by a different title. Both sets of premises had existed in their then state for more than twenty years. In 1870, the plaintiff sold the cottages to D., and ultimately D.'s interest therein became vested in the defendants, who pulled down the cottages and erected a large building upon the site of them and also upon a portion of the intervening street or way, and so obstructed the light to the plaintiff's windows.
The conveyance to D. contained no reservation of any easement to the plaintiff's honses; and it professed to convey the land up to the back obstruction caused by the defendant's house, and shall of the plaintiff's premises:—Held, that, an injunction was refused. The rule, that a man who grants a house with a quarter an absolute and indefensible "right cottages to D., inasmuch as that conveyance was without reservation the defendants were guilty of no wrongful obstruction of the plaintiff's lights. Ib.

Where lights had been put out and enjoyed without interruption for above twenty years, during the occupation of the opposite premises. by a tenant, that will not conclude the landlord of such opposite premises, without evidence of his knowledge of the fact, which is the foundation of presuming a grant against him, and consequently will not conclude a succeeding tenant, who was in possession under such landlord, from building up against such cucroaching lights. Daniel v. North, 11 East, 372.

Lease at time of Severance of Ownership. The implication of a grant of easements of a continuous and apparent character, upon the alienation to different persons of tenements previously in the ownership of the same person, is not prevented by the fact that the dominant tenement at the time of the alienation is in lease, and consequently not in the possession of the alienor. Barnes v. Loach, 48 L. J., Q. B. 756; 4 Q. B. D. 494; 41 L. T. 278; 28 W. R. 32.

When Lessor acquires Fee Simple. -In 1864 A. granted to B. a lease for twenty-one years of a house "together with all edifices . . . lights . . . easements, advantages and appurtenances thereto belonging, or therewith held, used, or enjoyed." At the date of the lease A. held, for the residue of a term expiring at Christmas, 1868, an adjoining house, over which most of the light came to the back windows of the house leased to B. On the expiration of his lease A. purchased a fee simple of the adjoining house, and in 1872 he pulled down that house with the intention of rebuilding it to a greater height than its former height. B., whose lights were not ancient lights, filed a bill to restrain A. from raising the new house to a greater height than the old house :- Held, that the lease to B. only amounted to a grant of the light coming over the adjoining house during A.'s term in it, and that on subsequently acquiring the fee simple of the adjoining house A, was not estopped either at law or in equity from dealing with the house in such a way as to interfere with B.'s lights. Booth v. Alevek, 42 L. J., Ch. 557; L. R. 8 Ch. 663; 29 L. T. 231; 21 W. R. 743.

A lessor granted a lease for twenty-one years of a house with its appurtenances, amongst which lights were specified. At the time of the grant he held an adjoining house for a term of years. He subsequently acquired the reversion expectant on the term in the adjoining house; and after the expiration of the term he proceeded to build on the site of the adjoining house in a manner which might interfere with the lights of the demised house, those lights not being ancient lights:—Held, that the lessor was not by his grant prevented from so building. Ib.

A lease of a house for twenty-one years was made by a deed containing general words, including "lights." At the date of the lease, the defendant was entitled, as under lessee, for a term of which rather more than four years were then unexpired, to certain premises adjoining the house so leased to the plaintiff, and over which light found access to the house. Nine years after the date of the lease, the defendant having purchased to light at the time of the conveyance of the | building thereon so as to interfere with the light of plaintiff's house. In a suit by the plaintiff for an injunction to restrain the defendant from so building as to interfere with the light thus coming to his house:—Held, that no warranty or bargain could be implied from the general words that the plaintiff should have the access of light over the defendant's premises unimpeded for a longer time than that for which the defendant was at the date of the lease entitled to the adjoining premises. Ib.

Held, also, that during the period for which the defendant was entitled as under-lessee to the adjoining premises, he could not lawfully have interfered with the plaintiff's light coming across the adjoining premises, Ib.

Constructive Notice of Easement on Purchase, Disputes having arisen between the plaintiff and W. whether a window in the plaintiff's house overlooking W.'s land was an ancient light, an agreement, not under seal, was signed, by which W. agreed that the plaintiff should have access of light to the window, and the plaintiff agreed to keep the window opaque and make it open only in such a way that no person could look out of it. W.'s land was afterwards sold to the defendant, who had no actual notice of the agreement, but knew of the existence of the window :- Held, overruling Hall, V.-C., that the mere fact of there being windows in an adjoining honse which overlook a purchased property is not constructive notice of any agreement giving a right to the access of light to them. Allen v. Seckham, 48 L.J., Ch. 611 : 11 Ch. D. 790 : 41 L. T. 260 : 28 W. R. 26.

Lease by Mortgagor in Possession-Lessee's Rights against Mortgagee. ]-The effect of a lease granted by a mortgagor in possession under the powers of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 18, is to bind the mortgagee and those claiming under him so as to prevent the interference with any casement to which the lessee is entitled as against the lessor and those claiming under him. Wilson v. Queen's Club, 60 L. J., Ch, 698; [1891] 3 Ch, 522: 65 L. T. 42; 40 W. B. 172.

Presumption of Grant-Light. The enjoyment of a light during a period of twenty years, with the clear knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the adjoining premises, is sufficient to raise the presumption of a grant, and to give a right of action in case of obstruction. Maberley right of action in case of obstruction. Adversey v. Diagram, 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 261.

But, semble, that where a window has been opened in a building creeted by a tenant for the mere purpose of trade, and which is not annexed to the freehold, but may be removed by that tenant at his pleasure, or at the end of his term, no such right or presumption will arise. Ib.

— Passage of Air through defined Channel.]

The cellar of the plaintiff's public-house was ventilated by means of a shaft cut therefrom through the rock into a disused well situated in an adjoining yard, owned and occupied by the defendant, the air from the cellar passing through the shaft, and out at the top of the well. The cellar had been so ventilated for forty years at least, without interruption, and with the knowledge of the occupiers of the yard :- Held, that the plaintiffs could legally claim, as against the defendant, the easement of the free passage of air from the cellar; and that a lost grant of the date of the lease, the defendant having purchased right ought to be inferred. Bass v. Gregory, 59 the see of these adjoining premises, commenced L. J., Q. B. 574; 25 Q. B. D. 481; 55 J. P. 119. — By Custom of London.]—The presumption, rebuilding of his own house; that the plaintiff of a right, from twenty years multiturbed enjoy- had notice, and that the old building was pulled ment of light, is excluded by the custom of down, and the new one erected, and large sums. Winstanley v. Lee, 2 Swanst, 333, London

d. Licence and Acquiescence.

Operation of.]-No licence or covenant from A., the owner of adjoining land, to put out or not to obstruct windows in the house of B., is to be inferred from the circumstance of A.'s being a party to the deed by which the house, with the windows in it, was conveyed to B., and by which deed A. conveyed part of the adjoining land to B. Blanchard v. Bridges, 5 N. & M. 567; 4 A. & E. 176; 1 H. & W. 630; 5 L. J., K. B. 78.

Where the owner of adjoining land witnesses, without objection, alterations in the windows, there is no agreement on his part to be inferred at any time before the expiration of twenty years not to obstruct the access of light and air, by building up to the extremity of his land. Ib. A., in licensing B. to build to the extremity of

B.'s ground adjoining that of A.'s, expressly reserves to himself the right of building to the extremity of his own ground when he shall think proper to do so. A. may at my time, within twenty years, build to the extremity of his own land, though he thereby renders the house of B. dark, damp, and uninhabitable. Ib.

What amounts to. ]-A., the side of whose house adjoined B,'s lawn, wrote to B, as follows : "Before the last coat of paint is put on the side wall, we wish to place a window in it, and our workness say it can be fluished off more neatly with your permission to place the necessary ladder. The motive for doing this is, that I should gain a more cheerful view of the coumon, and passing objects," B, replied, "You are welcome to place a ladder in my grounds": -Held, that this did not amount to a licence by B. to A. to open a window in the side of A.'s honse; and therefore that A. might obstruct the window by an erection on her own land. Bridges v. Blanchard, 3 N. & M. 691; 1 A. & E. 536.

When Presumed.]—Before the statute, twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment of windows looking upon the land of another was sufficient ground for presuming a grant or a licence to open the windows, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Cross v. Lewis, 4 D. & R. 234; 2 B. & C. 686; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 136.

Completion of Building.]—If an adjoining owner knowingly permits a message and premises to be rebuilt of an increased size and height, with the alteration of ancient lights, and the opening new lights upon an additional floor, he cannot object to them after they are complete, or assert a right to raise a party wall, and build upon his own property so high as to render the new buildings less accessible to light and air than they were at the completion of the work, Cotching v. Bassett, 32 Beav. 101; 32 L. J., Ch. 286; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 590; 11 W. R. 197.

Under Misrepresentations.]—A plaintiff com-plained of an obstruction of the light and air to his ancient windows; of the raising and creetwere occasioned by the pulling down and vent the easement becoming indefeasible after of money were expended thereon by the defendant, with the knowledge, acquiescence and consent of the plaintiff, and on the faith that the plaintiff so knew of, acquiesced in, and consented to the so pulling down and rebuilding.

The plaintiff replied that he acquiesced and consented upon the faith of false representations. made to him by the defendant and her agents, that the grievances would not result from or beproduced by the pulling down and rebuilding :-Held, that the plea afforded a good defence on equitable grounds. Davies v. Marshall, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 697; 31 L. J., C. P. 61; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1247; 4 L. T. 581; 9 W. R. 866.

Held, also, that the replication was a good equitable answer to the plea. Ib.

Consent or Agreement under the Prescription Act. |- K., the owner in fee of a freehold house, in 1814 put out four new windows, and signed and gave to S., the owner in fee of an adjacent freehold house overlooked by those windows, a. document declaring that they were put out and remained upon the leave of S., and that he, K., would, on the reunest of S., or his heirs or assigns, at any time thereafter block up the same, and in the meantime would pay S., his heirs and assigns, sixpence a year for the indulgence. This document was not signed by S. The rent was paid down to. K.'s successor in title, who had bought the property in 1865 with notice of the document, but had never paid any rent under it, to block up-the four windows, and proceeded to obstruct the-access of light to them. K.'s successor in title thereupon brought this action against him for an injunction, claiming to have acquired an inde-feasible right to the access of light to the fourwindows by actual enjoyment for twenty years. without intermission :- Held, first, that the enjoyment of light by K. and his successors had been by virtue of the document of 1814, and that such document, although signed by K. only, was a consent or agreement expressly made or given for the purpose of such enjoyment within the. meaning of the 3rd section of the Prescription Act, so as to prevent K, and his successors from acquiring any right to the access and use of light under that section; and secondly, that the agreement having been acted upon by payment of rent theremoler to within twenty years from the commencement of the action, was enforceable in equity irrespective of the statute. Beacley v. Atkinson, 49 L. J., Ch. 6; 13 Ch. D. 283; 41 L. T. 603—C. A. Affirming, 27 W. R. 452.
It was proved that in 1859 the agent of the owner of S.'s tenement paid to him sixpence, stating verbally that it was for the lights in G.'s house (the house which had belonged to K.):

—Held, that the agent being dead, this was evidence of payment of the rent by G. in 1859. Ib.

In an action for obstructing light and air by the erection of a wall upon the defendant's premises .- contiguous to and against the plaintiff's premises,-the defendant relied upon an agreement entered into by the former owners of ing of walls and buildings, whereby the suoke the respective premises, reserving liberty to the and vapour from his chimneys were prevented then owner of the defendant's premises to build from being earried off; and that the defendant a wall which would or might obstruct light and air had deprived his house of the support to which from the plaintiff's premises:—Held that the agree he was entitled. He pleaded that the grievances ment, not being in writing, was ineffectual to pre-

v. Lowe, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 291

A landowner granted a lease to the plaintiff of a house and land with their appurtenances, except rights, if any, restricting the free use of any adjoining land, or the appropriation at any time thereafter of any such land for building or other purposes, obstructive or otherwise. More than twenty years after this lease the subsequent lessee of an adjoining piece of land under the same landowner commenced to build on it in such a way as to obstruct the plaintiff's light. The plaintiff having brought an action and moved for an injunction :- Held, that the exception of any right restricting the free use of the adjoining land did not operate as an agreement or consent on the part of the lessee that the owners of the adjoining land might always have a right to obstruct the access of light to the plaintiff's house within the exception in the 3rd section of the Prescription Act, and therefore, that the plaintiff had acquired an absolute prescriptive right to the light and was entitled to an injunction. Mitchell v. Cuntrill, 57 L. J., Ch. 72; 37 Ch. D. 56; 58 L. T. 29; 36 W. R. 229-C. A.

Acquiescence—Statute of Frauds.]—By a parol agreement between A., the owner of land and dwelling houses, and B., also the owner of land and buildings adjoining, a rocky piece of ground which stood close to A.'s freehold was reduced by B. so as to admit further light and air to A.'s dwellings, and buildings were creeted by B., so as to be attached to, and were an encroachment on A.'s freehold. A, was cognisant of and offered no objection to the work as it proceeded, but acquiesced therein :- Held, that the Statute of Frauds did not apply to such an agreement. Fisher v. Moon, 11 L. T. 623.

e. Abandonment and Alteration.

General Rule. |-- If an ancient light has been completely shut up with brick and mortar above twenty years, it loses its privilege. Lawrence v. Obce, 3 Camp. 514; 14 R. R. 830.

Evidence of Intention.]—A right to light is acquired by more user, and may be forfeited by non-user, though for less than twenty years, unless an intention is manifested, when the nonuser commences, to resume the right within a reasonable time. Moore v. Rawson, 5 D. & R. 234; 3 B. & C. 332; 3 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 32; 27 R. R. 375.

In an action for obstruction of ancient lights it appeared they had been closed for nineteen years, but upon the defendant, who purchased the adjoining premises during that time, building so as to obstruct them, the plaintiff re-opened them. The judge directed the jury that the plaintiff was entitled, unless he had so closed up the lights as to manifest an intention of permanently abandoning them, or to lead the defendant to incur expense or loss in the reasonable belief that they had been permanently abandoned :-Held, that the direction was right. Stokee v. Singers, 8 El. & Bl. 31; 26 L. J., Q. B. 257; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1256; 5 W. R. 756.

Any alteration of ancient lights, although not prejudicial to the owner of the servient tenement. gives him a right to obstruct them. Cotching v. Bassett, 32 Beav. 101; 32 L. J., Ch. 286; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 590; 11 W. R. 197.

twenty years' user, and that as a license it was an abandonment of the right will depend upon extinguished by the change of ownership. Judge the circumstances which caused the non-user. Ward v. Ward, 7 Ex. 838; 21 L. J., Ex. 334.

Where it is sought to establish a right to an easement by user, and it appears that the user has varied, it is for the jury to say, whether the user has been commensurate with the right claimed. Thomas v. Thomas, 2 C. M. & R. 34; 1 Gale, 61; 5 Tyr. 804; 4 L. J., Ex. 179.

An interruption which defeats a prescriptive right under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 1, is an adverse obstruction, not a mere discontinuance of user by the claimant himself. Carr v. Foster, 3 Q. B. 581: 2 G. & D. 753: 11 L. J., O. B. 284.

If proof is given of a right enjoyed at the time of action brought, and thirty years before, but disused during any part of the intermediate time, it is always a question for the jury whether at that time the right had ceased or was still substantially enjoyed. Ib.

Material Alteration.]—The right to an unob-structed access of light and air through a window, is lost by a material alteration in the side of the wall in which the window was placed. Blanchard v. Bridges, 5 N. & M. 567; 4 Å. & E. 176; 1 H. & W. 630; 5 L. J., K. B. 78.

If the owner of ancient lights so alters and enlarges them that they would in course of time innose an additional servitude on neighbouring hand, comity will not restrain the owner of the servient tenement from obstructing them. Heath v. Buchnall, 38 L. J., Ch. 372; L. R. 8 Eq. 1; 20 L. T. 549; 17 W. R. 755.

There being a right to the access of light to windows in the walls of certain cottages, the walls of some of the cottages were set back and windows made in the new walls of the same size, and in the same relative positions as the former windows in the former walls:—Held, that the easement of light was not thereby destroyed. In the case of another of the cottages the occupier made an addition thereto, and for the purpose of so doing built a new wall with a window in it outside the old wall and window at a different angle, but the old window remained inside the new one, and still continued to receive the light. Held, also, that the right to the the light. cacess of light to the old window was not destroyed. Barnes v. Loach, 48 L. J., Q. B. 756; 4 Q. B. D. 494; 41 L. T. 278; 28 W. R. 32.

In rebuilding a house, which had an ancient light in its ground thoor front-room, the front wall, which originally stood out beyond the general building line 4 feet at one end and 7 feet at the other, was set back into the general building line; and in the new front wall was placed a window the position of which corresponded to a great extent with the position of the ancient light in the old front wall. The new room was about the same frontage breadth as the old, but included little more than half the site of it, viz. a depth of 9 feet at one end, and less than 4 feet at the other :- Held, that the right to Than 1 Test in the order 1 Test, and the steep the ancient light had not been lost. Bullers v. Dickinson, 54 L. J., Ch. 776; 29 Ch. D. 155; 52 L. T. 400; 33 W. R. 540.

The Prescription Act does not require any identity, structural or otherwise, in the building, which after the twenty years is to enjoy the right, with the building which has acquired the right; but the right, although not in gross, but one which must be claimed in respect of a (Sa) 580; 11 W. R. 197.

| Duikling, may be claimed in respect of any Whether mere non-user of a right amounts to building which is enjoying the whole or a substantial part of the light which passed into over the servient tenement through the old the dominant tenement through the old aperture. windows passes also through the new windows. Ib. Consequently, no alteration in the plane of the windows of the dominant tenement, either by advancing or setting back the building, will destroy the right so long as the owner of the dominant tenement can shew that he is using through the new apertures in the wall of the new building the same, or a substantial part of apertures into the old building. But the right to relief may be lost even where there is no substantial alteration if the owner of the dominant tenement has by his alteration so confused the evidence that he cannot prove the identity of the Ijght. Scott v. Pape, 55 L. J., Ch. 426; 31 Ch. D. 554; 54 L. T. 399; 34 W. R. 465; 50 J. P. 645.

S., in 1872, pulled down a building in the cast wall of which were ancient lights, and erected on the site a new building with larger and more ammerous windows. No record was preserved of the positions or dimensions of the ancient lights, but it was found as a fact that substantial portions of six of the new windows corresponded with three of the ancient lights. The east wall had been advanced by distances varying from 2 ft. 3 in. to 13 in., the effect of which was slightly to alter the plane of the new windows:-Held, that the alteration made by S. did not that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to restrain any obstruction of so much of the six new windows as corresponded with the three ancient lights. Ib.

The mere alteration of a building containing ancient lights, without evidence of intention to abandon does not imply an abandonment of the statutory right, under the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 by evidence. The nature of the statutory right to the access of light discussed. Scott v. Pape i that to obstruct the new vindow. Binches v. (31 Ch. D. 554). considered. Greenwood v. Pansh, 11 C. B. (x.s.) 324; 31 L. J., C. P. 121; 55 L. T. 135; 35 W. R. 163.

Total Alteration of Structure.]—In 1868 three cottages containing ancient lights were pulled down, and a large warehouse built on their site containing three large windows. There was no evidence on which the court could rely as to the position of the windows in the cottages, though it was admitted that small parts of the new windows might occupy portions of space through which light was admitted to the cottages:— Held, that, in the absence of evidence as to the position of the ancient lights, the casement could not be maintained as to the new building. Fowler v. Walker, 51 L. J., Ch. 443—C. A. Affirming, 42 L. T. 356; 28 W. R. 579.

A building containing ancient lights was pulled down and replaced by another, in which the front was set back and a dormer window converted into a skylight:—Held, that the right to access of light was not lost. National Pro-rincial Plate Glass Insurance Co. v. Prudential Assurance Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 871; 6 Ch. D. 757; 37 L. T. 91; 26 W. R. 26.

Held, also, that any substantial alteration in the plane of the windows destroys the right. Ib.

Per Jessel, M.R. (on motion for injunction). Held, also, that the right remains where any portion of the light which would have passed right to the windows. Ib.

windows passes also through the new windows. Ib.

Mode of Enjoyment.]-A party may so alter the mode of enjoyment of ancient lights as to lose the right to them altogether. Sharp, 4 N. & M. 834; 3 A. & E. 325; 1 H. & W. 224.

Mode of User. ]-The principle as to ancient the same, light which passed through the old lights is, that the owner of the dominant tenement cannot depart from the mode of user substantially. He cannot change the position of his lights, nor increase the original aperture into which windows have been put; but if he has, in using his right, contracted to any given extent the original opening by windows of antique and clumsy structure, he may, without affecting his right, replace those windows by windows of an improved structure that let in more light and air. Turner v. Spaaner, 1 Drew & Sm. 467; 30 L. J., Ch. 801; 7 Jur. (N.s.) 1068; 4 L. T. 732; 9 W. R. 684.

If a building, after having been used for twenty years as a malt-house, is converted into a dwelling-house, in its new state it is entitled only to the same degree of light which was necessary to it in the former state, and the owner of the adjoining ground may lawfully ercet a wall which prevents the admission of sufficient amount to an abandonment of his right, and light for domestic purposes. if what is still admitted would be enough for the making of malt. Martin v. Goble, 1 Camp. 322.

Additional Window.] - Where an owner of the dominant tenement has exceeded the limits of the right which he has acquired to the access of light and air, by opening an additional window, leaving his ancient windows unaltered, Will 4, c. 71, to the access and use of light to he has not necessarily lost or suspended his and for any building which may be substituted admitted right, but the opening of the additional that no any outsing which may be substituted an administration to the original building; the intention to window justifies the owner of the servient tenerabandon the right must be clearly established ment in obstructing the ancient windows, if the doing so is unavoidable, in the exercise of his

Plaintiff being reversioner of a house which adjoined premises in the occupation of defendant, and had ancient windows, rebuilt the house, added an upper storey, opened windows in that storey, and enlarged the ancient windows and otherwise altered their position; such rebuilding and alterations being within twenty years of the commencement of the action. Defendant subsequently rebuilt his premises, and thereby darkened the windows in both the upper and the lower stories of the plaintiff's house :-Held, in an action by plaintiff as reversioner for this obstruction, that the plaintiff having by his alterations exceeded the limit of his right, and it being, owing to such alterations, impossible for the defendant in the lawful exercise of his own rights to obstruct such access without at the same time obstructing the plaintiff's former right, the plaintiff must be considered as losing his former right at all events until he restored his house to its original condition. Renshaw v. Bean, 18 Q. B. 112.

Semble, that such alteration did not destroy the right altogether. Ib.

Held, further, that a defence founded upon the fact of such alteration by the plaintiff, and the impossibility of a partial obstruction, was properly raised under a traverse of plaintiff's Identity of Apertures.]—Where a building and both expiring at the same time. B. by having ancient lights is pulled down, and a new building on his own premises obstructed a window one erected in respect of which the same right to in the house of A., though the latter had had an light is claimed, it is not sufficient to shew that some part of the new windows must occupy some part of the space of old windows; it must be shewn that some particular part of the new apertures coincides to a material extent with some particular part of the old apertures. Pendarres v. Monro, 61 L. J., Ch. 494; [1892] 1 Ch.

Where an old house is pulled down wherein were ancient lights, and a new one is built, the lights in the new house must be in the same place and of the same dimensions, and not more in number than the lights in the old house.

Cherrington v. Almey, 2 Veru. 646.

The warehouse of the plaintiffs, which had ancient windows, having been burned down, was rebuilt by them. In the new warehouse the windows were placed in different situations, were of different sizes, and altogether occupied more space than the windows of the old building. Some parts of some of the new windows coincided with some parts of the old; but a greater portion did not coincide. The defendants who had premises on the other side of the street, raised their own house and so obstructed the access of light to the new windows. They could not have obstructed the passage of light to such portions of the windows as were new, without at the same time obstructing its passage to such portions of the new windows as were in the sites of the old windows :- Held, that the plaintiffs in these circumstances, could not maintain an action against the defendants for obstructing the passage of light to their warehouse windows, as no one of the existing windows substantially corresponded with any of the ancient lights; and (per Channell, B., and Blackburn, J.) that it was not necessary in the present case to decide whether there is a right to block up a new window, if it cannot be done without also blocking up an ancient one. Hutchinson v. Copestale, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 863; 31 L. J., C. P. 19; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 54; 5 L. T. 178; 9 W. R. 896—Ex. Ch. See Newson Window Raised and Enlarged. - If an ancient window is raised and enlarged, the owner of the adjoining land cannot lawfully obstruct the passage of light and air to any part of the space occupied by the ancient window, although a greater portion of light and air is admitted through the unobstructed part of the enlarged window than was anciently enjoyed. Chandler v. Thompson, 3 Camp. 80; 13 R. R. 756.

v. Pender, post, col. 1164.

f. Extinguishment.

Unity of Ownership.]—A union of the owner-ship of dominant and servient tenements for different estates does not extinguish an easement for acquiring an indefeasible right to the access and use of light, but merely suspends it so long as the union of ownership continues, and upon a severance of the ownership the easement revives. Simper v. Foley, 2 Johns. & H. 555; 5 L. T. 669.

Where a right to an easement of this description is acquired against an owner of a leasehold interest in the servient tenement, it is acquired also against the owner of the reversion. 1b.

A. and B. occupied houses adjoining each other, as tenants under leases, both of which were granted by the same lessor on the same day, uninterrupted enjoyment of light and air for more than twenty years :- Held, that the circumstance of the two houses being held under the same landlord, and for the same term, did not prevent the one tenant from acquiring anindefeasible right to light as against the other. Hudelessine right to lager as against the order. Freeven v. Philipps, 11 C. B. (N.s.) 449; 30 L. J., C. P. 356; 7 Jur. (N.s.) 1246; 9 W. R. 786—Ex. Ch. See also Wheaton v. Maple, [4893] 3 Ch. 48, commenting on the last case,

Where Light increased by Clearances effected. by others. The easement of a party to have his light and air unobstructed by newly-erceted buildings is not lost or diminished by the circumstance that, by means of clearances effected in the neighbourhood by other parties shortly before the alterations, the party acquired more light than the buildings could subtract. Dyers' Co. v. King, 39 L. J., Ch. 339; L. R. 9 Eq. 438; 22 L. T. 120; 18 W. R. 404.

Failure to produce Evidence of position of Old. Windows.]-In 1868 three cottages, containing ancient lights, were pulled down, and a large warehouse built on their site, containing threelarge windows. There was no evidence on which the court could rely, as to the position of the windows in the cottages, though it was admitted that small parts of the new windows might occupy portions of space through which light was admitted to the cottages :-Held, that in the absence of evidence as to the position of the ancient lights, the easement was lost as tothe new building. Finelers v. Walker, 49 L. J., Ch. 598; 42 L. T. 356; 28 W. R. 579. Affirmed. 51 L. J., Ch. 443-C. A.

2. Obstruction.

a. General Principles.

By whom. ]-The occupier of one of two houses built nearly at the same time and purchased of the same proprietor, may maintain an action against the tenant of the other, for obstructing his window lights, by adding to his own building however short the previous period of enjoyment by the plaintiff. Compton v. Richards, 1 Price, 27; 15 R. R. 682.

The owner of a house divided it into two tenements, and demiscil one of them to the defendant :. -Held, that he was liable to an action for obstructing windows existing in the house at the time of the demise, although of recent construction, and though there was no stipulation against the obstruction. Riviere v. Baver, R. & M. 24; 27 R. R. 726.

What amounts to,]—An action on the case-lies for darkening the plaintiff's windows by a wall erected by the defendant partly on his own. land and partly on the plaintiff's land. Wells v. Ody, 1 M. & W. 452; 2 Gale, 12; 5 D. P. C. 45; 1 Tyr. & C. 715; 5 L. J., Ex. 199. The plaintiff purchased a house of A, and the distantions that came it me provinced of A the defendant at the same time purchased of A. the adjoining land, upon which an erection of one-storey high had formerly stood. In the convey-ance to the plaintiff, his house was described as bounded by building ground belonging to the cient to give the defendant a verdict. Manning defendant:—Held, that the defendant was not v. Gresham Hotel Co., Ir. R. 1 C. L. 115. entitled to a greater height than one storey, if by entities to a greater neight than one storey, if by so doing he obstructed the plaintiff's lights, Swansborough v. Coventry, 9 Bing, 305; 2 M. & Scott, 362 : 2 L. J., C. P. 11.

In an action for removing boards, under a plea of justification that they obstructed an ancient window through which the light ought to pass, it is sufficient to show that the window was one through which the light ought to be allowed to pass, though the window is proved to have been erected within living memory. Penwarden v.

Ching, M. & M. 400,

B. alleged that in 1864 he had obtained the consent of a company, the owners of an adjoining tenement, to open two windows in a party-wall separating the two tenements. B. had previously opened three other windows in the party-wall, In 1875 the company served B, with notice under the Metropolitan Building Act that they intended blocking up all five windows. The three windows in 1875 had been opened up eighteen years. Evidence of consent upon the company's part to B.'s opening the two windows was admitted by Malins, V.-C., who held that such consent was fully proved as to the two windows, and that as to the other three, after eighteen years a previous consent to open them must be implied :-Held, that the evidence of consent was inadmissible, and that as the other three windows were not ancient lights the plaintiff's case as to the five windows failed, and that part of his bill must be dismissed with costs. Bourke v. Alexandra Hotel Co., 25 W. R. 782—C. A.

The vice-chancellor had also granted an injunction as to eight other windows as to which there was no appeal: -Held, that as the plaintiff had succeeded as to part of his snit and failed as to the rest, the costs of the part as to which he had failed must be taxed and set off against those of the part as to which he had succeeded, and the balance of such costs only paid to the party entitled to most costs. Ib.

Diminution of Light. ]-That diminution of light and air which the law recognises as the ground of an action against a party who builds near another's premises, is such as really makes them, to a sensible degree, less fit for the purposes of business or of occupation. Purher v. Smith, 5 Car. & P. 438.

To constitute an illegal obstruction, by building, of ancient lights, it is not sufficient that the plaintiff has less light than he had before; but there must be such a privation of light as will render the occupation of his honse uncomfortable, and prevent him, if in trade, from carrying on his business as beneficially as he had previously done. Back v. Stacey, 2 Car. & P. 465; 31 R. R.

To sustain an action for darkening windows, it is not sufficient that a ray or two of light should be obstructed. The question is, whether, in con-sequence of the obstruction, the plaintiff has less light than before, to so considerable a degree as to injure his property in point of value or occupation. Pringle v. Wernham, 7 Car. & P. 377. S. P., Wells v. Ody, 7 Car. & P. 410.

To give a cause of action for the obstruction of light, the diminution of light must be sensible ; but the plaintiff is entitled substantially to all

b. Right to Obstruct.

Servient Owner. ]-The right to obstruct light possessed by an owner of a servient tenement is simply his right of building on his own land. and the opening of new windows by the owner of the dominant tenement neither confers nor of the dominant tenement nether confers nor enlarges such right. Tapling v. Jones, 11 H. L. Cas, 290; 20 C. B. (x.s.) 166; 34 L. J., C. P. 342; 11 Jur. (x.s.) 309; 12 L. T. 555; 13 W. R.

The "invasion of privacy by opening windows" is not a legal wrong or an injury, the opening of new windows being in law an innocent act. Ib. Where, therefore, the owner of a dominant tenement, whilst preserving one ancient window. altered old windows, and opened new windows upon the same side of his house, so that the owner of the servient tenement was obliged, in obstructing the new and altered lights, also to obstruct the ancient lights :- Held, that such obstruction was illegal. Ib.

Metropolis. ]-The Metropolitan Building Act of 1855, 8.8, par. 6, which gives "a right to the building owner to raise any party structure permitted by this act to be raised, upon condition of making good all damage occasioned thereby to the adjoining premises," does not authorise the raising of a structure so as to obstruct ancient Hights in the adjoining premises. Crafts v. Haldane, 8 B. & S. 194; 36 L. J., Q. B. 85; L. R. 2 Q. B. 194; 16 L. T. 116; 15 W. R. 444.

Grantor not to derogate from his own Grant. Russell v. Watts, aute, col. 1069.

Alterations by Owner. ]—In 1855, the owners in fee of a house and adjoining land granted to trustees a lease of the land for ninety-nine years, and they covenanted to build upon it secording to a plan. In 1856, the owners conveyed the reversion in fee of the lands to the trustees; in 1857, the owners conveyed the house in fee to a person under whom the plaintiff obtained possession. The defendant subsequently, with the authority of the trustees, built upon the land so as to obstruct the light and air. which for upwards of twenty years had come to the windows of the plaintiff's house. If he had built according to the plan in the lease, the obstruction would not have been to the same extent. Until the lease was granted there had never been any severance either in the title to or possession or occupancy of the land and house, and the same had been occupied and used together by the proprietors for upwards of fifty years :- Held, that the plaintiff could maintain no action against the defendant for building on the land so as to obstruct the light and which formerly came to the windows of the plaintiff's house. White v. Bass, 7 H. & N. 722; plaintin's nouse. If have v. Dass. (In. & N. 122; 31 L. J., Ex. 283; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 312; 5 L. The defendant proposed to build so as to obstruct both the new Out the plantum is consider substantially to an proposed to built so as to observe both the new in the light which he eujoyed before the obstruction, and ancient windows:—Held, that as he could and evidence that enough of light remains to not possibly obstruct the new windows without enable him to carry on his business is not sufficient the same time obstructing the ancient lights, Weatherley v. Ross, 1 H. & M. 349; 1 N. R. 228; 32 L. J., Ch. 128.

Where an owner of ancient lights puts in new lights, the owner of the adjoining land has a right to obstruct the new lights, and, if it is necessary for that purpose, even to obstruct the old lights. Davies v. Marshall, 1 Drew. & Sm.

557; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 720; 4 L. T. 105; 9 W. R. 368. A landlord of two houses granted a lease of one house and its appurtenances in consideration of certain repairs, part of which was the addition of windows. The tenant of the adjoining honse afterwards surrendered his lease to the landlord, and took a new lease from him:-Held, that the tenant of the adjoining house could not obstruct the windows so added. Ib. A., the owner of two adjoining houses, granted a lease of one of them to B. He afterwards leased the other to C., there then existing in it certain windows. After this, B. accepted a new lease of his house from A. :-Held, that B. could alter his tenement, so as to obstruct windows existing in C.'s house at the time of C.'s lease from A., though the windows were not twenty years old at the time of the alteration. Contis v. Gorham, M. & M. 396.

If the owner of the tenement has windows looking upon the premises of another, he cannot increase their size or number, or claim more extensive rights, Coaper v. Hubbuck, 30 Beav. 160; 31 L. J., Ch. 123; 7 Jur. N.s. 457; 9 W. R. 352.

Any alteration of ancient lights, although not prejudicial to the owner of the servient tenement, gives him a right to obstruct them. Cotching v, Bussett, 32 Beav. 101; 32 L. J., Ch. 286; 9 Jur. (N.s.) 590; 11 W. R. 197.

Servitude substantially the Same. ]-Where a house is erected on the site of an old house which has been burnt down, the windows of which were ancient lights, the question whether the character of ancient lights attaches to the new windows depends on the question whether the servitude they would impose on the servient tenement is substantially the same as that which previously existed; and where the windows of a new house so erected, although somewhat differing in form from the windows of the old house. were of about the same area, and very nearly in the same positions:—Held, that the servitude imposed on the servient tenement not being a more onerous nor a different servitude, the character of ancient lights attached to the new windows. Curriers' Co. v. Corbett, 2 Drew. & Sm. Affirmed on appeal, 4 De G. J. & S. 764; 11
 Jur. (N.s.) 719; 18 L. T. 154; 13 W. R. 538.

Where the owner of a house sells a piece of adjoining land, the purchaser may build on it as he pleases; and the vendor cannot prevent his doing so, even although the buildings erected on it may interfere with his ancient lights. Ib.

Obstruction by Railway Company. ]-When land has been taken by a railway company for the purposes of its railway, the owner of the adjoining land is as fully master of it for all purposes as he was before, so that he does not Interfere with the proper working of the railway.

Norton v. L. & N. W. Ry., 47 L. J., Ch. 859.

Affirmed, 13 Ch. D. 268; 41 L. T. 429; 28 W. R. 173-C. A.

The owner of land adjoining a railway built on his own land a house having windows overlooking the railway. The company erected a the house. A testator being owner in fee of a

the owner was not entitled to an injunction. | large hoarding close in front of these windows, to prevent him from acquiring an absolute right to the access of light across the railway. This hoarding was afterwards blown down :-Held that as these windows in no way interfered with the working of the railway, the company had no right to creet the hoarding; and an injunction was granted to restrain them from re-erecting it.

> The plaintiff was owner of a house, some of the windows of which overlooked a piece of land belonging to a railway company and used as a goods yard of a station. When the house had been built sixteen years the company put up a screen opposite the plaintiff's windows, to prevent his acquiring an easement of light and air. The plaintiff brought an action for injunction to restrain the company from interfering with his light and air : and moved for an interlocutory injunction till the hearing :-Held, that the plaintiff had no equity to restrain the company prantal man in equity to resemble the considered from taking measures to prevent prescriptive rights from being acquired for windows looking upon their land. The injunction was therefore refused. Norton v. L. § N. W. 18y. (9 Ch. D. 283) and Swindon Waterworks Co. v. Witts and Berks Conal Varigation (b. L. E. 7 H. L. 697). Considered. Bonner v. G. W. Hy, 24 Ch. D. 1; 48 L. T. 619; 32 W. R. 190; 47 J. P. 580—C. A.

> By an act it was provided that nothing in the act contained should authorise a railway company to take, injure or damage, for the purposes of the act, any house or building which was erected on or before the 80th November, 1835, without the consent in writing of the owner or other person interested therein, other than such as were specified in the schedule to the act, unless the omission therefrom proceeded from mistake. A subsequent clause contained provisions for settling all differences which might arise between the company and the owners or occupiers of any lands which should be taken, used, damaged or injuriously affected by the execution of any of the powers granted by the act, and for the payment of satisfaction or compensation, as well for damages already sustained as for future, temporary or perpetual, or any recurring damages : Held, that the company was liable to the reversioner of a house erected before the 30th November, 1835, and not specified in the schedule, for damage done to it by the obstruction of its lights by a station erected by the company, and by the dust drifted from the station and embankment into the house; and that the reversioner was not bound to come in under the compensation clause. Turner v. Sheffield and Rotherham Ry., 10 M. & W. 425.

> When Right exceeded.]-Where the plaintiff is entitled to lights by means of blinds fronting a garden of the defendant's, which he takes away, and opens an uninterrupted view into the garden, the defendant cannot justify making an erection to prevent the plaintiff from so doing, if he thereby renders the plaintiff's house darker than before. Cotterell v. Griffiths, 4 Esp. 69.

> Severance of Ownership.]—Where the owner of a dwelling-house and adjoining land sells the house to one person and the land to another under contemporaneous conveyances, either purchaser being aware of the conveyance to the other, the purchaser of the land is not entitled to build thereon so as to obstruct the lights of piece of land with two dwelling-houses thereon, light as to injure him in his business. and of another piece of land immediately adjoin-ing, with a warchouse at the further end thereof. devised his real estate to his two sons and another person in trust for sale, giving his two sons, or either of them, an option of purchasing any part of his real estate. By two separate but contemporaneous conveyances executed by the trustees of the will, the one piece of land and the two dwelling-houses thereon were conveyed for value, "together with all lights thereunto belonging," and all the estate, &c., to the one son in fee, and the other adjoining piece of land and the ware-house were conveyed for value, together with all lights, &c., and all the estate, &c., to the other son in fee. An injunction was granted restraining the successor in title to the purchaser of the last-mentioned piece of land and warehouse from building on his land in such a way as to obstruct his neighbour's lights. Wherldon v. Burrows (12 Ch. D. 31), considered. Allen v. Tuylor, 50 L, J., Ch. 178; 16 Ch. D. 355,

Open Space.]—The use of an open space of ground in a particular way requiring light and air for twenty years does not give a right to preclude the adjoining owner from building on his land so as to obstruct the light and air, Roberts v. Macord, 1 M. & Rob. 230.

Roberts v. Macord (supra), recognised and acknowledged to be good law in. Patts v. Smith, 38 L. J., Ch. 58; L. R. 6 Eq. 311; 18 L. T. 629; 16 W. R. 891.

Glebe Land.]-Where lights had been enjoyed for more than twenty years, adjoining land which within that period had been glebe land, but was conveyed to a purchaser under 55 Geo. 3, c. 147 : -Held, that no action would lie against such purchaser for building so as to obstruct the lights, as the rector, who was tenant for life, could not grant the easement, and therefore no valid grant could be presumed. Barker v. Richardson, 4 B. & Ald. 579; 23 R. R. 400.

When a Nuisance. ]-A window-frame erected on a party-wall was not a common nuisance within 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, so as to deprive the owner of it of his right to the windows, which were proved to be ancient lights; and if it was, that it would not, without conviction, be an answer to an action for obstructing them. Titterton v. Conyers, 1 Marsh. 140; 5 Taunt. 165

c. Injunction.

i. Who Entitled.

Lessees.]-A lessee of a dwelling-house, in which he carries on business as a diamond merchant, is entitled to an injunction restraining the owners of premises adjacent (who afterwards purchased the reversion of the lessee's house) from constructing the party-wall which they were about to rebuild so as to occasion such an obstruction of the lessee's ancient lights, however slight, as would injure him in his business. Herz v. Union Bank of London, 2 Giff. 686; I Jur. (N.S.) 127; 3 W. R. 49.

A lessee of a dwelling-house in which he has for nearly eight years carried on business as a repairer of jewellery and watches, is entitled to damages against the owner of adjacent premises who is in the process of constructing a building

Dillimore, 14 L. T. 183: 14 W. R. 511.

The lessee of a house and garden, forming part of a large area of building ground, will not be eutitled under his ordinary covenant for quiet enjoyment, or otherwise, in the absence of special contract, to restrain the lessor or persons claiming under him from building on the adjoining land so as to obstruct the free access of light and air to the garden. Potts v. Smith, 38 L. J., Ch. 58; L. R. 6 Eq. 311: 18 L. T. 629; 16 W. R. 891.

It is a rule of law that there can be no prescription' for an easement of light and air over

Where the owner of an ancient light is a lessee whose lease had expired during the obstruction, but who had agreed for a renewal:—Held, that he could still maintain his suit. Gale v. Abbott, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 987; 6 L. T. 852; 10 W. R. 748.

Where the plaintiff and defendant held adjoining pieces of ground under a common landlord, and the plaintiff, with the licence of the landlord, and without objection by the defendant, had erected a manufactory, an injunction was granted to restrain the defendant so building as to obstruct the lights of the plaintiff's manutory, pending a trial at law. Crook v. Wilson, 3 W. R. 378.

Occupier. ]-When the darkening of the ancient windows of a dwelling-house materially injures the comfort of the existence of those who dwell in it, the Court of Chancery will interfere by injunction. Jackson v. Newcastle (Duke), 3 De G. J. & S. 275; 33 L. J., Ch. 698; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 688, 810; 10 L. T. 635, 802; 12 W. R. 1066.

Upon a similar principle, where the obstruction of the ancient lights of a manufactory or of business premises renders the building to a material extent less suitable for the business carried on in them, it is a case for an injunction, and not merely for compensation by damages. 1b.

The court will restrain the interference with aucient lights, although the plaintiff is not the occupier of the house interfered with, and may have no intention of occapying it. Wilson v. Townend, 1 Drew. & Sm. 324; 30 L. J., Ch. 25; 6 Jur. (N.s.) 1109; 3 L. T. 352; 9 W. R. 30.

Where Owner of Dominant Tenement has not accepted Title.]-An injunction will not be granted to restrain the construction of works obstructing lights where the title to the property sought to be protected has not yet been accepted by the plaintiff. Heath v. Maydew, 13 W. R. 199.

When Dominant Tenement altered.] - The right to obstruct light possessed by an owner of a servient tenement is simply his right of building on his own land, and the opening of new windows by the owner of the dominant tenement neither confers nor enlarges such right. Tapling v. Jones, 11 H. L. Cas. 290; 20 C. B. (N.S.) 166; 34 L. J., C. P. 342; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 309; 12 L. T. 555; 13 W. R. 617.

When the owner of a building having ancient lights replaces them by new larger windows, the court will not interfere by injunction to restrain the owner of the servient tenement from obstructing them. Heath v. Buchnall, 38 L. J., Ch. 372; L. R. 8 Eq. 1; 20 L. T. 549; 17 W. R. 755. The case of Tapling v. Jones (11 H. L. Cas. 290) applies only to the right of the owner of the dominant tenement in such a case to recover damages at law, and is not to be extended to establish his which would occasion such an obstruction of his right to relief in equity. Ib.

When a dominant tenement is altered, without losing the easement, its owner has the same right of applying for an injunction as if there had been on alterntion. Straight or Staight v. Burn, 39 L. J., Ch. 289; L. R. 5 Ch. 163: 22 L. T. 831; 18 W. R. 243.

Where Owner has himself contributed to Diminution of Light. - When ancient lights are obstructed, the fact that the owner of the building to which the ancient lights belong has himself contributed to the diminution of the light will not in itself preclude him from obtaining an injunction against the person causing the obstruction. 1b.

The defendant built a wall to the north of the windows of the plaintiff's house by which his ancient lights were interfered with. The plaintiff was at the same time enlarging his own premises. whereby he diminished the light coming to his own windows by shutting off some of the light from the south and south-west :- Held, that he was entitled to an injunction. Ib.

The doctrine of Tapling v. Jones (11 H. L. Cas. 290) applies to the equitable as well as to the legal remedy. Ih.

A partial interference with lights by the owner is no bar to a suit to prevent a subsequent interference by other persons, Baxter v. Bower, 44 L. J., Ch. 625; 33 L. T. 41; 23 W. R. 805,

It is to be understood that an injunction is not to be used oppressively; but the court will not too carefully limit its orders, but will leave any abuse to be dealt with when it arises. Ib.

A plaintiff, who in an insignificant degree obscured the light and air to his own dwellinghouse, is not thereby disentitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from creeting a building so as seriously to diminish the supply of light and air. Arcodechne v. Kelk, 2 Giff. 683; 5 Jur., (N.S.) 114; 7 W. R. 194.

Tenant from Year to Year. ]-A tenant from year to year may file a bill for an injunction to protect the right to the access and use of light; but the injunction will be limited to the period of the continuance of his tenancy. Folcy, 2 Johns. & H. 555; 5 L. T. 669. Simper v.

Assuming that cases exist-wherein a tenant from year to year under notice to quit is entitled to an injunction to restrain the erection of buildings which prejudice the access of light and air to which he is entitled, still the nature of his interest, especially when he can obtain damages at law, renders it imperative upon him to make out a very strong ease for the intervention of a court of equity. Jacomb v. Knight, 3 De G. J. & S. 538; 32 L. J., Ch. 601; 8 L. T. 621; 11 W. R. 812.

ii. When Granted.

Mandatory Injunction, when granted. ]-The Court of Chancery has never assumed or exercised jurisdiction to order a building, which so far as it can impede the progress of light and air has been actually completed, to be pulled down. Curriers' Co. v. Curbett, 4 De G. J. & S. 76\frac{1}{2}; 11 Jur. (x.s.) 719; 13 L. T. 15\frac{1}{2}; 18 W. R. 588.

A mandatory injunction was granted on an interlocutory application, the defendant against whom it was sought failing to shew that the

It is not to be laid down as a general rule that, where a building injuriously affecting ancient lights has been completed before the bill is filed, the court is unable to give damages unless the one cour is unison to give annuges unioss the injury is such as would justify a mandatory injunction. City of Landon Browery Co. v. Traunt, 43 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 9 Ch. 212; 29 L. T. 755; 22 W. R. 172.

A court of equity will not interfere by mandatory injunction to preserve a right to light and air, unless there has been a substantial, material, or serious infringement of such right. Bradel v. Perry, L. R. 3 Eq. 465; 19 L. T. 760; 17 W. R. 185.

Where, pending the litigation, the defendant continued the building complained of a mandatory injunction was granted on motion. Ib.

In cases of obstruction of ancient lights, where the court is called upon to exercise its power of mandatory injunction, ordering the defendant to restore things to the condition in which they were before the old building was removed, each case must be decided upon its own peculiar circumstances. Lsenberg v. East India House Estate Co., 33 L. J., Ch., 392; 10 Jur. (8.8.) 221; 9 L. T. 625; 12 W. R. 456. And see Jacomb v. Knight, 3 De G. J. & 8.533; 32 L. J., Ch. 601; 8 L. T. 621: 11 W. R. 812.

The exercise of the power of the court by mandatory injunction should be exercised with great caution, and, semble, should be confined to cases where the injury cannot be estimated and sufficiently compensated by a pecuniary payment. Ib.

Where a plaintiff insisted on the right to the mandatory injunction, and the defendant admitted that some damage had been done to the plaintiff by obstructing his light and air, but said that the amount of injury was exaggerated, the court directed that, instead of an injunction, an inquiry should take place before itself to ascertain the amount of pecuniary damage.

Sufficiency of Interference-Evidence. The fact that the height of a building above an sucient light is not greater than its distance is not conclusive evidence that the light is not injurionsly affected, but is prima facie evidence of there being no such interference with the light as the court will restrain, and requires to be rebutted by special evidence of injury. London Brewery Co. v. Tenant, supra.
In a suit by the owner and occupier of a house and workshop complaining of the observation of his ancient lights by the defendant raising a low party-wall distant only eight feet from his. windows to a height of twenty-six feet:—Held, that as the plaintiff had not lost his right to relief by delay or acquiescence, he was entitled to a mandatory injunction for the removal of the additional building. Smith v. Smith, 44 L. J., Ch. 630; L. R. 20 Eq. 500; 32 L. T. 787; 23 W. R. 771.

When Building almost completed. ]-()n a bill for an injunction to restrain the completion and continuance of a building seriously obstructing ancient lights, it appeared that the building was almost completed before the bill was filed; that the plaintiff had, before the commencement of the works, information that some building was proposed, and that she was buildings which he was erecting would not abroad during the actual building, and had done materially interfere with the plaintiff's ancient nothing amounting to acquiescence:—Held, that lights. Foungev. Shaper, 27 L. T. 643; 21 W. R. 135. | a mandatory injunction could not be granted, and an inquiry as to damages was directed, though not prayed by the bill. Stanley of Alderley (Lady) v. Shrewshury (Earl), 44 L. J., Ch. 389; L. R. 19 Eq. 616; 32 L. T. 248; 23 W. R. 678.

When Building completed. -When the walls of a building which interfered with ancient lights were complete at the filing of the bill, and the roof was on at the hearing of the cause, the court did not grant a mandatory injunction to pull down any part of the building, but ordered an inquiry as to the damage sustained in respect of the loss of light. Mott v. Shoothred, 44 L. J., Ch. 380; L. R. 20 Eq. 22; 23 W. R. 545. And see Gort (Viscountess) v. Clark, 18 L. T. 343; 16 W. R. 569.

—— Plaintiff having Life Interest only.]— Mandatory injunction refused, and nominal damages, without costs on either side, granted in a case where the plaintiff had only a life interest, subject to an existing lease, and where, though there was a substantial interference with present comfort in respect of light, there was no prospective injury or diminution in the salable value of the property. There being no case as to air, the plaintiff's case as to light was made less strong by its being addressed conjointly to air and light. Perkins v. Sluter, 35 L. T. 356.

a mandatory injunction will be granted to compel the removal of the obstruction depends on whether the damages which would be granted in lieu of injunction would, or would not, be sub-stantial. Where, therefore, the total damages recoverable for such an obstruction, coupled with two other causes of complaint, amounted to less than 201. :- Held, that the damages were not substantial, and that no injunction could be granted, but only damages. proceeding with certain buildings, he appealed, offering an undertaking to abide by any order the court might make at the hearing as to pulling down or altering any buildings creeted by him. The Court of Appeal being of opinion that the right to an interlocutory injunction was not established, discharged the order, taking from the defendant an undertaking in the terms of his offer :- But held, that, without any undertaking, the court would have jurisdiction at the trial to order the pulling down of any building erected after the commencement of the action, or after notice had been given to the defendant that the plaintiff objected to the building. Infringement of Ancient Lights though Building pulled down.]—Under the statute 23 & 24 Viet. c. 142, and an Order in Conneil, an ancient church in the city of London was vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, upon trust to pull down the building, dispose of the materials, and down the building, dispose of the materials, and Clearing Committee of Railway Clearingsell the site. They pulled down the church, and House. By the Railway Clearing House Exten-

the site was still vacant. The defendant, who had become the owner of land, formerly part of the glebe of the church, on which some low buildings had stood, commenced the erection of buildings which, if completed, would have materially obstructed the access of light to windows occupying the same position as those of the late church. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners commenced an action to restrain the erection of the proposed buildings:-Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the fact of there being no existing windows, the access of light to which would be interfered with, was no objection to the granting of an injunction if the right to access of light had not been abandoned. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Kino, 49 L. J., Ch. 529; 14 Ch. D. 213; 42 L. T. 201; 28 W. R. 544—C. A.

Right of Church to Access of Light over Glebe.]
-Held, also, that although the freehold of both the church and the glebe had throughout been vested in the rector, there was no such manifest impossibility for the church to have a title by prescription or grant to access of light over the glebe as to induce the court to refuse an interim injunction till the trial, Ib.

Party Wall-Right to build Windows in. ]-The Bristol Improvement Act, 1840, enacts, that no opening shall be made in any party-wall except for communication from one building to another. The plaintiff had a house, one wall of which was to the height of the first storey a party-wall between his house and a building belonging to the defendant, but above that height had ancient windows opening to the external air. The plaintiff pulled down his house and proposed to rebuild it with windows in the same position as before. Before doing this, he gave notice to the defendant, under the act, that the wall, which he described as a party-wall, was out of repair, and a certificate of two surveyors was given, directing the party-wall to be built at the joint expense of the plaintiff and of the defendant. The defendant afterwards proceeded to creet a building which would obstruct the light coming to the ancient windows of the plaintiff :- Held, that the wall above the defendant's building was not a party-wall; and that the plaintiff was not precluded from making windows in it; and an injunction was granted restraining the defendant from obstructing his ancient lights. Weston v. Arnold, 43 L. J., Ch. 123; L. R. 8 Ch. 1084; 22 W. R. 284.

The plaintiff obtained an ex parte injunction upon filing the bill; but no mention was made in the bill, or in the affidavit in support of the motion, of the notice to pull down the wall, or the certificate of the surveyors :- Held, that inasmuch as these facts were only important as raising a point of law, based on an unreasonable construction of the act, they were not material facts, and the plaintiff was justified in omitting them. Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the railway clearing 352, committee was empowered to take lands, and to erect thereon any buildings and works for the purpose of the clearing system. The owners of a neighbouring house filed a bill to restrain the erection of a building on land acquired under the act, on the ground that it interfered with their ancient lights :- Held, that the clearing committee could not be restrained by injunction. and that the plaintiff's remedy was under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 68. Bedford (Duke) v. Dawson, 44 L. J., Ch. 549; L. R. 20 Eq. 353; 33 L. T. 156.

Angle of Forty-five Degrees-Narrow Street. -As a general rule, in the absence of special circumstances, the owner of a house in a narrow street in London will be restrained from raising it to a height which will obstruct the access of light below the angle of forty-five degrees to ancient windows opposite. Hackett v. Baiss, 45 L. J., Ch. 13: L. R. 20 Eq. 494.

In a street varying from thirty-seven feet six inches to thirty-four feet in width, and having ancient houses on its eastern side of the average height of forty-four feet, a building owner was restrained from raising a building on the opposite side to a greater height in front than forty-six feet, without prejudice to his putting on a sloping roof higher, so long as the angle of incidence of light over it did not exceed forty-five degrees. Ib.

There is no conclusion of law that a building will not obstruct the light coming to a window if it permits the light to fall on the window at an angle of not less than forty-five degrees from the vertical. The question of the amount of obstruction is always a question of fact, which depends on the evidence in each case. Therefore a plaintiff whose ancient light is obstructed is entitled to a judgment in general terms, without referring to the angle of incidence of the light. unless there is some special evidence in eight, unless there is some special evidence justifying the insertion of such a clause. Hachett v. Buiss (L. R. 20 Eq. 494), considered. Parker v. First Arenne Hotel Co., 24 Ch. D. 282; 49 L. T. 318; 32 W. R. 105—C. A.

The doctrine as to the angle of forty-five degrees discussed and dissented from. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Kino, 49 L. J., Ch. 529; 14 Ch. D. 213; 42 L. T. 201; 28 W. R. 544—C. A. An ancient light of the plaintiff, a sculptor, had a north aspect, in a street thirty-one feet wide. The defendant's buildings on the opposite side of the street were, as to part, exactly thirtyone feet high, and as to other part, a little less than that height. He claimed to have a statutory right to raise his buildings to a height which would subtend an angle of forty-five degrees measured from a base line level with the centre of the plaintiff's light :-Held, that the statutory regulation as to the height of buildings in streets is not to be taken as limiting the right by prescription to ancient lights, but that such right depends upon the degree and amount of obscuration in each particular case. Thred v. Debenham, 2 Ch. D. 165; 24 W. R. 775.

Windows enlarged. ] - If ancient windows which look over the land or upon the premises of another are enlarged, and are complained of, the court, upon their being restored to their original dimensions, will restrain the owner of original dimensions, will restrain the owner of Rule at Common Law.]—The courts of common taw is the adjoining property from obscuring such law, in deciding cases of light and air within the restored windows. Copper v. Hubbuch, 30 Beav. metropolitan district, require possons erecting

The fact that some of the windows had been considerably enlarged does not take away the right to an injunction; and the plaintiff ought not to be put upon the terms of restoring the windows to their former size. Aynsley v. Glorer, 44 L. J., Ch. 523; L. R. 10 Ch. 283; 32 L. T. 345; 23 W. R. 459.

Identity of Windows—Interim Injunction—Balance of Convenience.]—The plaintiffs being the owners of an ancient building which had numerous windows, pulled it down and rebuilt it. A few of the windows in the new house included the space occupied by ancient windows, but were of larger dimensions; several others included some portion of the space occupied by ancient windows; and in some cases the spaces occupied by ancient windows were entirely built up in the new house. The defendants commenced to build a house on the opposite side of the street, which, if completed according to the plans, would materially interfere with the light coming to the plaintiffs windows. On a motion for an interim injunction the court, holding that the plaintiffs had shewn an intention to preserve, and not to abandon, their ancient lights, and that there was a fair question of right to be tried at the hearing, and considering that the balance of convenience was in favour of granting an injunction rather than of allowing the defendants to complete their building with an undertaking to pull it down if required to do so, granted an injunction till the hearing. Newson v. Pender, 27 Ch. D. 43; 52 L. T. 9; 33 W. R. 243—C. A.

On a motion for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the erection of proposed buildings in course of construction, upon the ground that they will materially obstruct the access of light to ancient windows, if the scientific evidence as to the probable effect of the erection is evenly balanced, the court will have regard to the relative convenience of the parties; and where the stoppage of such buildings would manifestly occasion serious loss to one side, largely in excess of any inconvenience which could be caused to the other by their temporary progress, the court refused to grant an interlocutory injunction, and directed the motion to stand for the hearing, upon the terms that any portions of the buildings should be removed which the court might then consider to be an obstruction. Mackey v. Scottish Widows' Fund Assurance Society, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 114. Sec S. C., Ir. R. 11 Eq. 541.

Glass Screen.]-Where an occupier of a house and grounds in London erected a translacent screen of glass thirty-five feet high, and thirty feet distant from the plaintiff's dwelling, having louvres to admit air, the court refused to grant au injunction, Rudgliffe v. T. 345; 15 W. R. 120.

Under Common Law Procedure Act-Requiring Party to do an Act.]—Under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, the court may grant an injunction, although the effect of restraining the defendant from the continuance of the wrongful act is to compel him to do an act. Where, therefore, the action was for obstructing the plaintiff's ancient lights by the erection of a wall, the court granted an injunction, thereby compelling the defendant to take down the wall. Jessel v. Chaplin, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 931; 4 W. R. 610.

Injunction or Damages-Discretion of Court -Lord Cairns' Act. ]-In exercising the discretion given by s. 2 of Lord Cairns' Act, to award damages in substitution for an injunction, in the case of a substantial interference with a plaintiff's ancient lights, the court will not, when the result of the defendant's buildings would be, if they were allowed to continue, to render the plaintiff's property absolutely useless to him, compel the plaintiff to sell his property out and out to the defendant. But, if the inpury of the plantin would be assertance, and he property will remain substantially useful to him, if the defendant's buildings are permitted to continue, the court may exercise its discretion by awarding the plaintiff damages, in lieu of an injunction, and for the purpose of exercising that discretion the court will take into consideration the nature and situation of the property, e.g. the circumstance that it is situate in the centre of a large city, such as London. Ayysley v. Glover (L. R. 18 Eq. 544), Krehl v. Burrell (7 Ch. D. 551), and Smith v. Smith (L. R. 20 Eq. 500) considered. Holland v. Worley, 54 L. J., Ch. 268; 26 Ch. D. 578; 50 L. T. 526; 32 W. R. 749 ; 49 J. P. 7.

The discretion given to the court by s. 2 of Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27), to award damages in substitution for an injunction in the ease of a substantial interference with a plaintiff's ancient lights, is a discretion to be exercised according to the facts of each particular case. Where the plaintiff has, at the trial, established his statutory right as against a defendant who has creeted a building causing a substantial interference with that right, the court will not compel him to accept damages or compensation instead of an injunction, especially where the defendant has, during the progress of the action, given an undertaking to pull down, if so ordered at the trial. Holland v. Worley (26 Ch. D. 578) not followed. Greenwood v. Harnsey, supra, col.

Where the plaintiff's ancient lights have been obstructed to a substantial extent by a new building, and will be still further obstructed by the carrying out of the building scheme, the plaintiff prima facie is entitled to an injunction to restrain such further obstruction, the court light and air as to cause material annoyance to having no discretion to award damages in lieu those who occupy the house; and the locality of thereof. ### iii. Nature of Interference or Obstruction.

Substantial Damage must be Proved.]—Since the Judicature Act, as before it, a plaintiff in an action to restrain an alleged obstruction to ancient lights cannot obtain an injunction unless he proves substantial damage. Rudhin, 46 L. J., Ch. 807; 6 Ch. D. 160.

The court will not grant an injunction to restrain the erection of a building on account of its obstructing the plaintiff's light, unless the plaintiff can show that he will sustain substantial damage. Robinson v. Whittingham, 35 L. J., Ch. 227; L. R. 1 Ch. 442; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 40; 13 L. T. 730; 14 W. R. 291.

Where there is, substantially, interference with comfort, and diminution of light for carrying on business, so that substantial damages would be given at law, a court of equity will restrain injury to ancient lights; and the fact that the amount of compensation is capable of being ascertained by a jury does not prevent the court from acting on the ground of irreparable mischief. Dent v. Auction Mart Co., 35 L. J., Ch. 555; L. R. 2 Eq. 288; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 447; 14 L. T. 827; 14 W. R. 709.

A plaintiff coming to the court for an injunetion to restrain the erection of new buildings by his neighbour, on the ground of interference with his light and air, must shew that his own residence will be rendered substantially less comfortable for purposes of occupation. Johnson Wyatt, 8, N. R. 270; 33 L. J., Ch. 394; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1333; 9 L. T. 618; 12 W. R. 234—L.J.J.

In order to entitle a plaintiff to an injunction against a defendant obstructing the access of light and air to his house, the obstruction complained of must be such an interference with the of the obstruction caused by the part of the country, is to be taken into consideration in building already creeted. Dreafins v. Terucian estimating the amount of obstruction necessing fluence (b. (43 Ch. D. 316) and Molland v. to justify the interference of the court. In a large city the mere obstruction of the direct J. & S. 764; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 719; 13 L. T. 154; rays of the sun for two hours in the day, during 13 W. R. 538. the winter months, is not a sufficient ground for granting an injunction. Clarke v. Clark, 35 L. J., Ch. 151; L. R. 1 Ch. 16; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 914; 13 L. T. 482; 14 W. R. 115.

An injunction against darkening ancient windows is not granted in every case affecting the value of premises in a sufficient degree to support an action; the effect must be that material injury amounting to nuisance, which should not only be redressed by damages but upon equitable principles prevented. Att.-Gen. v. Nichol, 16

Ves. 338; 10 R. R. 186.

An injunction granted to restrain a defendant from erecting buildings so as to darken ancient lights, but with liberty to apply at chambers with respect to the erection of buildings on his property :- Held, that the foundation of the jurisdiction in equity to interfere is the existence of an injury to property of such a nature as to render the property in a material degree unsuitable for the purposes to which it is applied, or to lessen considerably the enjoyment of it. Yates v. Jack, 13 L. T. 17. See S. C. 14 L. T. 151.

Material Interference. ]-The question to be determined in a suit for an injunction to restrain an interference with light and air is still, as it was before the 2 & 3 Will, 4, c. 71, whether the acts of the defendant will materially interfere with the access of light and air to the plaintiff's house, so as substantially to affect the comfortable occupation of the honse. Kelk v. Pearson, L. R. 6 Ch. 809; 24 L. T. 890; 19 W. R. 665.

The defendant was erecting a row of houses running east and west. The western wall of the house at the west end of the row immediately adjoined the eastern boundary of the plaintiff's garden, which was on the north side of his house. The south frontage line of the row of honses was almost in a line with the north side of this house. The defendant's houses when completed were intended to be about thirty-two feet deep, and forty-five feet high, which height would exceed by a few feet that of the plaintiff's house. The evidence shewed that the nearest house to the plaintiff's house would interfere with the access of light and air thereto, to such an extent as substantially to affect the comfortable enjoyment of his honse :- Held, that he was entitled to a pernetual injunction to restrain the building of the house nearest to his own, Ib.

The right of an owner of ancient lights is to prevent his neighbour from obstructing the access of sufficient light and air to such an extent as to render his house substantially less comfortable and enjoyable, and the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will, 4, c. 71) has not altered the nature of the right or the principle on which it is to be determined whether it has been infringed. but has merely substituted a statutory title for an assumed grant. City of London Brewery Co. v. Tenant, 43 L. J., Ch. 457; L. R. 9 Ch. 212; 29 L. T. 755; 22 W. R. 172.

It is not every impediment to the access of light or of air which will warrant the interference of the Court of Chancery by way of injunc-tion, or even entitle the person alleging himself to be injured to damages at law. In order to found a title to relief in equity, or even at law, the onus of proving the injury rests with the B. for a mandatory injunction, or (alternatively) plaintiff. Curriers' Co. v. Corbett, 4 De G. for damages for the obstruction of light and air:

The reversioners in fee of houses on both sides of a court in the city of London sold their reversion of a house on one side of the court to a person who at the same time obtained from the termor an assignment of his interest. The purchaser cleared the site so obtained by him, and on it, and on adjoining land, commenced building in such a way as to interfere with the access of light and air to the vendor's houses on the opposite side of the court, and the latter filed a bill for an injunction to restrain him from proeceding with or completing his buildings, and for a preventive and mandatory injunction against any building to a greater height than that of the buildings pulled down, or so as to obstruct the light and air to a greater extent than had been the case prior to the clearance of the site :- Held, that there was no such material injury done or occasioned, or likely to be done or occasioned, to the vendors by the acts of the purchaser as would warrant the interference of a court of equity, and the bill was dismissed without costs, but without prejudice to any remedy at law. Ih.

The plaintiff was in the enjoyment of ancient lights. There had been a building adjoining his, with a wall alleged to have been twelve feet high, and not interfering with his light. defendant was about to pull down the rains of this wall, and rebuild it thirty feet high, which he alleged was the original height. The plaintiff's evidence as to the original height was more The defendant precise than the defendant's. said he never intended to build beyond the original height. The plaintiff proved that he threatened to build much beyond twelve feet. An injunction had been obtained, and the defendant never moved to dissolve it. At the hearing, a decree for a perpetual injunction was granted without requiring the plaintiff to try his right at law. Potts v. Lery, 2 Drew. 272.

The windows of the back return of M.'s house looked into a passage or yard nine feet wide. The opposite wall of G.'s house was thirty feet high. G. proposed to take down the existing wall of his house, and rebuild it at a height of sixty feet; but with a recess of eight feet opposite one-half the frontage of M.'s wall. The rooms, the light of which was interfered with, were small and low. The evidence as to the amount of light of which the windows would be deprived, and the extent to which M.'s premises would be diminished in value, was conflicting. The court, being of opinion that the windows would be deprived of a considerable amount of sky area, granted a prohibitory injunction, and declined to give an issue. Magnire v. Grattan, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 246; 16 W. R. 1189.

A. and B. were two houses, separated from each other by a gullet two feet wide. In house A, there was a window a foot square, five feet above the ground, on one side of the gullet, the window being the only window of the pantry of house A. The owner of house B., in the lifetime of a tenant for life of A., and with her approval, pulled down house B., and built a new house in such a manner as to encroach upon the gullet, and to exclude the light and air from the pantry of house A. After the in respect of such an impediment, some material death of the tenant for life of A., the reveror substantial injury must be established, and sioners filed a bill against the owner of house -Held, under the circumstances, that the incon- injunction he must shew a material diminution venience was not sufficiently serious to entitle in the quantity of air and light required for the plaintiffs to relief, either by mandatory the ordinary purposes of the room. the plaintnis to rener, entirer by manuatory injunction, or by an inquiry to assess damages. Sparling v. Clarson, 17 W. R. 518.

A bill stated that the erection of a proposed building would materially affect the comfort and enjoyment, in respect of light and air, of the inhabitants of an adjoining house, of which there had been uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years and upwards; and the court granted an injunction to restrain the erection of such building, the plaintiff undertaking to bring an action within one mouth. Injunction to restrain building in London seventeen feet off plaintiff's house, refused. Fishmangers' Co. v. East India Co., Dick. 164.

When Right arises from Contract. -The question of substantial injury is not material for the purpose of an injunction, when the right established arises under a contract. Allen v. Seekhum, 47 L. J. Ch. 742. See S. C. in C. A., 48 L. J., Ch. 611; 11 Ch. D. 790; 41 L. T. 260; 28 W. R. 26.

The owner of two leasehold messnages, held on a term for ninety-nine years, demised one for the residue of the term, less one day, to L., he himself occupying the other, in which he carried on the trade of a jeweller. L., on entering, paid a premium of 300l., and a reut of 7l. 10s. was reserved. Subsequently the owner became, by the completion of twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment, entitled to the use of windows in the rear of his house, looking into a yard upon which the house demised by him also looked, as ancient lights. In the demise there was a covenant restraining each party from building on the space between the backs of the houses so as to obstruct the light and air between certain points marked in an annexed plan. L. pulled down his house and commenced building nearer and higher than the former creetions :-Held, that there was a violation of the covenant, a material injury in the obstruction of light and air, and a clear right to the ancient lights; and a perpetual injunction granted with costs. Rolason v. Levy, 17 L. T. 641.

- Interference with Personal Comfort or Business. |-The court will interfere to protect a plaintiff whose personal comfort and enjoy-ment, and a fortiori, one whose trade or business is prejudicially affected by the diminution of light, and if the obstruction has been completed since the filing of the bill, will assess damages by way of compensation. Martin v. Headon, 35 L. J., Ch. 602; L. R. 2 Eq. 425; 12 Jur. (N.s.) 387; 14 L. T. 585; 14 W. R. 723.

- When special Purpose of Room not used for long Period. ]—The plaintiff had for fifteen years used an upper room in his house for the special purpose of drying tobacco. There was a free flow of light and air through this room by means of two windows, one at each end of the room, both of them ancient lights. On motion for an injunction to restrain the defendant from raising the roof of his house to a height which would occasion some, but not a material diminution of light to one of these windows :- Held, that as the plaintiff had not used the room for the special purpose for twenty years, he could claim no so as to interrupt his landlord's prospect. special right on that account; that to obtain an Hathurst v. v. Harbottle, 28 L. T. 186.

A man is entitled to the preservation of his ancient lights, even though, at the time, he is not using them for purposes requiring the amount of light laid claim to. Younge v. Shaper,

27 L, T. 643; 21 W. R, 135.

— When Damages granted instead of Injunction.] — Wherever a plaintiff would recover substantial damages at law he has a right to sue in a court of equity, but there may be cases where the court of e juity will exercise the power conferred on it by 21 & 22 Viet. c. 27, and give damages instead of an injunction. But the court will not let the defendant gain an advantage in this respect by refusing an interlocutory injunction, and merely putting him on an undertaking to merery putting mm on an undertunning to pull down if ordered at the hearing. Appalog v. Glorer, 43 L. J., Ch. 777; L. R. 18 Eq. 544; 31 L. T. 219; 23 W. R. 147. Affirmed, 44 L. J., Ch. 523; L. R. 10 Ch. 283; 32 L. T. 345; 23 W. R. 459.

- Future as well as Present Use of Premises regarded. ]-In considering the amount of injury caused to a party by the obstruction of ancient lights, the court will have regard, not merely to the present, but also to the possible future use of the property. Ib.

Observations on the quantum of injury to ancient lights necessary before the court will interfere by granting relief generally. Culoraft

v. Thompson, 15 W. R. 387.

This quantum of injury is not to be estimated by limiting it with reference to any particular use to which the premises are put at the date of the obstruction complained of. Ib.

In order to justify the interference of a court of equity by injunction, the obstruction of the ancient lights of a manufactory or of business premises must be such as to render the buildings to a material extent less suitable for the business to a material extent less sintance for the business carried on in them. Jackson v. Nonceastle (Duke), 3 De G. J. & S. 275; 33 L. J., Ch. 698; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 688, 810; 10 L. T. 685, 802; 12 W. R. 1066

Such obstruction must be one which diminishes the value of the premises for the purposes for which they are used at the time; and the fact that the obstruction may render the premises less fit for some other purposes to which they may by possibility be applied at a future time. cannot be taken into consideration. Ib.

It is not in every case in which an action can be maintained for the obstruction of ancient lights that an injunction will be granted by a court of equity, but the standard of the amount of damage that calls for the exercise of the jurisdiction has not been defined with any certainty. Ib.

Obstruction of View.]-If there is no inter-ference with the access of light and air, the fact that a shop window is obstructed in such a way that it cannot be seen from so great a distance down the street as formerly, affords no ground for the interference of a court of equity. Smith v. Owen, 14 W. R. 422.

The court restrained a tenant from building

Intrusion on Privacy.]—The intrusion upon a neighbour's privacy, even by opening a new window to overlook adjoining premises, is not a ground for interference either at law or equity. Turner v. Spouner, 1 Drew & Sun. 467; 30 L. J., Ch. 801; 7 Jur. (x.s.) 1068; 4 L. T. 732; 9 W. R. 684.

Duration of Obstruction.]—Where an obstruction to an ancient light had existed more than twelve months, but a promise had been given to remove the obstruction, and twelve months had not elapsed from the date of that promise before proceedings were taken:—Held, that there had not been such an interruption of the enjoyment as would deprive the owner of the light of his remedy. Galev. Albud; 8 Jur. (X.S.) 987; 6 L. T. 852; 10 W. R. 748.

Special Use of Premises for less than Twenty Years. ]-A bill was filed by a seed merchant, carrying on business in Dubliu, to restrain the defendants, who occupied adjacent offices, from erecting a new building then in progress, which he alleged would obstruct the access of light to an ancient window of the room in which he had sifted his seeds for the previous seventeen years; the plaintiff's interlocutory motion for an injunction was ordered to stand over till the hearing, the defendants being at liberty in the meantime to complete their works, on their undertaking to abide any order to be eventually made by the court as to the removal of the new building: on the hearing the vice-chancellor dismissed the bill with costs, and the plaintiff having appealed :-Held, that the defendants having caused such a diminution of light as, notwithstanding certain compensative illumination afforded by them, prevented the plaintiff from earrying on the delicate operation of sifting seeds in the room, he was entitled to relief, although he had so used the room for less than twenty years, and sufficient light remained in it for the ordinary purposes of a dwelling-house; and that the defendants should be restrained from erecting, or (on account of their undertaking) permitting to remain erected, any building obstructing the access of light as previously enjoyed by the plaintiff, and be directed to remove such portions of the newly-erected edifice as would constitute a breach of the foregoing injunction. Mackey v. Scottish Widows Fund Life Assurance Society, Ir. R. 11

A plaintiff who has acquired a prescriptive right to the access of light to his ancient windows, but who has only used such light for an extraordinary or special purpose for a period less than twenty years, is nevertheless entitled to a mandatory injunction to prevent any serious interference with the access of light as enjoyed for the special purpose. Lanfounchi v. Machiel (36 L. J., Ch. 518; L. R. 4 Eq. 421) not followed. Latturus v. Artistic Photographic Cu., 66 L. J., Ch. 522; [1897] 2 Ch. 214; 76 L. T. 457; 45 W. R. 614.

In Town or Gountry.]—There is no essential difference in the amount of light and air that may be claimed in town and country, and the court will interfere, though the amount of sky area abstracted is small, if its proportion to the previous amount of sky is such that the abstraction causes inconvenience. Martin v. Headon, 35 LJJ, Ch. 602; L. R. 2 Eq. 425; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 387; 14 L. T. 585; 14 W. R. 728.

In a case of interference with light there is no difference between the rights of a plaintiff in respect of a house in town or in the country. Deut v. Auction Mart Co., 35 L. J., Ch. 555; L. R. 2 Eq. 28; 12 Jur. (x.s.) 447; 14 L. T. 827; 14 W. R. 709.

Interference with Light of Chapel and School.]—Ou a bill filed to compel the removal of somuch of a large shed as interfered with the lights of a chapel and school-room below it, and to restrain the carrying on of the bushness of the defendants as bodier-unkers so as to interfere with the user of the chapel:—Held, that having regard to the nature of the building, relief as puryed would be granted at the heaving, though the shed was allowed to be erected and completed and the works carried on for some mouths without complaint. Buster v. Bower, 44 L. J., Ch. 625; 33 L. T. 41; 23 W. R. 805—LJJ.

Difference between Interference with Rights to Light and Water.]—The distinction explanned between an obstruction to ancient lights and an interference with the water rights of a riparian reporter with reference to the question whether damages should be awarded in hen of an injunction. Penniquon v. Brinop Intil Cod. 46. L. J., Ch. 773; 5 Ch. D. 769; 37 L. T. 149; 25 W. R. 874.

iv. Defences.

To establish a sufficient defence to an action or m injunction for alleged injury to light, the defendant must shew, that for whatever purpose the plaintiff may wish to employ the light whilst the house rotains its original character there will be no material interference with it. Dent v. Juction Mart Co., 35 L. J. Ch. 5.55; L. R. 2. Eq. 288; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 447; 14 L. T. 827; 14 W. R. 700; 14 June 14 June 15 Ju

The following grounds of defence—first, that the plaintiff will have, when his hippy is complete, as much light and air as other persons have for the same purposes; secondly, that the plaintiff might avoid the injury by calarging his windows; thirdly, that the plaintiff has been accustomed to use blinds for his windows; fourthly and fiftbly, that a room next for a special purpose is not well adapted to that purpose, and that it has been so used without the knowledge of the defendant; and, sixthly, that the defendant intends to one the ceil by building with glazed tiles, or other means for improving the light—are insufficient. Terms not to be taken Strictly, —The terms of an injunction restraining a party from creeting and building, so as to darken, hinder or obstruct the free access to light and air, as such access as previously enjoyed, are not to be taken strictly. Beadel v. Perry, 19 L. T. 760; 17 W. R. 185.

Air.]—"Air" is not to be coupled with "light" in an injunction as a matter of common form. Baster v. Bower, supra.

Reference to Chambers.]—The court, though it will grant a perpetual injunction to restrain the darkening of ancient lights, will yet in a proper case retain the power of sanctioning any proper scheme, which may be proposed by the defendant, and will for this purpose give liberty to apply to the judge in chambers with reference to any such the judge in chambers with reference to any such scheme, and will not require the payment of sexts as a condition precedent to such application. Stokes V. City Offices Co. 2 Hem. & M. 650; 11 Jun. (N.S.) 360: 12 L. T. 602; 13 W. R. 537.

Where an injunction was granted to restrain the interruption of an ancient light, the court gave the defended leave to apply in order to ascertain whether any building which he might propose to erect world cause such an interruption. Tatae v. Juch. 35 I. a.J., Ch. 539; L. R. I. Ch. 295; 12 Jur. (N.8.) 306; 14 L. T. 151; 14 W. R.

Narrowing Declaration.]—Where an injunction is granted against obstructing the ancient lights of business premises, the count ought not to make any declaration narrowing, or appearing to narrow, the right of the plaintiff to the quantity of light therefore used by him for the purpose of his business. If # vi. Inspection of Premises.

By Judge.]—A judge of the Court of Chancery ought not to make a personal inspection of buildings in order to ascertain whether a material diministion of light and air is caused in any case. Level v. Schweder, 43 L. J., Ch. 232; 22 W. R. 202.

A judge sitting in equity is bound to pronounce his judgment according to the evidence. Hence, to decide a case relating to light and air upon conclusions of fact derived from ocular inspection is a course which a judge in equity cannot, in ordinary cases, be recommended to adopt. Judesson v. Neucoustle (Duke), 10 Jur. (N.S.) 688; 10 L. T. 685.

Appointment of Surveyor to report.]—When the court was not satisfied from the evidence whether the wall proposed to be built by the defendant would or would not be a material obscruction to the plaintiffs lights, the court directed a temporary sercen to be erected to the height of the proposed wall, and appointed a surveyor to report on the effect. Levech v. Schweder, 43 L. J., Ch. 487; L. R. 9 Ch. 463; 30 L. T. 586; 22 W. R. 633.

The court ought not under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 42, to make an order before the trial, appointing a scientific person to report upon the question of fact. Ballie Co. v. Simpson, 24 W. R. 300.

Therefore, in a light and air suit, in which an interlocutory injunction had been granted, a motion by the defendant for the appointment of a surveyor to view the premises and plans and report thereon as to the injury to the plaintiffs, was refused with costs.

vii. Application.

Time for—Completion of Obstruction.]—A party coming to the court to prevent an obstruction of ancient lights, must take proceedings before the obstruction complained of is completed, otherwise his remedy is by action, and it is immaterial whether he knew of the obstruction before it was completed. Lewrence v. Austin, 34 L. J., Ch. 598; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 576; 12 L. T. 757; 13 W. R. 981.

The mere fact that the damage created by obstruction of light is completed before bill filed, is not of itself a sufficient ground for refusing a mandatory injunction. Durall v. Pritchard, 35 L. J. Ch. 223; L. R. 1 Ch. 244; 12 Jar. (N.S.) 16; 13 L. T. 545; 14 W. R. 212.

— Effect of Delay.]—Injunction to restrain the obstruction of ancient lights refused on the ground of delay, the bill being retained with liberty to proceed at law. Capper v. Hubbuck, 30 Beav. 160; 31 L. J., Ch. 123; 7 Jur. (8.8.) 457; 9 W. R. 332.

A delay of five weeks after knowledge of an intention to build, so as to obstruct ancient lights:—Held, under the circumstances, not such acquiescence as to discuritle a plaintiff to relief, Johnson v. Wyatt, 33 L. J., Ch. 394; 9 Jur. (x.S.) 1333; 9 L. T. 618; 11 W. R. 852.

relief. Johann v. Wyatt, 33 L. J., Ch. 394; 9 Jur. (X.S.) 1333; 9 L. T. 618; 11 W. R. 852. In order to justify the court in not interfering at the hearing, there must be a much stronger case of acquiescence than is required upon an interlocutory application. Ib.

and Mutual Recrimination.]—Where, in an injunction suit to restrain a defendant from obstructing the plaintiff's light and aft, a motion for a decree was made nearly three years after filing the original bill and other proceedings in the suit, and after various acts on the part of both plaintiff and defendant, whereby it appeared to the court that each party had to some considerable extent injured the other :—Held, that although the plaintiff sought the injunction and changes against the defendant, and the defendant was to some extent to blame, still that, upon the evidence, the proper course was simply to dismiss the bill without costs. Cocks v. Hometine, 14 L. T. 390.

Ex Parte.]—Injunction granted ex parte to restrain the owner of a house from making any erections or improvements so as to darken or obstruct the ancient lights or windows of an adjoining house. Back. v. Stacy. 2 Russ. 121.

d. Action.

Who may be joined as Defendant.]—In an action for obstructing the plaintiff's lights, a celerk who superintended the erection of the building by which they were darkened, and who alone directed the workmen, may be joined as a co-defendant with the original contractor. W7son v. Peto, 6 Moore, 47.

By Reversioner. -A reversioner recovered in an action for obstructing an ancient light to the injury of his reversionary interest. The obstruction was not removed :-Held, that he might maintain a second action for the continuation of the injury to his reversionary interest. Shadwell v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & Ad. 97; 4 Car. & P. 333; M. & M. 350; 9 L. J. (0.8.) K. B. 142.

A declaration for an injury to the reversionary interest of the plaintiff by obstructing ancient lights is sufficient if it shews an obstruction which may operate injuriously to the reversion, either by its being of a permanent character or by its operating in denial of the right. Metropolitan Association for Improving Ducklings v. Petch, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 504; 27 L. J., C. P. 330; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1000.

Whether abated by Death. ]-The plaintiff in an action for a mandatory injunction and damages for obstruction of light to freehold property died more than six months after action brought, and three months after her death B., her executor and devisee, obtained the common order, under Ord. XVII. r. 2, to carry on proceedings against the defendant. The defendant moved to discharge the order on the ground that the cause of action did not survive :- Held, that plaintiff's equitable right to a mandatory injunction devolved to B., as her devisee, and that B., as her executor, was at least entitled to continue the action for recovery of damages for injury committed during a period of six months prior to plaintiff's death. Jones v. Simes, 59 L. J., Ch. 351; 48 Ch. D. 607; 62 L. T. 447.

Evidence.]—In an action for the obstruction of light to the windows of an hotel, the summons and plaint containing no allegation of special damage, witnesses deposed that guests coming to the hotel had refused to take the rooms which were alleged to be darkened, and had stated the darkness of the rooms as a ground for their refusal :- Held, that this evidence of the statements made by the guests was not admissible.

e. Damages.

Consequential-Admissibility of Evidence. ]-In an action for the obstruction of light and air by a hoarding erected before the defendant's house next door to that of the plaintiff, the not himself in possession or occupation of it. Ib. caused divers persons to commit nuisances, and place rubbish against the hoarding, from which nuisances the plaintiff was injured :—Held, that evidence of these nuisances was not admissible, as the defendant could not be liable for their existence. Steele v. Warne, 23 L. T. 394.

Inquiry as to—Where Injunction would be dismissed.]—When an unlawful obstruction of an ancient light had existed for nearly six years, the court being of opinion that before the passing of the 21 & 22 Viet. c. 27, a bill for an injunction would have been dismissed, refused to direct an inquiry as to damages under that act, Gaunt v. Fynney, 42 L. J., Ch. 122; L. R. 8 Ch. 8; 27 L. T. 569; 21 W. R. 129.

A plaintiff coming to the court for an injunction to restrain the erection of new buildings by his neighbour, on the ground of interference with his light and air, must shew that his own residence will be rendered substantially less comfortable for purposes of occupation. Though an injunction be refused in such a case, the court, if it appear that damages have been sustained, may, if it think fit, exercise the jurisdiction conferred by 21 & 22 Viet. c. 27, and Hecton contents by 2 to 2 to 2, and direct an inquiry as to damages. Johnson v. Wyatt, 33 L. J., Ch. 394; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1383; 9 L. T. 618; 11 W. R. 852. And see Sication v. G. X. Ry., 33 L. J., Ch. 399; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 191; 9 L. T. 745; 12 W. R. 891.

An inquiry as to damages will not be directed where a plaintiff has opened a case of substantial damage and failed to prove it. Kino v. Rudhin, 46 L. J., Ch. 807; 6 Ch. D. 160.

 Where Jurisdiction to grant Injunction. -Where the circumstances justified the court in granting a mandatory injunction at the hearing, to compel a defendant to pull down newlyerected buildings to the height of the former ones, on the ground of obstruction to the plainfiff's light and air; but where the plaintiff, having heard of the intended structure in April, did not complain till the November following during which time the defendants had laid out large sums; and where the plaintiff had also, since bill filed, made an offer to take a money compensation for the injury to her rights; and, thirdly, where very great damage would be caused to the defendant by an injunction:— The court, instead of an injunction, directed an inquiry as to the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff. Senior v. Pawson, L. R. 3 Eq. 330: 15 W. R. 220.

When on the site of old buildings the erection of new buildings of much greater height, materially obstructing the access of light and of air to adjoining property, has been completed before complaints made or bill filed, the court, although it has jurisdiction to grant a mandatory injunction, will not do so where the owner of such property has himself treated the case as one for compensation by damages. But, having Greeham Hotel Ch. v. Manning, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 125. assess damages and will not leave the plaintiff to his remedy by action. Gart (Viscountess) v. Clark, 18 L. T. 343: 16 W. R. 569.

Although a month should clapse between the completion of the building and any objection thereto, the court will not consider that there was laches or acquiescence on the part of the owner of the adjoining property when he was

Implied Covenant not to obstruct. ]-Damages were given in respect of an obstruction of access of air to a slaughter-house which had been used for upwards of thirty years, on the ground of implied covenant. Hall v. Lichfield Brewery Co., 49 L. J., Ch. 655; 43 L. T. 380.

Measure of-For Obstruction.]-In an action for the obstruction of ancient lights, the judge directed the jury that they were to consider whether there had been a sensible diminution of light, so as to make the plaintiff's premises less available for the purposes of occupation or business, to which they were then, or might thereafter be made, applicable, and that the damages were to be estimated according to the diminution of value of the premises for such purposes: into an archway and a passage passing nuder—Held, a right direction, on the ground that part of his house towards the rear and also a the purposes for which the premises had actually been used while the light had been enjoyed were not the proper measure of the right, building intended to be very lefty, immediately Moore v. prevent access of light and air to the plaintiff's windows was granted ex parte on the 4th of November, 1879, and on the 27th of November his ancient lights, and for damages:—Held, on Court of Appeal discharged the order. On the 14 W. R. 725. 11th of November, 1880, a perpetual injunction as to access of air was granted; but on the 21st of June, 1881, the Court of Appeal dismissed the action with costs. On the 16th of February, 1882, the defendant gave notice of motion for an inquiry as to damages, which was refused by Bacon, V.-C. The only damage alleged was that the defendant had agreed to let part of the property with the new buildings to a tenant, and was prevented from carrying this out by the injunction preventing his building. It was not proved, however, that there was any binding agreement to take a lease, nor did it appear that the injunction interfered with the erection of the buildings to such an extent as would have entitled the intended tenant to throw up the agreement if binding :-Held, by the Court of Appeal, that an inquiry as to damages ought not to be granted. Smith v. Day, 21 Ch. D. 421; 31 W. R. 187—C. A.

Whether where an interlocatory injunction has been wrongfully granted, owing to a mistake of law by the judge, without any misrepresentation, suppression or other default on the part of the plaintiff, an inquiry as to damages can be directed under the undertaking, quere. Jessel, M.R., and Cotton, L.J., differed, and Brett, L.J., gave no opinion. Th.

The court is not bound to grant an inquiry as to damages whenever the defendant has sustained some damage by the granting the injunction; but it has a discretion, and may refuse an inquiry if the damage restrained is trivial or remote, or if there has been great delay in making the application. Ib.

The question considered at what time the application for an inquiry as to damages ought to be made :-Held, that, even if there had been a binding agreement by the proposed tenant to take a lease, and the injunction had so interfered with the building as to entitle the tenant to be off the bargain, damages ought not to be granted in respect of it, for that damages must be confined to the immediate natural consequences of the injunction, under the circumstances which were within the knowledge of the party obtaining the injunction. ## D. RIGHT OF SUPPORT. 1. From Adjoining Land.

Nature of Right. ]-The right of a person tothe support of the land immediately around his house is not in the nature of an easement, but is the ordinary right of enjoyment of property, and till that is interfered with he has no legal ground of complaint, although in fact something may have been done which (without his knowledge).
has occasioned results that will afterwards affect his property. Buckhouse v. Bonomi, 9 H. L. Cas. 503; 34 L. J., Q. B. 181; 7 Jur. (N.s.) 809; 4 L. T. 754; 9 W. R. 769.

A laudowner has a right independently of prescription to the lateral support of his neighbour's land, so far as that is necessary to sustain his soil in its natural state, and also to compensation, for damage caused either to the land or tosupport. Hunt v. Peakv. 1 Johns. 705; 29 L. J., Ch. 785; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 107.

Therefore, where A. dug a well near B.'s land, which sank in consequence, and a building erected on it within twenty years fell, and it was proved that if the building had not been on B.'s land, the land would still have sunk, but the damage to B. would have been inappreciable :-Held, that B. had no right of action against A. The court will interfere to restrain excavations which threaten danger to adjoining houses, though the actual resulting damage may be small, Dent v. Auction Mart Co., 35 L. J., Ch., 555.

Lateral support of House by Soil and Building not contiguous. ]-A., B. and C. were the owners of three consecutively adjoining houses in a street; B.'s house intervened between those of A. and C. A.'s premises were destroyed by fire and rebuilt. After rebuilding, B.'s side wall separated from C.'s premises, the adjacent wall in which became cracked. In an action by C. against A. for damages, evidence of architects was given to shew that the crack was caused by the settling down of A.'s new building on soft. clay, and drawing over with it B.'s premises; Street, London, had ancient windows looking and on the other hands architects were produced

Implied Grant-Sale of Plots of Land. ]-The corporation of L. put up a piece of land for sale in lots, the interest acquired by each purchaser being a right to a lease of the lot purchased by him, and he being bound to build upon the lot according to plans to be approved by the corporation. None of the lots were sold, and in July, 1868, the plaintiff agreed for the purchase of one of the lots by private contract, subject to the original conditions. He furnished plans shewing a foundation 10 feet 9 inches deep; but finding the subsoil unsafe he laid his foundation at a depth of 8 feet 3 inches to the knowledge of the corporation, whose officer inspected the operations and made no objections. In June, 1869, the plaintiff's house was carried to the joists of the ground floor. In August, 1869, the defendant purchased from the corporation the determined from the corporation and adjoining lot. In October, 1869, when the plaintiffs house was nearly finished, the corporation granted him his lease. Agreement to build. ]-An owner of adjoining lots of land, numbered 6 and 7, sold lot 6, to the defendant, and lot 7 to the plaintiff. By the terms of the conveyance to him, the defendant agreed to build on his land according to dant agreed to build on his acid according to a certain elevation. To do this, excavations on lot 6 were necessary, which deprived the buildings on lot 7 (the weight of which had been increased by the plaintiff since the sale to him) of lateral support, and they consequently fell :-Held, that an action would not lie against the defendant for the injury caused to the plaintiff, as the defendant was only carrying out his conas the certacant was only carrying one ins contract with the vendor, in whose place the plaintiff stood. Marchie v. Mack, 19 C. B. (8.8.) 190; 34 L. J., C. P. 337; 11 Jun. (8.8.) 608; 12 L. T. 735; 13 W. R. 896.

Negligence of Adjoining Owner. 111 an action by a reversioner, a count alleged that a messuage and land in fact received lateral support from, and were supported by, the land adjoining, yet the defendant wrongfully and negligently dug and made exervations in the land so adjoining, and without sufficient shoring, propping or otherwise protecting the messnage and land from the effects thereof, and thereby deprived the messuage and land of their support, whereby the land and messuage sank. Another count stated that the plaintiff was, by reason of her interest in the messuage and land, entitled to have the messnage supported laterally by land adjoining, yet the defendant wrongfully and negligently dag and made excavations in the land adjoining, and without sufficiently shoring, propping or otherwise protecting the messaage and land, and thereby deprived the messaage of the support to which the plaintiff was so entitled, whereby the messnage and land sank :- Held, that both counts disclosed a right of action, as well in respect of the injury to the house as to the land. Bibby v. Curter, 4 H. & N. 153; 28 L. J., Ex. 182; 7 W. R. 193.

Alteration of Building-Prescription.]-A right to lateral support from adjoining land may be acquired by twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment for a building proved to have been newly built, or altered so as to increase the lateral pressure, at the beginning of that time; and it is so acquired if the enjoyment is peaceable and without deception or concealment, and so open that it must be known that some support is being enjoyed by the bidling. Datton v. Anyns, 50 L. J., Q. B. 689 16 App. Cas. 740; 44 L. T. Sath, 30 W. R. 191; 46 J. P. 132—H. L. (E.) Semble, per Loui Selborne, L.C.—Such a

Two dwelling-houses adjoined, built independently, but each on the extremity of its owner's soil, and having lateral support from the soil on which the other rested. This having continned for much more than twenty years, one of the houses (the plaintiffs') was, in 1849, converted into a coach factory, the internal walls being removed and girders inserted into a stack of brickwork in such a way as to throw much more lateral pressure than before upon the soil under the adjoining house. The conversion was made openly and without deception or concealment, More than twenty years after the conversion the owners of the adjoining house employed a contractor to pull down their house and excavate, the contractor being bound to shore up adjoining buildings and make good all damage. The contractor employed a sub-contractor upon similar terms. The house was pulled down, and the soil under it excavated to a depth of several feet, and the plaintiffs' stack being deprived of the lateral support of the adjacent soil sank and fell, bringing down with it most of the factory:— Held, that the plaintiffs had acquired a right of support for their factory by the twenty years' enjoyment, and could sue the owners of the adjoining house and the contractor for the injury. Bower v. Peate (1 Q. B. D. 321) approved. Ib.

Adjoining Owners deriving under Common Grantor-Implied Covenant-Injury following from Acts of Third Party.]—The plaintiffs and the defendants were adjoining owners of land. The plaintiffs derived under a grant, made for building purposes more than twenty years prior to the injuries complained of. The grantors were the predecessors in title of the defendants. Subsequently to the date of the grant, and after the building of a house by the plaintiffs on their land, a railway cutting was made near the locality; but it did not appear that any injury was thereby caused to the plaintiffs' house. The defendants having, however, piled large quantities of stones on their lands, immediately adjoining the plain-tiffs' house, cracks appeared in the walls of the latter, and the plaintiffs brought an action to recover damages caused by the deprivation of the right of support. The judge at the trial left to the jury only the questions :- Whether the plaintiffs' house had been supported by the defendants' land for more than twenty years? and, Whether the injuries complained of had resulted from the deprivation of such support? and his lordship declined to submit to the jury other questions which the defendants' counsel required to be left to them, viz.:-(1) Were the plaintiffs' houses and their foundations constructed with reasonable skill and care, having regard to the nature of the soil, and other surrounding circumstances ! (2) Were due and reasonable precantions taken by the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title to protect and maintain the houses, having regard to the construction and existence of the railway? (3) Were the injuries complained of, or any of them attributable to the want of such due and reasonable precautions! (4) Was the piling of the stones on the defendants' land a reasonable use thereof, under all the surrounding reasonable use increas, index an one surrounding circumstances? (5) Were the injuries complained of caused wholly by the placing of the stones on the defendants land? The jury having found for the plaintiffs, and assessed damages :-Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to retain the verdict, and that their right to support, whether acquired by grant or prescription, was | 421.

---- Right to Damages for Subsidence.]-The plaintiff was owner of a house erceted in 1834 on solid ground. Previously to the building of the house, a portion of the minerals had been gotten under a garden which adjoined the house. In 1838, a portion of the minerals was gotten under the defendant's land, which adjoined the garden. In 1855 the defendant commenced getting out the rest of the minerals under his land. In 1857 the plaintiff's land sunk, and the house was injured by the defendant's mining operations. was found by the jury that the sinking of the plaintiff's land was caused by the defendant's workings; that some damage would have happened, but not to the same extent, if the garden ground had been left solid: that the defendant knew of the excavations under the garden; that the land would have sunk in just the same whether there was a house on it or not; and lastly, that the damage to the house by the sinking was 3001.; 2501. occasioned solely by the defendant's workings, and 501, damages caused, in part, by the exeavations under the garden:-Held, first, that inasmuch as the sinking of the land was in no way caused by the weight of the house, he was entitled to recover whether he had acquired a right to support for his foundations by the defendant's soil or not. The copy-hold land was afterwards conveyed enfranchised by the purchaser and the lords of the manor to by the purchaser and the lords of the manor to the church building commissioners, under whom the plaintiff took. Neither the lords of the manor, nor the commissioners, nor the plaintiff, had notice of the deed. The defendant, who took the adjoining freehold land under the original vendor, having by working the mines in it caused ventor, naving by working the innies in it caused the land of the plaintiff to sink, and damaged the buildings thereon —Held, that he was not protected by the deed from liability to make compensation. ## 2. FROM ADJOINING BUILDINGS, Damage—Liability—Employer and Contractors.]—Where ancient buildings belonging to different owners adjoin each other there is a right of support from the building as well as right of support from the building as well as from the land; and this right of support can be claimed under the provisions of the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71). The mere fact that the support is derived from property which belongs to an ecclestastical corporation does not prevent the right of support being acquired under the act. But the enjoyment of the right must have been open, and not surreptitions, to come within the provisions of the act. Damage having been done by the wrongful acts of a contract and specification, to a melghbour's vault, it was held, under the circumstances, that both the employer and contractor were liable for it, and judgment was given for the plaintiff, with costs against both defendants. **Lemaitre V.** Davis, 31 L. Contiguous Rooms.]—Defendant stayed by injunction from pulling down his rooms to prejudice of plaintiff's rooms. Bush v. Field, Cary, 90.

House not Contiguous.]—Three contiguous houses in a street visibly leamed out of the perpendicular for upwards of thirty years, A.'s house leaning on B.'s house. On the expiration of a lease to a tenant, B. took down his house, the effect of which, by removing the support, was to cause C.'s house to fall down; and C.'s house falling, A.'s house fell —Held, that the house falling, A.'s house fell —Held, that the fall of A.'s house did not give him a right of action against B, for that A. had not either a natural or an acquired right to have his house supported by B.'s through the intermediate house. Effect of Sub-division.]—Where an owner of land builds houses upon it adjoining each other, so as to require mutual support, there is either by a presumed grant or by a presumed reservation a right to such mutual support, and such right is not affected by a subsequent sub-division of the property. Richards v. Rose, 9 Ex. 218; 2 C. L. B. 31; 23 L. J., Ex. 3; 17 Jur. 1936.

houses was granted ending in 1895. The houses were afterwards sub-let separately, and in 1864, each was held under a sub-lease, which expired a few days before the head lease, the one by A., and the other by B. Up to that year neither house supported any part of the other. A., with the permission of B., had raised the wall between the gardens of the houses by about two feet, and in October, 1864, B. agreed to let A. maintain the wall during the remainder of the head lease, less the last twenty days thereof, in consideration of 5s. a year. In 1870, B's sub-lease having been assigned to C., he, with A's permission, built with beams into the wall, and A. agreed that C. might maintain and enjoy the wall during the remainder of the head lease, less the last twenty days thereof, in consideration of 5s. a year. In 1871, A., without surrendering his sub-lease, obtained a new lease for 999 years, to be reckoned from that date, but as regarded possession, to take effect from one day after the expiration of the subsisting head lease of 1797that is, 1895. In 1889 C. also obtained a long lease of his house framed in the same way. the lease of 1871 the lessors reserved the mines and minerals under the demised property, but nothing further. A, thereby covenanted to keep up the value of the demised property by maintaining and repairing the then existing house, or by rebuilding or improving it, or by erecting one or more other houses in lieu of it or in addition to it; and that he would not do anything which might tend to the annoyance or damage of the other tenants of adjoining land belonging to the lessors, including that which they afterwards let to C. Subsequently A.'s house became vested in the plaintiffs, and C.'s house in the defendant. It was admitted that the lease of 1871 comprised the whole of the wall referred to in the agreements of 1864 and 1870; and since 1895, when the head lease of 1797 fell in and these agreements came to an end, the wall (treated in 1864 as B.'s) and the crection upon it had been the plaintiffs' for the rest of their present lease :- Held, that the lease of 1871 contained no implied reservation, on the ground of necessity nor upon any other principle, to the lessors of the right to have the adjoining house supported by the plaintiffs' wall; and that, therefore, the defendant had not acquired any right to keep the ends of her beams in the plaintiffs' wall. Richards v. Rose (supra) distinguished. Howarth v. Armstrong, 77 L. T. 62—C. A.

Enjoyment preeario—Deed inconsistent with Enjoyment as of Bight,—On the 1st of January, 1855, T., a builder, agreed to purchase from S. a plot of land, part of an estate then being laid out for building, bounded, according to the construction put on the agreement by the court, by a plot of land intended to be made into a back street, which T. agreed to pays. About the same time, S. employed T. to build a wall upon the other side of the intended street, standing, as the court held, on the property of S. Between 1854 and 1855, while the building scheme was still intended to be carried out, T. built a range of workshops upon the side of the intended street, having a gable resting upon the wall. In 1861 S. conveyed a property on the other side of the wall from the intended street, the other side of the wall from the intended street.

S. executed to T. a conveyance of his piece of land according to the agreement, whereby T. covenanted to pave the intended street. In 1877 S. agreed to convey to T. the site of the intended street. This agreement contained recitals of the intention to make the street and of the conveyance of 1864, and was made subject to any rights of way existing therein. In 1881 the defendant, who had purchased the land on the other side of the wall, pulled down part of the wall, thus destroying the plaintiff's shed. The shed had stood upon the site of the intended street ever since its first erection. The plaintiff brought this action for damages on the ground that he had acquired an easement to rest his shed on the wall :- Held, that the covenant in the deed of 1864, and the recitals in that of 1877, amounted to an acknowledgment by the defendant that up to 1877 he might at any time have been compelled to pull down his shed, and was inconsistent with an enjoyment as of right of an easement of support for it from the wall. Tone v. Preston, 53 L. J., Ch. 50; 24 Ch. D. 739; 49 L. T. 99; 32 W. R. 166.

Inserting Beam or Rafter in Wall-Alleged Trespass.]-The plaintiff and the defendant were in possession of adjoining honses, both of which were ancient messuages. The plaintiff's house was considerably higher than the defendant's house, and was built up against the western wall of the defendant's house, to the height to which such western wall extended. Up to this height there was no other wall between the two houses, but the plaintiff alleged that on the top of the western wall, and above the roof of the defendant's house, an external wall was erected at the time of the building of the plaintiff's house, forming part thereof, and supporting the roof thereof. The western wall, on the top of which the external wall had been erected, was admitted by the plaintiff to be the property of the defendant, subject to all rights and easements over the same in favour of the plaintiff's house. The external wall erected on the top of the defendant's western wall was, the plaintiff alleged, his property. The defendant being desirous of adding to the height of his house, removed some of the stones comprising the external wall, and inserted in the holes thereby made certain beams, for the purpose of supporting a new roof to his house at a greater height than his old roof. The plaintiff claimed an injunction to restrain such acts, on the an injunction to restrain such acis, on the ground 'that the defendant was a respasser. The defendant alleged that the wall was his, but admitted that the plaintiff had certain rights in respect to the wall which he, the defendant, had not in any way interfered with :-Held, that the plaintiff had been in enjoyment of an easement but not in possession; and that nothing had occurred to displace the defendant's original title to the wall, and therefore, that the action failed. Waddington v. Naylor, 60 L. T. 480.

Wall adjoining and supporting Highway.]-Where a servitude of support to a highway by a wall has been acquired, the owner of the highway, and not the owner of the wall, in the absence of express stipulation to that effect in the instrument (if any) creating the easement, is bound to repair the wall when out of repair and insufficient to support and maintain the highway.

Semble, such stipulation, covenant or obligation cannot be inferred merely from the fact that the wall has been on several occasions repaired by the owner of the wall or his predecessors in title. 7h.

Party Wall-Implied Covenant by Lessor, ]-The defendants were owners of two houses in a street, numbered 38 and 40, and of a gateway under 40 and adjoining 38. In 1857 they demised the house No. 38 for a term of 21 years, the lease containing a covenant by the lessee to repair all walls and party walls belonging to the premises. In 1865 they granted a lease to the plaintiff, of the house No. 40 for a term of 11 years, subject. to a similar covenant to repair walls and party The wall on the side of the gateway separating it from No. 38 was a party wall between the gateway and the house No. 38 to the height of the first floor. The house of the plaintiff, No. 40, was built so as to extend in part over the top of the gateway and to rest upon this party wall between the gateway and the house No. 38 and to be supported by it. The plaintiff's covenant to repair did not extend to this wall, and there was no covenant by the defendants to keep it in repair. In 1874 it was discovered that the walls of that part of No. 40 which was above the gateway were giving way. The damage was owing to failure of support. from the party wall, which had bulged in consequence of the pressure upon it from the plaintiff's premises: Held, that there was no implied covenant on the part of the defendants to support the plaintiff's premises, although it might be an answer to an action upon the plaintiff's covenant to repair, that the repair had been rendered impossible, by the neglect of some precedent obligation on the part of the defendants. Colebeck v. Girdlers (b., 45 L. J., Q. B. 225; 1 Q. B. D. 234; 34 L. T. 350; 24 W. R. 577.

F. OTHER EASEMENTS.

Projecting Room. ]- C., being owner of two adjoining houses, sold one of them to H. "as the same was then in the occupation of the tenant" thereof. At the time of the sale neither C. nor H. knew, what was afterwards discovered to be the fact, that a room on the first-floor level, forming and used as part of the house retained by C., projected into the house purchased by H. H. pulled down the house purchased by him, and erected on its site a building which partly extended over the projecting room of C.'s house, but did not rest upon or otherwise interfere with Upon a bill filed by C. to restrain H. so building above his projecting room :- Held, that the projecting room did not earry anything above or below it; that H. was the owner of the column of air above the room, and entitled to build in manner above mentioned. Curhett v. Hill, 39 L. J., Ch. 547; L. R. 9 Eq. 671; 22 L. T. 263.

Right of Eavesdrop. -A. was the owner of premises, the eaves of which projected over adjoining land of B., and had become entitled by length of user to have the rain-water drop from such caves on to the land. A. in rebuilding his Stookport and trigde Highway Board v. Grant, premises carried the wall abutting on B.'s land 51 L. J., Q. B. 357; 46 L. T. 388; 46 J. P. 437. It is slightly greater height than before, and consequently raised the height of the eaves from the | dwelling-house and a yard, having demised them ground to the same extent:—Held, that, in the | both to a tenant, the latter, for the convenience v. Walters, 42 L. J., C. P. 105; L. R. 8 C. P. 162; 28 L. T. 343, Semble, that the fresh projection over the land of B, which was made when the caves were raised, was not a new trespass, but only a mere user of the space taken possession of by the trespass occasioned by the original projection. Ib.

Fascia-Division of Tenements.]-The plaintiff was lessee under a lease dated in 1876, of premises in a yard lying back from and numbered 152 in A. street, and reached by a gateway passing under the two adjoining houses. Over this gateway was a fascia plastered to the wall partly of No. 151 and partly of No. 153, A.-street, upon which for more than twenty years had been painted the number and the names of the successive occupiers of the plaintiff's premises. The plaintiff's lease demised the premises "as now or lately in the occupation of B." B. had used the fascia as above mentioned. The defendant was the lessee under a lease dated in 1878, but which was a renewal of one dated, in 1874, of No. 153, A.-street, and in redecorating the front of his house in 1880, defaced or obscured that part of house in 1800, deniced of observed the fascin which rested upon his house. The same landlords owned all three houses. The defendant's lease contained no express reservation of the plaintiff's right to the fascia :- Held, that both by the leases and by their practice the lessors had divided the tenements so that the fascia formed an integral part of the tenement No. 152. Francis v. Hayward, 52 L. J., Ch. 12; 20 Ch. D. 773; 46 L. T. 659; 30 W. R. 744. Affirmed on first ground, 52 L. J., Ch. 291; 22 Ch. D. 177; 48 L. T. 297; 31 W. R. 488; 47 J. P.

Semble, there was sufficient to shew that No. 153 had been demised subject to, and No. 152 with the benefit of, the easement of the plaintiff's using the fascia. Ib.

Sign-board of Public-house.]-The plaintiffs, the owners of a public-house, claimed the right to affix a sign-board to the wall of the defendants' house. The sign-board had been so affixed for upwards of forty years. The two houses had formerly belonged to the same owner, the defendants' house having been granted away by such owner before the plaintiffs' house. When he first became owner of the two houses the plaintiffs' house was not occupied as a public-house. It did not, however, appear whether the signboard was first affixed to the defendants' house during the common ownership :-Held, that it could not be assumed that it was first affixed during the common ownership. Steggles, 48 L. J., Ch. 639; 12 Ch. D. 261; 41

Held, also, that the easement claimed was a legal one, and that a grant of it by the defendants' predecessors in title to the plaintiffs' predecessors in title must be presumed. injunction was granted to restrain the defendants from removing the sign-board. Ib.

was thrown on the servient tenement by the situate on one of the yards, and permitted one alteration, the easement was not thereby portion to be used by the occupants of the destroyed, and A. was entitled to the right of adjoining close. The latter was afterwards conveyed by the owner who had previously obtained possession of both closes, to the plaintiff, with all buildings, privileges, casements and appurtenances whatsoever to the premises belonging, occupied therewith, or reputed to belong, or appurtenant thereto"; and, by the same deed, the grantee covenanted to suffer the tenants of the adjoining close to pass over the premises thereby granted at intervals, in order to clean their part of the ash-pit and privy, described in the covenants as "adjoining those belonging to the premises hereby granted, and used therewith as part, parcel and member thereof" —Held, that the use of the portion of the ash-pit and privy, which, previously to the severance of ownership, had been enjoyed by the occupants of the premises granted to the plaintiff, passed to him under the deed. Geogheyan v. Fegan, Ir. R. 6

Noisy Nuisance.] - A confectioner had for more than twenty years used a pestle and mortar in his back premises, which abutted on the garden of a physician, and the noise and vibration were not felt as a nnisance and were not complained of. But in 1873 the physician erected a consulting-room at the end of his garden, and than the noise and vibration became a nuisance tohim. He accordingly brought an action for an injunction :- Held, that the defendant had not acquired a right to an easement of making a acquired a right to an additional and the injunction was granted. Sturges v. Bridgman, 48 L. J., Ch. 785; 11 Ch. D. 852; 41 L. T. 219; 28 W. R. 200—C. A.

Enjoyment by Customer. _____ That kind of understanding by which a customer, as long as he continues such, is allowed an easement, does not confer on him the equitable right. Bunkart. v. Tennant, 39 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 10 Eq. 141; 23 L. T. 137; 18 W. R. 639.

He is entitled, however, to reasonable notice before being deprived of his easement. Ib.

But if the customer has been encouraged by the owner of the servient tenement to erect works to which the casement is essential or. nearly so, he will acquire an equitable right to, the easement. Ib.

Recreation—Custom,]—A right of recreation by custom upon the land of another cannot exist as a right to the public generally, but must be confined to the inhabitants of a particular district. Bourke v. Davis, 44 Ch. D. 110; 62 L. T. 34; 38 W. R. 167.

Riparian owners may possibly be able to establish a private right of way, or a right of boating for recreation for themselves and their friends by custom, but the existence of such a right or custom, if established, would not entitle the public to boat on the river or support the claim that it was a highway. Ib.

Breaking up Highways — Presumption of Grant—Prescription.]—The corporation of P., who had no parliamentary powers for the purpose, supplied water to the adjoining urban urban district of F., and claimed the right to enter adjoining closes, each of which consisted of a upon and break up the streets of F. whenever oecasion should require for the purpose of repairing their water-pipes, relying, as regarded some of the streets, on alleged irrevocable licences granted by the predecessors of the local board of F. (i.e., the surveyors of highways), and as regarded other streets on prescription:—Held, commit a nuisance: (2) that it was not in the commit it musance; (2) that it was not in the power of the surveyors of highways to grant the alleged licenses; (3) that, therefore, as a grant could not be presumed, the corporation could not obtain the right claimed by prescription.

Preston Corporation v. Fulwood Local Board, 53 L. T. 718; 34 W. R. 196; 50 J. P. 228.

Erection of Sign-post on Common.] — The Mctropolitan Commons Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 122), s. 15. enacts that no estate, interest or right of a profitable or beneficial nature in, over, or affecting a common, shall, except with the consent of the person entitled thereto, be taken away or injuriously affected by any scheme under that act without compensation being made or provided for the same. A common within the meaning of the act was placed under the management of the Metropolitan Board of Works by a scheme confirmed by the Metropolitan Commons Supplemental Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. lvii.). Paragraph 5 of the scheme gave the board power to make by-laws. Paragraph 13 of the scheme secured to all persons such estates, interest or right as they had before the confirmation of the scheme. The board made a by-law forbidding the erecting on the common of any posts or poles, or any building of any kind. There was a public-house adjoining the common, and near to it upon the conimon had stood for forty years a post bearing the sign of the public-house. The sign-post having been blown down, the mortgagec of the public-honse, at the request of the occupier, crected a new one, He was afterwards convicted under the by-law of unlawfully erceting the new sign-post :-Held, that a sign-post having stood for forty years, an easement had been gained in respect of the public-house; that as an incident to the easement the right existed of reparing the sign-post whenever it was broken; and that the casement was a beneficial right preserved by the Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866, s. 15, and par. 13 of the scheme relating to the common; and that, therefore, the conviction could not be upheld. Hoare v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 43 L. J., M. C. 65; L. R. 9 Q. B. 296; 29 L. T. 804.

Right to cut Wood-Grant from the Crown. ]-Demurrer overruled to a bill by the poor of a parish, claiming right by a grant from the Crown to cut wood on waste lands within a royal forest, for their own use, and for sale to the other inhabitants of the parish. Willingale v. Maitland, 36 L. J., Ch. 64; L. R. 3 Eq. 103; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 932; 15 W. R. 83.

Semble, such a claim would be bad if alleged on the ground of prescription or custom, or of a grant from a private individual. Ib.

Grants which would otherwise be bad may be good if made in derogation of the forestal rights of the Crown. Ib.

I. GENERALLY.

Ecclesiastical Law, of what it Consists.]—The ecclesiastical law of England is not a foreign law. It is a part of the general law of England, of the common law - in that wider sense which embraces all the ancient and approved customs of England which form law, including not only that law administered in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer, to which the term "common law" is sometimes in a narrower sense confined, but also that law administered in chancery and commonly called equity, and also that law administered in the courts ceclesiastical, that last law consisting of such canons and constitutions ecclesiastical as have been allowed by general consent and custom within the realm-and form, as is laid down, the king's ecclesiastical law. All these laws may be, and are, altered by statutes. When the question arises, What is the English ecclesiastical law? it is not ascertained by calling witnesses to prove L. J., Q. B. 621; 6 App. Cas. 446; 44 L. T. 485; 45 J. P. 586.

Christianity is part of the law of England. De Costa v. De Paz, 2 Swan. 490.

Term "Holy Orders."] — The term "holy orders." used in the will of a member of the Established Church of England, or of the Established Church of Scotland, means "holy right to visit a dean and chapter, the manner orders by episcopal ordination."

Glasgow College, 10 Jur. 676. Att.-Gen. v.

"Reverend."]—The word "reverend" is not a title of honour or dignity, it is merely a laudatory epithet, or mark of respect; and a person prefixing the word to his name does not thereby claim to be a person in holy orders. Keet v. Smith, 45 L. J., P. C.10; 1 P. D. 73; 33 L. T. 794; 24 W. R. 375

Holy Orders-Forging Letters of. ]-The forging of letters of orders issued by a bishop, certifying that on a day and at a place mentioned therein, A. was admitted into the holy order of deacons, according to the manner prescribed by the Church of England, and rightly and canonically ordained deacon, in testimony whereof the bishop had caused his episcopal seal to be affixed thereunto, is not the feloniously forging of a deed within the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 20, although Reg. v. Morton, 42 L. J., M. C. 58; L. R. 2 C. C. 22; 28 L. T. 452; 21 W. R. 629; 12 Cox, C. C. 456.

— Pretence of ]—Where a person is indicted for falsely pretending to be in holy orders and solemnising matrimony according to the rites of the Church of England, the mere licence of the bishop to a curacy, or the institution by him to a benefice, which renders a clergyman compellable to perform the marriage ceremony between competent parties, is no defence if the person charged knows of the invalidity of the letters of orders on which he has been so licensed or instituted. Reg. v. Ellis, 16 Cox, C. C. 469.

It is enough for the presecution to show that the letters of orders, which the person charged has held out to be genuine and put forward as a justification for presenting himself as a person in holy orders, are sparious; it is not incumbent on the prosecution to shew that he had no other valid orders. Ib.

Benefice—How made Spiritual.]—A benefice is not made spiritual because it can only be held by one in holy orders. A hospital for the poor without cure of souls is a lay foundation, although the master is required to be in holy orders. Att.-Gen. v. St. Cross Hospital, 17 Beav. 485; 22 L. J., Ch. 793; 1 W. R. 525, Documents - Custody - Transfer to Foreign Power.] - The custody of documents in the nature of public or ecclesiastical records belonging to the see of London is vested in the consisterial court of London, and any disposal thereof must be authorised by an order issued by the chancellor of London. The court may, in the exercise of its discretion, on the application of the duly accredited representative of a foreign Power, order the restoration to such Power of original documents of national and historic interest. Election and Consecration. ]-Under 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, s. 5, after an election of a bishop by a dean and chapter by virtue of a conge d'élire and letters missive:—Held, by Lord Denman, C.J., and Erle, J., that the archbishop, upon issue of letters patent to confirm the election, is bound, acting merely ministerially, to confirm the bishop elect, and has no authority to hear any opposi-tion advanced against him: by Patterson, J., and Coleridge, J., that confirmation is a judicial act, which the archbishop is to conduct according to the principles of the canon law, and that parties opposing are entitled to appear in his court and enter their objections, and a mandamus will lie for not allowing opposers to appear and be heard. Reg. v. Canterbury (Archbishop.) Hampden, In re, 11 Q. B. 483; 17 L. J., Q. B. 252; 12 Jur. 862.

Jurisdiction and Functions. ]-Bishops may grant ancient offices, with the ancient fees, as they have been usually granted before or since 1 Eliz. c. 19. Trelawney v. Winchester (Bishop), 1 Burr, 219; 1 Ld. Ken. 256.

10 & 11 Vict. c. 98, defines the jurisdiction of bishops in their diocese.

Semble, that this statute does not apply to the act of issuing a sequestration ou a levari facias de bonis ecclesiasticis by a bishop, in which he acts as ecclesiastical sheriff, who is a mere ministerial officer. Phelps v. St. John, 3 C. L. R. 478; 10 Ex. 895; 24 L. J., Ex. 171.

In 1836, the archdeaconry of Dorset was, by an order in council, dissevered from the diocese of Bristol, and annexed to the diocese of Salisbury. After the annexation, S., who had been registrar of the bishop of Bristol, continued to act as registrar under the bishop of Salisbury. In 1840, a writ of sequestration against the rector of a parish within the archdenconry was directed to the then bishop of Salisbury, and delivered to S. Sequestrators were appointed under the seal of the bishop, and the writ remained in the office of S. The bishop of Salisbury having died, and a new bishop having been appointed :- Held, first, that the succeeding bishop was bound to return the writ directed to his predecessor; secondly, that although the writ, if directed to the bishop of Bristol, might have been valid by 6 & 7 Will 4, c. 77, s. 20, yet that, under the above circumstances, it was too late to object to the form of Visitation—Authority of Bishop.]—Mandamus to the dean and chapter of R, to restore the prosecutor to the office of head master of the grammar school of the cathedral. Return (after setting out the statutes of the founder of the eathedral church, by which the head master of the grammar school was to be elected by the dean and chapter and the bishop was appointed visitor of the cathedral church), that the prosecutor had not appealed to the bishop. Plea, that writing and publishing a pamphlet was the cause of removal of the prosecutor from his office; that the bishop was formerly the dean of W., and that the matters contained in the pamphlet, which related to the improper application of the funds of the cathedral church of W., were written and published of and concerning the bishop as such former dean; that the prosecutor wrote and published the pamphlet with the intention of attributing to the dean and chapter while the bishop was dean of W., the same indentical neglect and improper conduct with respect to the cathedral church of W. and in and about the application of the funds and endowments relating thereto, as were charged against the dean and chapter of R., with respect to the cathedral church of R., and in and about the misapplica-tion of the funds and endowments relating thereto; that passages in the pamphlet were written and published with the intention of imputing to the bishop, as visitor of the cathedral church of R., a knowledge of the misapplication of the funds, in violation of the statutes of the eathedral church, by the dean and chapter; and that the dean and chapter had declared under their common seal, that they removed the prosecutor from his office in consequence of his having written and published in the pamphlet passages untruly alleged to be libellous and directed as well against the dean and canons of the eathedral church of R. as against the bishop of the diocese, and likewise against the deans and canons of other cathedral churches: that by reason of the premises the bishop had such an interest in the cause of removal of the prosecutor as to disqualify him from acting as visitor. By the 35th statute, De Corrigendis Excessibus, "Si quis minorum canonicorum, clericorum, aut aliorum ministrorum in levi culpa delinquerit arbitrio decani aut eo absente vice-decani corrigatur; sin gravius fuerit delictum (si justum jndicabitur) ab iisdem expellatur a quibus fuit admissus." The 38th statute, De Visitatione Ecclesize, by which the bishop was appointed visitor, contained the following clause: "Omniaque faciat que ad visitatoris officium de jure pertinere denoscuntur." Upon demurrer to the return :-Held, first, that the 35th statute did not give the dean and chapter authority to act as visitor of the grammar school. Reg. v. Rochester (Dean and Chapter), 17 Q. B. I; 20 L. J., Q. B. 467: 15 Jnr. 920.

Held, secondly, that the bishop being constituted visitor of the grammar school by the 38th statute, the cause of removal of the prosecutor from his office was not an excess of jurisdiction by the dean and chapter which could be made the ground of a mandamus. Ib.

prosecutor as disqualified him from acting as prosection as instantiated in the history of Chichester, who claimed a right to present by lapse, under pretence of his visitatorial authority, to the office of a canon residentiary of his church, it being a freehold office, and the right of election thereto in the dean and chapter. Chichester (Bishop) v. Harvard, 1 Term Rep. 650; 1 R. R. 339.

Although a benefice is appropriated to a prior, ora dean and chapter, yet the bishop may visit, to see how the church is served, and for contumncy may proceed to suspension. Harrison v. Dublin (Archiishop), 2 Bro. P. C. 199.

The power of an official officer does not extend do deprivation. Reg. v. York (Archbishop), 2 G. & D. 302; 2 Q. B. 2; 6 Jur. 412. According to general ecclesiastical law deans and chapters are subject to the visitation of the bishop as ordinary, and the Church Discipline Act (8 & 4 Vict. c. 86) leaves untouched all power which the bishop might previously have exercised in his visitations, except that of pro-ceeding against individuals by way of punishment; and, therefore, in the absence of any direct authority to the contrary, he has power, as such visitor, to make orders on some definite legal ground, but not otherwise, with reference to any part of the structure or fabric of the cathedral church. Phillpotts v. Boyd, 44 L. J., Ecc. 44; L. R. 6 P. C. 435; 32 L. T. 73; 23 W. R. 491.

— Authority of Crown.]—The visitatorial power of the Crown does not remove the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, or prevent it from exercising its functions in respect of an existing trust. Daugars v. Rivaz, 28 Beav. 233; 29 L. J., Ch. 685; 6 Jnr. (x.s.) 854; 8 W. R.

— What constitutes being Visitor, ]—Where a founder of a hospital directed, that if in making up the accounts of the wardens biennially going out of office, any doubt should arise which could not be decided by the new wardens, &c., the ordinary should decide it; and also gave to him the appointment of a master, upon the default of other persons to appoint, within certain times; and power to correct or amove the master for certain causes; and also power to sequester the profits of the wardens, &c., in case of the improper subtraction of a certain sum directed L. J., Q. B. 485. to be kept in a chest for special purposes, until the money was replaced; and also gave to the ordinary the power of interpreting the statutes in case of any doubt; and the founder also delegated to the dean and chapter of York power to remove the wardens, &c., consenting to mortgage or alienate the lands of the charity :- Held, that none of the powers so delegated constituted a visitor, so as to exclude the application of the powers granted by 43 Eliz. c. 4; and consequently that a commission of charitable uses issued out of the Court of Chancery under that act was valid. Kirkby Ravensworth Hospital, In re, 8 East, 221.

Bishop's Inhibition during.]-By the bishop's inhibition, during his visitation, the jurisdiction of his commissary is superseded; a party resident within the commissary's jurisdic-tion may then be cited before the bishop's official principal. Reg. v. Thorogood, 3 P. & D. 629; 12 A. & E. 183; 9 L. J., Q. B. 211; 4 Jur. 937.

When Mandamus will Lie to a Visitor. -A mandamus does not lie to a visitor who has deprived a prebendary for incontinency. Rex v.

Chester (Bishop), 1 Wils. 206.

Nor to a visitor, to exercise his visitatorial power over the temporalities of a cathedral church, concerning the intermediate profits, during the vacancy of a stall. Rew v. Durham (Bishop), I Burr. 567; 2 Ld. Ken. 296.
A mandamus does not lie to a visitor, where he is clearly acting under a visitatorial authority, Rew v. Ely (Bishop), 2 Term Rep. 290, 345.

Nor to a visitor, to restore a canon, whom he had expelled. Rew v. Chester (Bishap), 1 W. Bl. 22.

Nor to a visitor to reverse his own sentence.

The court refused to grant a mandamus re-quiring the visitors named in the charter of the College of Doctors' Commons to inquire into the mode in which the college under 20 & 21 Vict, c. 77, ss. 116, 117, had exercised their discretion as to the surrender of their charter, and the disposition of their property. Lee, Ee parte, El. Bl. & El. 863; 28 L. J., Q. B. 114; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 218.

- Removal of Chorister. - Mandamus to restore H, to the freehold office of chorister of a eathedral church. Return stating the foundation of the cathedral church, and some of the rules. ordinances and statutes for the governance of the same, providing for the expulsion of any of the lay clerks skilled in singing at the discretion of the dean and chapter, and appointing the bishop visitor to watch and take special care that the statutes and ordinances were inviolably preserved, and to visit the church, and upon every one of the articles contained in the statutes, and upon every other article whatever that concerns the state. advantage and honour of the church, to interrogate the dean and all other ministers of the whatsoever, and to punish and correct the same, and execute everything necessary to the extirpa-tion of vice, and judged lawfully to belong to the office of visitor:—Held, that the bishop, as ordinary and special visitor, had exclusive juris-diction to inquire into and determine the legality of the removal, and that an appeal to the bishop for that purpose was the only mode by which the party removed could properly proceed. Reg. v. party removed could properly proceed. Reg. v. Chester (Dean and Chapter), 15 Q. B. 513; 19

Removal of Curate—Discretion under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 98.]—Under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 98, giving a bishop power to revoke, after notice, a curate's licence, and to remove such curate for any cause which shall appear to him to be good and reasonable, the bishop has, subject to appeal, the widest and most unlimited discre-tion, and may remove, not only for an act cognisable under the Church Discipline Act, but also for a cause which would not constitute an ecclesiastical offence so cognisable. No mode of proceeding is directly or indirectly indicated by the act, and the bishop may take his own course. unfetterd by any legal form or restriction provided such course be in accordance with substantial justice; but this requires that the accusation shall be sufficiently definite to enable the accused to defend himself, and an ample intimation of the matter to be inquired into, whether criminal or otherwise, is indispensable.

Refusal to Institute Cleric for Insufficiency of Learning.]-Where in a suit of duplex querela the bishop justifies his refusal to institute on the ground that the promovent is minns sufficiens in literatura, it is for the court to determine whether the standard up to which the bishop considers the ability of the promovent ought to come is such a standard as is required by law. Willis v. Oxford (Bishop), 2 P. D. 192.

In the affidavit to leave the monition in a suit of duplex querela, it was alleged that the promovent had been refused institution to a benefice by the bishop of the diocese on the ground of insufficiency of learning. On application on behalf of the bishop the court ordered that the suit should be tried, not by act on petition and answer, but by plea and proof, and that the promovent should bring in his libel. Ib.

The libel of the promovent having been subsequently brought in, a responsive plea was filed on behalf of the bishop, alleging in effect that the promovent on applying to be instituted had been examined by direction of the bishop, and that the result of the examination had conscientionsly satisfied the bishop that the promovent was non idoneus and minus sufficiens in literaturâ. Thereupon the promovent applied to the court to reject the responsive plea. The court directed that the plea should be amended, and that there should be on the face of the amended plea such a statement of the grounds on which institution was refused as would enable the court, assuming the facts to be true, to decide upon the validity of the objection taken to the promovent, and would enable the promovent to take issue on the truth of such facts. Th.

Examination by, and Letters Commendatory.] The space of twenty-eight days specified in the 95th canon, for a bishop to inquire into the suffi-ciency and qualities of every minister after he hath been presented unto him to be instituted into any benefice, is not an absolute limitation rendering an examination after that period void.

A bishop is entitled to a reasonable time for such examination. The canon is directory; there are no prohibitory words to confine a bishop to the space of twenty-eight days. Gorham v. Exeter (Bishop), 2 Rob. Ec. Rep. 1; 13 Jur. 238.

A clerk who has held preferment in one bishopric is not, on being presented to a living in another bishopric, bound, as a condition precedent to his examination on the question of fitness, to produce letters testimonial and commendatory from his former bishop. Exeter (Bishop) v. Marshall, 37 L. J., C. P. 331; L. R., 3 H. L. 17; 18 L. T. 376. Affirming 10 W. R. 390.

Committing Waste on See.]—The court has no power to issue an original writ of prohibition to restrain a bishop from committing waste in the possessions of his see, at least at the suit of an uninterested person. Jefferson v. Durham (Bishop), 1 Bos. & P. 105.

Action by "Receiver" against succeeding issues, profits, sum and sums of money, arising and issuing" from the possessions of the see to hold to P. by himself, or his sufficient deputy or hold to P. by himseit, or as samcient deputy or deputies, to be approved of by the bishop and his successors for his life. The office of receiver was an ancient office, and had been exercised before the restraining statute of 1 Eliz. c. 19. P. held the office under three successive bishops, during the whole of which time he not only received the rents, but negotiated the renewal of leases, and prepared the leases of the see, and likewise attended all searches for records in the bishop's muniment room, for the performance of which acts he received fees and emoluments. His predecessor in office had done the same. A, having succeeded to the bishopric in 1836, refused to admit P.'s elaim of right to perform these lastmentioned acts. Upon a bill, filed by P. against the bishop :- Held, first, that the plaintiff's claim was not of such a nature as to induce this court to interfere to protect him without being well satisfied (which the court was not) that his legal remedy was insufficient to do him complete justice; and, secondly, that the relief sought being analogous to the specific performance of an agreement, the bill must fail on the ground of want of mutuality; the nature of the duties and services asserted by the plaintiff being such as to preclude the possibility of a decree in this court against him, compelling their specific performance. Pichering v. Ely (Bishop), 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 249; 12 L. J., Ch. 271; 7 Jur. 479.

Whether Covenant binds Successors.] - A bishop, by covenant to pay all charges, does not subject himself to pay land tax, because he cannot bind his successors. Secus, in the case of an individual who can bind his heirs. Blandford v. Murlborough, 2 Atk. 542, or Owon (Bishop) v. Wise, cited id. 544.

10 Car. 1, sess. 3, c. 1.]—The stat. 10 Car. 1, sess. 3, c. 1, extends only to the archbishops and bishops, and applies only to conveyances other than by will. Att.-Gen. v. Flood, Hayes, 611.

S. DEANS.

Rights of Dean and Sub-Dean.]—In the cathedral church of A., from a very early period there has been an officer called the sub-dean, who is not a member of the chapter, and is not inducted into a stall. Except on very rare occasions, the sub-dean has been also viear of the parish in which the cathedral is locally situate:—Held, that the sub-dean, as distinguished from the vicar, had separate rights and duties, namely, the dis-charge of spiritual functions within the close, and the ministerial fees arising from the duties so discharged. Held, also, that the appointment of snb-dean did not legally incapacitate the dean when he thought fit, from personally discharging the spiritual duties in respect of the inhabitants of the close. Braithwaite v. Hook, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1186 : 7 L. T. 254.

An office held by a person called a sub-dean, but independently of the dean, and not subject to the cathedral authorities, is an anomaly unknown to the law. Ib.

4. ARCHDEACONS.

Visitation of.]—For three centuries the practice of the archdeacons had been, in order to avoid expense, instead of visiting each parish in confirmation by the bishop. There were then the archdeacoury separately, to divide the arch-twenty-four prebends, all in the bishop's gift. deaconry into districts, and to hold the visitation for all the parishes of that district at some one parish church within the district : a visitation so held is not open to objection in a temporal court. Shephard v. Payne, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 414; 31 L. J., C. P. 297; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 354; 6 L. T. 716.

Visitation Fees-Liability of Churchwardens for.]-See CHURCHWARDENS, post, XXII, 4, col, 1352.

5. CANONS AND CANONRIES.

Rights of Canons.]—A statute made in 1663 by the bishop, with the consent of the chapter of Exeter, conferring upon every canon residentiary who should cease to be such by promotion to a higher degree and dignity in the Church of England (unless by voluntary resignation) the right of receiving to his own use the whole profits and advantages of the canonry for the following year, supposing such a statute to be valid, is at all events contrary to the policy of the eccle-siastical establishment, and to be construed strictly; therefore, where the defendant, who was dean and a canon of that chapter, resigned the same, in order to obtain promotion to another deanery, to which he was shortly afterwards promoted:-Held, that he was not within the statute, not having ceased to be a member of the former church by promotion to the latter, but having ceased to be so before his promotion; and besides, his resignation having been voluntary, he was expressly excluded by the terms of the exception; and a promotion from one deanery to another seems not a promotion to a higher degree. The admission of the plaintiff as canon into plenum jus, although not made until a year after his first admission, related back to the time when his title to the profits accrued, so as to enable him to maintain an action for them. Garnett v. Gordon, 1 M. & S. 205.

Ejectment.]—An ejectment will not lie for a canonry as such. Doe d. Butcher v. Musgrave, 1 Scott (N.R) 451; 1 Man. & G. 625; 9 L. J., C. P. 318.

Grant of Canonry as Security.]—A canon of Windsor granted the canonry and the profits to secure a sum of money. So far as it appeared, the estates were vested in the corporation, and the canon was entitled to an aliquot share of the profits. There was no cure of souls, and the only duties were residence within the castle and attendance in the chapel twenty-one days a year : -Held, that the security was valid. Grenfell v. Windsor (Dean and Canons), 2 Beav. 544. And see Butcher v. Musgrave, id. 550, n.

Suppressed Canonries-Rights of Ecclesiastical Commissioners. ]-The ecclesiastical commissioners are entitled to no greater rights in the suppressed canonries under 3 & 4 Vict, c. 113, than the former canons were, and are subject to the same trusts. Att.-Gen v. Windsor (Deun and Canons), 24 Beav. 679; 27 L. J., Ch. 320; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 818; 6 W. R. 220. Affirmed, 8 H. L. C. 369; 30 L. J., Ch. 529.

Rights of Crown to Recommend. ]-The deanery

twenty-four prebends, all in the bishop's gift. Afterwards the chapter was divided into nine canons residentiary and fifteen prebendaries, the canons residentiary being upon vacancies elected from the prebendaries. After this the practice was, that the bishop issued a licence to the chapter to elect a canon, who in practice was always a canon residentiary, for dean, and the chapter elected accordingly; and the party elected was then presented to the bishop, who confirmed the election, and the party then took the oath of canonical obedience to the bishop, who sent his mandate to the chapter to install him, which they did. About the middle of the sixteenth century the Crown began to recom-mend the party to be elected. The practice prevailed from 1681 to 1840, which comprehended fifteen elections, and the appointments during that period were by royal patent, describing the deanery as a donative in the Crown, granting it to the party, and commanding the chapter to admit him. Whenever the party named by the Crown was not one of the chapter, the bishop collated him to the prebend of the late dcan, and the chapter elected him a canon residentiary, and the other forms of the election, commencing with the bishop's licence, were pursued. In 1839. the deanery being vacant, the Queen recom-mended one of the prebendaries, requiring and commanding the chapter to elect him. chapter having elected another, a canon residentiary, with all the usual forms in other respects, who was installed and acted, a mandamus was applied for, commanding the chapter to admit and elect the party named by the Crown, and, if necessary for that purpose, to elect, collate and admit him to be a canon residentiary, Mandamus refused, because, first, the Crown had not the right to enforce the recommendation either by the general law or by the particular foundation. Reg. v. Exeter (Dean and Chapter), 12 A. & E. 512; 4 P. & D. 252; 9 L. J., Q. B. 809; 4 Jur. 674. See Clarke v. Sarum (Bishop), 2 Str. 1082.

And, secondly, if the Crown had the right to present absolutely, or to nominate a person to be presented by the chapter to the bishop for institution, which, however, did not appear to be the fact, the proper remedy was by quare impedit. Ib.

Close Chapter-3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, s. 25.]-In the cathedral church of Hereford the capitular body consisted at the time of the passing of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, of a dean and five residentiary canons, called the "close chapter," and twentytwo non-residentiary canons, making up the general chapter. One of the officers in the body was the prælector, who by customary right on a vacancy succeeded to one of the residentiary canonries, and a new prælector was appointed out of the non-residentiary canons by the close chapter. The non - residentiary canons were appointed by the bishop. At York the dean alone appointed the residentiary canons from out of the non-residentiaries. Since the passing of the act a prelector had been appointed at Hereford; and the last of those persons who were members of the close chapter at the passing of the statute of Exeter was founded in the reign of Henry the having afterwards died, the bishop claimed to Third by the chapter, with the consent of the appoint directly to the vacant canonry residen-bishop, who endowed it. By the charter of tiary. The predector claimed to succeed to the foundation the dean was to be elected by the vacancy on the ground that several who were chapter from among the prebendaries, subject to members of the general chapter at the passing of the act were still members:—Held, that are entitled to vote at a meeting of the chapter "chapter," in s. 25, meant the "close chapter"; on the occasion of an election of a proctor to for that it was the intention of the statute to represent the chapter in convocation, such right preserve the vested rights of patronage alone, being being reserved by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113. preserve the vested rights of patronage alone, being being reserved by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113. without any regard to the rights of the body out Randolph v. Milman, 38 L. J., C. P. 81; L. R. 4 of which the selection was to be made : and the C. P. 107 : 17 W. R. 262-Ex. Ch. residentiary canonries therefore were in the direct patronage of the bishop. Reg. v. Hereford (Dean and Chapter), 39 L. J., Q. B. 97; L. B. 5 Q. B. 196; 22 L. T. 295; 18 W. R. 666.

Canon's Stipend -- Scotch Episcopal Church.] The rules of a cathedral belonging to the Scottish Episcopal Church provided that the clergy of the cathedral should be appointed by the bishop, and to consist inter alios of three or more canons residentiary; further that temporal affairs of the cathedral should be vested in a board of management with which should rest the administration of the funds and the providing fitting support, "for the provost and canons of the cathedral." Two out of the three canons appointed received from the board respectively 2001, and 1501, per annum. The third canon, the pursner, claimed from the board an allowance, or, if they had not sufficient funds, that they should appropriate the 350% among the three canons:—Held, that the pursuer's action was irrelevant, no contract nor trust of which he was a beneficiary being estab-lished, and that the distribution of the funds was a matter entirely within the discretion of was a matter enterly Winnit the discretion out the defenders, which discretion could not be questioned so long as the funds were administered in good faith and applied to no other cathedral purposes. Brook v. Kelly, [1893] A. C. 721—H. L. (Sc.)

Right to Vote.]—When a canon occupies a honse in right of his canonry, the presumption is that he does so in his separate capacity as a corporation sole, and not as a mode of enjoyment by the corporation aggregate of the dean and chapter, of which he is a member, and that therefore his interest in such house is sufficient to entitle him to a borough vote. Ford v. Harring-ton, 39 L. J., C. P. 107; L. R. 5 C. P. 282; 21 L. T. 609; 18 W. R. 289; 1 Hopw. & C. 331.

Practice relating to Mandamus. ]—A man-damus lies for refusing to admit a residentiary canon of a church, who appears to have been duly elected. Webber's Case, Lofft, 254, 266.

So also to compel the dean and chapter to fill up a vacancy among canons residentiary; and on such a mandamus the court will compel an election at the peril of those who resist, "Chichester (Bishop) v. Harward, I Term Rep. 652,

6. PREBENDARIES.

Prebend—What.]—A prebend is a benefice within 43 Geo. 3, c. 84. Catheart v. Hardy, 2 M. & S. 534; 5 Taunt. 2.

Annexation of .] -A prebend being an ecclesiastical benefice, and not a mere office, the Grown may alienate it, or annex it to an archdeaconry, the archdeacon being a corporation sole, and also a spiritual person capable of discharging all the duties and exercising all the functions belonging to a prebend; but an annexation once made cannot be severed. Rex v. Bayley, 1 B. & Ad. 761; 9 L. J. (0.S.) K. B. 131.

Sale for Redemption of Land Tax.]-The tion of the land tax, to authorise all such sales for that purpose to be made by ecclesiastical persons, with the consent thereby required, as could have been made for any purpose with the like consent before the passing of the restraining statutes, and before the restraining statutes a sale might have been made from a probendary in his corporate character to a prebendary in his individual character. Beaden v. King, 9 Hare, 499.

7. VICARS, VICARS CHORAL AND LAY RECTORS

Possession of Church.]-The doctrine that the possession of the church is in the minister and churchwardens, and no person has a right to enter it when it is not open for divine service, except with their permission, and under their authority, holds as well in the temporal as in the ecclesiastical courts. Griffin v. Deighton, 5 B. & S. 930; 33 L. J., Q. B. 181; 9 L. T. 814; 10 L. T. 814; 12 W. R. 441—Ex. Ch.

In a parish where there is both a lay rector and a vicar, the rector has no right to prevent the vicar having access to any part of the parish church by any of its doors. Ib.

Statutory Limited Interest.] - A vicar is a person having a limited interest within the meaning of s. 3 of the Landowners West of England and South Walcs Land Drainage and Inclosures Companies Act. Goodden v. Coles, 59 L. T. 309 ; 36 W. R. 828.

Vicars Choral—Rights of ]—A vicar choral of St. Paul's Cathedral is not entitled during his year of probation to share in a fine paid on the renewal of a lease by the dean and chapter and vicars choral of an estate which is one of the sources of the emoluments enjoyed by such viears choral. Shoubridge v. Clark, 12 C. B. 335.

- Liability of ] - A vicar choral of a cathedral church is a corporation sole, and therefore liable to an action for dilapidation of the house, which he held as vicar choral, at the suit of his successor. Gleaves v. Parfitt, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 838; 29 L. J., C. P. 216; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 805.

- Accepting Benefice with Cure of Souls. -The office of vicar choral is not attended with a cure of souls; and a vicar choral, by accepting a benefice with cure of souls, does not thereby hold benefices in plurality, and such office of vicar choral is not thereby vacated within 13 & 14 Vict. c. 98 (Irish). Shaw v. Wood, 5 Ir. C. L. R. 156.

- Choice of Vicarial House. ]-Where a prescriptive ecclesiastical corporation of vicars choral of the cathedral of Chichester had, besides other estates in common, four vicarial houses, with their appurtenances, which had always been appropriated to the several use and residence of the four vicars : and by ancient custom, upon Right to Yota.]—The non-residentiary probendaries of the cathedral charch of St. Paul one of such vicaria houses, with the appurtenances; of which option an entry was made in | chapel had not been endowed according to option, which was entered in the act book and signed by all, to take one of the vicarial houses with certain appurtenances, then in the possession of S., which were not all the appurtenances formerly annexed to and enjoyed with the same house by his predecessors therein, could not maintain an ejectment for the other appurtenances, such as part of the ancient garden which had been leased of by the corporation before his appointment; for supposing him entitled to make an option of the entire premises and to have entered it in the act book, as against the corporation, yet no such option having been made and entered in the act book, according to the custom, he had no separate legal title to the premises in question, on which he could maintain an electment. Goodtitle d. Miller v. Wilson, 11 East, 334.

8. CURATES AND LECTURERS.

a. Appointment of and Licensing.

Curates - Who are ] - A spiritual person, who in virtue of his office of chaplain of a college, held a curacy with a dwelling attached to it, and ceasing to hold that office, retained possession of the dwelling, was not a curate within 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 67, and might be ejected by a notice to quit forthwith; and he was not entitled to the three months' notice required to be given by that statute, with the consent of the bishop.

- Right to Appoint.] - Semble, an ecclesiastical custom (which is not immemorial) will not, though acted on for a long time, deprive a rector of his common-law right to appoint his currete. Arnold v. Bath (Bishop), 5 Bing. 316; 2 M. & P. 550; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 120; 30 R. R. 613.

An allegation of a custom for parishioners to elect a curate, is not supported by proof of such a custom confined to parishoners paying churchrates. Ib.

- Requisition of Bishop to compel Vicar to Appoint.]—A bishop issued a requisition under 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 50, requiring a vicar to nominate a curate with a stipend, on the ground that it appeared to the bishop, of his own knowledge, that the ecclesiastical duties of the vicarage and parish church were inadequately performed, by reason of the vicar's negligence. The vicar appointed no curate, and did not appeal to the archbishop. The bishop, after three months, licensed A., clerk, as curate, with a stipend. The vicar refused to allow A. to officiate, upon which the bishop issued a mandate or summons to shew cause why the vicar should not pay the stipend due, and ultimately proceeded to sequestration: -Held, that the requisition, upon which the whole of the proceedings were founded, was in the nature of a judgment, and void, as the party had had no opportunity of being heard. Cupel v. Child, 2 C. & J. 558; 2 Tyr. 689; 1 L. J., Ex. 205.

Licensing of ]-Where a licensed minister, appointed by the trustees of a chapel, had been carried on in the mode prescribed by the Church restrained from preaching by a decree of the Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), s. 23. Richards Ecclesiastical Court, upon the ground that the v. Fincher, L. R. 4 Ecc. 107.

Reg. v. London (Bishop), 1 W. W. & H. 151.

Where a mandamus to the ordinary, to license a curate, only stated that he had been duly nominated and appointed by the inhabitants of a township to be curate of the church of P., without stating either the consent of the rector, or any endowment or custom for the inhabitants to make such nomination and appointment, the court quashed the writ, upon the ground that the writ should have stated those facts which are necessary to shew that the party applying for it is entitled to the relief prayed. Rox v. Oxford (Bishop), 7 East, 345; 3 Smith, 341; S R. R. 696.

____Licensed Curate, who.]—A duly ordained clergyman licensed by the bishop to perform divine service in an unconsecrated church built by subscription, having no nomination or stipend, the church having no district assigned to it :-Held, not to be a licensed curate within 36 Geo. 3. c. 83, s. 6, or 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 98. Sedgwick v. Manchester (Bishop), 38 L. J., Ecc. 30.

His licence having been revoked by the bishop, no appeal lay to the archbishop. Ib.

- Revoking Licence.]-Semble, the rule prohibiting ecclesiastical courts from taking cognizance of matters triable at common law does not apply to the statutory powers of the bishops and archbishops over curates' licences under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 28. Sinyanhi, In re, 12 W. R. 825.

Quære, whether, on appeal to the archbishop, a charge can be investigated different from that on which the bishop proceeded. Ib.

Upon an appeal to the archbishop under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 98, against the revocation by the bishop of a curate's licence, the curate has a right to be heard if he wishes for a hearing. Reg. v. Casterbury (Archbishop), 1 El. & El. 545; 28 L. J., Q. B. 154; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 958; 7 W. R. 212. But no appeal lies to the privy council from a decision of the Archbishop of Canterbury, confirming the revocation of the licence of a stipendiary curate. Poole v. London (Bishop), 14 Moore, P. C. 262; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 347; 4 L. T. 224; 9 W. R. 485.

The consent of the incumbent to a licence to a clergyman to officiate in a proprietary chapel or in an unconsecrated building in the parish is revocable at the will of his successor, and when revoked the licence ceases. Richards v. Fincher, 43 L. J., Ecc. 21; L. R. 4 Ecc. 255.

— Notice to revoke. ]—A notice under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 98, from a bishop that he intends to revoke a curate's licence, and appointing a time for the curate to attend and shew cause, is not a notice falling within the provisions of the 112th section, which requires the service of certain documents to be effected in a particular manner. Poole v. London (Bishop), 5 Jur. (N.S.) 522.

- Officiating without Licence-Action by Vicar.]-A suit promoted by the vicar of the parish against a clerk for officiating without leave in a chapel in such parish can only be carried on in the mode prescribed by the Church Court to entertain such a suit held to be invalid. Ib.

Legal Remedies of - Mandamus. -A mandanus is the proper remedy to restore a curate to his chapel. Rew v. Burker, 1 W. BI. 300 : 3 Burr. 1265, Perpetual Curates. 1-The perpetual curate of a benefice has a right to the possession of the church and the churchyard so far as is necessary for the performance of his sacred functions, but no farther, and therefore has no right to prevent the lay rector or the persons claiming under him from depasting by sheep the grass in the churchyard; and the law in this respect is not affected by 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 10. Greenslade v. Darby, 9 B. & S. 428; 37 L. J., Q. B. 137; L. R. 3 Q. B. 421; 18 L. T. 463; 16 W. R. 898.

Lecturers-Licence to Preach. |- The court will not grant a licence to a clergyman to preach as lecturer of a parish. Rev v. London (Bishop), 1 Wils. 11; 2 Str. 1192.

So the court will refuse to grant a mandamus to a bishop to licence a lecturer without the consent of the rector, where such lecturer is supported by voluntary contributions, unless an immenorial custom to elect without such consent is shewn. Rew v. London (Bishop), 1 Term Rep. 331; 1 R. R. 213.

____ Fitness of.]—Where no immemorial custom appeared to appoint a feeturer in a parish church, and, on the contrary, it appeared that the lectureship was founded in 1658, when the episcopal constitution was suspended, and conse-quently there could not be the joint assent of the bishop, the rector and the vicar to the endowment; a mandamus to the bishop to licence a lecturer, without the assent of the vicar, was denied; though it appeared that the lectureship was originally endowed by the rector, with an annual stipend payable out of the impropriate rectory, and that several lecturers had from time to time been accepted by the bishop and vicars for the time being. Rew v. Exeter (Bishop), 2 East, 462 : 6 R. R. 473.

The court discharged a rule for a mandamus to the bishop of Loudon, to licence a clerk chosen by the inhabitants of St. Bartholomew, Exchange, London, to an endowed lectureship in the parish church there, upon affidavit made by the bishop, that the party elected had been admitted before him, with a view to his being "approved and licensed"; (which are the words of the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4, s. 19, imposing that function upon the archbishop or bishop before any lecturer may lawfully preach); and that he had made diligent inquiry concerning his conduct and ministry, and being convinced from such inquiry that he was not a fit person to be allowed to lecture, had conscientiously determined, after having heard

Letters of request signed by the chancellor of Canterbury, as well as the bishop, in the alternathe diocese calling upon the judge of the Arches tive, was also discharged as against the former (against whom it was not pressed), though it was considered to be equally open to the party to make a substantive application against the archbishop, if he declined to inquire as to his fitness, with a view to approve or disapprove of him as a fit person to be lieenced. Rew v. Canterbury (Archbishop) and London (Bishop), 15 East, 117; 13 R. R. 409.

The 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4, s. 19, having enacted that no person shall be allowed to preach as a lecturer, in any church, &c., "unless he be first approved and thereunto licensed by the arch-bishop of the province, or bishop of the diocese," the court will not entertain a motion for a mandamus to the bishop to licence a lecturer appointed by the parish upon the previous refusal of the bishop to do so, upon the alleged ground of unfitness in the party elected, unless it is shewn that the like application had also been made to the archbishop, and rejected by him. Rex v. London (Bishop), 13 East, 419; 12 R. R. 393, 399.

---- Certificate of Rector.]-A mandamns to the rector to certify to the bishop the election of a lecturer was refused, there being no immemorial custom for the lecturer to use the pulpit without the rector's consent, and the lecturer being paid out of the poor-rates. Rew v. Field, 4 Term Rep. 125.

Rights of Trustees of a Lecture, ]-Trustees of a lecture, to be preached at a convenient hour, may appoint any hour they please, and vary their appointment. Rev v. Bathurst, 1 W. Bl. 210.

b. Stipend and Dismissal.

Stipend-Contract as to. ]-A certificate by a rector to the bishop, appointing a person curate of his church, and promising him to allow him a salary until preferred, is no contract with the bishop, but merely information to him of a matter of fact; the contract is with the curate. Martyn v. Hind, Cowp. 443; 1 Doug, 142.

____ Right to Recover. __ The 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, ss. 5, 10, is not repealed by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. Dakins v. Seaman or Searman, 9 M. & W. 777; 11 L. J., Ex. 274; 6 Jur. 783.

Therefore, where, in an action against an incumbent of a living, by a curate, to recover compensation for having discharged the parochial duty during the vacancy, the declaration stated, that the plaintiff during the vacancy duly served and kept the cure, at the request of the special sequestrators thereof, appointed by the bishop of the diocese:—Held, that he was entitled to recover. Ib.

Semble, that the want of the licence required by the 36th and 48th canous of 1603 will not oust a clergyman, entitled to sue in a court of common law, of his right of action. Ib.

Such licence is only necessary in case of a permanent cure, and not for a clergyman who officiates for an occasion at the request of a sequestrator. Ib.

How Recovered. ]—Under 57 Geo. 3, c. 99, ss. 53 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 83, similar), and 74 (enacting that differences as to stipend are to be determined by the bishop only):-Held, in an action by a curate against his rector for arrears of salary, first, that these provisions of the statute were properly pleaded in bar, and not to the jurisdiction. West v. Turner, 1 N. & P. 612; 3 A. & E. 614; 6 L. J., K. B. 153.

Held, secondly, that it was not necessary to state in the plea the nature of the differences which arose. Ĩb.

— Differences as to.]—The 83rd section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, provides that differences between the incumbent of a benefice and his curate touching the curate's stipend shall be decided summarily by the bishop of the diocese on com-plaint to him made. The defendant agreed to employ the plaintiff as his curate at an annual stipend of 110L, besides board and lodging in the vicarage house. These terms were set out in the nomination of the curate to the bishop. Differences having arisen relative to the board and lodging, the plaintiff brought an action in the High Court against the defendant to recover damages in lieu of board and lodging :- Held, upon the defendant's motion to stay, that the action would lie, and that the High Court had jurisdiction to try it, since it was neither within the language nor spirit of the above enactment that the bishop should be constituted a judge without a jury to assess damages, or that the plaintiff should be deprived of the ordinary means of recovering them. Fraser v. Denison, 57 L. J., Q. B. 550; 52 J. P. 678.

Refusal to Pay-Issue of Sequestration-Effect of.]-A monition was issued, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 83, by a bishop, which recited that a complaint had been made by the curate that arrears of stipend were due to him, which A. had wilfully neglected and refused to pay, and that A. and the curate having appeared before him, the bishop heard summarily the differences, and that the complaint was duly proved before him, and that he adjudged the same to be true; it then admonished and required A. to pay the arrears. Default being made in payment, the sequestration issued, under which the fruits of the benefice were seized to satisfy the arrears of the stipend : -Held, that A. could not, after the sequestra-tion issued, object that he had not been guilty of a refusal to pay the stipend, or that he had no notice of the curate being appointed by the bishop. Daniel v. Morton, 16 Q. B. 198; 20 L. J., Q. B. 98; 15 Jur. 699.

Workhouse Chaplaincy-Charge of Stipend in Favour of Creditor. ]—A charge by a work-house chaplain, appointed by the guardians, of his stipend or salary, which is paid out of the rates, to a creditor, is not invalid on the ground of public policy. In order to made the office or chaplaincy a public office the pay must come out of national and not out of local funds. Official Receiver, Ex parte, Mirams, In re, 60 L. J., Q. B. 397; [1891] 1 Q. Rex v. Peterborough (Bishop), supra.

Of Reader.]-A readership is not an ecclesiastical preferment within the meaning of such a title. Th.

Dismissal-Notice to quit Cure. ]-A notice by an incumbent to a curate to quit his curacy, given under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 95, is not a notice within or subject to the regulations prescribed by s 112 of the same statute. Tanner v. Serivener, 13 P. D. 128.

A clerk, to whom a licence to officiate as minister in an unconsecrated chapel in a parish has been granted by the bishop without the consent of the incumbent, cannot, as against a succeeding incumbent, be considered as a curate, and is not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 95. 9. PRIVILEGES AND DISABILITIES OF CLERGY. Privileges-From Arrest. - A clergyman duly cited to attend a visitation by the ordinary is privileged from arrest, eundo, redeundo et morando. Af Geath v. Geraghty, 13 W. R. 127. S. P., Blane v. Geraghty, 15 W. R. 133. A priest in ordinary in one of her majesty's chapels royal is privileged from arrest on process of the county court for non-attendance on a judgment summons, such process being in the nature of execution and not merely process of contempt. The proper mode of obtaining his discharge in such case is not by writ of privilege, but by habeas corpus from one of the superior ourts, upon affidavits showing his privilege, or by an application to the judge of the county-court. Dakins, Exparts, 16 C. B. 77; 24 L. J., C. P. 131; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 378.

From Payment of Toll on Turnpike Road. -The 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, enacts, that no toll shall be demanded, or taken, by virtue of any act, on any turnpike road, "from any rector, vicar or curate going to or returning from visiting any sick parishioner, or on other his paro-chial duty within his parish":—Held, that this exempts a curate who, in going to perform duty in a parish, passes through a turnpike gate in another parish from payment of toll at such gate. Temple v. Dickinson, 1 El. & El. 34; 28 L. J., M. C. 10; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 363. A clergyman of the Established Church who,

Right of Voting.]—Land of the value of 40s. per annum was conveyed in 1856 "to the use of C. and his successors, vicars of the vicarage of Holy Trinity, Cambridge, for the time being, for ever." The incumbency was only a perpetual for ever." The incumbency was only a perpetual enracy; and the incumbent became, in 1866, perpetual curate, and claimed to be entitled to vote for the county in respect of the land so conveyed:—Held, that he was entitled to vote for the county, as he had at least an equitable here county, as he had at least an equitable freehold in the land. Wallis v. Birks, 39 L. J., C. P. 106; L. R. 5 C. P. 222; 22 L. T. 268; 18 W. R. 734; 1 Hopw. & C. 365.

A clergyman claimed a vote for a county in respect of the incumbency of a district church.

As incumbent he had the freehold of the church and was entitled to annual stipends of 150%, and 507 from the ecclesiastical commissioners and governors of Queen Anne's bounty, respectively, paid out of funds which did not arise from land within the parish in which he claimed to be registered; to fees on the burial in a cemetery, also out of the parish, of persons dying within the district attached to the church; and to fees for marriages, baptisms and churchings, per-formed within the church; each of which amounted to more than 40s. a year :- Held, that 39 L. #### a. Generally.

Clergy Discipline Act, 1892-Purview of Act. 7 The complaint in a criminal suit tried before the Chancellor of the diocese of Rochester sitting with assessors, under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, after charging the defendant, a clergyman holding preferment within the diocese of Rochester, with certain specified offences againstmorality, further charged him with "occasioning grave scandal and offence in the parish of which he was incumbent by his scandalous conduct in the several preceding charges set forth" :--Held, that the ecclesiastical offence of "occasioning scandal and evil report" was not an offence which could be legally tried under the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, and that all reference to any such charge must be struck out of the complaint. Rochester (Bishop) v. Harris, [1893]

Jurisdiction to depose, when to beexercised.]-The jurisdiction conferred upon a bishop of a diocese by s. S of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, to depose from holy orders. a clergyman whose preferment within the diocese becomes vacant by virtue of the act or of any sentence passed in pursuance of the act, need not be exercised at the time when the preferment is. declared to be vacant or sentence of deprivation is passed, but may be exercised after the lapse of an interval of time. Church Discipline Act, 1840 .- Promotion of suitby Bishop.]-Under the Church Discipline Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), which empowers a bishop to hear and determine a charge against a clerk in orders of having committed an ecclesiastical offence, if the bishop be not patron of any preferment held by the party accused, the mere fact that the bishop is, by his secretary, promoter of the suit does not, in the absence of any — Under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106.]—Where a clergyman engages in trade contrary to these (Eshep), 9 Q. B. D. 454; 46 L. T. 692, Place of Hearing.]-The judge of the chancery court of York has power under the bishop by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 109, has reference Church Discipline Act to make a rule that the hearing of cases in that court shall take place The without the local limits of the court. chancery court of York has jurisdiction to hear a suit against a clergyman beneficed in the province of York in respect of offences alleged to have been committed by him without the limits of the province. Noble v. Ahier, 11 P. D.

Letters of Request - Criminal Offence. ]-Letters of request were presented to the official principal of the chancery court of York, requesting that a clerk might be cited before him to answer a charge that he had been guilty of a criminal offence, viz., of sodomy:—Held, that the letters ought not to be accepted, for a charge of so grave a character ought not to be investigated by an ecclesiastical court, until the person charged had been tried and convicted by a criminal court of competent jurisdiction. A. B., In re. 11 P. D. 56.

Criminal Suit - Particulars. ]-In a criminal suit containing charges of misconduct against a clerk in holy orders, an order was made after the close of the pleadings that the promoter should give particulars of the charges. Such particulars should as a rule be applied for on the admission of articles. Salisbury (Bishop) v. Ottley, 10 P. D. 20.

Suspension ab officio - Conviction before Justices. ]-In a suit instituted in the Court of Arches against a clerk in orders, the articles alleged that he had been convicted before justices in petty sessions of having been drunk and riotous in a public place, and prayed that he might be punished for the scaudal caused thereby. The respondent, by his plea, denied that he had been drunk and riotous, or that the conviction had caused scandal, alleged that it had been obtained by perjured evidence, and demanded a full inquiry into the facts. On motion to strike out this plea: —Held, that the plea was no answer to the articles and could not be admitted, for the court had jurisdiction to suspend a clerk ab officio on account of the scandal caused by the conviction without considering whether the offence charged had been actually committed. Borough v. Collins, 15 P. D. 81.

b. Offence.

Neglect to perform Divine Service. - The shutting up and refusing to perform divine service in one of two churches forming together a distinct parish and benefice under an order in council made pursuant to 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 49, is an ecclesiastical offence cognisable under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, and the incumbent persisting in such a course, after notice from the ordinary, may be proceeded against under that act for having offended against the ecclesiastical law of the realin, by a contumacious refused to obey the lawful order of the bishop. Ringy v. Winchester (Bishop), 38 L. J., Ecc. 23; 1. R. 2 P. C. 223; 19 L. T. 578; 17 W. R. 235.

The Act of Uniformity (13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4) cannot apply to such a case. Ib.

The jurisdiction given exclusively to the only to proceedings taken under that act, and does not oust the general jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court for an offence committed against the common ecclesiastical law. Ib.

Reading Prayers after Prohibition.]—A. was appointed chaplain to a union, and his appointment was confirmed by the bishop of the diocese, in which the workhouse is situate. By the directions of the guardians of the union, but after a prohibition from the incumbent of the parish in which the workhouse is situate, he, on several Sundays, read the prayers of the Church of England in the chapel of the union work-house:—Held, that he had not committed an ecclesiastical offence. Malyneux v. Bayshaw, 9 Jur. (x.s.) 553; 8 L. T. 331; 11 W. R. 687.

Brawling.]-Sect. 2 of the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860, which enacts that "any person who shall be guilty of riotous, violent, person who shall be guilty of riotous, violent, or indecent behaviour ... in any churchyard or burial-ground" is liable to a penalty, applies to a person in holy orders. Valuacey v. Fletcher, 66 L. J., Q. B., 297; [1897] 1 Q. B., 265; 76 L. T., 201; 45 W. R. 367; 18 Cox, C. C. 512; 61 J. P.

Fornication of Clergyman, ]-The 27 Geo. 3. c. 44, applies to proceedings against fornicators; whether laymen or elergymen, pro salute anime. Free v. Burgayne, 2 Bligh (8.8.) 65; 1 Dow & Cl. 115; 6 B. & C. 27, 598; 9 D. & R. 14; 31 R. R. 2. But a proceeding in the Ecclesiastical Court against a clergyman on the ground of fornication. for the purpose of deprivation, suspension or other punishment, merely clerical, is not within the statute. Ib.

A charge of having committed adultery or A charge of naving commuter anthrery of fornication with A. B. is sufficiently definite to sustain a sentence of suspension. Marris v. Ogden, 38 L. J., C. P. 329; L. R. 4 C. P. 687; 20 L. T. 978; 17 W. R. 1103.

A beneficed clergyman, found guilty of solicitation of chastity, suspended for two years ab officio et beneficio, and condemned in costs.

Norotch (Bishop) v. Berney, 14 1. T. 528.

Forgery.]—A clergyman convicted of forging a transfer of 3L per cent. consols, and sentenced to penal servitude for ten years, has been guilty of an offence against the laws ecclesiastical, within 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 3; and he was deprived of his living, and inhibited from all future performance of divino offices. Hussey v. Radeliffe, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1014.

c. Punishment.

In Discretion of Court. ]-Under the general coclesiastical law the punishment of a beneficed clergyman who is found to have published doctrine contrary to any of the Thirty-nine Articles is in the judicial discretion of the court. Williams v. Salisbury, 7 L. T. 472; 11 W. R. 211.

Jurisdiction of Arches Court. - The dean of the Court of Arches has power by the practice of the court to pronounce sentence of deprivation. In proceedings for the correction and reformation of manners, the ground of the sentence is the public scandal to the church, and the nature and severity of the sentence will depend upon the gravity of the scandal. Bonwell v. London (Bishop), 14 Moore, P. C. 395; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1001; 4 L. T. 813; 9 W. R. 874.

Suspension Ab officio et beneficio.]—A clerk pleaded guilty to gross acts of intoxication and the use of profane and indecent language. He had already been suspended for a similar official and reinstated. The court refused to deprive him of his cure, but suspended him ab officio et beneficio for five years. Burder v. Puyhe, 1 Jur. (X.s.) 1178.

Prohibition. -In 1874 a suit was instituted by letters of request in the Arches Court, according to the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86 (the Church Discipline Act), against a clerk for unlawful practices in the performance of divine service. A sentence of suspension ab officio for six weeks was pronounced against him, and he was "monished" not to repeat the practices. He did repeat them, and was again admonished. He continued to repeat them, was twice summoned before the court to answer, but did not appear; and in June, 1878, the Dean of Arches "pronomiced decreed and declared" that the acts alleged to have been done by the clerk had been fully proved, "and that in so doing he had repeated the offences alleged against him in the articles exhibited against him in this suit," and had thereby disobeyed and con-travened the monitions served upon him. "For which disobedience the judge did pronounce him to have been guilty of contumacy. And for the conduct aforesaid the judge did further decree and declare" that he should be suspended ab officio et beneficio for three years :-Held, that this was a matter of ecclesiastical procedure alone, and was not, therefore, the subject of a proceeding in prohibition. Muchanochie v. Pen-zance (Lard), 50 L. J., Q. B. 611; 6 App. Cas. 424; 44 L. T. 479; 29 W. R. 633; 45 J. P. 584 -H. L. (E.)

The suspension was only a step in the proceedings which had been regularly instituted in 1874, and was in itself perfectly regular. Ib.
